Sir John Kennaway presided at the forty-first annual meeting of this institution on April 25, at Exeter Hall, when a very satisfactory total of work done during 1893 was recorded. After tea, prayer was offered by Rev. R. Balgarnie. The recognised preachers held 2277 services in different parts of the country, these meetings being attended by nearly 300,000 persons. The operations of the Mission in the course of the year was extended to 660 towns, villages, and hamlets. In addition, 909 visits were paid to fairs, fêtes, galas, hop gardens, and other concourses, when the addresses were supplemented by the distribution of over 803,000 tracts. The members of the Association now number 1110.

During the year fifty-five lectures or conferences on behalf of preachers were held, when about 4000 publications of the Mission were distributed, while 1020 volumes were sold. Active auxiliaries are now in operation in various quarters of London. Grants of tracts, books, cards, etc., have been made as in other years, over 950,000 being sent out from headquarters during the year. The secretary, Mr. Frank Cockrem, continues to give the illustrated lecture, "The Broad and Narrow Way," in different parts of the country, thus continuing the service of the late Gawin Kirkham.

Lieut.-Colonel Phayre, reading an abstract of the report, emphasised the fact that the income was inadequate, and was procured with greater difficulty than formerly. It was mentioned that an association similar to their own had been formed in the United States. The good fruits of the work at home became more apparent.

The Chairman said that the Association had never done a year of better work, and he recognised it as a favourable sign of the times that the newspapers were obliged to take more notice of religious anniversaries than was formerly the case. Efforts for the reclamation of the people which left out the Gospel would end in failure. Dr. Newman Hall referred to the late Gawin Kirkham, who devoted his life to open-air preaching. It was a service which cost nothing for accommodation. They were enabled to give the Gospel to multitudes who would not otherwise hear it, because they never entered a place of worship. Dr. Hall gave some of his personal experiences in open-air preaching, in which he has engaged for many years. Persons, he said, who were not scholars could do good service in the open air, but why should not gentlemen of culture also engage in such work?

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., regarded the work as of extraordinary importance; but while the best preachers had not been called forth into the open air, there were difficulties which had now to be encountered through the spread of education, such as had not been known in former days. Hence they needed to make careful preparation for their work. Preachers should attend well to their own spiritual life. If their preaching was to be blessed they must preach Jesus Christ. Christ had preached the best Socialism, and it was not advisable for a preacher to be over-anxious to defend his Lord. Preach Christ, and He would take care of Himself.

Rev. W. Cuff made feeling reference to the late Gawin Kirkham's life, the speaker having been associated with him in work at Bury St. Edmunds. The times seemed to need the association of open-air preachers more than ever; for with close upon six million persons in London poverty and indifference were more rife.

Y.W.C.A.

A series of conferences of Y.W.C.A. workers was held last week in the Morley Halls, W., presided over by the Countess of Chichester, the Countess of Portsmouth, and other ladies. Various matters of great practical importance in connection with all manner of Christian, loving, and helpful work among young women in London and the provinces, at home and abroad, were seriously considered.

On Wednesday evening the annual meeting of the London Association was held in Exeter Hall, which was crowded to the doors. For the first time a Y.W.C.A. choir led the praise. During the past winter Mr. S. Millar has been training members at different Institutes, with the result that a choir of some 300 voices sang admirably last week.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, presented an outline of the report, which showed that in London there are forty-four Institutes, Homes, and restaurants, and eighty-four other branches. During the past year new branches have been started in Marylebone, South Kensington, Crouch End, Hornsey, Victoria Park, Bow, West Ham, and Leyton. The Institute at Putney has moved into larger premises. Through the kindness of a lady a new home, Kent House, 89 and 91, Great Portland-street, has been fitted with cubicles, and furnished to accommodate from ninety to one hundred inmates. The work of visiting the London parks has been continued by the workers of the Park Mission. Two hundred and fifty-seven cases of more or less friendless and destitute girls have been dealt with. These have been restored to parents or friends, placed in homes, or assisted to find employment. Great need was felt of a place where girls found in the parks believed to be respectable could be placed pending the investigation of their cases. For this purpose the Park Mission Lodge has been opened. Sixty-six girls were received in the Lodge during six months, and of these forty-seven were sent to service and fourteen helped in other ways. The Restaurant and Barmaids' Branch has eighty members, and has received seventy-six boarders during the year. The Convalescent, Sick-aid, and Holiday Department continues to be most useful. Many avail themselves of the seaside homes. "Days in the country" were arranged for thirty parties, numbering 1000 girls, who were kindly entertained by friends around London. At the Finsbury Institute 382 students have attended the evening classes. A Flower Mission is carried on at Belgravia. At Princess House seventy or eighty dine at the restaurant daily, while at the Welbeck the number is much larger. At Percy Institute much good work is done, and the workers visit several factories. At Holloway the registered attendance at Sunday and week-day classes was 8948. At Cloudesley (Islington) the hall and drawing-room are filled to overflowing by the Bible-classes. Similarly cheering results are experienced at other institutes. At several institutes cookery and dressmaking have been taught by London County Council teachers. Successful lectures have been given at several centres in hygiene, ambulance, and sick nursing. The Teachers' Department, Nurses' Union, Library Department, and Flower Mission send encouraging reports.

Last year, it may be remembered, a deficit of £2297 was reported; this year, as the result of a vigorous effort heartily responded to, this has been reduced by one half, while promises have been secured, clearing off the whole, and leaving the Association free to press forward in its great work. An interlude of sacred song followed, with a violin solo by Herr Willie Waltmann.

Rev. W. R. Mowll began a very vigorous address by asking what has made the Y.W.C.A. the power it is to-day. Its success is due to the fact that it is spiritual work. So long as that is so, so long will it be successful; but let the spiritual side of the work deteriorate, and the whole will become a huge and ghastly failure. After this introduction, the speaker passed on to press home very pointedly the question, "Can you say your soul is saved?" Taking the motto of the Association for the year, "I am the light of the world," he dwelt on what darkness meant for the human soul. He then, in order to fasten the thoughts on the memory, used the following acrostic on light.

L: He is the light of Life.
I: He is the light of Influence.
G: He is the light of Gladness.
H: He is the light of Holiness.
T: He is the light of Truth.

On each of these points the speaker enlarged, bringing incident and illustration to bear in urging on the conscience of his hearers the great lessons.

Rev. W. Y. Fullerton followed with a simple Gospel address, in which he took the three grades of membership—associates, members, and working members—as typical of the attitude of many towards Jesus. Next he enlarged on devotion to Christ, and a distinct avowal of that devotion in a life of true-hearted and whole-hearted service.

True-hearted whole-hearted! Fullest allegiance
Yielding henceforth to our glorious King!
Valiant endeavour and loving obedience
Freely and joyously now would we bring.

Sisters, dear sisters, the call is resounding,
Will ye not echo the silver refrain,
Mighty and sweet, and in gladness abounding?
"True-hearted, whole-hearted!" ringing again.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

St. James's Hall was crowded on Thursday afternoon by friends of the children; nearly 500 of whom, drawn from various Homes and Reformatories in London, were present, and sang a number of sweet songs. It appeared from the report that the objects of the Reformatory and Refuge Union are to provide a Central Association for Reformatories, Refuges, Industrial Schools, and other voluntary institutions of a similar nature; firstly, by means of the Children's Aid Fund, it assists in the rescue of destitute and neglected children, and also contributes towards their support in homes affiliated to the Union; while secondly, by means of the Female Mission Fund, it assists in a similar manner women and girls who have fallen, or are in danger of falling, into sin. Further, the Union assists affiliated institutions by grants of money made after inspection by the Council, and raises funds for the maintenance of the various agencies.

Last year, chiefly because of a legacy of more than £8000 under the will of the late Miss Seager, the total income was the largest ever recorded, and only under one fund—"the child-saving work"—did the income fail to meet the expenditure. The larger part of the child-saving efforts of the Union are carried on by means of the beadles and rescue officers. In this respect the work is unique. The valuable Act of Parliament passed in 1880, and better known as the Ellice Hopkins Act, was in danger of becoming a dead letter until the Union employed officers to put it in force. In March, 1894, careful inquiries were instituted concerning some of the children rescued several years ago, in order to ascertain, as far as possible, whether the work was really of a lasting character, and the following are the results:—Of 450 children placed in industrial schools through the agency of the rescue officers between 1881 and 1893—404 or 89·7 per cent. are known to be doing well, 17 or 3·7 per cent. have been lost sight of, 6 or 1·3 per cent. are doubtful, 2, or 5·1 per cent. are not doing well. Humanly speaking, the whole of these children would have grown up in the deepest depravity but for the operations of the Union.

Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, who presided in the place of the Marquis of Lorne, unavoidably absent, moved a resolution declaring that the various child-saving and other agencies of the Union are deserving of continued and more general support. In doing so, he claimed that their schools had been of the greatest use to children whose condition might have otherwise been changed with difficulty. The Union, too, was of the greatest value in supplying those interested in children with guidance, and in providing information as to the various and most suitable homes for particular cases. It would be well if all Protestant schools could be gathered into the Union.

Prebendary E. A. EARDLEY-WILMOT thought there was nothing more important than to bring up in a Christian character those who were in danger of going astray. He strongly commended the work of the Union, especially on its educational side, and showed from statistics and reports how satisfactory the sectarian and religious instruction had been. The inspector's report, for example, says that, "Holy Scripture continues to be carefully and conscientiously taught in all the schools visited. Not only are the narratives of the Bible brought before the children, but also the doctrines and duties which are involved in them, and thus it is that the fundamental truths of the Gospel are fully and carefully taught."

The prizes having been distributed by Lady Victoria Buxton, a number of girls from the Ealing Home went through pretty evolutions in the way of musical drill. Brief words followed, and the proceedings concluded.

Zenana and Bible Medical Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held on Friday afternoon in St. Martin's Town Hall, Lord Kinnaird presiding. From an outline of the report presented by the secretary, Rev. A. R. Cavalier, we gather the following facts:—

This undenominational Society, founded in 1852, works in co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India by undertaking the work amongst women. It has stations at thirty-three centres in India and Ceylon, four of which were opened in 1893. The Society employs 94 European missionaries and assistants, 179 native Christian teachers, nurses, etc., and 69 Bible-women; or 342 labourers employed in the work. There are now fully equipped hospitals for women and dispensaries at Lucknow and Benares, and dispensaries at Patna, where a hospital is in course of erection. A new medical mission has recently been established at Jaffna, in Ceylon. All this medical work is in charge of fully qualified lady doctors, of whom seven are in the field, and three more hope to go out during the present year. During 1893 no less than 15,539 patients were attended, of whom a considerable number were Zenana ladies living in strict seclusion. The attendances at the dispensaries numbered 44,483. Three native Christian ladies are being trained as doctors in India, two of whom will complete their course in 1894, when it is hoped to open new dispensaries in places where they are most urgently needed. The Society has 68 schools, with 2746 pupils, and 93 students training for mission work. The native Bible-women visit periodically a large number of town houses and villages to read and explain the Scriptures. An immediate increase of £2000 a year in the ordinary income is urgently needed to maintain the new work undertaken in 1893. Four new stations were occupied, fourteen new missionaries were sent out, two of whom are doctors and two trained nurses. This will involve a considerable increase in the number of native workers.

Mr. W. T. PATON, who was warmly received on his reappearance after his illness, in presenting the financial statement, made a glowing appeal for more workers and larger funds. He asked for twenty more young ladies willing to organise collecting auxiliaries. Speaking of true helpfulness he instanced the remarkable service rendered by Mrs. Stephen Menzies in training, free of cost to the Society, young missionaries, nine being now under her care.

Rev. R. BRUCE, D.D., dwelt on the evils of Mohammedanism and the degraded condition of the women wherever this system prevails. Speaking of Bible lands generally, i.e., Arabia, Asia Minor, Egypt, Persia, and away to the borders of India—the very region of Old Testament history—he pointed out how little had been done, and how hard they were of access to the Gospel. As to Persia, where he has laboured many years, good work is being done at Ispahan and Bagdad, but otherwise this empire is almost neglected. After contrasting the light and liberty of the Gospel with the darkness and bondage of the Koran, the speaker concluded with a telling plea for the women of Mohammedan lands.

Rev. A. CONNELL followed with a ringing exhortation to increased devotion, self-sacrifice, and enterprise in the cause of foreign missions. He based his plea for the women of the Zenanas on the claims of humanity, on their ignorance and blindness, and on the power of the Gospel to change, illumine, and liberate. Moreover, if anything is ever to be done, now is the time; India seems ripe for some great and sweeping change. The seed is being sown, it is sinking and germinating on all hands, and soon it will burst forth in glorious sheaves of harvest.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THE annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society was held on Monday in Exeter Hall, and was characterised by much of the enthusiasm which belongs to the more important gatherings of our Methodist friends. Supporters of the Society from near and far assembled in large numbers, and were greatly cheered by the report rendered of continued progress abroad and fairly sustained interest at home.

Rev. F. W. MACDONALD, one of the Society's secretaries, read the report, which opened with the statement that, though marking the eightieth anniversary of the Society, the meeting did not celebrate the beginning of Methodist missions. For a quarter of a century prior to the organisation of the Society, the missionary spirit of Methodism had asserted itself, and already existing operations in North America, the West Indies, and the West Coast of Africa called the Society into existence. In reviewing the past year, the committee rejoiced to say that blessing has everywhere attended the labours of the missionaries and their helpers. Amid many circumstantial diversities these workers have been enabled to discern the sure working of the Holy Spirit, raising up sons and daughters unto the Lord.

Alike in European centres, among negroes and Kaffirs, in Indian villages and Chinese cities, in Ceylon and Burmah, in Honduras and the Bahamas, where ignorance, idolatry, and the complicated wickedness of heathenism have long abounded, not only has there been an untiring and manifold activity of Christian work, but large numbers have been turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Many hundreds of heathen have been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, breaking the strong ties of caste, tradition, and lifelong habit, and in many cases passing through fiery trials and persecution. Although there is scarcely a district that is not undermanned, and harassed by insufficiency of means, the missionaries everywhere breathe a spirit of thankfulness and hope.

The details of the report were very inspiring. On all hands there were calls for more labourers. The appended statistics were on a large scale; showing 341 missionaries and assistant-missionaries, and 2429 teachers, interpreters, and other paid agents. The local preachers and other unpaid workers number nearly 5000, church workers 38,000, and scholars attending Sabbath and day-schools 76,000. The total income for the year was £122,211, which was exceeded by the expenditure to the amount of £7305. Adding this to the debt of 1892, we get a total deficiency of £28,827. On faith of adequate funds coming in, the Society had added largely to its staff of workers, sending out over thirty ladies and gentlemen during the year.

Mr. JOSEPH BECKETT, J.P., of Whitchurch, who occupied the chair, maintained that the falling off in the income is not to be attributed to bad trade, but to a neglect of the old sources of support by collecting the pence and shillings, and seeking the donors of large sums. He urged the ministers to take up the matter with renewed earnestness. Rev. H. J. POPE, President of the Conference, spoke to a like effect, and called upon the Methodist people to wipe off the debt, not to be tempted by any note of retrenchment, but to make a special effort for the promotion of the work abroad.

Mr. THOMAS G. OSBORN, J.P., of Colwyn Bay, in a powerful address, pointed out that the great danger that to-day threatens missionary enterprise is not abroad but at home. Apathy at home is much more to be feared than opposition abroad, for external opposition is an inspiration, not a paralysis. He would not place the subject on a money basis; he asked for time, sympathy, study, work, interest, hope, faith, prayer, devotion, and enthusiasm; if these things are given, the money will not be wanting. He spoke of enthusiasm as God's richest dower of consecrated youth; older people may have it, but they must go back and fetch it, becoming as little children, and thus qualifying for doing God's work with enthusiasm, fervour, and love. A deepened sense of need for ourselves always means a quickened sense of the need of others. In the olden times a revival in the circuit did not mean a falling off in the missionary income. One cause of the declension in fervour and enthusiasm is found in the respectability of Methodists. Young people are tempted to allow modern refinement and culture to dim their fervour, for the devil's greatest instrument against enthusiasm is ridicule.

Addresses explanatory of the work abroad were delivered by Revs. C. Wenyon, M.D., M.Ch., from China; W. H. Findlay, M.A., from India; Isaac Shimmin, from Mashonaland, and others.

Christian Literature for India.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Literature Society for India was held on Monday afternoon in the Council Room, Exeter Hall.

The Right Hon. the Earl of NORTHBROOK, G.C.S.I., who presided, confessed that he was becoming more and more convinced of the great importance of the work undertaken in providing in popular form wholesome Christian literature. From his latest information he felt that the state of things in India is at present far from satisfactory. The fact is that a portion of the younger educated natives entertain ideas far from conducive to the tranquillity of the State; and one of the most efficient means of dealing with this threatened danger is by the circulation as widely as possible of sound literature animated by a Christian spirit.

Rev. JAMES JOHNSTON, the secretary, read a summary of the report, from which it appeared that the work of the Society was never in so efficient and hopeful a condition as it is at this time. The total number of copies of publications printed last year was 1,133,115. These included educational works, books for women, students at colleges, and general literature. The school work in the villages of Bengal has been carried on with increasing interest and success. The number of scholars is upwards of eight thousand. In the Training Institution at Ahmednagar, seventy-three students were admitted during the year. All were professing Christians when they entered, except eleven, who were Hindus; of these, four became Christians before they left. All the outgoing students were at once employed by the missionaries.

Rev. P. IRELAND JONES, C.M.S., dwelt on the influence of books, giving from the story of the English in India many illustrative incidents; and passed on to show that the definite work this society has done in moulding public opinion in India. Advocating the need of a Christian newspaper in India, the speaker told of a weekly Christian paper, issued in Canarese by Mr. Haig, and read, as has been found, in the most remote villages. He maintained that the need of India is attractive, cheap, wholesome literature, genuinely native, and truly Christian in spirit.

Sir PHILIP HUTCHINS, lately member of the Council in India, spoke from thirty-six years' official experience of the immense importance of the provision of literature of a sound and Christian character. Nothing, he felt, could be more important than the work this society is engaged in. It was quite true that vast numbers cannot read, but every village and community has its reader, who reads aloud, for the benefit of his fellows, both books and papers. Hence anything that is within the range of the native purse goes out broadcast all over India.

Rev. T. H. WHITAMORE (Wesleyan) spoke of the operations of the Hindu Tract Society, founded expressly to defend Hinduism and undo the influence of Christianity. He also bore testimony to the readiness of the natives to receive the publications of this society.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 6.—JEREMIAH II.

This was the earliest of Jeremiah's utterances, in the first year of his commission, 627 B.C., the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. His aim is to urge his people to keep aloof from alliance with Assyria or Egypt.

Israel's Unreasonable and Ungrateful Rebellion (2-13).—God does not forget our early vows and love, when we abandon all to follow Him, as Israel, when the people followed the lead of Jehovah through the Red Sea, and sang his praise. The love of the betrothal is the first love, which we are too apt to forget and leave. (3) What the High Priest was for the nation, that Israel was among the people of the world, consecrated to God: and the chosen people were to the rest of men as the first fruits of a vineyard or cornfield, set apart for God's service was to the remainder of the produce. So should we be among men; wholly for God. (7-8) It is well to be silent before God while He enumerates our sins. He knows them perfectly. Notice that it is possible to handle the law, and yet not know God, and for prophets to walk after things that do not profit. (9) How reluctant the Good Husbandman is to abandon us to the results of our folly. He pleads for us in heaven and with us on earth. (10) The Almighty casts down a challenge that the nations should be interrogated from Cyprus on the West to Kedar, in Arabia, on the East. The heathen are constant in their devotion to their idols. Age after age witnesses their undeviating adherence to the gods of their fathers. This was in sad contrast with the fickleness and vacillation of Israel. The punctiliousness and offerings of heathen worship bitterly reflect on our behaviour to Him who deserves infinitely at our hands. (13) Idolatry is bad enough, but how aggravated when it is associated with apostasy from God! The soul is athirst, but what an infinite loss to leave the fountain of life for rock-hewn but cracked cisterns.

The Dangers of Apostasy (14-19).—Standing in vision in the picture, the prophet beholds the spoiling and captivity of his people. They were treated as if they were slaves, when, in fact, they were sons (Ex. iv. 22). (15) The lions were the princes of Babylon (iv. 7). (16) Noph is Memphis. These two cities stand for Egypt. To consume the crown of the head is to produce baldness. Thus they would sweep the land. (18) Sihor is the Nile. The river, Euphrates. Neither alliance would help them. (19) We make our own hell. We are scourged by our own sins.

MONDAY, MAY 7.—JEREMIAH III.

The Divine Pleadings (1-5).—At the close of the previous chapter the Divine Lover had begun to plead with his faithless people. He had not been as wilderness and black night to them, but as an ornament and a bridal dress. Yet they had gone out of their way to seek love, so much so that they had even set the example of wickedness to the wicked, and their robes were stained with the blood of martyrs and of babes. They were coquetting with Egypt's alliance and gods. They resembled a wife who had become wanton. But God invites them to return. They professed to be unconscious of their sin, and so their sin was aggravated. (3) Compare viii. 12. The latter rain was essential for crops (Lev. xxvi. 19). (4, 5) These are quoted as pious expressions which the people employed, but in spite of all they went on doing evil things. Let us not presume on the love of God.

A New Series of Prophecies (6, vi. 30). This second discourse followed soon after the first. The tribes had been in captivity for ninety years. Their idolatry had been bad enough, and awfully punished, but how much greater the sin of Judah, and how much more certain and terrible their fate. Not only had they had greater advantages, but they might have been warned by the judgments which befel their brethren.

A Message to Israel (12—21). They were scattered in Mesopotamia, Assyria, and Media, to the north of Canaan, and God here sends a message to his banished and despised children. (13) The one indispensable condition of pardon is confession. (14) Though only individuals should heed and obey the Divine summons, yet these should be graciously accepted. (16) The Ark, as the symbol of the old covenant, would be superseded by the introduction of the excelling glories of the New Dispensation, of which Jesus is the centre. (17, 18) Many of the ten tribes returned under Ezra and Nehemiah. And in the glorious future days, the Jews shall be one people, and the centre of religious influences for the world. (19) See how man may mar and thwart God's intentions on his behalf. We do not call Him Father, and we do not refrain from wandering. How can He put us among the children and give us the pleasant land?

TUESDAY, MAY 8.—JEREMIAH IV.

The Blessings of Repentance (1, 2).—If Israel could return to God, they might return to their own land. But there must be a real putting away of idol-abominations and a sincere profession of Jehovah. Then the Gentiles would be led to bless the name of God. (3, 4).—Evil must be thoroughly dealt with. The fallow land needed to be deeply ploughed.

Divine Judgments (5-18).—The prophet seems to be a witness of the calamities which in the near future were to descend on his people from the North. The nation, however, destined to inflict chastisement is not named. Some have supposed that allusion is made to the Scythians, who at this time passed over Western Asia as a scourge. But they had no chariots. It is better, therefore, to conclude that the Chaldeans of Babylon are intended. The people are urged to gather in the fortified cities, because the destroyer had already struck his tents and was on his way. (10). This refers to the prophets who had used God's name in giving assurances of peace. God is here credited with what He had permitted. (11). The land was to be swept, not with wind for winnowing, but for judgment. (14) At the eleventh hour one last appeal goes out for repentance, and for the quitting of vain thoughts of creature aid. (15) But there was no time to be lost, as the invader had already reached Ephraim. (16) The neighbouring nations are called to witness the judgment of Israel. Watchers are besiegers. The keepers or watchers of a field cry out at intervals throughout the night.

The Sorrow of the Prophet (19-31). Would that we had fellow-feeling with God, as He laments the sins of his people, and mourns over their sufferings. (22) It would seem as though God here broke in to assure the prophet that He would not have done otherwise whilst his people acted as they had done. (23) An awful description of coming judgment, as though ancient chaos had resumed its sway. (27) But even then there was to be limitation and reserve. "Not a full end." (30) "What wilt thou do," oh ungodly man, in the hour of death and the day of judgment? (30) Jerusalem is likened to a woman, who seeks, by increasing her charms, to avert her doom. "Rentest thy face." Oriental women try to make their eyes appear larger by painting their eyelids with antimony. But in spite of all she would lie helpless before the murderers. Nought will avail us but repentance and faith.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9.—JEREMIAH V.

The Awful Wickedness of Jerusalem (1-9).—Diogenes the cynic was once found in the streets of Athens, candle in hand, looking, he said, for a man. There were good men in Jerusalem, like Baruch, but it was fast approaching the condition of Sodom. (2) They used the holy name of God to cover their lies. (4, 5) Poor and rich were alike. (6) The Babylonians would combine the qualities of the strongest, most ravenous, and swiftest of wild beasts. (7) Licentiousness was the sin of Sodom and Jerusalem. It arises from fulness of bread and abundance of idleness. Whenever it gets supremacy it sows the seeds of inevitable decay.

The Attack of the Foe (10-18).—Battlements should be branches. The metaphor is borrowed from the vineyard, which is being burned. (12, 13) It was thus that the people consoled themselves. Alas! they were vain hopes. (14) Thus God addresses his faithful servant. Would that He put fire-words in our mouths also! (18) Again notice that God leaves a remnant as a godly seed.

The Prophet's Expostulations (19-31).—What pathos and beauty are here! (22) The sea obeys the soft restraint of the sand, but man's heart overleaps the pleadings of God's love. Put God between you and seas of trouble, as the soft silver sand is interposed between the brine and the homes of men. (25) How many of the disasters of our lives are due to ourselves. We turn away the showers. Our sins withhold good. (30) See for illustration, ch. xxix. 24-32. It is fatal when the religious leaders of a people are set on gratifying the evil promptings of the people themselves.

THURSDAY, MAY 10.—JEREMIAH VI.

The Approach of the Enemy (1-5).—The Benjamites are first addressed, because they, being north of Jerusalem, would first feel the brunt of invasion. Those who were resident in the metropolis are, however, urged further south. The places named lay south of Jerusalem. (3) This refers to the Chaldean leaders, who would cover the land with their armies, numerous as flocks. (4, 5) The sigh of lament of Israel's foes that the failing daylight defers their attack. They counsel, in their eagerness, a night attack.

The remainder of the chapter is taken up by four paragraphs, each of which begins with "Thus saith the Lord."

Judgment and Mercy (6-8).—On the one hand Jehovah bids the assailant rear the mounds for the siege. On the other He urges Jerusalem yet to take warning lest his soul be dislocated from her, as if it would give Him the pain of a wrench. Thus does our God hate putting away.

The Old Paths (16-21).—When the traveller finds himself getting wrong, he asks to be shown the old highway. So Israel is urged to abandon the devious ways of sin for the ancient road marked out in the law of Moses. What a sweet call to rest! (20) The people still promoted the worship of the Temple, which stood among other shrines, but of what avail is ritual divorced from morality?

The Cruelty of the Invader (22-30).—The student of ancient history shudders at the record of the cruelty that man inflicted upon man. Indeed they had no mercy. To wrench out the tongue, to skin alive, to roast, to mutilate, were common practices in these terrible wars. The sides means the extremities of the earth. There was good reason for inviting the people to bitter mourning. (27) In the meanwhile God assures Jeremiah of his presence and blessing. He was made as an assayer or tester to know and try the people. But all in vain. The bellows were scorched: the lead, added as a flux, was burned into fumes: the dross refused to be separated. Therefore the whole people was rejected as reprobate silver.

FRIDAY, MAY 11.—JEREMIAH VII.

The Temple of the Lord (1-11).—When the Temple was on one occasion thronged with worshippers, the prophet took his stand at one of the gates to denounce the folly of trusting in it, or in the ritual services connected with it, whilst the city was filled with such abominable crimes. The false prophets insisted that the presence of the Temple must always necessarily safeguard the city. Jeremiah called them to repentance; this alone could preserve Jerusalem. (10) They cast the blame of their sin on destiny, and they trusted in mere ritual. (11) The very Temple was an asylum where robbers concealed themselves (Matt. xxi. 30).

The Example of Shiloh (12-15).—There was evidently an inner reason for the removal of the ark from Shiloh to Jerusalem, in the unexampled sin in the people that dwelt around it. When these words were written Shiloh was desolate, and the whole seed of Ephraim exiled. It was a beacon and warning of the imminent fate of Jerusalem.

Indecision Forbidden (16-20).—So settled was God's purpose that prayer could not turn Him, though repentance would. The whole people were infected with the common sin. Cakes were made of a round, flat shape, to resemble the disc of the moon. The moon was worshipped as Astarte.

Stubborn Disobedience (21-28).—So sinful were the people that their ritual was abhorrent to Jehovah, and He tells them to do as they like, eating their burnt offerings, against the Levitical regulation. As far as He was concerned they could do just as they liked. Besides, ritual had always been a secondary thing with God. His prime demand had always been for obedience. (26-28) The Divine appeals had always been treated with stolid indifference, and Jeremiah's would share the same fate.

Another Appeal (29-34).—The prophet addresses Jerusalem as a woman who in her grief had parted with her hair, and proceeds to enumerate the tale of her abominations. High places are altars. Tophet refers to the hideous noise of the drums with which they sought to drown the cries of the children as they were plunged into the flame. In awful words Jehovah assures them that those sights should be more associated with the massacres of Israelites, than with their abominable idolatries. In the loneliness of a deserted land the wild beasts should come to their banquet of human flesh and be undisturbed.

SATURDAY, MAY 12.—JEREMIAH VIII.

Further Denunciations (1-22).—The bones of the dead were to be exhumed as an insult to the vanquished people. And so dreadful should be the cruelties perpetrated on the survivors that they would prefer death to life. (4) Often backsliding is followed by repentance, but in the case of Jerusalem backsliding was perpetual; they persevered in their sinful courses as the war-horse rushes with a straight course to danger and death. (7) The instinct of the migratory birds brings them back at last, but there was no such return on the part of the chosen people. (8) To possess God's Word will not make us wise unless we keep it. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of true wisdom. (11, 12) These words are repeated from chap. vi. 14, 15. (13) God takes back his gifts if we abuse them. (14) This is the speech of the fatalist. Hopeless and conscious of guilt, he sits silent, filled with forebodings of an irreversible doom. (16) The land swarms with foes. (17) The foe is implacable. (18) The bitter lamentation of the prophet, as he hears the cry of the excited people, answered by the declaration of Jehovah that they have provoked Him to anger. Though He were Zion's King, yet could He not help those whose sin provoked Him. (20) The deliverance predicted by the false prophets had not come. (21) Black, i.e., sad in visage, with grief. (22) There was balm and a physician, but the people refused to avail themselves of either.

ISRAEL'S BONDAGE IN EGYPT.—Exod. i. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Psa. cxxiv. 8.

THE oppression predicted for the Israelites forms the subject of this lesson.

The "new King" (8) refers probably to a new dynasty, who came into power after the overthrow of the dynasty under whom Joseph had served. The king who oppressed the Israelites is now generally believed to have been Rameses II., known in Greek history as Sesostris. He reigned for sixty-seven years, and his son, Menephtah I., was the Pharaoh of the exodus.

In July, 1881, the body of King Rameses II. was discovered by Professors Maspero and Brugsch. It was unbandaged in 1886, in presence of the Khedive of Egypt and others. The body was identified by written papyri preserved with the mummy, and by certain markings on the case and bandages, and may be seen to-day in the Museum of Boulak, near Cairo.

His oppression was dictated by fear (9, 10). The records upon the monuments show that the Hittites and others made war with Egypt during the reign of Rameses II. His fear was, first, that the Israelites would unite their strength with the enemies of Egypt; and next, that they would escape out of the land. This would mean a loss both of revenue and of labour, which Egypt was not able to endure.

The form of oppression was thought to be wise—"Let us deal wisely" (10). It is the wisdom of wickedness, which is foolishness with God. Sin is never wise in any true sense. God is righteous, and every man who does wrong will be opposed by Him. His first attempt was by subjecting the Israelites to heavy burdens (11). One of the monuments of this oppression has been discovered within the last ten years. "Some twelve miles west of Ismailia, a town about midway of the Suez Canal, were some large mounds near to some granite statues of Rameses II. These mounds were excavated in 1883 and 1884 by M. Edouard Naville, and were found to contain the ruins of a treasure city called Pi-Tum, devoted to Tum, its civil name being Succoth, and its founder Rameses II." This is evidently the same as Pithom (11). The other city, Raamses, has not yet been discovered. Specimens of the bricks of which Pithom was built may be seen in the British Museum. What is most wonderful in connection with this city as a confirmation of the Bible story is the following fact —"The lower courses of these walls, and for some distance up, are of well-made bricks with chopped straw in them; but higher up the courses of brick are not so good, the straw is long and scanty; and the last courses have no straw at all, but have sedges, rushes, and water plants in the mud."

Since this method failed, the burdens of the Israelites were made heavier (12-14). They were reduced to a condition of slavery. The pictures engraven upon stone by the monarch's own sculptors give us the best idea of the degradation and suffering of the people. "Gangs of labourers, abject, and suffering from intolerable burdens, are seen with taskmasters standing above. A whip whirls in the air, a stick is applied to the naked backs and over the bare shoulders when the scant heap of bricks shows a short tally."

Yet, in the midst of all this cruelty, God was not unmindful of them. The very oppression itself was a fulfilment of prophecy, and made more sure the deliverance which He had also predicted. Beside this, He sustained them under their affliction, and not only defeated the attempts of the king to reduce them, but made their increase more rapid still (12). The subtlest and the strongest measures are useless when directed against the purposes of God.

But even this oppression, cruel though it was, had its purpose of blessing. The people had lessons to learn which could only be learned in the school of affliction. Pharaoh, though he knew it not, was doing God's work in helping to wean his people from Egypt, so that they might be ready to depart when the time came; in separating them from the Egyptians, so that there was less likelihood of their being entangled hopelessly in its debasing idolatries, and in awakening within them the sense of need which drove them to God as their only hope. Painful experiences may teach us valuable lessons.

At a time when men are denying the truth of the Scripture story, it is surely significant that God should be bringing to light so many monuments that confirm his own Word. This lesson should be enforced.

The growing wickedness of Pharaoh in persecuting the Israelites suggests another lesson. He began by fearing the Israelites, then went on to oppress them, and did not stop short of murder (22). Watch against the beginnings of evil.

SWISS GUIDES. *

A GERMAN friend with whom I spent some time on the Alps, who had an arduous undertaking in prospect, said to me the day before he set out to accomplish it, that his principle was to do in all things whatever the guide told him; "for," said he, "the guide's own safety and reputation are pledged to do his best for you." The truth could not be better put in regard to our Heavenly Leader. If we commit ourselves to Him, and obey his precepts, He will do the best He can for us for his own name's sake. What a glorious assurance that the Lord Jesus Christ, who has all power in heaven and earth, is pledged to do the best He can for us!

A Swiss guide holding a certificate for skill, experience, and character, is usually an intelligent companion, acquainted with the people, the country, its resources and associations. A feeling of good fellowship and confidence heightens your enjoyment. So it is in regard to the journey of life. You desire to make the most of your opportunities; for you will pass this way but once. You are certain to lose much of usefulness and enjoyment unless He is with you who knows every step of the way, and has promised to guide you with his counsel, opening your eyes to behold the wonders of his wisdom and love.

The guides in Switzerland are indispensable to warn of danger. An apparently safe surface may deceive, or a precipice may be near, when you are crossing a glacier or coming down a precipitous path. The guide warns, and you are on your guard. There is a story of a boy who, in company with his father and guides, was making an excursion among the Swiss mountains. Coming to a dangerous place, where there was a precipice, the boy wished to obtain a beautiful flower. His father called him back because of the danger. "No," said he, "I must get that flower," and the guides rushed towards him to pull him back, when they heard him say, "I almost have it," as he fell two thousand feet, and was lost in the abyss. There are many flowers that attract us from the right way; but the voice of Jesus is emphatic in its call, "Thou shalt not"; and his gentle hand holds us back. He says so sweetly, "My sheep hear my voice."

The guide keeps you from falling, for you are roped to him, the one end of the rope being attached to his waist and the other to yours. If you stumble, the rope pulls on his strength; he must give way before you can be hurt. One slip, but for him, would be fatal. Then he cuts the way in the snow and ice, making footsteps for you. So it is when united to Christ; if you stumble, the strain is wholly on Him who has all power. I have heard a story of Peter Knubel, the famous guide of the Matterhorn, how he prevented an accident on the Lyskamm. Two visitors were crossing that mountain with Peter and another guide. One of the visitors slipped in a way that must have proved fatal to all, had not Peter, who was last on the rope, thrown himself backward over the other side of the rock, and succeeded in holding the three who were sliding to destruction.

Some time ago a gentleman was crossing a glacier when he came to a difficult crevasse. The guide made steps down one side and up the other, but the crossing was still dangerous. A momentary mistake would have been fatal. The gentleman hesitated, thinking no doubt of the great risk. The guide, holding out his hand to help him across, said, "There is a hand that never lost a man." With what incomparable truth our blessed Saviour makes this claim, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish!" His is a hand that never lost a soul! The Swiss guides are wonderfully faithful; but they sometimes lose their own lives, and are unable to save others. Every giant mountain has had its numerous victims, both among guides and visitors. The Lord Jesus Christ is infinitely able as He is faithful. The lofty heights of spiritual attainment are reached, the deepest trials overpassed, through his power and grace.

Only a rich man can afford to hire these Swiss guides. Happily our enjoyment of even the finest scenery in Switzerland does not require the perilous exploits for which they are necessary. Where risk is involved and severe toil, the guide's fee is naturally what only the wealthy can afford. The terms on which our Guide undertakes to lead us are within the reach of all. His declaration is—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price."

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

LAST week a large congregation gathered at Wesley's Chapel, City-road, the occasion being the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Children's Home and Orphanage. One attractive feature in the proceedings was the presence of a large body of trained voices from the Home.

Mr. Edward Hutchinson, of Liverpool, who presided, regretted Dr. Stephenson's enforced absence through breakdown in health, but believed that he would return from America the better able to carry on that great work, of which he was the founder. In place of the usual report, an interesting statement, which had been prepared by Dr. Stephenson, was read by Mr. John Pendlebury. The work of the year had been marked with much success. The number of children at the Homes had been larger than in any previous year, whilst the moral and religious tone had been exceptionally good. The work in which they were engaged was of a formative character. In common with other religious and charitable institutions, they had felt the terrible depression of the past year. The Sunday-schools of Methodism continued to show deep interest in their work. The report dealt with the developments of the work of the several branches. At the Edgeworth branch, Lancashire, it was intended to erect a holiday home for poor children, and most of the requisite funds would be raised in that part of the country. In the Midlands at Birmingham, as the result of a generous legacy, a new home was to be erected. At Alverstoke a new cottage for sick children was also to be built, to be followed by a second when the funds were forthcoming. It was in contemplation to secure a farm colony within easy reach of London. This would involve an outlay of £11,000 or £12,000. Towards this, mainly from the Presidential Fund which was raised two years ago, some £7000 was already at command.

Mr. James Vanner, of Chislehurst, stated that 2500 children had passed through the Homes, that there were 886 now in residence; 1871 had been placed out and were doing well, 1269 had been sent out to Canada, and thirty-two had been adopted. The President of the Conference (Rev. H. J. Pope) spoke of the interest which Lancashire Methodists took in the movement. The President went on to say that a marked feature of the Church life of to-day was its care for the young, and he believed that Christianity would so leaven the legislation of the country that in the near future not only would pure air, water, food, be found for helpless children, but that they would be entitled to decent surroundings. Sir Douglas Fox, Rev. Silas K. Hocking, of Rochdale, and Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, of Manchester, also addressed the meeting.

THE LATE GAWIN KIRKHAM.

The bright and sunny nature of Mr. Kirkham's character is well exemplified in the biography which his successor in office, Mr. F. Cockrem, has written.* He was a man of very strong convictions, and staunch in his adherence to them, but he had a most genial and attractive disposition; doubtless that was one great secret of his success in open-air work, where the manner of the preacher is almost as important as his matter. The reader of this most interesting record cannot fail to see that the early experiences of Mr. Kirkham were an admirable preparation for his life-work. Brought up in the country, and spending much of his youthful days in the open air, he had a familiarity with natural scenes and objects that stood him in good stead in his street preaching and his faithful testimony at races, fairs, etc.

Altogether the book is an eminently breezy one, and written in a pleasant, graphic vein that is a continual reminder of its subject. The following description of Mr. Kirkham's conversion will serve as a specimen; other extracts might be made, equally interesting, but we refer the reader to the work itself:—

"Sixteen years of the young life had gone, and with the year 1848 came the advent of that 'life indeed' which is of God: the bursting of the tender leaves, the waking of the soul, the breaking of the light. Slowly, solemnly, came the wondrous change. It was in this wise. Gawin was one of twelve lads who presented themselves as candidates for confirmation. They were called together to meet the vicar in the vestry of the church. Their names and ages being taken, he proceeded to address them. Very simple were the opening words: 'Twelve young men; enough to do a great deal of good in the world if set going right, enough to do a great deal of harm if left to go wrong.' But the utterance, severely plain as it seems to us, acted like a ploughshare in the heart of one at least who listened. The Spirit drove it home, laying bare the soil for the precious seed of eternal truth, and preparing the way for yet deeper work. Then came the visit to the neighbouring church of Hornby; and the administration of the rite, which in many cases, it is sadly to be feared, conveys no blessing, and is but a delusion and a snare. Not so with Gawin Kirkham. In him were born resolves which are from God alone. There was a definite turning from sin to righteousness, and from the power of Satan unto God. Henceforth, for him old things had passed away, and with deep earnestness of purpose he sought to serve the Lord.

"His religion was intensely real to him, and hence the outward evidence of its existence soon appeared. An old hayloft behind his home was early consecrated by gatherings of the brothers for prayer and praise. Here they drew near to God; here their strength was frequently renewed; and here the flame upon the altar of the soul was fanned and fed by intercourse with the unseen and the eternal. Thus the toilsome way grew brighter; life's little duties were transformed; and power for service was imparted. They prayed, and they prevailed!

"The experience was so sweet that Gawin longed to share it with his parents; and the desire grew within him to ask his father to establish family worship. But how might this be effected? He feared his father's anger, and his almost certain refusal, and hesitated long ere he ventured to approach him. The writer well remembers how, one evening late in life, he related this incident, describing the trembling fear with which at length, walking home with his father on a night so dark that his agitated face could not be seen, he made known the long-concealed request. To his surprise and joy his father raised no objection, and henceforth sweet incense of daily prayer arose within the home.

"Other opportunities for Christian service were anon presented and eagerly accepted. In the village smithy, under the auspices of some local Methodists, and especially of the blacksmith himself, Gospel meetings were conducted; and here one Sabbath afternoon, amid innumerable fears and much trembling, Gawin delivered his first public address from the text, 'I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.' The stirring words themselves assisted and encouraged him, and though we have no available account of the address itself, we may be sure that the young preacher's utterances were acceptable, and that to his own heart the occasion was inspiring indeed."

THE GOSPEL IN LOMBARDY.

A correspondent furnishes us with some interesting particulars as to the progress of the Gospel in the Valtellina, at the extreme north of Italy:—

A little way above Colico, where the ruins of the castle of Fuentes are visible, there are seen on the right hand and on the left, either stretched on the declivity of the mountains or spread along the dark green ground of the campagna, villages and small towns like Morbegno, Sondrio, Ponte, and Tirano. No wonder that at one time this last "lembo" of Italian soil should have been the talk of all Europe, and excited the appetite of many a potentate. With the dawn of full political liberty came full liberty of conscience and of worship. The modern Evangelicals of the Valtellina are principally converts from Romanism, the fruit of the seed sown in faith long long ago, whose bright example of holy life puts to shame those who were bred and born in the reform cradle. Pastor Blasi is certainly one of the most enthusiastic and energetic missionaries that the Italian Church Committee of Evangelisation have in their ranks, and they showed much discernment in his choice for the Valtellina. His ministry has been greatly blessed, for almost the entire church of Sondrio is made up of converts brought to the knowledge of the Gospel through his instrumentality. Many of those good folk walk a distance of seven, ten, and even fifteen Italian miles to hear the Word of Life.

Some time ago the pastor at Chiavenna was transferred to Sondrio, with the supervision of the whole of the province, the Committee of Evangelisation not having sufficient means for the support of two pastors. By this arrangement the most promising and important centre of this mission work will have to be satisfied with a visit which Pastor Blasi or one of the brethren will make at intervals. This has cast considerable gloom over the brave little flock, and it is feared that unless God sends better things, even these visits will have to cease. Meanwhile the Roman Catholics have been in high glee since this became known, and have sung no end of Te Deums throughout their parishes in token of gratitude for such deliverance. However, hard as such trials are, these isolated ones rejoice that the issues are not with man.

The young brother who acts as secretary to the little church at Sondrio has for a long time suffered great privation and persecution because of his fidelity to Christ. He was drawn to the evangelical services at first through curiosity, but the teachings that he heard made a deep impression upon him, and he threw in his lot with the simple disciples of the Saviour. For two years past he has been unable to procure a situation in the town because of the influence brought to bear by the priestly party. His parents also have greatly suffered in their business through the same malign influence, and instead of helping the son they need his help. In this extremity he is seeking to go where he could receive sufficient training to qualify him as an evangelist, so that in due time he may return to his native valley and help on the good cause for which he has endured so much. Any friends who are led to take an interest in this case can obtain fuller details from Signor E. Martinucci, 5, Eastern-quadrant, Brighton.

ENCOURAGEMENT AT MILAN.

Pastor Alberto Bossi, writing from 2, Bettino Picasoli, Milan, says:—

"Milan is a city of 450,000 inhabitants, many of whom, having cast off the yoke of Rome, feel the need of religion. There are several agencies at work, and during the past year or two the movement of the people towards the Gospel has been very decided, and there is no church that has not to thank God for blessing on its efforts.

"What is especially encouraging is the fact that, contrary to what was the case some years ago, it is no longer controversy against Popery that interests most of those who come to hear our preaching, but rather it is the setting forth of the pure and simple Gospel, and of Christ, the only and perfect Saviour. I have often seen persons moved to tears at the simple statement of the elementary truths of God.

"Years ago, the Temporal Power having fallen, and the old Pope having been succeeded by Leo XIII., many pious Romanists believed that the new Pope, free from political bonds, would devote himself to the work of a spiritual shepherd. Hence a Catholic revival, which for several years paralysed every evangelical effort. But now that hope is blighted, because the programme and ideal of the present Pope consist in putting the nations under the political power of the Church. Disappointed souls naturally turn towards those who are bearers of the pure and simple doctrine of Christ, which, while it draws men to God, is also a foundation of temporal freedom. Thus, there is in Italy a revived sense of religious need.

"We have begun a new branch of work, having for its special purpose the organising of students and educated young men in voluntary missionary bands, to evangelize in the city and suburbs. Already a small band has been formed, but to develop this project will require financial resources which we do not at present possess. We wish to open a central institute with a conference hall, Y.M.C.A., circulating library, etc."

SIR WILFRID LAWSON has called attention in the House of Commons to the manner in which the law is exceeded by magistrates granting occasional licences for entertainments other than a "public dinner or ball."

The Late REV. JOSEPH NEESHIMA, LL.D.,

JAPANESE CHRISTIAN AND EDUCATIONALIST.

THE worker whose portrait we present today was born in the city of Tokyo in February, 1844. He belonged to a Samurai, or soldier family, and was given the early training which thousands of his class receive. As was the ordinary custom of the people, he was instructed for several years in the Chinese characters and literature, in the art of fencing, horseback riding, and other military exercises, and when quite young aspired to be a brave soldier, or a man of honour, like those of whom he had often read in the traditions of his country.

As he was once reading the life of a Chinese hero he came across an expression uttered at the discontinuance of the sword exercise, "A sword is only designed to slay a single man, but I am going to learn to kill ten thousand enemies." By this he meant that he was going to study books on stratagem, and not depend merely upon hand-to-hand combat. Young Neeshima thought to follow the same course, and studied most diligently.

He was taught the heathen system of worship. But this did not satisfy the deep and secret longing of his heart. As the Christian religion was then strictly prohibited, he had never heard of the Gospel, but a shadowy conviction of the presence of God had dawned upon him, and awakened strange aspirations after something better than he had yet experienced.

While in this state of mind a friend lent him a number of Chinese books to read. What excited his interest and curiosity most were a few Christian books published at Shanghai. From these he first learned that there was one only and true God, who had created all things. He also discovered that his other name was the "Heavenly Father," and this inspired still more reverence towards Him, because he thought He was more to Him than mere creator of the world.

These books made such a profound impression upon his mind that he wished at once to visit America, to study its people, and know the God there worshipped. As the penalty for leaving his country, as well as for becoming a Christian, was death, he did not dare to make his full purpose known. So earnest and persevering was he in the search after truth, that an abridgment of the Bible was carefully read at night, "lest the savage country's law would bring to the death of the cross his whole family."

His purpose grew strong within him, and while walking the streets of Yedo one morning he quite unexpectedly met a friend who informed him that a schooner would leave for Hakodate in three days; and it was suggested that he should take the voyage. Having got permission to do so, his father was utterly confounded at the news. Some unexpected words from his grandfather gave him new courage, and bowing to his parents, sisters, and friends, he left his home not to return until his purpose had, if possible, been accomplished.

After reaching Hakodate, he became the teacher of Bishop Nicolai, of the Greek Church; and while so engaged, looked about for some means of escape. At length a friend in charge of a foreign store secured a passage for him to Shanghai on an American schooner. Taken upon board in the dress of a shop boy, and in the dead of night, he was locked up in a room and kept concealed until the vessel was far out of the harbour. Then, as he had no money to pay his passage, it was agreed that he should work for it. Utterly ignorant of English, and without friends, his life on shipboard was by no means an enviable one.

Upon reaching Shanghai the captain took an interest in him, and secured him a passage to America. Before leaving China he heard that Bibles were for sale there. Unwilling to beg from his new friends, he sold his sword and bought a Chinese copy of the Scriptures; and this was his constant companion during the eight months' voyage.

When he reached Boston he went on shore, and with a little pocket-money which the captain had given him bought a copy of "Robinson Crusoe." This taught him that he might pray. For Crusoe prayed when in distress, and why might not he? The case of the young wanderer was mentioned to Hon. A. Hardy, owner of the ship in which he had sailed, and Mr. Hardy thought at first that Mr. Neeshima might become the house servant for whom he happened then to be seeking. But after receiving him into his home, a few days were sufficient to show that Mr. Neeshima was no ordinary youth. Mr. and Mrs. Hardy took him into their family as a trust from God. For ten years in the best schools of America he was carefully and conscientiously instructed; and this poor friendless Japanese boy, who stole out of his native land in darkness and secrecy, was given a fine Christian home and the best advantages that money could procure.

During the course of his studies the Japanese Embassy visited the United States, and needing an interpreter and translator, invited Mr. Neeshima to accompany the Embassy as an attaché of the Commissioner of Education. His pardon for leaving his country was obtained, and in this official capacity he travelled through the States, Canada, and Europe, examining the schools and educational systems of different lands. He gained much valuable knowledge for his future work, and was greatly strengthened in his purpose to devote his life to the Christian education of his countrymen. His integrity and great abilities so impressed the Embassy that a high civil position was secured for him on his return. He also gained the warm friendship and esteem of many who have since become influential statesmen in Japan, and who have more than once shown their appreciation of him and his work.

Having completed his studies, he was ordained in Boston in September, 1874. At the meeting of the American Board that year, in Rutland, he made a most touching plea for money to found a Christian school in Japan. This appeal secured in a short time a pledge of 5000 dols. With this money he returned to his native land to found an institution in which the Christian principles of faith in God, love of truth, and benevolence towards one's fellow-men should be inculcated.

To his inexpressible joy he found that during his absence from Japan, much had changed. The old edicts against Christianity were no longer in force; converts were multiplying in various places, and a desir for western science and improvement was spreading all over the land. He began at once to tell his people what he had seen and heard. He also spoke with great power and earnestness to the crowds who came to hear him, of that God who so loved the world as to give his only Son to redeem sinners. At the home of his parents in the town of Annaka the largest temple was opened for his use; even that was too small to hold the eager throngs gathered to see and hear him.

The chosen field for his future work was Kyoto, the ancient capital of Japan. There he opened a Christian school, with six pupils. By the aid of his friends in the Government he was able to secure a valuable location adjoining the old palace grounds, and the work has steadily grown in numbers and influence. For some time there was violent opposition on the part of priests and officials on account of its Christian character. That opposition gradually diminished, and the school became steadily popular. The number of students increased, and their character was such as to call forth the highest praise from the governor of the city.

But devoted as he was to educational matters, he always kept to the forefront the great work of evangelisation. Wherever he went he was ready to preach, and his addresses were both popular and effective.

Impaired health at length obliged him to seek rest and a change of climate. In 1884 he revisited America; in 1886 returned to Japan, when he effected a plan for the enlargement of the school into a university. So great was the confidence of the people in him that nearly 60,000 dollars were given for this purpose by leading statesmen and business men in Japan.

In October, 1889, he went to Tokyo to interest prominent men in the capital in a further endowment of the university. While there he took a severe cold, and was soon after completely prostrated. As his critical condition became known, special meetings for prayer were held in many places, and great was the anxiety felt in his behalf. When told that he could not recover, he talked for hours about the best methods for the evangelisation of Japan. He indicated a well-devised plan for the future enlargement of the missionary work. Loving messages were sent to his friends in America, to the trustees, teachers, students, and contributors to the college; and especially to the Japanese Home Missionary Society. As the end drew near he raised his hand, saying, "Sufficient," and with the words, "Peace, joy, heaven," on his lips, entered into rest.

The funeral procession was a mile and a-half in length, and in the ranks was a delegation of priests bearing a banner with the inscription, "From the Buddhists of Osaka." Mr. A. S. Hardy truthfully says, "No private citizen has ever died in Japan whose loss was so widely and so deeply felt as that of Mr. Neeshima. His death was deplored by the Press throughout the country as a national loss. Men of all ranks and classes united in touching tributes to his worth." The university which he founded is not his only monument, and does not represent the sum of his activities. Beyond all the energy and self sacrifice involved in its foundation are the personal and indirect influences upon men and society which cannot be estimated.

MR. THOMAS HORROCKS has concluded a ten days' mission at the Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth. His freshness and power were remarkable; he gathered very large audiences, and moved them to tears or laughter, the seamen delighting in him, and coming up in numbers to hear him.

CUI BONO?

A YOUNG MAN'S QUESTION.

"No," said J——, decisively; "I do not want to be a Christian. I know I should cut a sorry figure, for I should give in at the first jeer, and then I give you leave to despise me!" "But," said his friend, "you cannot judge what you would do under such circumstances, because to be a Christian you must experience a change of heart. Jeers would not be the same to you then that they are now. You would even welcome them as the thorns of discipleship."

"Apart from that, I do not see—even if I could bring myself to regard my heart as sinful—what I should gain by being a Christian. Where is the advantage?" "That," replied his friend, "is not the way to regard it. You do not, in all your motives and actions, regard first the personal advantage to be derived from a certain line of conduct. Why should you do so in spiritual things?" "I think it is natural, before making a complete change in one's life, to put the question, 'Cui bono?'"

"Well, then, I will admit it, for the sake of argument. But, remember, Christ's salvation is a special cure for a special disease; once admit the disease, sin, and you will no longer hesitate about accepting the cure. However, a few of the more ordinary 'advantages' are that you shall go on your way without fear; you shall have God with you always; He will never forsake you; his love shall encompass and enwrap you so tenderly that even in the unkindest of the world's changeable weather your spirit shall suffer no harm from biting frosts or burning droughts. You shall be safe, for you will be under the shadow and in the love of God."

"Sounds quite too good for me, my dear M——," said J——. "Now, can you tell me," he continued, "of anyone becoming a believer against his will? If Christianity is infallible, we ought to be made Christians, even though we don't want it."

"I cannot argue with you, for you are against yourself in your last argument," was the reply, "but I can tell you of an instance which has just come into to my mind, of something of the kind you name."

"I should be glad to hear it," said J——, oracularly.

"To begin, then. One Sunday, in Lyons, Adolph Monod preached a sermon from the words, 'God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son.' He spoke of Christ as the Son of God and the Son of man, and told his hearers that on the following Sunday he would show how they might be saved by faith in this God-man. Those in authority over the Church objected to this evangelical doctrine, and said they to Monod:—'If you preach the sermon you have announced, we must have you arrested and brought before the Prefect.'

"'Preach it I must,' said Monod, 'for that is my commission.'

"He did preach the sermon, and complaint was made to the Prefect, who called upon Monod to deliver up the two sermons, which he did at once.

"That evening the Prefect, Count de Gasparin, took home the obnoxious sermons. He disliked sermons of any kind, but especially sermons of this pattern. However, he was a faithful man in discharging the duties of his office.

"'See,' said he to his wife, 'I shall have to spend the whole evening reading through these objectionable pages,' and he flung the manuscript on the table.

"'I will read them with you,' said the Countess, 'if that will help.'

"They began, and with every page they read they grew more absorbed and interested. They forgot how time was passing, forgot everything but what they were reading. They finished the first sermon, and eagerly read the second. Night was far advanced, they had spent hours in reading, and in verifying the Biblical references, and the grey streaks of morn appeared before they had finished their task. A mere official duty had become the most willing service of the heart, and though the Prefect was obliged, as a magistrate, to deprive Monod of his place, he told the preacher that he owed him an everlasting debt. For he and his wife became evangelical Christians, earnest, influential, happy believers in Christ. The 'Pearl' they found that night descended to their son, Count Agenor de Gasparin, long a shining light, and a leader among the true believers in France."

"Well," said J——, "you have the better of me. But that is a stumbling-block to me—how God can be the God-man."

"J——," replied his friend, "that will be no stumbling-block when you have come to Him. Flesh and blood cannot reveal it to you—it is not a matter to be approached intellectually. Come to Jesus, and it shall be revealed to you of God."

"There is something in that, I confess," said J——.

"At present you do not admit your need of coming to God for salvation; you do not recognise your undoneness without Him, therefore you are not open to understand his offer. Have you ever read what an old writer says on this very subject—it may help you: 'When thou hearest of Christ, do not think of Him as God only, or man only, but both together. I know that, as man, Christ was hungry; and I know that, as God, he fed five thousand men. I know that, as man, Christ was thirsty; and I also know that, as God, He changed water into wine. I know that, as man, He was carried in a ship; and I also know that, as God, He walked upon the waves of the sea. I know that, as man, He died; I also know that, as God, He raised the dead. I know that, as man, Christ was spat upon by the Jews; and I also know that, as God, He is worshipped by the hosts of heaven.'"

J——, after this, said very little; but he began carefully and thoughtfully to read the Gospels. They became to him what they did to the Prefect and his wife—the means of a true conversion to God. J——, himself, puts it thus:—

"I read at first intellectually; but the Gospels became a mirror, and I saw my own heart as I had never been able to see it before—sinful, and needing a Saviour. Then the scales dropped from my eyes; instead of doubting the credentials of Christ, I looked to my own. I had none! I was compelled, of necessity, to crave his pardon, and I can say now, with Newton, that there are two things I shall never forget, though I forget all else. They are: (1) That I was a great sinner; (2) that Jesus was a great Saviour." G.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

VISIT TO KIMBERLEY.

DEAR SIR,—These two brethren have concluded a ten days' mission on the Diamond Fields, which has proved most successful. The largest hall in Kimberley was procured for their services, which were always crowded to excess; sometimes hundreds had to leave for the want of accommodation. At one meeting some 5000 persons were present. This special effort was most highly appreciated, and has resulted in quickening the life of the Churches and arousing the attention of the masses to the Gospel of our blessed Lord.

The powerful advocacy of the Truth by Mr. McNeill, and the impressive singing of the sweet melodies, replete with Gospel sentiment, by Mr. Burke, will be long remembered with gratitude by the inhabitants of Kimberley and its neighbourhood.

Most heartily do we wish continued success to our dear brethren in the great and glorious work in which they are engaged.

JAMES HUGHES, President of Baptist Union, S. Africa.

The May Meetings.

National Temperance League.

The annual meeting of the National Temperance League was held on Monday night at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, the Bishop of London, president, taking the chair. The annual report stated that the financial position of the league was stronger than it had been for several years. The League's agents and deputations had attended an immense number of conferences and meetings in different parts of the country. The Bishop of London said it was a delight to him to see this Society growing year after year, not only in numbers, but in influence. They were rising to be a great power in the country, and the Legislature was now and then bound to put to itself the question, "What shall we do with these obstinate temperance people?" They simply went on saying to all they could reach, "If you wish to do your fellow-creatures good—if you wish to save this country from the degradation which this terrible curse inflicts upon it, to see England really happy because a sober nation—if you wish to see England free—then come and fight against this tremendous tyranny, which is now holding us down."

Sir B. W. Richardson said that after twenty five years he had come to the distinct conclusion, unhesitatingly and undoubtedly expressed, that by abstinence he had lost nothing, retained everything, and gained much. It also gave him no more trouble or anxiety now to treat the most serious diseases without alcohol than it ever did with it. Recoveries from the severest diseases were as good, if not better, without alcohol, and convalescence was unquestionably advanced.—Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., said that there was a section of their fellow-countrymen who had become the slaves of strong drink, and these were the people for whom above all legislation was needed. They ought to do their best to save such people, who could not save themselves.—Rev. Dr. Moulton said they now had the prospect of strong and effective legislation, but they must not fall into the error of allowing their trust in legislation to cause them to relax their educational efforts.

London Flower Girls.

The twenty-eighth anniversary of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission took place on Monday evening at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road; Mr. Robert Scott presiding. At five o'clock a meat tea was given to 900 girls and women; and later, plaiting the May-pole and crowning the May Queen afforded some entertainment.

The annual report, as read by Mr. Blackett, pointed out that the number of flower girls has increased tenfold during a quarter of a century. The street trade was shown to be altogether undesirable for girls, and it became more objectionable through their becoming associated with strong and lazy youths who professed to help in the traffic. The aim of the mission is, therefore, altogether to withdraw the younger girls from the streets. The necessity was shown of giving attention to cripple girls, while nearly every inmate of the orphanage at Clacton had a sad history. The need of the work increased year by year, and increased resources were wanted for carrying it on.

Rev. J. H. Rose, vicar of Clerkenwell, showed that there was no work in London carried on with more earnestness. The Chairman made some touching allusions to the late Lord Shaftesbury. The white-robed little girls on the platform were a beautiful sight, but they had come out of great tribulation, and while there was no doubt of the success of the work represented, the urgent need for it increased. There was a growth of the love of flowers, but the risks to which the young girl flower-sellers were exposed were fearful to contemplate by any parent. Mrs. Lynn characterized the work as one which brightened up the dark slums of London.

Mrs. Hannah Knight distributed the prizes to some sixty or seventy recipients; it was said that every prize-taker was a total abstainer, and some had been so for ten years. One girl entitled to a prize was only ten years old, but was in consumption and at the point of death. She had expressed a hope that she would live long enough to receive her prize.

In the course of a brief statement, Mr. John A. Groom, the superintendent, referred to the beginnings of the work and to its progress. They had now in London girls and women trading in flowers whom they were wont to call the Lord's street lamps—those who were ever ready to speak a word for the Master. It was hoped that such would be multiplied. The mothers present were urged to bear anything, if possible, rather than allow their daughters to sell in the streets. As a rule it meant certain ruin. Next to the streets the factories were a bad school for girls. In factories some earned only three or four shillings a week, and in that case there would be a dark shadow behind. They should look with more favour on domestic service; good places could always be found for girls trained in the Home connected with the Mission.

The Church Missionary Society.

Exeter Hall was densely crowded on Tuesday morning by the friends of the C.M.S. Every aisle and passage was packed, the Press box was invaded, and an overflow meeting was held in St. James's Hall. In short, the four meetings arranged by the C.M.S. on Tuesday afford cheering evidence of a deepening interest in the work of missions.

The report read by Rev. F. Bayliss opened by referring to the cheering extension of missionary interest, the growing number of candidates, and the fact that within ten years the staff of missionaries has been doubled. The diverse methods employed by the C.M.S.—such as itineration, educational, literary, medical mission, women's work, and the training of native workers—are then touched upon. In every mission-field the general effects produced by these efforts are visible to all who are willing to see them; and the committee cite the change wrought in Uganda as an example. Details of baptisms—some of a notable character—are given from all parts of the world. Special mention is made of the work in Mohammedan States, and evidence is given that the Spirit of God is stirring among the heathen. Indeed, in some parts, such as Mingo and Filore in Africa, Tokushima, Japan, and various places in India and China, the year has been one of revival. The statistics of the missions for 1893-94 are given as follows:—Stations, 324; European missionaries: Ordained, 347; lay, 74; wives, 255; ladies, 168; total, 844. Native and Eurasian clergy, 312; native lay teachers, 4,876; native Christian adherents (including catechumens), 200,484; native communicants, 54,561; schools, 2,025; scholars, 81,648. (These figures are approximate, as no returns have been received from some of the missions.)

Great enthusiasm was aroused when Mr. Wigram presented a statement, indicating that the threatened deficit of £12,610 had been more than cleared off by the noble generosity of friends, and in fact there was now some £1300 to the good.

Sir J. H. Kennaway, Bart., the president, reviewed certain features in the report which he felt called for special thankfulness.

The Bishop of Liverpool gave as his keynote praise; praise for opened doors, for fresh labourers, for increased funds, and for great blessing. He himself rejoiced that the society remained faithful to the Evangelical principles on which it was founded; so long as it held fast by these, it would be honoured by God and supported by his people.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe dwelt on the obverse side of the question. While thanking God for what has been done, he felt that any attempt to balance our work against our responsibilities and resources, must humble us to the very dust. The doors are opened world-wide, our Gospel is world-wide, the material wealth of the Church is vast, and, after all, how little has been done? Yet necessity is laid on us, and woe to us if we preach not the Gospel. On these lines Mr. Webb-Peploe went on to urge, with force and fervour, the peculiar claims of the foreign field on the Church at home.

Bishop Stuart, who has resigned his episcopal charge in New Zealand in order to give himself to Mission service in Persia, dwelt on the changes wrought by missions, and passed on to show how remarkably the Holy Spirit has identified Himself with missions and owned the labours of the missionaries. Illustrations of this fact he gave from his experiences among the Maori, and in earlier years in India. In closing, he told how he had been led to leave his work in New Zealand and go as a missionary to the Mohammedans.

Rev. Ll. Lloyd spoke of the Lord's work in China; Bishop Tucker made a forceful plea for Africa; and Sir Richard Temple dealt with the claims of Missions generally and of India in particular.

S. American Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of the South American Missionary Society was held at Sion College on Friday last. The Right Hon. the Earl of Jersey presided, and urged the needs of the Society in its extensive and most interesting work.

Commander Sullivan recounted many interesting reminiscences of the work carried on by his father and Captain Allen Gardiner fifty years ago, and deplored the want of generosity in the present generation as regards the society's work. The subscriptions ought, he said, to reach £22,000 instead of £11,000

The meeting was also addressed by the Vicar of Islington, Canon Kirby, Mr. R. Holmes White, and Mr. Henry Morris, Chairman of Committee, who said that every advantage should be taken of the Jubilee to make it a marked year in the history of the society. July 4 was the day on which the first meeting of the society (then the Patagonian Mission) was held in Brighton, when Allen Gardiner (the founder) was present. That day was to be set apart as a special time of devotion and prayer for the workers, secretaries, committee, and friends of the society all over the world.

FLOWERS AND FRUIT.

I have a garden blooming gaily
In every season of the year,
Its flowers to my heart are dear;
With watchful care I tend them daily.

Not barren, not for empty show:
Delicious fruit in each concealed
Shall in its time full harvest yield,
Matured by Sun to richest glow.

I cultivate with ardent love
The human mind, that sweetest flower.
May God, through sunshine and through shower,
Still grant his blessing from above!

A. Graeter.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

We train ourselves by training children.
Play is the first poetry of the child.
Nobody thinks of putting a new spring in a watch if he has not learned how: far less can a parent who has not studied the subject correct any fault in his child.—Parents' Review.

Because of little pallid lips which once
My name did call,
No childish voice, in vain appeal, upon
My ear doth fall;
I count it all my joy their joys to share,
And sorrows small.

Mary K. Field.

Early training in industry is all important. Religion without industry, without labour, may become empty dreaming, a shadow without a substance; just as toil, industry, without religion, makes a man a machine, a beast of burden.

Will my laddie be a man?
Will he aye do richt,
Workin' oot life's noblest plan
Wi' a Christian's micht?

Little kens my bonnie bairn
A' that racks my breast;
Nane his future can discern—
God kens best.

Ballads of Bairnhood.

ANTI-SUNDAY TRAVELLING UNION.—The ninth annual meeting of the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union was held last week in the library of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street; Major-General Bruce, president of the Union, took the chair. The report stated that during the past year 2084 members had been enrolled, bringing up the total to about 17,000. Allusion is made to a new departure then under contemplation, viz., the formation of a union of shareholders of railway and other public traffic companies who were opposed to Sunday traffic, for the purpose of exerting their united influence to obtain a reduction of Sunday labour in their respective companies. Such a union was inaugurated in June last, and called the "Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath." Rev. Sydenham Dixon, incumbent of Park Chapel, Chelsea, discussed the practical side of the question. Mrs. Hind Smith and Mr. E. Kemp, who represented the Shareholders' Union, also spoke.

A FRANCO-SWISS MOSAIC

The report of last year's work of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland is appropriately entitled a Franco-Swiss Mosaic. It is not a formal statement of operations, but a collection of facts and incidents, some of them very remarkable, related in a graphic and interesting manner. We make the following brief extract from the pen of Commissioner Booth-Clibborn, regarding the Paris work :—

"The Salle Auber, 3, Rue Auber, continues to be a sort of central electric light 'station,' to use the term of the electricians.

"During the last year its walls have witnessed a considerable number of remarkable conversions. Several prodigal sons have been turned into the narrow way. The young baron and the infidel lady whose story we told last year are going on splendidly; he is now a captain. In the corps there are now over fifty men and young women who were formerly, almost without exception, Catholics in name, though devoid of any religion.

"From among them we have a band of sixteen musicians, personally led by the D. O. Staff-Captain Peyron. They enter heart and soul into the soul-saving work, and the damp dark cellar in which they practise fittingly represents the moral and spiritual world of mustiness and darkness in which they labour to save souls. Thank God, many who come to the Hall come not in vain, but are finally convicted, conquered, and captured. Of such is the following :—

"'To make life spring forth from a dead heart, is it not as great a miracle as to make living water burst from a rock by smiting it with a rod?' Thus writes a man of fifty-six, until recently an infidel. The elevated position he occupies in Paris may be judged by the fact that his duties required him to present his compliments to President Carnot in person on New Year's morning; but one hour later he was found mounting to a fifth story in full uniform to salute the Maréchale, and thank her for the marvellous change which had taken place in his soul since Christmas night!

"I have before me his written testimony, occupying ten foolscap pages. It is full of life, beauty, and pathos. I will only quote one other line. It is where, in speaking of that memorable Christmas evening, he says :—

"'I was obliged to yield—you cast my soul violently at the feet of Christ.' Truly, his was a rocky heart—that of a sample infidel of high position who 'had never felt a religious emotion in his life.' Convicted of the reality of the Army's religion on entering our Christmas meeting in 1892, and hearing Staff-Captain Mrs. Peyron, he capitulated finally at the Maréchale's Christmas-night gathering in 1893, and came sobbing to the penitent form.

"Some of the expressions of this convert throw light into the world where his mind revolved. 'For forty-five years,' said he, 'I had lost every connecting link with God. Now I have found it.' When a Bible was offered him by an officer, he was at first terribly afraid that some of the mysterious parts of the Old Testament might arouse doubts and questionings. 'I am afraid of getting muddled,' said he; 'the Maréchale has made me understand and appropriate one thing—the atonement, the redemption; that is enough for me for the moment.' After a meeting, he said to us one evening, 'You speak truly of the uncertainty of life. How well I understood it in 1870, when a Prussian bullet kissed my head, passing inside the lining of my képi. But God kept me alive.'

"In a recent letter he says: 'How rightly you recommend me to remain in close fellowship with Jesus by prayer. Not only is it a necessity for my soul, but it is a joy to draw near to Him, especially seeing that I have neglected Him so long. How great is his pardon! What a strength He gives to resist the attacks of the enemy. As Catholics we never read the Bible. The other day, in opening it, I found these words: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." I said to myself, He shall be also my Shepherd; with Him I shall no more fear that awful spiritual famine, that darkness in which my soul struggled, without guide or horizon or compass.'"

Revolutionary Socialists are among the converts, and ladies of noble birth among the officers on the Continent. Copies of the booklet (price 2d.) may be had from the International Headquarters, 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The report of the Evangelisation Society for the year ending March 31 opens with a note of praise to God. "He has maintained our evangelists for the most part in health and strength, using his Word through them in many parts of our land, supplying our needs—and what needs they have been—far more than we can enumerate!" The statistics given at the end of the report enable us to realise the magnitude and importance of the work. During the year 268 evangelists took 20,301 meetings under the auspices of the Society. These meetings were held in 1148 places, and attended by about two millions of people. The contributions in aid of the work amounted to £10,172.

Account is rendered of missions held in different parts of the country, in many cases attended with much blessing. It is pleasing to read that the evangelists are almost daily meeting with those who in past years have been led to Christ through their ministry. The report says :—"Sometimes an even greater privilege is granted, as, for example, on November 11, a Miss Alice Young, of Enderby, sailed to Matabeleland as a missionary of the London Missionary Society. She was brought to the Lord, through Mr. Bradlaugh, eleven years ago. What a vista this opens to faith's view—where shall the influence of such ministry extend? When shall it cease? Not till the trumpet sounds, and we all meet the Lord in the air!"

Tent missions in the summer are an attractive feature of the work. During the last season twenty-five tents were employed in England and seven in Scotland, not to mention instances in which preachers were furnished for missions held in tents belonging to friends of the society. One letter speaks of two poachers being brought to the Lord. They at once sold their dogs and guns, and have openly confessed Christ. Another touchingly refers to an aged man walking several miles to a tent-meeting, to tell the evangelist of the conversion of his son. It is solemn to read such a letter as the following, relating to a village within fifty miles from London :—"It would be impossible to understand or appreciate the work done in our village without some knowledge of the place in which your evangelist has been preaching the Gospel. Your evangelist told me that he never remembered working in any sphere equal to it for open sin and moral darkness. The place is priest-ridden and drink-cursed. Notwithstanding all these difficulties, I am glad to report considerable success. Cases of definite blessing have been met with, and, what is most gratifying, many have heard the Gospel faithfully preached who never frequent any place of worship, and we cannot but believe that the seed sown will bear fruit in days to come." Many letters have been received from ministers and clergymen bearing testimony to the quickened life of their own people through the missions held.

One rather unusual mission was held last season—a tent was pitched in a certain place for two or three weeks, but it remained for the whole summer—from May to September. In another neighbourhood, where straw-plaiting is the staple industry, the evangelist found that many would come to hear the Word if they might bring their work with them. This permission was readily granted, and soon there might be seen a large number of busy hands at the almost noiseless work, whilst ears were attentively drinking in the good news for guilty man; frequently, as the attention became absorbed, the fingers would become quiet, and the work for the time being would be forgotten.

In Scotland also good work was done, alike in public buildings and in tents. All who are willing in any way to assist in the work in England and Wales are invited to write to Captain W. E. Smith, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C. Communications on Scottish business should be addressed, Secretary, Evangelisation Society (Scottish Branch), Grove-street Institute, Glasgow.

STRANGEWAYS REFUGE, MANCHESTER.—As a member of the committee of this institution, Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew has sailed for Canada. He intends to travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific, visiting former inmates of the homes, who are now settled in various parts of the Dominion. He will personally examine the effects of emigration, and if found satisfactory arrange for future development especially in the North-west. He may be addressed in Canada, care of Rev. Robert Wallace, Marchmont, Belleville, Ontario.

AMONG MOORISH CHILDREN.

All is going on well in our work among the children of Tangier. It is just a year since we opened the school; we began with four or five boys, others soon joined, until we had sometimes over thirty pupils. Besides their other studies, they always had a daily Bible lesson, and although at first very wild and noisy, after a few weeks they greatly improved.

Since Christmas we have made an important change in the work; we have opened the school for girls. We had not thought that in Morocco it would be possible to get the girls to attend school, but they came asking to be admitted. To take them meant excluding all the elder boys: it was a grief to lose them, but as they are taught to read in the native schools, while for girls there are no schools, we could not resist the appeal. All who know the degraded state of the women of Morocco, will sympathise with us in this effort to teach and raise at least a few of them from the service and slavery of Satan into the glorious liberty of the service of Christ. We have therefore opened the school to girls and little boys; it is early days to speak about numbers, but at present I have twenty-eight names on my book, and we have an average attendance of twenty little Moorish maidens each morning. Besides texts and Bible history, they learn reading, sewing, and all sorts of general knowledge—not writing, as the parents consider that a dangerous art for a woman!

Our great desire is to teach them to read God's Word for themselves, and to believe in Him of whom it speaks. There has at present been but little opposition, although the parents are constantly in and out, and frequently stay to the Bible lesson. They are nearly all well-known friends, who have often been helped in times of sorrow and sickness, and although some children have been taken away, others quickly fill their places. Caring for the children has led to much other work, and opened many more houses for visiting. We have a women's class on Fridays, which many of the mothers attend regularly; with some it is their only chance to hear of Christ. We hope that three in the class are now trusting in Him as their own Saviour. We clothe and feed a number of poor little ones; there is much distress all round us, and we shall be very glad of any help for these women and children, or towards rent and other expenses.

There is no improvement yet in the state of Morocco; it is a hard, dark place to work in; the slavery, persecution, cruelty, and oppression are as bad as ever. Only to-day I have heard of two who have died in prison under the lash. We give away Gospels in the prisons, in the town and villages, visit the women in their homes, teach the children, and in the hospital and medical mission numbers hear of Christ. We greatly need more workers, for we cannot do nearly all that might be done. Many are hearing the "good news," and we believe there are not a few secret disciples.

Little Hamed, who was mentioned in a former letter, and about whom many inquiries have been made, was last summer taken to Mecca by his parents. There his father died of cholera, and it is unlikely the family will be able to return to Morocco. But many prayers ascend for the child, who gave such unusual promise; especially we ask, that even in Mecca, he may not forget what he learned about Sidna Aisa (Jesus), whom here he seemed so really to love.

The work among the Spaniards is going on well. The persecution is less, and Mr. Patrick and the other workers are cheered by the large numbers again attending the meetings, which are held five nights a week in different parts of the town. The attendance of the children at both the Sunday and day-school is also now very good. There is much poverty amongst them, and many men are still out of work.

TWO MISSIONARY STUDENTS at Harley College, Bow-road, E., would be glad of evangelistic work during the first weeks of July. Address, R. J. H., at the College.

CRUSADE IN CHICAGO.—A society for the prevention of crime, similar to the Dr. Parkhurst Society in New York, has been organised in Chicago. Its object is to collect evidence, and prosecute those in official positions who protect disreputable houses, opium dens, and gambling places. Election frauds will be looked into, and the society proposes to enforce the excise laws.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

On Sunday, April 22, the annual meeting of the McAll Mission was held in the Church of the Oratoire, under the presidency of Monsieur Louis Sautter. The chairman reminded the large audience, chiefly consisting of the attendants at the various halls in Paris, that a year ago their beloved Dr. McAll was still with them, though too ill to be present at the meeting. Since his removal, on May 18, 1893, the work had been much blessed, and God had been with them in their sorrow and loss. He affirmed the desire of the committee to continue the Mission on the same lines as before, preaching the Gospel to all, in love and compassion, and avoiding all controversy.

A remarkably interesting report was then presented by Rev. C. E. Greig, of which a summary had been distributed with the hymn sheets. He gave a sketch of what the work really was, consisting of public Gospel meetings in halls, in the streets (as at Marseilles), and in villages (as around St. Etienne). Then as accessory, singing meetings, magic-lantern exhibitions, reading-rooms, temperance work, distribution of soup, medical mission work, industrial schools, meetings for the blind, for chimney sweeps, for sailors and soldiers, mothers' meetings, Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations, Christian Endeavour work, Sunday and Thursday schools, Bible and prayer-meetings, mission boat, mission churches, visitation, etc. Thus was passed in rapid review a tableau of activities of all kinds, in Paris and the provinces, of which very few present had probably been aware before.

Mr. Greig was able to announce, that in spite of the great depression of trade in Great Britain and America, thanks to the efforts made by the many friends of the Mission all over the world, and also owing to the opportune and truly God-sent addition to the funds of two legacies of £1000 each, the indebtedness of the mission would be fully met in the course of this year, so that the committee could now go on with that great burden removed.

We had the presence of Monsieur Ernest Favre, of Geneva, who deeply interested us in his story of the work there. They began some fifteen years ago, and, if I mistake not, greatly owing to the example set by Dr. McAll in Geneva, by opening a hall at the junction of the Rue de l'Enfer and of the Rue de Paradis, surely a typical spot for Gospel work. Now the work is most prosperous, and there is a splendidly organised band of labourers, who seem to attempt every kind of means in order to reach the careless and miserable. Temperance work has been largely used of God in the reclamation of the lost.

A stirring address was then given by Pastor S. Gout, whose work in the outskirts of Paris has been greatly blessed. Pastor Gout speaks weekly at the hall on Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, and is most popular there.

A choir of some eighty voices from the different halls led the singing, and several of the hymns in the new supplement, now in the press, were sung, to the great delight of all. Thus the last efforts of Dr. McAll in preparing these additional hymns were gratefully remembered. We felt we had indeed abundant cause to "thank God and take courage."

GORDON MEMORIAL HALL AND MISSION, EAST PLUMSTEAD.—The fifth annual meeting was held on Thursday last. A large number of the poor people sat down to tea, after which the public meeting was held. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Wm. Stirling, K.C.B., presided. The secretary read the report and balance-sheet, which showed a deficit of £70, including six months' stipend still owing to Mr. Richardson, the missionary. Sir William Stirling and Col. St. Quentin very earnestly appealed for additional help for this only local memorial to the late General Gordon, so that such a much-needed Mission may not be discontinued.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.—The little Norfolk town of Thetford was the recipient of a blessing from the Lord of the Harvest on Wednesday, April 25. The occasion was that of a missionary convention convened by Rev. J. P. Watts, rector of St. Peter's, on "The Claims of Christ and the Heathen World." The co-operation of all the Nonconformist ministers of the town was readily given. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe, of the South Africa General Mission, were present to tell of the Lord's doings, specially in South Africa, Cape Colony, and Zululand; but by no means confining themselves to that particular part of the heathen world.

A BIRMINGHAM CONVENTION.

A ten days' convention on the baptism of the Holy Ghost was recently held at the Bloomsbury Institution, Birmingham. To all present it seemed the fulfilment of the prophecy, "In the last days I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh."

Throughout there was one continuous stream of salvation, healing, cleansing, and filling; also many received a very definite enduement of power.

The last day of the feast was a never-to-be-forgotten one. Those only were invited to speak who had received the definite baptism, and saw a definite waiting for the manifestation of the Spirit—hence perfect unity prevailed.

There was no confusion on the platform, and it was very noticeable that all spoke the same thing, "perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. i. 10), and although Christians of various denominations were represented from all parts of England, they allowed minor differences of denomination to sink beneath this one great theme—"The Promise of the Father."

A good work for God, little known to the outside world, is carried on all the year round at this institution, through Mr. Henry and a few workers who all earn their own daily bread, but, being baptized with the Holy Ghost, have a keen love for souls.

At one meeting during the Convention some fifty rose to testify that Christ was their only physician. The believers here also acknowledge their responsibility with regard to the poor, and do not shift it on to the guardians, and say, "Am I my brother's keeper?" but feed the hungry, supplies coming in answer to the prayers of faith. Sometimes unexpectedly a cartload of bread arrives, sometimes meat, vegetables, or money.

The poor come in crowds, and gladly accept a cup of black coffee and a piece of bread. This meal costs a halfpenny a head, after which the Gospel is preached, a few words of loving sympathy given, some accepting the good news of salvation; proving that man's extremity is often God's opportunity, after which this favourite chorus is sometimes sung:

Power to heal the leper, power to raise the dead,
Power to fill the empty pots with oil
Is given to the worker who in Jesus' steps will tread,
And leave a life of ease for one of toil.

A full and free salvation is here proclaimed for spirit, soul, and body, the Lord working with them, confirming the Word with signs following.

A Pentecostal meeting is held for Christians every Friday evening. Mr. Henry is glad to welcome inquirers, and can prove to them that Apostolic Christianity is not yet played out.

HOME OF REST, BABBACOMBE.

This Home has been a great blessing, not only to weary town workers, but to many givers, inasmuch as it has opened up to them a means of assisting those in our great cities who need its aid without hurting their self-respect. A subscriber of one guinea has the privilege of giving a recommendation letter to any business girl of good character in whom she is interested, which reduces the girl's payment from twelve to five shillings a week, and enables her to have a fortnight's holiday for £1 6s. 9d., including the return railway journey.

The original cottage, with its six beds, soon proved insufficient, and to-day the Home consists of two beautiful houses on Babbacombe Downs, capable of accommodating a hundred visitors. Think of what a holiday of two or three weeks in this beautiful place is to a girl whose life in London is one fierce struggle in more ways than one. How it rests her wearied eyes and limbs, and puts joy and warmth into her life! That which makes Babbacome Home the desire of the heart to so many is something beyond the climate and scenery; it is the comfort, ease, love, and restfulness which everyone feels the moment they enter the Home.

The people who make use of this beautiful Home for their annual holiday are mostly London shop-assistants, post-office clerks, dressmakers, and milliners. They make a pleasant party, with plenty of interests and amusements; they are well-cared for, not spending beyond their means, and with everyone anxious to give them a happy time. Surely there are many who would gladly spend a guinea a year in order to have the privilege of giving happiness to these tired girls and women. The Misses Skinner, of Bayfield, Babbacombe, Torquay, will gladly answer any questions concerning the Home.

THE CHANT OF THE OPIUM FIEND.

From the drowsy heart of the flaring East
On my pinions of death I came,
And the grisly ghosts of my murdered hosts
March under my banner of shame.
I girdle the earth with a viewless chain,
From Vancouver to Ispahan,
And I fashion each link from the souls that sink,
For each link is the soul of a man.
See! languid and dank with the dews of death,
My liveried legion roams,
While I brood afar, like a pestilent star
O'er the wrecks of a million homes.
Waiting the wind in a thousand ports
Do the ships of the nations ride;
Yea! the yards of the West have bartered their best
To scatter my poison wide.
I am lord of the strong in the fair bright lands
Far under an Austral sun,
And the "Land of the Free" maketh jest for me,
As I garner them one by one.
Your fairest and best do I love to bind,
And I dower them with dreams divine,
No Vulcan of earth since the ages' birth
Ever rivetted bands like mine.
I curdle their brain and I sap their strength,
And I sever their tenderest ties,
And I stifle again their desperate pain
In the glamour of Paradise.
I lure the groom from his dainty bride,
And the sire from his fondling child,
And for recompense I canker each sense,
With my devilish torments wild.
By the palsied limb and the vacant eye
Ye may mark my devotees;
I surrender them, not till they sink to rot,
And mate with earth's foulest lees.
The lust of my lordship ever abides,
There is freedom for none of them all;
The shackles of drink may be shattered and shrink,
But for ever endureth my thrall.
I am lord of the high, I am lord of the low,
And my banner shall never be furled;
My hosts shall increase, my lust never cease,
Till I'm lord of a wide lost world.

. . . . . .

Oh! men of Christian England
Will ye, for greed of gold,
Contented watch in apathy,
This devil's trade unfold?
Oh! women tender-hearted,
Will ye sit calm and still,
While on your best and brightest
It works its awful will?
Ask History of De Quincey,
And let poor Coleridge tell
How opium-madness shattered
The harp he touched so well!
Up! English hearts and stir ye!
Put from before your face
This foul and shameful traffic,
The Englishman's disgrace!

INDIAN CANTONMENT REGULATIONS.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Stansfeld recently asked the Secretary of State for India, with reference to the Indian cantonment regulations, whether the despatch from India mentioned in one of the telegrams that were read to the House by the Under-Secretary of State on November 7 last had been received, and what action had been taken upon it.

Mr. H. Fowler: "The despatch to which my right hon. friend refers was duly received and most carefully considered by Lord Kimberley in council. In his reply, which was sent on March 1 last, he informed the Government of India that, in his opinion, the only effective method of preventing a recurrence of any practices inconsistent with their orders and with the resolutions passed by the House of Commons on June 5, 1888, was to proceed by means of legislation. He requested them accordingly to undertake the necessary legislation as soon as possible, and indicated the form in which he wished this to be effected. Further, to avoid the possibility of any future misconception of orders, he requested the Government of India to issue a resolution explaining the policy of that legislation, and prohibiting all practices, as distinguished from rules or regulations, inconsistent with that policy."

THE PROGRESS OF REFORM in drinking habits is marked by Harvard University in sweeping away the last relic of the old-time revels which celebrated the annual Commencement. There is to be no more punch permitted in the colleges at the reunions of the graduates on that day, neither rum nor brandy, neither any claret. Such is the decree that has just gone forth from the Board of Overseers.

AFRICAN MISSIONS VISITED.—27.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

I left Blythswood on Monday morning, and drove on to Cunningham, near Toleni, the oldest Scotch station north of the Kei. It was founded in 1865 by Rev. Richard Ross. Both the station and its founder have passed through perilous times, as once and again inter-tribal wars, or wars between the natives and the whites, have broken out. Mr. Ross stuck to his post during these troubles, and had the advantage all through of thoroughly knowing the Kaffirs and their language. His father was a missionary before him, one of the earliest of those noble pioneers who sailed from the shores of their native land while this century was still young.

The hard life has told upon Mr. Ross, and he is no longer able to go about much, or take the active part it has been his wont to do on his station. Happily the mantle of both grandsire and sire has fallen upon a scion of the house, and Rev. Brownlee Ross has taken hold of the work which his father finds himself reluctantly compelled to relinquish.

Although many of the Free Church stations, which were originally out-stations of Cunningham, have been formed into new centres, Cunningham remains the centre of a number of outposts ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five miles distant, often over rough country. The regular visiting of these gives the missionary many an irksome hour in the saddle, under a hot sun.

Mrs. Brownlee Ross took me to an interesting Gospel temperance meeting she holds week by week, for the young people of the station. After singing and prayer, the station schoolmaster, one of Lovedale's old boys, read from Proverbs iii., and then, by aid of his interpretation, I tried to tell those young people something of two

HEROES OF THEIR OWN LAND,

King Khama and Philip Charles—both of whom have taken so brave a stand on the side of Christ, and so resolutely have set their faces against drink.

Next day Mr. Brownlee Ross rode with me to Butterworth, where we visited the Wesleyan station. This station has the honour of being the first planted north of the Kei River. Like many of the older stations, it has a large mission location, where families from heathen kraals, desiring to become Christians, have come and settled. The missionary on such occasions holds the place of headman or petty chief, and often has to settle disputes which may arise from time to time. The necessity for such locations is rapidly passing away in this part of South Africa. The "smelling out" and "eating up" of Christians can no longer be indulged in with impunity by witch doctors and their heathen votaries, and the policy now is rather to let anyone coming out for Christ remain in his kraal, as a witness to his neighbours. This plan has its risks, but it develops a steadier type of Christian, toughened by the winter of petty annoyances, with roots taking a firmer grip on the Rock of Ages, because of the winds of persecution.

REV. W. J. HACKER

is the energetic missionary in charge at Butterworth. He has a wide district with many outstations, and some 2200 members, while about half that number are on trial. He has recently started a small industrial school for the boys, who are learning to make various kinds of school furniture, and other useful articles. A handsome new church of burnt brick is in process of erection, and will seat about 500 persons. Close to the mission-house is the Lamplough Industrial Institution for girls, which is under the care of Mr. Hacker's mother and sisters. There native girls are both educated and trained in those things which will render them useful in after life.

Returning to Cunningham, I drove down the long cutting which makes the Kei Heights passable. The scenery is bold and rugged; its grandeur filled one with awe as the last rays of the setting sun shot down through some glen and lighted up the deep valley where runs the river. I crossed the bridge in the dusk, and spent the night at the hotel, which is comfortable, but very warm in summer-time, being so deep down in the valley.

An early start next morning enabled me to reach Kei Road Station in the afternoon, and the following day I covered the eighteen miles to before breakfast. There is a Christian Endeavour Society in King William's Town, of which I hear good accounts. Unfortunately, I was not there the evening it met. A large employer of labour in the town gave me, quite unsolicited, his testimony to the Christian Kaffir, drawn from an experience of many years; and it was such as to greatly cheer the missionary, and to reflect credit on his work. We do not need such testimony, for we know that "the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth"; nevertheless, it is a useful weapon wherewith to confront unbelievers.

In looking back over this portion of the mission field, in so far as I have seen it, say from the Umzumkulu river to the Kei river, one cannot but regret that so many different denominations are at work, and that they are so much

SANDWICHED TOGETHER.

There are Anglicans, Wesleyans, Moravians, London Missionary Society, United Presbyterians, and Free Church of Scotland, all at work; and, so far as I can find out, no clear understanding as to territorial boundary exists, except between the two last named. This sandwiching is more compressed nearer the Kei, and unfortunately the native often goes beyond the missionary in showing a narrow denominational spirit. Moreover, cases have arisen where Church members who have been suspended for some breach of discipline have been received into another denomination as full members, without any communication with the missionary who had suspended them: and this, too, among Evangelicals.

Is it not possible for all Evangelical denominations, who have workers in the mission field, to meet in conference, and plan out the world, so that each may have its recognised sphere of influence? If they met in the spirit of Phil. ii. 3, "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves," the thing could be done. A real earnest desire to "preach the Gospel to every creature" would induce the weaker section of the Church of Christ to withdraw, in favour of that which has the greatest hold on the field, and plant itself where the Gospel has not already been preached, so that it build on no other man's foundation.

HOLIDAY OPENINGS.

The following extract from the letter of a business young man in Australia to his mother in England, sets forth a mode of holiday enjoyment that is well worthy of imitation.

Now I am away for my holiday and rest, and so far I have had a real good time. This is Monday night. I left town last Wednesday by "express" for Kyneton, and spoke in the evening at the anniversary of the Wesleyan Christian Endeavour Society. The next day I drove with a friend to Spring Hill, about seven miles out, where Mr. B—— has bought a farm for his sons; I was somehow stowed away at night in the smallest and roughest of bush houses. We drove back to Kyneton in the afternoon. I went to Sunbury, about an hour's ride by train, and there had another Christian Endeavour meeting for the Wesleyans. I am in love with the work. I need hardly say I speak with no uncertain words as to consistency of life and separation from the world. The Lord is with me, and I hear of much interest, many awakened and stimulated to more earnest work.

On Saturday afternoon I came on to Maldon to my friend, Rev. Mr. Beeson. On the following morning I preached in the Baptist Church; in the afternoon in an Independent Church at Malvern, five miles distant; in the evening again in the Baptist Church. To-day (Monday, February 12) has been one of rest. I was over one of the mines this morning, and walked out into the country with Mr. Beeson, to one of his people who keeps a poultry farm. This evening I addressed the united Christian Endeavour Societies. The Lord was in the midst, and it was a time of blessing. To-morrow afternoon I go to Castlemaine, and speak at night to the young people in the Independent School. Afterwards I go on to Daylesford and Ballarat, where I have several openings. So you see I am having a good holiday. I rest all day, and the air among these hills is so lovely that I am fit for any amount of work almost.

A TEMPERANCE COUNCIL has been formed at Folkestone representing the local associations. A Vigilance Committee has been appointed, to see that the licensing laws are enforced.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Will you let one more glad heart say "God bless you!" for first proposing the meetings of April 11? Last February I read Mr. Haslam's story of his life; ever since I have prayed for a return of the work of 1859, and that we might see "greater things than these." Then came "A Letter to a Friend," with its reference to 1859; and when at last the intimation of the meetings on April 11 came, I found you had used "my chapter" for your Scripture quotations —2 Chron. xx. In Daily Light for October 31, my birthday, these verses are used. I have always loved singing, and seeing its power in this chapter, I claim this Bible story as my own!

I see no mention in The Christian of the meeting held in Edinburgh on April 11. We had a blessed time, but to me the keynote and most precious word was at the beginning of the meeting, when Dr. Andrew Thomson read Isaiah xliv. and iii., "I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring." This promise was made in the first instance to Israel, but Jehovah will not forbid the Gentile parents of 1894 to take it to themselves, and make it their own. In the revival that is coming, that is even now begun, let our watchword be, "Our children for Christ!" Let everything else go, if we may but have this—the Holy Spirit for our children. And let us, as parents, be most careful not to "quench" the Spirit by indifference, by selfishness, by worldliness. If we see great obstacles and difficulties, still the love of God can "break every barrier down," and cause each child to say:—

O Lamb of God, I come

Leith. Euphemia C. Graham.

P.S.—I was baptized in 1859, when only eleven years of age.

While reading of the many who have given testimony on Thanksgiving Day as to how the East-end of London appeared to them thirty-five years ago, I may add mine, and speak a little of how it was forty years since, in 1854. From that year I date my attachment to England, coming as a young girl over from Sweden, and staying with godly friends by the name of Dudgeon. Originally settled in Liverpool, Mr. Robert Dudgeon had moved to London with two sons and three daughters. One of the sons, John, was in those comparatively dark days a bright and shining light, trying to save souls for Christ. To the Swedish girl many of his views and interests were quite a revelation of a new world. He took her about London, especially where something good was to be heard or seen. East London was then a most forlorn and dismal place, leaving an indelible impression of neglect and misery on the heart. The dry leaves began to stir, and prayer meetings were held in the houses, especially in those whose owners had members of their family out in the Crimea. It was such an in-gathering among the bereaved and anxious.

There is no doubt that the revival arising in 1859 had its beginning earlier in the decade; at least, the foreign girl attended meetings in the East-end where the lost and ignorant were looked up. Sunday classes for lads were held, the young women were then collected in school rooms, mothers' meetings began, missionary gatherings encouraged as never before. E. de Ramsay.

AN APPEAL.

O, Christians, awake, the grey daylight is breaking,
The glow of the morning has lit up the sky;
Ye saints of the Lord, speed the blessed awaking,
Call, call to the perishing, "Jesus is nigh."

My brothers awake, sound the glorious tidings
Of hope for the hopeless, of life for the dead;
Call them in, call them in, the Saviour is waiting
To welcome each soul to the feast He has spread.

Revive us, Lord Jesus, give times of refreshing,
O give of thy power, or our service is vain;
We humble ourselves, as we plead for thy blessing,
Revive us, O Lord, ere thy coming again.

Revive us again, O our God, send the shower,
Let rivers of blessing sweep over our land,
Let sin-wearied hearts feel the might of thy power,
The touch of thy tender omnipotent hand.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE—1894.

JUNE 26TH, 27TH, 28TH.

LETTER OF INVITATION.

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—Twenty-one years ago, in the shadow of the bereavement cast over Mildmay by the death of its founder, the late William Pennefather, his friends and fellow-helpers who summoned the Conference of 1873 introduced the subject with this quotation from Jeremiah xxxiii. 10, 11:—

Thus saith the Lord, Again there shall be heard in this place, which ye say shall be desolate . . . the voice of joy, and the voice of gladness . . . the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts; for the Lord is good; for his mercy endureth for ever; and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the Lord.

For us, upon whom devolves the privilege of inviting you to gather at Mildmay in 1894, there is no other keynote more suitable to our present circumstances than these reassuring words.

We little thought that last year's Conference, preceded as it was by the entrance into rest of Mrs. Pennefather, should be followed by the removal from earthly service of our tried and honoured friend, Sir Arthur Blackwood, who for twenty years had so ably guided the proceedings of successive Conferences, and —what is not so generally known—had year after year prayerfully selected and arranged the subjects for our consideration; therein displaying spiritual insight, knowledge of the Word of God, and of the present needs of his Church, with rare discrimination. His vacant place is difficult to fill, and we are cast more than ever upon Him whose Word "liveth and abideth for ever."

In the preface to the report of 1873 Conference we find the following remarks concerning the purpose of the early Conferences at Barnet and Mildmay:—

The object of the addresses has never been theological teaching or clear doctrinal statement, but spiritual lifting and advancement in the Christian life. Worship and practical holiness—a step nearer to God, and nearer to one another—have been the desired attainments.

It is well that we should keep close to the aim of the venerated founder and his early co-workers; and we believe this aim may be secured in the prayerful contemplation of the great subject which has been chosen for the next Conference, from Eph. iii. 14-19.

"The Family of GOD, as endowed according to the Riches of his Glory."

This rich endowment of the family of God affords fullest scope for the thoughts, and sweetest food for the hearts, of all who seek to bring forth things new and old from the treasure-house of his Word.

At the principal meetings our brethren will present the truths of this glorious inheritance in their manifold blessedness, beauty, and fulness. At the other meetings the chief thought might be, that of the family—"the whole family in heaven and earth."

Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now.

Thus shall the communion of saints, the true fellowship of all believers, become more real to each one of us who enjoy the feast provided of his royal bounty, and hear the Master's voice saying, not alone to us, but to all, "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved."

Lord Polwarth has kindly consented to take the chair at the morning and evening meetings of the Conference, and the following, amongst others, are expected to speak at these meetings as well as in the afternoon gatherings; some of them, probably, more than once:—

|---|---|
| REV. HUBERT BROOKE. | REV. J. G. MANTLE. |
| „ J. B. FIGGIS. | „ F. B. MEYER. |
| „ H. E. FOX. | THE HON. R. MORETON. |
| „ DR. J. C. HERDMAN. | REV. W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE. |
| „ EVAN H. HOPKINS. | LORD RADSTOCK. |
| „ G. H. C. MACGREGOR. | REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD. |
| „ J. G. MCVICKER. | „ J. G. TRAIN. |

It is not, however, proposed to announce the names of the speakers more in detail in connection with specific sub-divisions of the subject; in this respect we revert to the earlier practice at Barnet and at Mildmay, and secure larger freedom in the treatment of these great themes.

Amid the distractions of the Church of Christ, and the increasing difficulty of attaining much real fellowship within the spheres of our various ecclesiastical organisations, is not this a time for true-hearted believers to use the opportunity afforded in the Conference to which we now call you, for manifesting their unity in our one Lord and Head, by meeting for edification in the Word, and for prayer in the Spirit; and thus to secure for ourselves, and for the children of God who are scattered abroad, some increase of power for service, and more preparation of heart for that day, which seems not far distant, when our Lord shall return to the joy of his saints?—We are, Yours in the fellowship of the Gospel of Christ,

WORK IN COSTA RICA.

DEAR SIR,—Six years ago Christian mission work was commenced in Costa Rica, C.A. Under depressing influences the work has been carried on but with unmistakable tokens of the Divine blessing. Port Simon is the centre of our operations. Through the kindness of friends in England and English friends elsewhere, a church was built, which already is much too small; we desire to keep the present building, which is near the wharf and railway depôt, and utilise it for coffee palace, lecture and reading rooms; in fact, to make it an attractive place where the working class may spend their evenings to profit instead of as at present in the rum shops and gambling saloons. To enable us to do this, we invite British Christians and others to help us to build a plain but much larger church.

A goodly number have been converted to God, and are in fellowship with us. One hundred and twenty children are in our Sunday-school. Six public services are held weekly in the church. Frequent visits are made by my colleague and myself to the interior and along the coast, seeking to spread the truth.

Would one of the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN send us a magic lantern and slides of some interesting and profitable subjects? This would greatly help in our work. J. H. SOBEY.

Port Simon, Costa Rica, Central America.

SPAIN.—A telegram reaches us from Madame Rodriguez, dated Gerona, Monday:—"Glorious victory! Praise the Lord!" This we take to mean that the trial of her brother-in-law, Don Alexander, has resulted in an acquittal.

MR. LANE AT CAMBERWELL.

THE interest in this mission became so great that it was arranged for Mr. Lane to hold further services on Lord's Day and again on Monday last. The pastor, Rev. R. Allsworth-Elvey, and nearly three hundred friends were present for prayer on Lord's Day for the twenty-second consecutive morning at seven o'clock, and all who were privileged to be there felt that God's presence was with them. Mr. Lane conducted all the services on Sabbath. Morning and afternoon, numbers expressed anxiety about salvation. The crowning blessing was at night. It thrilled the hearts of the workers with joy to hear the simple confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ from the lips of many a young man in that large assembly, and with some of them it was clearly the result of a definite work of God in their souls. The vestry was filled until a late hour with anxious souls, and many before they left were led into the way of peace.

On Monday evening the final mission service was held. Mr. Lane spoke on "Assurance," and the word was greatly blessed. Mr. A. J. Mayers sang with telling effect and tenderness several beautiful solos. God only knows the full results of this earnest effort in a densely populated part. Prayer is asked that the work may go on, and that its influence may be felt throughout the whole of the South of London.

A special meeting will be held this (Thursday) evening, when Mr. Lane will address the converts.

THE ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

THE annual meeting of the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England was opened on Monday in Regent-square Church. The retiring Moderator, Dr. Walter Morison, of Westbourne-grove, preached a sermon on absorption in spiritual work from Acts xiv. 6 and 7. The new president, Dr. James Muir, of Egremont, Birkenhead, in the course of his address, dwelt on the life and mission of the Church. One of the most hopeful symptoms of the spiritual life of England to-day was that, notwithstanding the trenchant criticism to which the doctrines of the Christian faith and its sacred books were being subjected, and the Romish proclivities of the Ritualistic and Sacramentarian party, there was a general consensus of conviction in the Free Evangelical branches of the Church of Christ that the commanding duty of the hour was to bring the Gospel of Christ in its doctrinal and ethical teaching into wider and closer contact with the intellectual and social life of the English people of all classes. He did not consider the incorporation of all the churches possible, practicable, or desirable. In these days of democratic ascendency in the affairs of the State they were brought face to face with questions affecting the social order and general well-being of the people, which had not been regarded hitherto as lying within the sphere of home missions—questions of capital and labour, of social and political thought, of the condition of the poor, of the claims of industry to a "living wage," and other matters relating to the material and moral condition of the multitude—questions which at the moment had reached the white heat of debate.

The people were no longer, as Carlyle was wont to term them, an inarticulate multitude. They had a mind of their own and a most potent voice, and made their presence felt and their ideas and claims heard in the highest council of the nation through men of their own order. They could not, if they would, evade these questions; they were voiced in many forms; but they were there, and the Church, as well as the State, the religious man as well as the political and social economist, must have something to say on matters that affect so closely the well-being of so many of their fellow-men. The creation of a new temper in all classes, the feeling that masters and men had a responsibility to the community as well as to each other, and that the Christian Church had a responsibility to both that would not allow it to stand as an idle and uninterested spectator of the strife between them, would do more to pave the way to a working solution than a thousand decisions of agreement—for after their paper agreement they had still to agree as man and man.

SOUTHSEA MISSION TENTS.—Permission has again been secured to pitch the large Gospel tent on Southsea Common, and we hope to commence about the end of May, and hold meetings every evening during the week, and several on the Lord's Day. Our large tent was totally wrecked last summer, and in answer to my appeal for a new one many contributed; but to complete this I still need about £20; and to carry out the working expenses of this tent in a satisfactory manner during the summer I need about £50 more. JNO. DENNING.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE SONG OF THE SHOP."

Dear Sirs,—Your abridgment of "The Song of the Shop" leads me to the hope that some abler pen than mine may take up the cause of our poor shop sisters. Truth deserves the warm thanks of every woman who has a spark of feeling for drawing attention to the cruelty practised upon these girls. I believe, were the matter brought fairly before the public in our newspapers, some of the highest ladies in the land would gladly head a crusade in their behalf.

It may interest some of your readers to know that humble local efforts have already been crowned with success. After many conversations with the Christian draper with whom I dealt, he consented to put up some flap seats behind the counter in his warehouse. God prospered him, and in a few years he was able to retire upon his well-earned income.

May many be led to copy his example, and may every Christian woman who reads this do what she can to remove this crying evil from her suffering shop-girl sisters.—Yours, &c., H. W. E.

NATIONAL ANTI-GAMBLING LEAGUE.

Sir,—We did not desire that the nature of the serious criminal proceedings which we are about to take should be made public just yet, but it is very difficult to keep a secret from the enterprise of the Press, and since the matter has already been vaguely referred to, we take the opportunity of officially informing your readers.

Our work proceeds by two parallel paths—the one educational, and addressed to society in the persons of its individuals, and dealing with the ethics of the question; the other in efforts to secure the application of the existing laws, and in moving for amendments thereto, not against betting—for betting is not illegal and it would be doubtful policy to make it so—but against mercenary inducements, and affording facilities for the vice; a great trade in which exists all over the country, and which trade is responsible for much of the prevailing distress.

The great gambling evil is that of the Stock Exchange and Produce Markets, and it has not escaped our consideration; but at present our attention and resources are concentrated upon the other branch, that of betting, in nine cases out of ten connected with horse-racing, with which sport, and with any other as such, we have nothing to do; but being convinced by the evidence of magistrates and the prison authorities, to say nothing of the suicide records and bankruptcy court, that the evil has assumed national proportions and threatens the welfare of our country, we are determined to attempt to ascertain if the laws, frequently put in operation against the lower classes of betting men, cannot be equally applied to those of wealth, position, and rank who are concerned in this nefarious business; as we believe that no real progress can be made while the authorities confine their attention to the poorer and less responsible agents.

We intend, therefore, having obtained the best professional advice, to test the legality of the race-course enclosures and great betting clubs, and are confident that in so doing we shall meet with the approval of every well-disposed person who knows anything of the ravages of the moral plague, to combat which we shall need every support from the public.—Yours faithfully,

John Hawke, Hon. Sec.

PASTEURISM.—The proposal to establish a Pasteur Institute at Chelsea has called forth vigorous protests from all quarters. In a pamphlet entitled "The Pasteur Institute, and What is Done There," Mr. Herbert J. Reid describes visits recently paid to the Institut Pasteur at Paris. He exposes the horrors of vivisection, and maintains that no good end is achieved thereby. He says: "If sound Continental medical authorities are to be believed, not only are doubtful cures claimed in a very large number of cases as the actual results of Pasteur's inoculations, but the majority of bitten persons would be safer without his treatment. The average of deaths from hydrophobia has slightly increased, despite his thousands of inoculated patients. What he has done is this: He has created a new disease, la rage du laboratoire, or experimental rabies, the form of rabies of which die the inoculated rabbits, and which, transferred by inoculation to human patients from them, is known as paralytic rabies." After giving the names of doctors who support these statements, the writer says: "I might cite many English medical men also in support, but it is needless; the charges have been repeatedly made and never contested, nor has it been denied that at least 260 persons who have been inoculated as a preventive against rabies under the système Pasteur have succumbed."

OBITUARY.

DR. LASERON.

By the death of this devoted servant of God the Tottenham Deaconesses' Institution loses its founder and first director, at the ripe age of 74 years. Dr. Laseron entered into rest on Saturday last, April 28, after a prolonged season of bodily suffering and infirmity. His mind, which was clear up to the very last, was kept in perfect peace. The funeral will take place on Friday, at 3 p.m., at Abney Park Cemetery, preceded by a service at Clapton Hall, at 2.30. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait and sketch of the life-work of the deceased.

REV. THEOPHILUS CAMPBELL, D.D.

Much regret is felt in the North of Ireland at the death of Dr. Campbell, rector of Lurgan and Dean of Dromore, who has passed away in his eighty-third year. Deceased was an able preacher and speaker, and his views were thoroughly Evangelical. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of the Second Coming, and ministered with great acceptance in Lurgan to one of the largest Protestant congregations in Ireland. He published several pamphlets and two volumes of sermons, all of which show ripe scholarship and a thorough knowledge of the Bible.

BAILLIE DALE, KIRKCALDY.

On Friday intelligence reached Kirkcaldy of the death, in London, of Mr. Thomas Dale, engineer. Deceased, who had been in London on business, was taken ill about a week ago. Baillie Dale took his full share of work in the advancement of the social and moral well-being of the community, very specially interesting himself in missions, Sunday-schools, and various evangelical enterprises. He was a man of a most amiable disposition—frank and obliging and courteous to all with whom he came in contact. His death is the more sad that it has occurred in what seemed the prime of life. Deceased leaves a widow, with whom much sympathy is felt in the community.

REV. WM. DICK.

A venerable and honoured servant of God passed to his reward early on Monday morning, in the person of Rev. William Dick. Mr. Dick, who was eighty-nine years of age, had outlived all his contemporaries, but to the end he was surrounded by those to whom he was a constant and abiding inspiration. Though the days of his labour ended several years ago, the days of his usefulness did not terminate until the morning of his translation to better service above. His long life was a beautiful one in every respect. As a boy, he had a passion for education. His heart was touched, and he longed to become a minister. In the forties he was a power for good in the West of Scotland. He was a pioneer in the temperance movement, and up and down Scotland he went addressing large meetings and thrilling all his hearers. While still a young man he was a pioneer of missions in Sweden. Ten years he laboured and loved in that cold inhospitable country. Many times he suffered privations, but he felt that his work was of the Lord, and he refused to give it up until the work which God had given him to do there was finished and blessed. Almost all his after-life was spent in the neighbourhood of Liverpool. He went down into the slums, and his face was like a beam of sunshine in dark places. He closed his ministerial life at Prescot, a quiet village eight miles from Liverpool.

DR. W. M. THOMSON.

The death is announced of Rev. W. M. Thomson, D.D., the author of the well-known "The Land and the Book." He died on April 8, at Denver, U.S.A., in the eighty-ninth year of his age. It is sixty-two years since he went to Syria, as a missionary of the American Board. The results of his travels and researches during his service of forty-six years were gathered by him into volumes which have been very useful to Bible students. He returned to America in 1878, and spent his declining years in the house of a married daughter.

REV. F. R. ORAM.

Intelligence has been received from the Congo of the death from fever of Rev. Frederick R. Oram, son of Mr. R. E. Sprague Oram, Chief-Inspector of Factories at the Home Office Department. He was a student at the College in Regent's Park, and laboured with the late Mr. Balfern at Bopoto, on the Upper Congo river, a thousand miles from the coast. Mr. Oram commenced work in Africa in 1888. He was formerly a member of Downs Chapel, Clapton. His sister, Mrs. Teichmann, of India, is now in this country. On Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Forfeitt's arrival at Bopoto, last November, Mr. Forfeitt wrote: "We arrived in splendid health, and had a right warm reception by the people, as well as from our dear colleagues, Mr. Oram and Mr. Balfern. We were indeed glad to find them both very well." For a considerable period the Baptist Missionary Society has been spared the heavy trial of losing its workers, but this loss, following so soon after the tidings of Mr. Balfern's death, comes as a dark cloud over-shadowing this year's anniversary gatherings.

REV. W. DUFFUS.

The death of this well-known missionary took place in Edinburgh early on Friday week. Mr. Duffus had been in failing health for some time back. He was one of a band who, in the great revival work of 1859 and 1860, and while then a mere lad, came under the power of the truth, chiefly through the instrumentality of the late Mr. Duncan Matheson, the Huntly evangelist. Dedicating himself early to the work of the ministry (says The Banffshire Advertiser), he passed successfully the usual curriculum at Aberdeen University, afterwards attending the theological course of the English Presbyterian Church, London. Being deeply interested in missions, he realised the vastness of China in this respect, and set his heart on going there as a missionary. Having been sent by the English Presbyterian Church he laboured for twenty years with great success, and not only became a favourite with his co-workers, but stood high in the estimation of the natives, and more especially so at Swatow. This in a great measure flowed from the peculiarly gentle, humble manner exhibited, his style of address being of the sweet, persuasive kind. It is believed to be largely through his example and influence that some from the neighbourhood of Cullen, his native place, as well as from other parts, gave their services to the foreign mission field. No doubt his early death, at the age of forty-eight, must be accounted for by the severe climatic effects on his not over robust constitution, together with the privation and hardship inseparable from a mission life, and especially pioneering in new fields, to which his devotion to such work constantly led him. Mr. Duffus married an Aberdeen lady, Miss Webster, who accompanied him and assisted him in all his duties, who now, along with three sons and three daughters, mourns the loss of a loving and devoted father and husband.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION.

From the new report we learn that this Mission is now twenty-seven years old, the Men's Home twenty-five, and the Women's Home twenty. The work has gone on as in former years, carrying the Gospel to the coachmen and footmen in the streets, while they were waiting the termination of balls, parties, etc., etc. On these occasions books and tracts were given, and conversations held. In the mission room Bible readings are given, prayer meetings and social gatherings held, and in the open air services are conducted during the summer in Hyde Park and on the Embankment. In all, over 200 meetings were held, and 20,000 books and tracts given. Over 200 passed through the Men's Home, and nearly the same number through the Women's Home. God's presence has been manifest at the meetings, convicting, restoring and saving souls. Letters came from those who had received spiritual help, others giving tidings of blessing upon the testimony of some of our C.S.A. members, in the households wherein they serve.

Several have been called to wider spheres of usefulness. One entered the City Mission,—making the fourth who is now thus employed—another has become the pastor of a church in Chicago, a third is in training for missionary work in Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, and a fourth is now a Bible-woman in Surrey. The report gives deeply interesting incidents illustrating the blessing resting on the work, and way in which God has been able to make many stand. Other letters tell of happy work in visiting the aged and the sick in out-of-the-way country places, and of the distribution of Christian literature. One tells of successful work amongst the English and Manx fishermen on the south coast of Ireland. Thus much good work is being done by members of the Christian Servants' Association in their spare time. The superintendent, Mr. James Goodchild, 14, Sloane-terrace, S.W., will be glad to give any information desired as to the work.

THE CHINESE IN LONDON.—On Wednesday afternoon last week, Mrs. Piercy, the indefatigable wife of Rev. Geo. Piercy, whose work, both abroad and in London, ought to be more generally known, addressed a drawing-room meeting convened by Mrs. Allcock, of The Cedars, Redditch. In the evening a public meeting was held in the Temperance Hall, in connection with the Home and Foreign Missionary Association. About thirty collectors were arranged on the platform, several of them being dressed as Chinese girls, and assisting Mrs. Piercy. Among the characters illustrated were a tooth-ache curer and his patients, native teacher and scholars, Chinese family eating rice with chop-sticks, lady visiting nurse and child, opium smoker, and other phases of Chinese life. Mrs. Piercy distributed prizes to the collectors, and concluded with an earnest appeal on behalf of the Chinese in London.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Archdeacon of London has addressed enthusiastic Y.M.C.A. meetings at Plymouth and Devonport.

One hundred men at Rockland, U.S.A., have subcribed 10 dols. each for the establishment of a Y.M.C.A.

The General Conference of secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. of North America will be held at Cedar Rapids, Ia., May 2-6.

The Lord Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore presided at the twelfth annual conversazione of the Holywood Association.

The Croydon Association held its quarterly meeting on Thursday week, when encouraging reports were given of the various branches.

The Newburyport Y.M.C.A. (Pa.) lately held its second annual converts' reunion, over one hundred men being present who have accepted Christ in the Association since 1891.

The Middlesbro' Association, where the work was at a low ebb, has been greatly stimulated through the energy of Mr. J. C. Moor, travelling secretary for the National Council.

The Malta Y.M.C.A. lately held its first anniversary, which was very encouraging. One hundred and seventy-three members had joined since formation, but frequent changes reduced the average to eighty-three.

Over £200 has been raised by means of a bazaar held in connection with the Burton-on-Trent Association, whereby a small debt is removed, and about £100 left for furthering the work. Throughout the winter season a good work has been done by this branch.

Brockley annual meeting, held on the 27th ult., was very successful. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and part was taken in the proceedings by Mr. J. H. Putteril and local clergy and ministers. The secretary, Mr. W. Coldicott, presented an excellent report.

The fine building of the Melbourne Y.M.C.A., which cost £55,000, and which was erected just prior to the commencement of the commercial depression still affecting Australia, has lapsed into the hands of the mortgagees, the savings bank, who had advanced nearly half of the purchase money.

The City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. have issued a very well arranged summer programme with list of Bible-classes, evangelistic meetings, prayer and praise meetings, a cycling mission band, athletic clubs, etc. Mr. W. A. Boyd, general secretary, has been making much headway during the past winter months.

A large number of members and friends of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. assembled last week to bid farewell to Mr. F. J. Rayner, who has been secretary of the Association for nearly seven years, but who has recently been appointed travelling secretary of the Zambesi Industrial Mission. The meeting was also intended as a welcome to his successor, Mr. R. M. Morphett, who has for a number of years been associated with the work in Bristol.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Increasing interest is being manifested in the work of junior C.E. Societies.

The Florida Endeavourers, in a recent convention at Tampa, made some pronounced utterances on prize fights and on the lottery, two evils by which special disgrace has been brought on their State.

Among the speakers at the recent Michigan convention were Judge C. B. Grant, of the Supreme Court on Christian Temperance, Mr. W. H. Frost, of the China Inland Mission, and Miss Ben-Oliel, a worker among her own people, the Jews.

The C.E. Society at Fairhaven, Mass., meets every week in rooms hired in the poorest quarter of the town. These rooms are also open in the afternoon once or twice a week that the women that live near may gather there, bring their work, and receive help about it.

With the object of starting societies where they do not already exist, the South London C.E. Union held a meeting on Friday, April 13, at South London Tabernacle. Mr. C. James presided, and addresses were given on Christian Endeavour work by Revs. W. Hobbs, E. Roberts, Messrs. H. R. Cripps, Batley, and George.

The C.E. Society of Emmanuel Reformed Church, Warrington, has been celebrating its second birthday by having tea together, and holding a consecration meeting in the school-room. The president, Rev. E. T. Reed, referred to the Society having held its weekly meeting without a break, and having been a blessing to many. They had good reason to believe that in consequence several other C.E. Societies had been started in the town, which resulted in the recent successful C.E. Convention. The meeting was also addressed by Rev. J. Kirk Machonockie, Congregational minister, and Rev. D. W. Roberts, Baptist minister. Thus the C.E. movement is bringing the different denominations together.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

OXFORD.

The Bampton Lecturer for 1895 will be Rev. T. B. Strong, of Christ Church, one of the ablest of the theological tutors in Oxford, and yet quite a young man. Mr. Strong is one of Bishop Westcott's examining chaplains, He will take as the subject of his lectures "Christian Ethics."

The annual sermon on behalf of Christ Church Mission to East London was preached in the Cathedral on Sunday by Rev. H. L. Paget, of St. Pancras, and at a meeting held at Christ Church, Rev. W. A. Carroll, curate-in-charge, gave an account of the work.

Two meetings were held last Thursday at St. Aldate's Rectory Room in aid of the Waldensian Missions, when Signor Maurin, an Italian pastor, gave most interesting addresses on the work done and needed to be done.

It is a pleasure to note that Oxford Christian workers are bestirring themselves on the Sunday question. At a conference held last week at the Y.M.C.A., it was resolved to form a Lord's Day Observance Society for Oxford, and a strong committee was formed to carry out the resolution, and to take steps to bring the subject before the churches and the city generally.

Two Oxford clergymen, Revs. W. B. Duggan and C. J. H. Fletcher, have recently been welcomed back by their congregations after long and dangerous illnesses.

One of Mr. Arrowsmith's ever-welcome visits was paid last week with the special object of enlisting recruits for the seaside services. It is a pleasure to find that he will not have come in vain. Distinct blessing was known to have resulted to Oxford men as the outcome of last year's work.

CAMBRIDGE.

During the May term nearly all Christian agencies to some extent slacken their efforts. Both the weekly meetings of the Missionary Union and of the Intercollegiate Christian Union are discontinued. On Sunday evenings open-air services are conducted by bands of undergraduates. A characteristic feature of this work is the open-air service for children held in Barnwell, a poor section of the town. To engage in this work requires not a little courage and moral effort—virtues which form a happy contrast to the selfishness and inanity that characterise a large portion of the life here.

A meeting was held on Monday afternoon in Peterhouse College, under the presidency of the Mayor, to further the interests of the Barnwell and Chesterton Clergy Fund. These villages have a special claim upon the support of Cambridge, their populations being necessitated by the needs of the University. Professor Ryle advocated the formation of College Missions, believing that there were hundreds of undergraduates, unconnected with any London College Mission, who would gladly help in the Christianisation of Eastern Cambridge.

Principal Moule continues, during term, to occupy the pulpit of Holy Trinity Church on Sunday evenings. On Sunday morning the Rev. C. J. Procter, the new vicar, preached upon the subject: "Choosing the World." In the evening Principal Moule's subject was, "What is that to theo?"

On Sunday, the University sermon was preached in Great St. Mary's by Archdeacon Farrar. His text was the first clause of the first verse of Galatians iii. A powerful sermon was preached, in which temptations were analysed and laid bare with marvellous skill, in which sin was revealed in all its naked hideousness, and the baffled and fettered soul pointed to Christ as the Great Emancipator. The attendance was very large. In the evening Archdeacon Farrar preached at Christ Church in aid of the Church Pastoral Aid Society to another crowded congregation.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.—The committee of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East had the pleasure, on the 27th ult., of welcoming two of their valued missionaries, who have arrived at home on furlough, at a reception held at the residence of Miss Deacon, 39, Eaton-square. Miss Johnstone, who has been labouring for twenty years in Hong Kong, gave an interesting account of the work which she carries on. Miss Hamilton spoke of her nearly eight years in Japan, of opposition encountered, of triumphs won, and of the fearful experiences of the great earthquake. Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, is the secretary of the society.

IRISH NOTES.

Mr. William Smith, evangelist, has conducted a fortnight's special meetings in connection with the Belfast Town Mission.

Rev. A. J. Pike, incumbent of Kiloughter, diocese of Kilmore, has resigned his parish with the view of going out with Bishop Tucker and engaging in missionary work in Uganda.

A committee of ladies has been formed in Dublin for the purpose of raising funds throughout Ireland, and sending missionaries to labour among women in the Fuh-kien Province under the auspices of the Church Zenana Missionary Society.

The Jungle Tribes Mission, which is connected with the Presbyterian Church, and of which Rev. Hy. Montgomery, of Belfast, is the secretary, has now six European workers, two of whom have a knowledge of medicine, and two native agents in the field, and is prospering.

Under the auspices of the Methodist Missionary Society, Dr. Denyon, of Hatshan, China, has just delivered a series of missionary addresses in Belfast, which have produced a very profound impression as to the need for Gospel work in the Celestial Empire.

The Prison Gate Mission for Men is doing work of a most Christlike and philanthropic kind in Belfast, in the face of much discouragement. In the past year 390 men came to breakfast on their discharge from prison, and eighty-eight received the benefits of the Home for a longer or shorter period. Many of these are habitual drunkards and loafers who do not want regular employment, yet a change for good has been effected in several cases.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is stated that Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, will give an address at one of the Free Assembly meetings this month, when the report on religion and morals is tabled.

Two links with the past have been severed by the deaths of Rev. A. Mackenzie, F.C. minister at Kilmorack, Ross-shire, for the last fifty years, and of Dr. Short, lately pastor of Ward Chapel, Dundee.

The Home Mission Union of Glasgow represents 151 congregations. As a result of house-to-house visitation during the past year, 557 have been added to the membership of the churches.

A series of very interesting meetings in connection with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society was held in Inverness last week. Much interest was awakened, and a local auxiliary was formed.

Mr. Alexander McKeith, of Glasgow, convener of the fresh-air fortnight scheme, appeals for funds to enable them to send poor children for a fortnight to one or other of the various homes at the seaside.

No one was better known or more respected in the Vale of Leven than Mr. Thomas Ferguson, of Willislen, Alexandria; and his death, at the age of sixty-one, has cast a gloom over the district. He was active in promotion of every good work, and a zealous office-bearer of the United Presbyterian Church.

The jubilee of the Scottish Temperance League has been held in Glasgow. A Band of Hope demonstration took place on Saturday. Temperance sermons were preached in many of the churches on the Sabbath, amongst others by Rev. Thos. Evans, of London. The great public meeting was in the City Hall on Monday evening.

The annual meeting of the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church will be held next week in the Theological Hall Buildings, Castle-terrace, Edinburgh. On this occasion the sittings are not likely to be marked by any feature of more than an ordinary character. Throughout the past year, "alike in membership, agencies, and finance, gratifying progress has been made by the Church."

An interesting series of services was held in Glasgow last Sunday in connection with the departure for China of Mr. A. S. Annand and Mr. A. L. Greig, two missionary agents of the National Bible Society of Scotland. They addressed three large audiences, in the forenoon in Hillhead Baptist Church, in the afternoon in Renfield Street United Presbyterian Church, and in the evening in Finnieston Free Church. They leave on May 10 by the City of Rome, travelling via America.

A MEMORIAL has been forwarded from Shanghai to the Opium Commission by fifteen British missionaries who have been resident in China for over twenty-five years, and include Dr. Burdon and Dr. Moule, Bishops of Mid and South China respectively, urging the restriction of Indian opium production to medicinal requirements.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Sydney Vivian has concluded a twenty-one days' mission in Brockmoor (Stourbridge). This effort has been owned of God in the conversion of souls, quite a number having on the present occasion been added to the Church of Christ.

Liverpool.—Mr. Ferguson, evangelist from Ireland, has concluded a four days' mission at Gospel Hall, Boaler-street, Liverpool. Much blessing has been the result. Souls have been saved, and many Christians have received great blessing.

Devon.—A very earnest and successful three weeks' mission has been held at the Assembly Rooms, Cullompton, Devon. Mr. Alexander Clarke, of the London Evangelisation Society, has been the preacher and there have been many signs following.

Mr. Beath (writes our Australian correspondent) is in the midst of a good revival work amongst the Sunday-school children at Rev. Dr. Robinson's Church, St. Kildare. I had the privilege of speaking to over a hundred who had definitely come out for the Lord.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has conducted an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church, Rothwell, Northamptonshire. The result has been a revival of God's work, and the ingathering of many young men and women. This church has an interesting history, dating from 1655.

The Mission closed at St. Luke's, Manningham, Bradford, by J. Neech, has been most encouraging. The attention paid to the Word spoken was marked, and not a few received blessing. The evangelist was invited to return in December next, and hold another series of services.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Richmond, Va., have closed. The great tabernacle was filled from day to day, and the effects cannot but be manifest in the spiritual life of the city. Hundreds, both of men and women, rose for prayer, and the inquiry meetings were large and fruitful.

Neston, Cheshire.—At the Mission Hall here we have closed a fortnight's special services, which have been conducted throughout by Mr. Henry Bray, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were fairly attended, and many have confessed Jesus as their Lord and Master. It has also been a time of uplifting to those who know the Lord. W. H. T.

Goosey.—Mr. Maurice Williams has been conducting services in a tent on the village green, and good congregations have attended each night. Three services were conducted by the evangelist last Sunday, the gathering at night being specially large. Mr. Williams has been asked to visit Stanford, and promises to do so on condition that all the churches unite.

Exeter.—After four days' blessed and fruitful work at South Molton, Mr. Varley has returned to Exeter, and has begun a "United Christian Campaign." "Ned Wright," Rev. W. G. Taylor, from Australia, Mr. Heyman Wreford, and Mr. Varley were all engaged last Sunday in this work. The great Victoria Hall was thronged, and so was the Royal Public Hall.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver concluded a fortnight's mission with the Mizpah Band, Dalkeith, N.B., on Friday last. Great and abundant has been the blessing received. Truly the power of God was manifested, and Christ glorified in the salvation of many. Believers have been greatly edified and encouraged to renewed consecration in the Master's service.—JOHN L. MORRISON, Organising Secretary.

Messrs. Munhall and Birch have recently held a three weeks' evangelistic campaign in Bay City, Michigan, in which eight churches united. The total accession to the churches as a result of the meetings has been between 1000 and 1200. All classes were reached, rich and poor, young and old. Quite one-third of the converts were men, many of them lawyers, physicians, merchants, and manufacturers.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in St. Jude's Parish Church, Kilmainham, Dublin, by Rev. Mr. Harrison, of Arklow, so well known for his boldness in street preaching in the town. Similar services, in which the local Methodist minister took part, have been held in Ballinasloe for the last two months by Messrs. Carleton and Robinson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, and in the First Presbyterian Church, Londonderry, for the last month by Mr. S. G. Montgomery, of Bangor, co. Down. At each place several persons professed to have decided for Christ.

Rev. B. Fay Mills.—Seventeen churches were allied in inviting Mr. Mills to Norwich, Conn. For two weeks, afternoon and evening, the largest churches of the city were filled. Three days were especially observed as "midweek Sabbaths," in which meetings both for prayer and preaching were multiplied. On the last of these days Mr. Mills preached four times, and throughout the city, places of business, with few exceptions, were closed from ten to twelve in the morning and after three in the afternoon. Bankers, merchants, and saloon keepers, Protestants and Roman Catholics, Christians and Jews, and even Chinamen, united in supporting the services. The results are very gratifying.

Rev. T. B. Robertson has held a mission for men at Kingstown, co. Dublin, and a work of grace was manifested which has rejoiced the hearts of the Christian workers engaged in the services. The mission was a united one. Originally promoted by the Y.M.C.A., the co-operation of the Men's Christian Institute was also secured. One week of meetings was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., and the other in the hall of the Men's Institute. In both buildings blessing was vouchsafed, and men rose for prayer, some of whom definitely accepted Christ as their Saviour, and are now attending the various Bible classes and prayer meetings. Apart from those who outwardly testified to the saving power of Jesus in their own souls, some have since been heard of who are deeply convicted of their sin. Will the Christian readers of this paper pray for such, and also for those who were born again, that their "faith fail not"? SAMUEL A. MARTIN.

PERSONALIA.

Miss Lucy Booth has left India on a visit to England.

Rev. H. Stern, who has for many years done noble work in India, finds himself at length compelled to retire.

Rev. C. C. Fenn, well and widely known as secretary of the Church Missionary Society since 1864, has sent in his resignation of the office on account of weakened health.

Mr. J. J. Scroggie is ill, and unable to take the meetings at Plymouth as noted in last week's CHRISTIAN. The doctor says it will take at least five weeks before he is able to do any work.

Rev. A. J. Harrison's Boyle Lectures for the present year will be delivered in St. Anne's Church, Soho, on the Wednesday evenings of May and June, at 8 p.m. (May 23rd excepted). The lectures are eight in number, and the subject, "The Faith of Christ."

Mr. Robert McCann, who has done valuable Y.M.C.A. missionary work in India, has returned home. He will at once resume in Ireland the work he left more than eighteen months ago for the purpose of rendering help to the Associations of the Bombay Presidency.

Mr. E. P. Telford had arranged to begin work in America next August, but the calls for him in England are so numerous that he has decided to stay at home this year. Missions are being arranged for in Harrogate, Redhill, Reigate, Bromley (Kent), Nutfield, Mile End, and Croydon.

Rev. John Wilkinson, who with Mr. Adler is on a visit to America, has had a very cordial reception by his friends in New York and Boston. Several meetings were addressed in the former city, at Mr. Warszawiak's Hall and elsewhere. At latest reports a series of conferences was being arranged in Boston.

Mr. Thomas E. Murphy is becoming not less well known and beloved than his father, Francis Murphy. He has closed a most successful campaign in New Rochelle, N.Y. One of the strongest proofs of the real value of Mr. Murphy's work is the fact that he seldom fails of an invitation to return to places where he has already held his meetings. From New Rochelle he goes to Boston, Mass., where he will doubtless meet with similar success.

Bishop Tugwell and his fellow missionaries sailed from Liverpool for Lagos on Wednesday week. There was a special service at St. Luke's Church previous to the embarking. Several friends of the C.M.S. accompanied the Bishop to the ship, and many fervent prayers have gone up for the preservation of Bishop Tugwell and his fellow-workers. The parting was specially solemn, remembering, as all did, the sad and unexpected death of Bishop Hill and his wife, just as they had entered on their work on the West Coast.

Mr. Robert Cotter.—It is matter of universal regret in Dublin that Mr. Robert Cotter has found it necessary to resign his post as secretary of the Dublin United Services Committee. Those accustomed to attend the annual meetings of the Christian Convention in Dublin, as well as the members of committees of the United Services, the free breakfasts and penny dinners, etc., of which Mr. Cotter was for upwards of twelve years the energetic secretary, will part with him in sorrow, and yet with hope that God may open up his way to still more extended usefulness.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For services by Mr. William Forbes at New Brompton, Kent, commencing on Sunday.—For blessing on an eight days' mission at Windsor Hall, Holden-street, Liverpool, by Mr. H. Lakin.—For blessing on a week's evangelistic mission at Walthamstow, by Mr. Matthew Burnett.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

ANOTHER province in Canada, making the fourth, has decided in favour of Prohibition.

Citizens of Dundee have been protesting against the multiplication of licences in the poorer districts of the city.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has closed his ten days' Gospel Temperance Mission in Watford, where he had much encouragement.

To aid in raising funds for the farm colony for inebriate women, collecting boxes have been distributed by the B.W.T.A. branches amongst the members. These are expected to realise a considerable sum.

Lord Rosebery, replying to a correspondent, states that the Government intend to use their best endeavours to pass the Veto Bill this session. Sir William Harcourt has also written to the same effect.

The Supreme Court of South Carolina, by two votes to one, is said to have decided that the Dispensary Liquor Laws, or State monopoly, was unconstitutional, and every dispensary has been ordered to close immediately.

A united temperance conference, representing many organisations, was held on two days of last week, the special matter in hand being the drafting of a bill for the better regulation, or prohibition by localities, of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Alderman W. D. Stevens is still holding the fort at the Central Hall Saturday Night Temperance Meetings in Newcastle-on-Tyne. Last Saturday he dealt with the Budget and the Registration Bill, and on the latter said that the public-houses must be closed on the election day.

Mr. J. Louis Fenn, of the National Temperance League, who has been engaged in work in the Royal Navy, was invited to address the workmen employed at the Whitehall Joinery Works, Stonehouse, during the dinner-time on Wednesday week. The firm kindly gave an extra quarter of an hour at dinner-time, and the whole of the men returned a quarter of an hour earlier than usual, so that a clear half hour was secured for the address.

The friends of the B.W.T.A. have this year arranged to hold an all-day meeting for thanksgiving, prayer, and exhortation, on the eve of the anniversaries next week. It will be at Holborn Town Hall, continuing from 10.30 to 5.30, and the attendance of praying friends is much desired. During the day brief addresses will be given by Miss Willard, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Mrs. P. Smith, Miss Gorham, Revs. F. B. Meyer, W. R. Mowll, and C. G. Moore, and others.

It is gratifying to record (says The British Medical Journal) that of the forty patients admitted to the Dalrymple Home at Rickmansworth during the past year, twenty-three went in under the provisions of the Inebriates Act. Particulars are given of the 344 cases which have been discharged from the institution since its opening. In nearly one-half of the cases there was a family history of inebriety or insanity. The after-history has revealed the encouraging fact that 31 per cent. of the whole number have done well.

Again and again has our Consul at Havre found occasion to complain of the riotous conduct of British sailors when landed in that port. This year, happily, Mr. Bernal has to report a notable improvement. Many instances have, he admits, occurred of men presenting themselves at the Consulate so stupefied with drink given them in mistaken kindness by friends ashore as to make him ashamed of his countrymen; but their number last year was very decidedly less, with a corresponding increase in the number of those against whose conduct not a word could be said.—Daily News.

A report issued by the Foreign Office shows that the Swiss are far in advance of us in grappling with the habitual drunkard problem. In Berne a person of dissolute habits is forbidden access to public-houses for two years, and may even be punished by deprivation of parental rights. Drink-sellers are severely dealt with for serving intoxicated persons, persons under age, or those forbidden to enter taverns. Inebriates may be confined in homes or reformatories. A tenth share of the profits of alcohol is devoted to overcoming the evils resulting from the liquor traffic.

Mr. H. H. Johnston, H.M. Commissioner, has issued a number of important regulations giving effect in British Central Africa to the provisions of the Brussels Act, to which Great Britain is a party. Under the new regulations alcohol can only be introduced on a special licence in respect of each consignment, and for the right to sell alcohol to Europeans in a particular locality a fee of £10 must be paid. A "perambulating licence" costs £100, and the Commissioner reserves to himself the right to refuse to grant such licences. The gift or sale of alcohol to natives in any form whatever is strictly forbidden, except when given by a medical man as medicine.

LITTLEHAMPTON HOME OF REST.

AT a meeting of the Council of the Home of Rest, Littlehampton, Dr. Rigg in the chair, the founder, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, presented a very favourable report. During the past year they had been able to put within easy reach of a thousand Christians both physical rest and Christian sympathy. Of this number, about 250 have been free and specially helped cases. Amongst the visitors had been over-worked ministers, evangelists, nurses, matrons, teachers, sisters, students, and many other servants of the Church; they had returned to their work strengthened in body and refreshed in spirit. Business men had also been received at the Home who had proved the strain "to provide things honest in the sight of all men," and "to keep a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men," in the midst of unscrupulous competition, to be more than their strength could bear; they had gone away heartened for the strife.

Deep sympathy had been called forth for educated women suddenly flung on the world, to get their bread by a hand-to-hand fight with poverty and pain. The timely help of the Home had provided for them the much-needed desert places where they had rested for "a while." The balance-sheet showed that the year's income covered the expenditure, which had been £3156 9s. 10½d., and left a small balance in hand. Mr. Howard Waterman, 58, Lombard-street, E.C., was elected hon. secretary of the Council.

WOMAN'S SPHERE.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S recent visit to Halifax aroused great enthusiasm. Dealing with the question of woman's sphere, Lady Henry said that the other day one of the papers, advocating the liquor traffic, did her the honour of writing her a letter of good advice on the subject. They said it was a thousand pities that women should now forsake the sweet old-fashioned charities, that they should elbow their way to public platforms, endeavour to copy men, and adopt a public line of life. Of course, she pondered over it. As, however, she read this letter, she turned to the pages of the newspaper, and saw the following advertisement: "Wanted, a tall, good-looking young woman to act as barmaid; photograph indispensable." And she asked, "Is this the sweet sanctity of the home where the woman has to be kept?" If certain women were to be set apart for such a calling, did it not behove women with true mothers' hearts to go out and plead that their load might be lightened, and that they might be drawn back again into the circle of the home influence from which they had gone.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

THE month of April found Mr. Charles Inglis again at work in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall. Four weeks' labour brought to a close our brother's twenty-first yearly visit to the Tower Hamlets Mission. To a crowded audience on Sunday night week he delivered a most impressive address on the doom that awaits those who reject the Gospel of Christ, and at the after-meeting many found their way into the inquiry room.

On Wednesday evening last week, although a pouring wet night, the body of the hall was nearly filled, and Mr. Inglis gave an earnest address from the text, "Oh God, Thou art my God."

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

WILL you allow me to appeal through these pages on behalf of the poor fisher folk in Labrador? Through the industrious efforts of the Helpers' Union there is a good stock of underclothing and a few dresses to send out this year, but there is a great lack of warm jackets, shawls, ulsters, etc., for the women and children, also clothes, and overcoats for the men and boys, and boots of all sizes. Will kind readers look through their wardrobes now that winter is over, and send all they can spare? May I ask that everything shall be guaranteed free from the least risk of infectious disease, for the sake of the wearers. A post-card should be enclosed in parcels. Friends living in or near London had better send their parcels direct to the secretary, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

LOUISA M. HARRIS, Hon. Sec. M.D.S.F.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

I PLEAD earnestly with your readers for free gifts of Gospel tracts, books, and cards, to help us in our visitation of races, fairs, and fêtes throughout the land, and for distribution at open-air services. At present our stock of such publications—so indispensable in this work—is almost wholly exhausted, and many urgent applications lie before us with which we are quite unable to deal. Last year ninety kind donors gave us a total of 744,570 publications; while our circulation in the same period reached 950,322. This gives some idea of our need.

FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

The Book World.

BOOKS BY THE LATE MR. SPURGEON.

A bright and suggestive little volume by C. H. Spurgeon has been issued, entitled, WHAT THE STONES SAY; or, Sermons in Stones. It contains a striking lecture, fully illustrated and furnished with notes and very useful appendices, by J. L. Keys, for twenty-five years secretary and literary assistant to the lamented pastor. Mr. Thomas Spurgeon writes a hearty introduction, and the volume deserves a large circulation because of what it is, as well as because of its illustrious author, who, "being dead, yet speaketh." (Stiff covers, 1s.; cloth, 2s. Christian Herald Publishing Co.)

THE ART OF ILLUSTRATION, a volume of addresses to the students of the Pastors' College, by its late honoured president, sees the light as the third series of the late C. H. Spurgeon's "Lectures to My Students." (2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) It is a book of substantial value, calculated to stimulate and guide preachers in the use of an important evangelistic and homiletical instrument. The lectures cover a wide field, and while giving many illustrative stories and similes, they describe and judiciously estimate the principal sources of parabolic, emblematical, and anecdotal information. It is gratifying to learn that there are still many unprinted "Lectures to My Students," including a course on Soul-Winning. We trust they will be published soon, and have a career of usefulness equal to those which are already so deservedly popular. The present volume was this year given by Mrs. Spurgeon, on account of the Book Fund, to each of the members of the Pastors' College Conference.

A penny pamphlet deserving a wide circulation is THE ATONEMENT, A WITNESS AGAINST SACERDOTALISM, by Principal Moule, a paper read last year at the National Protestant Congress at Bath. (C. J. Thynne.)

MEDIÆVAL MUSIC: AN HISTORICAL SKETCH, by R. C. Hope (Elliot Stock), contains chapters on the introduction of the various characteristics of musical notation, the early forms of the organ, the "uses" of the Church, etc.

THE SABBATH is the latest "Bible-class primer" (6d.) issued by Messrs. T. & T. Clark. It is by Professor Salmond, of Aberdeen, the editor of the series, and is remarkably full of information regarding the institution and its beneficent influence upon man—physical, moral, and spiritual.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SARAH ACLAND, edited by Isambard Brunel, D.C.L., has been written, as stated on the title-page, "for the nurses of the Sarah Acland Memorial Home, Oxford." It outlines the career of the cultured wife of Dr. (now Sir) Henry Acland, giving some beautiful letters from her pen. (Seeley & Co.)

PLEASANT PLACES: Words to the Young. By R. S. Duff, D.D., minister of Free St. George's Church, Glasgow. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Here are fourteen addresses which will please and instruct older boys and girls. Three of them, on Tasmania, in which interesting colony the author formerly laboured, should find a wider circle of readers.

FAMILY WORSHIP—Morning and Evening. By George S. Barrett, D.D., President of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. (2s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) This book, the object of which is to promote family worship, has reached a second edition. There are prayers for a month. They cannot express all desires, but they may help some in the ordering of their petitions.

GEMS FROM THE TALMUD, translated into English verse by Rev. Isidore Myers, B.A. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) These aphorisms and wise counsels have been collected with judgment; the Hebrew has been carefully pointed, and the sources uniformly indicated. The versification, while presenting the sentiment with general fidelity, is decidedly clever, and will do much to impress the "Gems" upon the reader's mind.

THE COMRADE-CHRIST AND OTHER SERMONS. By W. J. Dawson, minister of Highbury Quadrant Church (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) There are six discourses on Christ and his Teaching, and a group of ten on Lessons from Life. Though not of a type which realises our ideal in point of substance or purpose, these are very readable sermons. The literary element, however, does not in our judgment compensate for the absence of sound and strong Evangelical teaching.

CAUTIONS FOR THE TIMES, by Archbishop Whately, is a large book, now being sold at the small price of 2s. 6d., by C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street, W.C. It is the first of the "Protestant View" series of standard books, and although written forty years ago, will prove of real service to-day to students of the Romish controversy. Another useful publication is THE ESSENTIAL ABSENCE OF OUR EVER-PRESENT SAVIOUR, by Rev. Laurence Bomford (6d.).

The April issue of THE QUARTERLY STATEMENT OF THE PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND is specially interesting. There is a description by F. J. Bliss, M.A., of the recent pilgrimage to Jerusalem; Canon Curtis writes on the Sidon Sarcophagi, of which some excellent illustrations are given; and P. J. Baldensperger gives a large amount of information on matters relating to birth, marriage, and death among the fellahin of Palestine. (A. P. Watt & Son, Norfolk-street, W.C.)

NOTES ON THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE, adapted from Rev. E. B. Elliott's "Horæ Apocalypticæ," by Mary Theophila Cox, is a handy little book, presenting a careful digest of a great work. The authoress, the wife of the late Rev. F. Cox, of Chelsea, prepared the notes for use in a Sunday class, and students of the Revelation will find them very suggestive, from the historical point of view. (2s. 3d., from Miss M. E. Cox, 4, Royal York-crescent, Clifton, Bristol.)

THE BIBLE BY MODERN LIGHT, the new edition, largely rewritten, of the well-known "Hours with the Bible," by Cunningham Geikie, D.D., LL.D., is progressing towards completion. The fourth volume deals with Israelitish story from Rehoboam to Hezekiah. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) The pages explain the Bible in a very effective manner, and are specially valuable for the thoroughness with which they adduce the results of archæological research, by way of confirming and supplementing the Inspired Record. Two more volumes complete this useful work, which may truthfully be described as a library in itself.

IN THE BEGINNING, AND THE ADAMIC EARTH, an exposition of Genesis i., and the first three verses of chapter ii., by William Kelly, is a very suggestive little work. In the preface the author expresses his "growing sense of the perfectness and inestimable value of this Scripture as of all others." Then in twelve lucid studies he breaks many a lance with scientific theorists, and ably maintains that the great physical changes which lie at the base of modern geological speculation took place before the week of preparation of the earth for human habitation. Mr. Kelly holds that the creation in Gen. i. 1 took place "in the beginning"; subsequently, perhaps after ages of time, the earth "became waste and empty"; then followed the six days of work in making the earth fit for the Adamic race. Mr. Kelly has read extensively and well, and he writes to good purpose. (1s. 6d. A. Holness.)

TYPE WRITING AS A MEANS OF EARNING A LIVELIHOOD, by A. D. Southam (Southam & Co.). This little volume contains a great deal of valuable and reliable information on the subject of type writing, the best machines, and many cognate matters.

A new monthly periodical, with the title of Foreign Languages, is announced for publication on June 1 by Messrs. Isaac Pitman and Sons. Besides some entirely original features, and a variety of useful information of special interest to students and tourists, the magazine will contain practical discussions on the best methods of learning foreign languages. The price will be 2d.

CITY SPARROWS is a new monthly magazine for children issued by the Scottish Children's League of Pity, and edited by the Lady Clementine Hay. The object of the paper is to spread abroad a fuller knowledge of the League, which is in connection with the Scottish National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Only such particulars of the work will be given as are suitable for children to read.

Appeals.

MISS CHILD of the Sailors' Welcome Home, 173, St. George-street, E., writes:—"I am in need of several letters for the Surgical Aid Society. Perhaps some readers of THE CHRISTIAN can help me."

MR. ROBERT BILKE, of the Mission Hall Mission, appeals for £200 to free the work from debt and do some greatly-needed repairs in the halls. His address is Abergeldie, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

GORDON MEMORIAL MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.—God has blessed this work in a very marked way. The poor people greatly appreciate the untiring labours of the missionaries, whose salaries are in arrear. There is also a debt of £600 owing to the builder. Unless help is forthcoming immediately, this mission must be given up. Sums will be gratefully acknowledged by G. Richardson, R.N., 99, Brewery-road, Plumstead.

Notices.

MR. S. PYALL DIPROSE'S address is now Hillside, Narberth, S. Wales.

RATHOWEN Y.W.C.A.—We are asked to state that the secretary of this branch is Miss C. Maud P. Battersby, not Mrs. Preston Battersby.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A new church was opened last week in Bradford.

Canon Fergie, of Ince, continues in a weak state of health.

The Halifax branch of the C.M.S. contributed last year £321, against £500 six years ago.

Rev. W. H. Ranken, of Surbiton, is to act as chaplain at Grindelwald in June, and Revs. A. R. Buckland and Canon Hurst in July.

Rev. F. Millard, M.A., who has been for many years vicar of St. Catherine's, Tranmere, Birkenhead, has resigned his charge, having accepted a chaplaincy abroad.

Rev. Richard Hobson, of St. Nathaniel's, Liverpool, has just issued his annual report, which, says The Liverpool Post, must be gratifying to all concerned, as a record of past experiences connected with the oversight of one parish.

The Durham Fund for an extra Uganda missionary is growing quickly. Already £115 has been promised annually, one lady having guaranteed a yearly subscription of £50. The object of the fund is to raise £150 a year for the support of a missionary in Uganda.

The new vicar of St. Nicholas', Rochester, Mr. Gedge, has gained much appreciation already. In spite of his blindness he is an indefatigable visitor, and is generally led on his "rounds" by a boy. St. Nicholas' is now the only Evangelical church in the cathedral city.

A Service of Intercession on behalf of the diocese of Algoma will be held on May 4 at St. Mark's, Hamilton-terrace, N.W., at 3.30. An address will be given by the vicar and Canon Duckworth, D.D. Afterwards there will be a social gathering in the parish-room. All who are interested in the mission are invited.

The mid-day services which are held during the summer months in the churchyard of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, under the direction of Rev. T. Selby Henrey, were resumed on Tuesday week, when the Bishop of Brisbane addressed a large and enthusiastic gathering. The Dean of Norwich has promised to give the address at the services on May 8 and June 18.

The Mastership of the Temple, which Dean Vaughan is about to resign, is worth £425 a year, with residence, and is in the gift of the Crown. The Master is required to preach thirteen sermons every year in the Temple Church. It is generally expected that the office will be offered to Canon Ainger, whose appointment would be very popular, and he is a most admirable preacher.

The Sierra Leone Messenger, in publishing a report of the visitation of the Bishop of Sierra Leone to Lagos and the Coast, says that "a melancholy interest attaches to this record now because of the unexpected deaths of not less than six of the missionary party at Lagos in January," including Bishop and Mrs. Hill, "immediately after the Bishop had left that colony on his return towards Sierra Leone. These circumstances will make the account . . . given all the more pathetic."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. J. S. Brown has entered on evangelistic work in the Leamington district.

New chapels are being erected at Carnforth and Hartington-road, Liverpool.

A warm welcome has been extended at East Parade Church, Leeds, to Rev. C. Lemoine.

Dr. Dallinger preached last week in Union Chapel, Islington, on "Motive in the Christian Life."

Rev. A. W. Brough, of West Maitland, has been accepted for foreign service by the London Missionary Society.

It has been decided to enlarge the mission churches at Hythe, Greenstead, Old Heath, and Shrub-end, connected with Lion-walk Church, Colchester.

The first contribution, amounting to £250, has been received from America, in aid of the erection of the John Robinson Memorial Chapel at Gainsborough.

A Pleasant Monday Evening Meeting has been started in connection with St. Mary's Congregational Church, Morley. Though only a few weeks old, the meeting has an attendance of near a thousand women.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall, on entering upon the fourth year of his pastorate at Great George-street Chapel, Liverpool, stated that 190 members had been added to the fellowship as one of the results of the P.S.A. movement.

A joint committee of Congregational Ministers' Boards at Manchester, Liverpool, Bradford, and Halifax propose that a theological conference should be held at the Lancashire Independent College from Monday, June 25, to June 27.

The annual meeting of the Caterham Valley Congregational School was held last week in the Memorial Hall. Rev. H. Grainger in his report stated that many old pupils are now occupying prominent positions in the ministry. Rev. J. C. Harrison earnestly asked for liberal aid for this work, which is at present in great and urgent need.

Calls.—Mr. F. Thompson to Park Crescent, Clapham; Rev. E. J. Clarke, of Steeple Bumpstead, to Wolverton, Bucks; Rev. H. Schofield, of Portsmouth, to Pokesdown, Bournemouth; Rev. D. S. Hollies, of Gloucester, to Martock; Rev. H. W. Watson, of St. Andrew's, Birmingham, to Dursley (Glos.).

Resignation.—Rev. Dr. Radfoot at Leigh.

BAPTIST.

A new English chapel has been opened at Nantymoel.

The Baptist Building Fund reports forty churches helped last year.

A new chapel is to be built at Eastleigh, Southampton, a rapidly-growing district.

No less than forty-eight believers have lately been baptised at Bourne and Morton.

Sunday evening services for the people have been commenced at Brington, North Hants.

Capital missionary meetings have been held at Wantage, and considerable interest awakened.

The church at Highgate-road, N.W., is about to build a new mission-hall in Fortess-road, Kentish Town.

The Regent's Park Chapel mission band holds services in eight common lodging-houses around King's Cross.

Circus Chapel, Birmingham, originally an amphitheatre, but from 1849 to 1890 used as a Baptist chapel, is now being pulled down to make way for a new market.

The annual meeting of the Yorkshire Baptist Preachers' Association was held at Idle on Wednesday week. It was stated that there are in Yorkshire about 170 Baptist preachers, and that the churches connected with the County Association numbered 121, with a total membership of 18,688. Out of the 170 preachers, a trifle over half work regularly on plan system, supplying every Sunday about thirty stations or small Baptist causes.

Calls.—Rev. J. C. Carlile, M.L.S.B., of Bermondsey, to Trinity Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road; Rev. J. Cottam, of Earlestown, to Wakefield; Rev. J. W. Colley, of Kirton Lindsey, to Amersham; Rev. F. W. Walter, to Biddeston; Rev. J. E. Bennett, to Pellon-lane, Halifax; Rev. W. E. Rice, late of Adelaide, to Brunswick-road, Gloucester.

Resignations.—Rev. E. W. Cantrell, of Highgate Park, Birmingham, the wardership of Midland College.

METHODIST.

At Handsworth a fine new chapel has been opened.

The Methodist New Connexion Conference will be held in June at Longton.

Mrs. Lucas Pater, of Sheffield, has conducted a series of special services at Frome, with marked success.

New chapels are being built at Barton (Cambs.), Aylesbury, Mountfield (Hastings), Thurgoland, Nelson (Lancs.), Buxton, Leonard, and Wragby.

Rev. G. W. Wilson, who some time since returned invalided from East Africa, and has been seriously ill since coming home, is now able to resume work.

A joint commission of the Methodist body in Australia, by nineteen votes to four, has carried a motion favouring the early organic union of the Methodist churches in the colony.

The mission at Aliwal North still makes cheering progress. It is now by far the widest single station in the Primitive Connexion: its chain of churches stretches more than a hundred miles.

The Bible Christians have decided to establish a new church in Birmingham. A hall has been offered them in Priestley-road. New chapels are to be erected in Eastleigh, East Cowes, and at Plymouth.

The Primitive Methodist mission van has entered on the summer work, beginning the new season at Shipham, where capital Sunday services were held, and on the following day a good deal of religious literature was sold. Cranworth and Carbrooke were also visited, and good congregations gathered.

The new mission on the West Coast of Africa, recently opened under British protection, with Aqua as its centre, has a very promising outlook. The artisan missionary has begun to teach the natives the art of brick-making. He intends them to manufacture the bricks, and then use them in the erection of the chapel in which they are to hear the Gospel. His wife is teaching the day-school.

The Forward Movement connected with the Lever-street Mission Hall, Manchester, is making satisfactory progress, and like the Lady-lane Mission, Leeds, affords an example of the good work that may still be done in large central chapels where the right men to lead are found and the right means employed. In addition to evangelistic services on the Sunday and a P.S.A. for men, the work includes a Men's Pleasant Evening, Boys' and Girls' Parlour, Lodging-house Services, Saturday Afternoon Rambles, and Temperance meetings. A Woman's Pleasant Evening is about to be inaugurated, and a lady missionary engaged.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. S. Mackay, who has done such good work at Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, has accepted the call to Prospect-street, Hull.

The English Presbyterians have now in China twenty ordained missionaries, ten medical missionaries, and twenty-two lady missionaries.

The Women's Missionary Association has twenty-two lady missionaries on the staff, seventeen of whom are now at work in various parts of China.

Miss Ricketts gave last week in Manchester, before the members of the Women's Missionary Association, an address on Mission work among the women of China.

The Home Mission Committee have decided that five ministers should be set apart for a time to evangelistic work, and that a united effort should be organized at Newcastle to begin with.

The jubilee of the College in Queen-square will be held this year. Principal Rainy, Principal Fairbairn, and others have accepted invitations to take part in the proceedings. The great celebration does not take place until the autumn

The report presented to the Synod gives the number of elders at 1935, deacons 688, and managers at 2428, Sunday-school teachers 7366, scholars 80,018 (an advance of over 1500), members of Bible-classes 8,486, district visitors 2173, members of Dorcas Societies 4727. The workers thus embrace nearly a fourth of the membership of the Church.

The native pastors in China supported by their own congregations number twelve, native evangelists 110, theological students (in China) forty-four, organised congregations forty-five, preaching stations 110, communicants in the mission field 4267. During sixteen years the number of agents has been nearly trebled, and the congregations and stations have been doubled.

Calls.—Rev. Edward Roxburgh, of Queen's Cross Free Church, Aberdeen, to Oldham; Rev. W. Muir, of St. Enoch's, Glasgow, to Blairgowrie; Rev. A. McInnes, of Waterside, to Roberton; Rev. E. Ritchie, of Paisley, to St. George's, Blackburn.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

In our note last week we should have said that William Baker—and not William Butler—was recorded a minister by Devonshire House monthly meeting.

Only a few weeks ago we had to record the death of Caroline Talbot, of Ohio, who was well known and much beloved in this country. Now we learn that her husband, Kinsey M. Talbot, has just passed away, at the ripe age of about eighty-four years. They travelled together in England and Ireland.

Many Friends will be interested in hearing that George Wood, who did active home missionary work for years in England has had "several months of religious service in Virginia," and more recently in North Carolina, where he has been holding missions and lecturing on "Why I am a Friend." "His preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba has given to the Army 100 acres of land thirty miles from Winnipeg.

From March 31 to April 21 temporary employment was found for 230 men, in circular distributing, envelope addressing, and board carrying.

During the past year 1516 fallen women have been received in the ten English homes of the Army, and only 334 have turned out unsatisfactory cases. The total rescued to a Christian life since 1884 is 9527.

An American lady, to make sure that the Army should possess her property at her death, has made a deed of gift of it to Mr. Ballington Booth, of New York, and will draw only a moderate allowance from it as long as she lives.

Three tramps were converted in the Birmingham workhouse last Sunday afternoon through the efforts of the Army officers, who have for some time past, by request of the authorities, held short weekly meetings; the results all along have been most satisfactory.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth, on the 23rd ult., addressed two meetings at Southport on behalf of the women's Rescue and Social Work. The Mayor, Alderman Dr. Wood, presided, and contributed £25. £32 was collected at a ladies' gathering, and in all about £65 was realised.

A Bible Study on the Holy Ghost. By JAMES ELDER CUMMING, D.D. Price, 7s. 6d. extra cloth, bevelled boards. THIRD THOUSAND.

"It is a strong book, strong in mental grip and reasoning power, in caution and scientific accuracy, as well as in spirituality and scripturalness. Its thorough examination of the letter of Scripture in sympathy with its spirit, makes it both broad and massive. It is well calculated to hasten that great movement of the Spirit for which so many are looking. . . . . It is a very treasure-house of scriptural suggestion, though its style is simple and popular."—The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

WE purpose next week to give portraits and sketches of Pastor Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin, and Rev. W. Hughes, of the Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay.

A feeling of shame and indignation will spread abroad as the action of the House of Commons on the Cambridge Corporation Bill becomes widely known and understood. Under this bill, which passed its second reading last week by a majority of eighty-five, a woman suspected of being a bad character may be arrested when walking in a street or highway. The same principle was acted upon in the case of the C.D. Acts, which have been condemned and repealed. If the nation would not allow it to be acted upon for the benefit of soldiers and sailors, it should not submit to its application for the benefit of rich young students. If applied to Cambridge and Oxford, we shall next have it at Manchester, at Durham, at Glasgow and Edinburgh and St. Andrews, and at London also, when it has a teaching university. Surely every pure-minded University student will resent as an insult the provision now made for his protection. If Parliament insists on this abominable bit of special legislation, will it have the fairness to apply the provision to both sexes alike?

"There can be no doubt that at this time the greatest problem before the temperance people of this country is how to arrest the alarming increase of inebriety among women. . . . If this 'greatest problem' is ever to be solved, it must be by sweeping away the 11,000 places of sale which are almost altogether kept in existence by women. . . . These places are constantly increasing in number, being now nearly 2000 in excess of what they were ten years ago."

These sentences are from a letter addressed by Mr. Wm. Livesey to Wings, the organ of the "Women's Total Abstinence Union." This Union, he says, has been the means of introducing to the House of Commons a Bill which would sweep away that class of liquor shops that are of such a seductive character, and to which women specially resort for their private and often furtive supply. For twenty years Mr. Livesey, with many more, has been contending for this solution of the great problem, and we heartily wish God-speed to the endeavour to rid our country and the grocery trade of the most mischievous "Grocers' Licence."

The demand is a right one which women are making, in the interests both of women and policemen, that police-matrons should be on regular day and night duty, at least at all central stations, in personal charge of all women under arrest and of lost children. They have also only too strong reasons for insisting that an investigation shall be made into the conditions to which women are subjected when under arrest. Our police ought, on the one hand, to be protected against possible charges by malicious women, and, on the other hand, women should be protected from possible insult from any evil-minded policeman. These arrangements vitally affect moral condition and religious work.

There is one common custom of our law courts which greatly needs reform—the custom of asking women to withdraw during the hearing of certain cases. If there is one time rather than another when a miserable, sinning woman needs the protection of her sisters and the influence of their sympathy, it is when she is placed in the dock. The examining counsel will generally do their work much more considerately under the eyes of women than under those of men alone, and both judge and jury will feel themselves aided in doing the right. The law does not exclude women as part of the public from any case, and custom should conform to law. The old idea that men should possess a kind of supreme right to try and decide everything relating to women must go. We have even seen a Church court cleared of women in order that the repeal of the C.D. Acts might be discussed.

The Association of Religious Agencies in Liverpool is an institution of which we should rejoice to see imitations thoughout the country. Its object is the promotion of increased efficiency and greater co-operation among the various agencies for evangelising and benefiting Liverpool and district. One result of the operations of the Association is to bring before Christian people those organisations which are not distinctly of a denominational character, and are thus likely to be in a large measure overlooked. Mr. Samuel Hawkes is the secretary, and the office, 3, Hackins Hey, is a useful centre for information on works of philanthropy. The committee of the Association recently advised the setting apart of one Sunday in the year, to be called "City Sunday," upon which special attention shall be directed to the religious needs of the city, and, where possible, collections made on behalf of the evangelical and undenominational work of the city. We are glad to learn that there has been an encouraging response to this appeal.

Here are two of our problems; what to do with 52,000 pauper children of all ages now in the workhouses of England and Wales? and what to do with at least one-third of our reserve men of the army who, Archibald Forbes says, "are cadging and loafing about the country as common tramps in a degraded condition of thriftless recklessness"? For the latter we are not doing much more than increase their number every year. When the evil has grown to a threatening size we shall probably begin to think whether we ought to have a national method of making tramps. For the pauper children a few boards of guardians are bravely struggling to secure them a decent life and a fair start by boarding them with families. By this means a few thousands in England enjoy an advantage which is universal in Scotland for children of the same class. The report on the Forest Gate School, where the children have been poisoned with bad food, where they have suffered for years from ophthalmia, where several perished in a terrible fire, where they have had an outbreak of typhoid, will do something to arouse interest.

A vigorous correspondence is going on in The Guardian on "The Lessening Income of Church Societies." Two points come very plainly to the surface, and if they are duly considered, this time of need and pressure may ultimately bring a great blessing. One is the need of economy. One correspondent thinks that too much is spent on music, on badges and banners, and on mere useless machinery. He is right; the self-indulgence of some well-to-do congregations is as bad as that of Dives. Again, the people have not been taught the duty of giving. They have been "begged" ad nauseam, and this has been found to be no better than constant pumping, whereas if a living spring were touched there would be a constant flow. The Word of God gives no uncertain sound on this duty of giving, and were its teachings faithfully unfolded and applied, a marked improvement in the income and work of every society would soon follow.

The importance which the Church Missionary Society attaches to the training of native evangelists shows that the Society is doing a work which will go forward with accelerated speed. Liberty and self-help are notes of all true Christian work. The converts of the Gospel must become its apostles. A native ministry has a fitness that belongs to no outside agency; its very existence is a sign calling attention to the power by which it has been created. "Why have our own countrymen embraced the new faith?" is the question asked when native evangelists begin their preaching. Moreover, if souls are converted by the Gospel, they must speak the good news which they have received; and to aid them is to act with the Spirit.

The policy of the Church Missionary Society to turn away no suitable candidate for missionary work because of lack of funds was apparently on its trial last year. The Society was in danger of closing the year with a deficit of £12,000. But the adverse balance has all been wiped out, and the Society actually begins the new year with a balance in hand of some £3000 or £4000. The Bishop of Liverpool had a true principle in missionary work to uphold and commend at the annual meeting, when he moved a resolution expressing thankfulness that the Committee had continued to send forth worthy labourers in the assurance that God would not fail to maintain those whom He equipped and called. The Society is setting an admirable example of faith, which cannot fail to have an elevating and purifying effect on all missionary work. If societies were to be reduced to business machines with so much income which fixed the expenditure, then their day of usefulness would be over. They are right in believing that when God sends the workers He is sure to send the means to maintain them.

"The Isles and the Gospel" is the title of an article in The Thinker for May, by Dr. Hugh Macmillan. Besides the extreme interest which is thrown into it by historical references, and the charm which is given to it by scientific illustrations and allusions, it has great value because of its suggestiveness as to plans of Christian work.

God has formed islands and separated them from the great lands, and richly furnished them for human habitation, in order that mankind, by means of them, might be broken up into smaller sections. Massed together on wide continents, human beings have always been apt to corrupt each other. Vast as has been the influence of islands in connection with the civilisation of the world, they have had a still greater influence in connection with its religion. Islands have been identified from the beginning with the progress of Christ's kingdom. . . . Amongst the insular races the Gospel has found the most favourable conditions for its diffusion.

Dr. Macmillan could not fail to point out the work of God that has been done for Europe from island centres, one of the most thrilling chapters of Church history. He has also made full use of the facts of the rapid spread of the Gospel among the South Sea Islands, where "they had no elaborate caste, like India, and no gigantic ritualism, like China, casting almost insuperable barriers in the way." But his references to Cyprus, now a British possession, are peculiarly stimulating. After reminding us that the men outside of the Apostolic band who were most influential in the spread of Christianity were natives of islands, and that Mnason, the "aged disciple," and Barnabas, both came from that island, and that several years before the mainland of Europe received the Gospel Paul and Barnabas were consecrated by the Holy Spirit for the special work of evangelising Cyprus, which was the bridge of commercial intercourse between the Eastern and Western worlds, he inquires:—

Is there no higher than a mere political or commercial meaning in the acquisition by England of the island of Cyprus—the very island where the first missionary enterprise of the Christian Church began? Should it not be used as a base or fulcrum for preaching the Gospel to the regions from which it was first diffused?

We pass this question on in the hope that it may be answered.

In Austria and Germany there is a body of Christians called "Nazarenes"; they are also found in some numbers in Hungary, Transylvania, and the valley of the Danube. They resemble, in some respects, our Society of Friends, especially in this, that they object to war, and are ready to go to prison rather than serve in the army. At Belgrade a "Nazarene" was recently sentenced, by a court-martial, to ten years' hard labour in chains. Another of them in Bosnia, who has already undergone two imprisonments, has been sentenced to a third term of two years. We are thankful to hear of brethren to whom the Word of our Lord is so imperative, and who are willing to suffer for Him. Testimony like this must do good in every way.

Lord Wolseley's Life of the Duke of Marlborough is attracting attention, and to hear of the Duke is also to hear of his beautiful, imperious, and wayward wife. Perhaps in no letters do the pride, the sadness, and the dissatisfaction of the human heart express themselves so forcibly and so openly as in those which ladies of title often wrote in reply to the Countess of Huntingdon when she invited them to her house, or to the Tabernacle, to hear Whitefield. In one of her letters the Duchess said, "In truth I always feel more happy and more contented after an hour's conversation with you than I do after a whole week's round of amusement. When alone, my reflections and recollections almost kill me, and I am forced to fly the society of those I detest and abhor. Now, there is Lady Frances Saunderson's great rout tomorrow night—all the world will be there, and I must go. . . . I must go if for no other purpose than to mortify and spite her. . . . Perhaps my wicked heart may gain some good from you in the end." Truly, the rich need the Gospel as well as the poor, and they are favoured who can take it to them.

A young man, trained as a Nonconformist, joined the High Church school, and in that mood of mind went to live in Ireland. The sight of the sacerdotal idea fully applied and carried out, as it presented itself there, frightened him out of his new faith, if faith it could be called, and he found his way back to something simpler and more Scriptural. The inside view of a thing, of a system, of a church, is often disenchanting. There is a passage from Cavour's recently-published letters which shows decidedly that the Jesuits are attractive or otherwise according to the point from which they are viewed. In France they were, he thought, less objectionable than in Piedmont. "If you wish to know the innermost nature of the order you must not study them where they have to fight their way, and where their position is precarious. You will never form a complete estimate of them save where, with no obstacles to encounter, they apply their rules in a consistent and logical manner. They have learnt nothing, forgotten nothing. Woe to the country, woe to the class, which shall entrust them exclusively with the education of its youth." These words are worth remembering now, when the Romish Church is clamouring to have public money for the education of the children in the Romish faith. It is idle to think that the endowment of Romanism with the Maynooth grant is wrong, and yet allow a far larger endowment to take place before our very eyes. Now is the time to stop it.

It is God's meekness multiplies us; his gentleness that makes us great. When, manifested in flesh, He walked among us, He did not strive nor cry, his voice was not heard in the street; He did not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax. We need to learn his spirit of meekness and gentleness. We have known those in authority in the Church hold such a rod of terror over others, that they were afraid to speak their thoughts lest there should be some heresy in them—afraid even to think, lest their thought should be detected and made a ground of excision.

---

We hold that everyone who has, as a convinced sinner, fled for refuge to Jesus crucified and risen as his Saviour: everyone who believes on Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead—is justified by faith, is a member of Christ, and a part of his body the Church, which is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Therefore, every such person, whose works justify his profession, has so far an indefeasible right to fellowship in any Scripturally organised church.

"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations" (marg., not to judge his doubtful thoughts). We have no right to receive or reject him because his view does or does not agree with ours. He is a member with us of Christ; and if an uncomely member, he receives from the Lord the greater comeliness. But supposing he holds some false doctrine? A man does not really hold any truth or error until he is held by it; and there are few who have not had their doubtful thoughts about every doctrine they really hold. Many souls have been judicially murdered by being pushed into a corner, and forced to express a decision, when they were comparing one Scripture with another, and seeking to ascertain the truth. The endeavour to stamp out an error has often stamped it in. The spirit of inquisition may continue, while the acts of the Inquisition are denounced. The great safeguard against division, whether caused by error on the one hand, or tyranny on the other, is the love which hopeth all things, believeth all things, never faileth.

But if, after patience has had her perfect work, and when love has exercised her art in vain, any member persists in teaching that which divides the Church, and if he refuses to hear the Church, then the last and painful resource is separation; for how can two walk together except they are agreed?

---

It is sometimes said that the name of Jesus is used too familiarly, even irreverently, and that we should rather give Him his title, the Lord Jesus Christ. Doubtless all irreverent familiarity is evil. The Lordship of Jesus is a truth to be upheld in its highest integrity. The apostle in 1 Cor. xi. 23-34, rebukes the irreverence of the Corinthians at the Supper of the Lord, by reminding them with repeated emphasis, that he received of the Lord that which he had delivered unto them, that the Lord Jesus took bread; that it was the Lord's Supper they professed to eat, representing the Lord's death, the cup of the Lord, the body and blood of the Lord, and that for their wrong-doing they were chastened of the Lord, that they might not be condemned with the world. Eight times is the Lordship of Jesus asserted in this passage.

Nevertheless, the idea that the use of the name of Jesus, without the prefix Lord, is necessarily irreverent, indicates forgetfulness of the glory of that name. God has glorified his Son Jesus. Because Christ Jesus, equal with God, made Himself of no reputation, God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him the Name which is above every name—that in the name of JESUS every knee should bow.

How sweet the Name of Jesus sounds.
Jesus' Name, thou Pearl Divine.
Jesus, the Name to sinners dear.
Jesus, the Name high over all.

These and many other of our most precious hymns affirm the Divine sweetness, sacredness, supremacy of the Name which is above every name in earth or heaven. While defending it from irreverent use, let us not forget the Divinity and Royalty inherent in the name of JESUS.

WHY MAY WOMEN WEEP over the tragedy of some romantic novel, and be forbidden by prejudiced friends to take pity on the real story of lonely lives lived by uncared-for children, gathering such lives into their own arms as the natural consequence of practical sympathy?—Mrs. Reaney.

A MAYOR'S CHILDHOOD.—A hush came over the teetotal mayors at the London Mansion House, as the Mayor of Workington told that owing to drink he had never had a day's schooling in his life. At the age of seven he was sent to work in a coalpit, and from that he went to be an iron puddler. The signing of the pledge proved a crisis in his life.

Disarmament.

When, as M. Jules Simon says in The Contemporary Review for May, "the most eminent thinkers of the several nations" (of Europe) "are uniting their efforts to overcome prejudice and persuade to concord," it would ill become Christians to refrain from adding their efforts in every available form to secure the same end. They are bound to put away prejudice, and "to follow after the things that make for peace." Indeed, they may fairly claim that the evangel which they are constantly preaching has been permeating the thought of the world, preparing the way for a great change; they therefore hail the first manifest signs of its approach. Terrible experiences of the infatuation of an armed peace may have brought the nations into a mood to listen quietly to the higher lessons of our Lord, but that is the usual course of sinful men. Turn away from God; follow your own devices and desires; declare the teachings of Jesus transcendental, fit for the millennium and for saints, but not for practical men; involve yourselves in untold misery and in hopeless bankruptcy of your manhood and your means; then turn, and begin to admit that after all, the way of peace does seem to be the safest.

For almost a century a band of enlightened Christians have been teaching, and warning, and pointing out that this game of war, whether actual or prepared for, was a game of beggary and ruin. And now the beggary has come. "As for Italy," says M. Simon, "it is all over with her." "What are the other countries going to do which are threatened with the same fate in the long run? It is worse than folly to go on with a system which imposes all the evils of war except war itself. It must come to an end. And it can only be put an end to by war or by peace—a real war or a real peace—a war of extermination or disarmament." As M. Simon believes that France is as strong as Germany, and can hold out a long time yet, and that the Franco-Russian alliance has done for her diplomatic status what she herself had already done for her military organisation, he feels that he can honourably and with self-respect propose a truce of God.

All Europe is outwardly at peace, "every one, from the monarch to the mendicant, is in love with peace," yet we find there nothing but war. Strange contradiction. We are reaping the fruits of ages of violence. We have so loved and followed war, that when we would be at peace we cannot; peace is war. The state of France, as described by one of her foremost and most patriotic sons, is pitiable in the extreme. A man, he says, does not come out of his three years' service the same as he went in. "The artist's hand is grown clumsy, the morals of the young priest are impaired." The condition of things in the country, from which the men are drawn away, and in the city, to which they gravitate as soon as their three years are up, means a money warfare almost as disastrous to the country as a foreign war. Worse still, "the germs of all the diseases may be found in the casernes, and the men disperse to convey them all over the country, into every village and every workshop. Many of these young soldiers have not stopped growing. They are at the very age for typhoid fever." The police expenditure must be increased to make head against the growing number of assassins.

There can be no doubt that the sovereigns on whose words such tremendous issues depend are afraid of a struggle which will leave the victors in as miserable a condition as the conquered. This is an advantage, secret, unexpressed indeed, but real; and lovers of peace should press forward their good work with the assurance that in every king's heart they have a friend. The nations also "may be overwhelmed by a common lassitude, and may find themselves constrained by an invincible force to lighten themselves of their armour, little by little." No doubt there are difficulties in the way of disarmament, but they are as nothing in comparison with the present threatening combinations.

M. Simon thinks, and we agree with him, that an international convention should decide on the reduction of the term of active service everywhere from three years to one. This would leave the Powers in relatively the same position as now. Were there, in addition, a Truce of God, to last till the opening of the twentieth century, some wonderful changes would inevitably take place. While these two changes were quietly working, it surely would not be difficult to establish that International Court of Arbitration which Sir Edmund Hornby has sketched in such a masterly way.

The churches are now signing a universal petition to the sovereigns of the world in favour of disarmament and arbitration; their work is needed; the time is opportune. Could not the Peace Society also call a meeting for prayer on the day of its annual meeting, and thus more thoroughly aid us to confess our dependence on God to bring to pass the abolition of war? J. ## SOUTHPORT "FRIENDS" MEETING.

One Sabbath morning in our meeting house
I saw a stranger with a care-worn face,
A face which told of pain and inward grief,
Or memories of lost or absent friends.
He took a seat, and bowed his head in prayer,
Then looked around, and seemed to wonder
That no voice was raised, but all sat silent
In deep meditation.
The hush grew deeper and more solemn still,
An opportunity for quiet thought
We cannot prize too much.
Ere long we heard a woman's soft, low tones
In supplication, and in grateful praise.
She spoke to God in humble, reverent words,
And bore unto the throne of heavenly grace
The wants and woes of erring, suffering men,
And sought, through Christ, the needed help
To none denied, who come in his great Name.
She ceased. Again a hush o'erspread us all.
The stranger, with his tear-dimmed eyes
Saw visions of deliverance,
And as he sat, he thought of Him who said,
"Come unto Me, thou weary one, and rest."
And now, a faithful, loving minister
Gave forth the words, which in the silence
Had been brought to him, with living power—
"Why art thou now disquieted, my soul,
Why art thou still cast down?
Hope thou in God, for thou shalt speak his praise,
And all thy mourning shall be turned to joy."
The fitly-spoken words, not long drawn out
Nor amplified unduly, brought a message,
Clear, direct, and unmistakable,
To burdened hearts not far from dire despair.
Then others testified that God was good,
And that in hours of darkness He had shed
His light on the untrodden path, and proved
A very present Help in time of need.
Again ascended prayer and heartfelt thanks;
And after a brief pause our meeting closed
Without a formal priestly benediction.

. . . .

Was this the end? Nay, rather the beginning
Of radiant hope, dispelling gloomy clouds
From one discouraged soul. And now
The sunshine from the face of Christ
Turns darkness into light,
And makes the way through life, before so drear,
A way of pleasantness, a path of peace,
An entrance to the presence of the King.

Trade Morality and Casuistry.

All things are lawful for me, but not all things are expedient.
All things are lawful for me, but not all things edify.
All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.—The Apostle Paul.

Dr. Maclaren has said that "we do not sufficiently consider individual responsibility for the collective act." Christians hold shares, serve on boards of directors, draw profits, dividends, and fees from trading companies which carry on business in a way quite at variance with the principles of the Gospel. In some cases it is done by innocent investors in the most unconscious way. Take a typical case.

A Christian lady holds shares in, and, of course, profits by, the business of a large company of shipowners. She is a Sunday-school teacher, and would never dream of shopping on a Sunday. Being a teetotaller she would not drink wine or other alcoholic beverage. Yet in the vessels in which she holds shares there is a deck bar, at which the steerage passengers can get as drunk as they please. In the saloon cabin the steward is at the beck of any lady or gentleman who wants a glass of champagne or sherry on the Sabbath day. In any foreign port the ceaseless toil of loading and unloading "scarcely divides the Sunday from the week." A great deal of this work is done by coolies and "heathen Chinee," whose souls may go to perdition so that shareholders in England may live at home at ease.

It may be difficult for a Christian to get good investments free from taint, but that does not absolve him from responsibility. Remember the austere morality of the early Christians, which Gibbon speaks of thus:—

> Their serious and sequestered life, averse to the gay luxury of the age, inured them to chastity, temperance, economy, and all the sober and domestic virtues. As the greater number were of some trade or profession, it was incumbent on them, by the strictest integrity and the fairest dealing, to remove the suspicions which the profane are too apt to conceive against the appearances of sanctity. The contempt of the world exercised them in the habits of humility, meekness, and patience. It is a very honourable circumstance for the morals of the primitive Christians, that even their faults, or rather errors, were derived from an excess of virtue.

In another chapter he speaks of their refusing as builders or workmen to have anything to do with the erection or adornment of heathen temples, although only as paid employés. It was no ordinary merit which drew commendation like this from the most cynical of philosophers, the most fastidious of scholars, and the most sceptical of historians.

If we widen the principle of Dr. Maclaren, and think of the large number of professing Christians employed as clerks, salesmen, and operators in such trading concerns as have lately been "gutted" by the registrar of our public tribunals and found feculent masses of corruption, what a weight of responsibility it lays on such professing Christians as have knowingly been employed by such fraudulent companies! It is no use saying they are not answerable, and still more useless to plead ignorance. In scores of cases the clerks in a large office discuss the chicanery practised by their well-dressed directors with perfect freedom after business hours. And if they draw a salary they are undoubtedly "individually responsible for the collective act." Accepting pay means that all the world over.

ONE OF THE MANY DUTIES that come to every conscientious mother, is the daily endeavour to counteract the doubtful influence of the children's companions.

Israel and the Gentiles.—II.

THE OLIVE AND THE WILD OLIVE.

Israel is no longer few in number among the Gentiles, whither they have been scattered. Recent calculations point to there being about twelve millions (12,000,000) of them. In Jerusalem itself are now to be found nearly one hundred thousand (100,000) who have returned from all places whither they were dispersed. How many in number the rest of the "Lost" Ten Tribes, not included in this total, may be, who can say?

When Jerusalem is no longer trodden down by the Gentiles, when it is again under the government of the Jews, who shall have returned thither, when in place of the rule of the Turk the representatives of Israel are again in possession, what will be the next step?

If the times of the Gentiles are rapidly running out, what will be the government which will succeed? If no longer Gentile, then it will be Jewish; but if Jewish, of what nature? Let us not speculate, nor add to the Word of God, but once more search the Scriptures.

"If the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, it is the Remnant that shall be saved: for the Lord will execute his word upon the earth, finishing it and cutting it short." And as Isaiah hath said before, 'Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we had become as Sodom, and had been made like unto Gomorrah.'" (Rom. ix. 27-29, R.V.)

Not only well-instructed Christians, but also Jewish believers in the rejected Messiah, see clearly that such Scriptures as Zechariah xiv. and Daniel xii. have never been fulfilled.

No, the Scriptures of Truth show plainly that it is the Remnant only which will form the nucleus of the Jewish nation when God restores them, and they again become his earthly people. How precious this remnant will be in God's sight we find in numerous passages in the Psalms and in the Prophets. "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him" (Mal. iii. 17). Man may attempt the resurrection of the nation of Israel for political or commercial gain. Satan, the adversary of Israel's nation, as well as of Christians, may assist in re-establishing Israel on the old basis as the withered fig-tree, while they are still seeking to establish their own righteousness, instead of submitting themselves to the righteousness of God; but all such schemes will come to nought, and God's plan alone will succeed in that day when Michael, the great prince, shall stand up to contend for the deliverance of Israel (Dan. xii. 1).

God will graft in the broken-off branches of the olive—not of the fig-tree—and He will do it according to his sure Word. Meanwhile in this day of grace, if any Israelite as well as any Gentile individually believes God's Gospel concerning his Son, whom He hath set forth to be a propitiation (through faith) by his blood, he shall be saved; for this Gospel (not the Gospel of a national restoration) is "to the Jew first," and also to the Gentile.

Without shedding of blood is no remission—without believing God's Gospel concerning his Son there is no forgiveness, no justification, no salvation. Now Christians believe this. Let us take care then not to mislead the Jew by sentimental philanthropy, or by being ourselves deceived by those who make light of the Atonement, or give it only a secondary place.

The Lord Himself shows in Matthew xxiv. that the budding of the fig-tree is a sign of the beginning of sorrows, and his solemn words commence with the warning, "Take heed that no man deceive you." C.

A New Translation

PAUL'S SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

By Richard Francis Weymouth, D.Lit., M.A.,
Fellow of Univ. Coll. Lond., Editor of the Resultant Greek Testament.

Ἡ ἱκανότης ἡμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.—2 Cor. iii. 5.

[The object aimed at, however imperfectly attained, is to express as exactly as possible in the English of the nineteenth century the true sense of the Apostle's words as given in the best editions of the original Greek.]

11. I would you could have borne with some little
2 folly on my part. Nay, do bear with me. I am jealous over you with God's own jealousy.
For I have betrothed you to Christ to present
you to Him as a chaste bride to one only 3 husband; but I am afraid that, as the Serpent in his craftiness deceived Eve, so your minds may be seduced from their single-heartedness and chaste fidelity to Christ.
4 For if indeed your visitor is proclaiming another Jesus whom we did not proclaim, or you are receiving a Spirit different from what you did receive, or Good News different from what you did welcome, your toleration is 5 admirable! Why, I reckon myself in no respect inferior to those superlatively great 6 Apostles. And if I am in speech no orator, in knowledge I am not deficient.
Nay, that we have made fully apparent to you in everything.
7 Is it a sin that I abased myself for you to be exalted, in that I proclaimed God's Good News
8 to you without fee or reward? Other Churches I robbed, receiving pay from them to 9 do you service; and when I was with you and my resources failed, there was no one to whom I became a dead weight (for the brethren when they came from Macedonia added what supplied my wants), and I kept myself from being in the least a burden to you, 10 and will do so still. Christ knows it is true when I say that this boasting of mine shall 11 not be stopped anywhere in Greece. Why?
Because I do not love you? God knows.
12 But I will persist in the same line of conduct in order to balk those who desire an opportunity, as to their pretended character, of getting themselves recognised as on our level.
13 For men of this stamp are sham Apostles, dishonest workmen, assuming the garb of Apostles
14 of Christ. And no wonder. Satan himself can disguise himself as an angel of light; 15 it is no great thing therefore for his servants also to disguise themselves as servants of righteousness. According to their deeds shall their end be.
16 To return to what I was saying. Let no one look on me as foolish. Or if you must, at any rate make allowance for me as foolish, that I
17 may boast a little as well as they. What I am saying, I do not say by the Lord's command, but as a fool in his folly, in this hardi-18 hood of boasting. Since many boast on mere human grounds, I too will boast.
19 Wise yourselves, you find a pleasure in 20 tolerating fools. For you tolerate it, if any one makes slaves of you, lives at your expense, appropriates what is yours, gives himself mighty airs, slaps you on the face.

6 Fully: I take the Greek phrase (ἐν panti) that I have so rendered, and that occurs no fewer than ten times in this Epistle, not to mean in every thing, but to be simply adverbial like our altogether, exceedingly, &c., adding emphasis to the verb or adjective that it qualifies. Our English in every thing expresses what in Greek is regularly the plural (in all things), as immediately below in this same verse and in several other places. This ἐν panti (which is peculiar to Paul) is found also in ver. 9, and in iv. 8, vi. 4, vii. 5, 11, 16, viii. 7, ix. 8, 11; also in 1 Cor. i. 5, Eph. v. 24, Phil. iv. 6 (unreservedly), 12, 1 Thess. v. 18. 2 Thess. iii. 16 shows that manner is understood, as time is in the similar phrase dia pantōs.

9 From being in the least a burden: lit., altogether unburdensome. See note on ver. 6.

12 As to their pretended character: lit., in what they boast, namely, that they were Apostles from the Jerusalem Church.

20 Slaps, etc.: if this were meant to be understood literally, as Stanley supposes, we should probably, not certainly, have faces in the plural.

Erratum.—In last week's Translation, in x. 9, for "with empty" read "with threats."

FALLOW GROUND.

There are signs and sounds of a revival like that of 1859 in breadth and blessing. But we need to be reminded of the evident connection between the breaking up of the fallow ground and the outpouring of the showers of blessing which we are daily praying for and expecting. Our marching orders are clear and concise: "Break up your fallow ground; for it is time to seek the Lord, till He come and rain righteousness upon you." And to find fallow ground we have no need to go out of England. There is far too much of it all around and about us—unploughed, unsowed, unoccupied, ready, waiting, longing for the Gospel ploughman and the plough of conviction, for the patient sower and the seed of the Word, for the joyful reaper and a harvest of souls.

I could mention a town where it is not an unusual thing for twelve or thirteen Christians to visit the workhouse in a single day. Each of these would say that their special work was workhouse visitation, and that the Lord had called them to it; whereas they are treading upon each other's heels and wearying the poor people with their much speaking. As a contrast, an old man and woman, both over ninety years of age, living in a hamlet, assured me they were never visited by any Christian person, and begged me either to go again soon or send someone else.

At the recent village conference at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., it was manifest that the speakers, without exception, felt that the present fallow condition of hundreds of our villages is sad in the extreme. Owing to dense ignorance of the way of salvation, false teaching, and pagan superstition, there is almost as much darkness in some of them as in the "regions beyond," and this at our very doors. What a marvellous change would come over these godless, neglected rural districts if all the professed followers of the Lord Jesus realised their individual responsibility to do and say what He would do and say if He were still upon the earth in person! Surely the Lord will use strong and severe measures with some of his people who are hiding comfortably together in our large centres of spiritual life and influence, and shake them out "into the village over against" them. But are there not many even amongst those who from force of circumstances are compelled to reside in towns, who could arrange to consecrate part, if not all, of their forthcoming summer holiday to direct and definite Gospel work in dark and destitute places where the truth is seldom or never preached?

I can testify from personal experience of several village missions, that this "work of faith and labour of love" would not be unfruitful. For one of the most encouraging aspects of village work is the willingness and readiness of the people to come and listen to the Gospel when it is freely and faithfully proclaimed. This was abundantly evidenced lately at some special services in the various halls of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission. At one place in particular the people came out night after night, in all weathers, for five weeks, some of them walking two, three, and even four miles each way. And not only so, for to-day changed lives, and hearts brimful of love to the Saviour, witness to the fact that the truth preached found ready access into the hearts of willing receivers.

BAPTISM IN THE HOLY GHOST.

THOUGHTS FOR WHITSUNTIDE.

To the casual observer there would appear to be two divergent lines of thought on this question, some teaching that the baptism in the Holy Spirit is received by faith merely, and discountenancing what are called "waiting meetings," while others teach that it is necessary to wait for the baptism, and they therefore encourage such meetings.

Both base their teaching on the Word of God, and, without doubt, under the teaching of each, much blessing has been often received by many anxious souls. I believe that the difference is rather one of words than of substance, and that in each case there is a failure to some extent to discern things which differ.

Many teachers on the subject do not sufficiently distinguish between the work of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and the work of the Holy Spirit. Our Lord's work is a completely-finished work, the benefit of which is accepted and received by the true believer, by full submission to Him, and by faith in his all-sufficient sacrifice. The work of the Holy Spirit is continuous, never ending, ever leading to fresh growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The same distinction must be remembered in respect of salvation (cf. John iii. 36 with Philippians ii. 12), and in respect of sanctification (cf. 1 Cor. i. 30 with Rom. viii. 4, 11, 14).

Let us consider the baptism in the Holy Spirit. We find it mentioned seven times, viz. :—Matt. iii. 11; Mark i. 8; Luke iii. 16; John i. 33; Acts i. 5; xi. 16; and 1 Cor. xii. 13. In the first four passages it is expressly, and in the other passages it is impliedly, stated to be the work of our Lord to baptize in the Holy Spirit. This is, therefore, one of the blessings purchased for us by his precious blood, part of his finished work, which the true believer receives by faith in Him and submission to his will.

Does it, then, follow that one who has been baptized by Jesus in the Holy Spirit, who has been brought into the sphere of the Spirit's fulness, is now necessarily filled with the Holy Spirit and endued or clothed with power to testify of Jesus? By no means: Satan uses every effort to frustrate the work of God in our hearts, and, unfortunately, we are only too prone to fall into his snares. Hence, by letting other things come in and take up their position in his temple, even if only in the outer courts, or by disobedience to his teaching and will, or by unbelief, or by pride, or by mere forgetfulness, or by not growing in grace and in likeness to our Lord, we grieve the Holy Spirit, and even almost quench his working in us.

Hence the absolute necessity of waiting before God, that He may, in the first place, show us whether we have ever been fully surrendered to Him (cf. Rom. xii. 1, 2, must accompany Rom. viii. 11, 14-16), and then that He may empty, cleanse and purify his temple, that the Holy Spirit may be able to fill us unto all the fulness of God. The practical result is this. Let us acknowledge the fact that Jesus has purchased the gift for us, and let us in absolute and unconditional submission to Him believe that He does baptize us, has baptized us, in the Holy Spirit, and let us thank and praise Him unceasingly for this.

Let us also constantly wait before God that He may search, empty, and cleanse us. Like David in Psalm cxxxix., let us say, "O Lord, Thou hast searched me, and known me," and then and therefore continue, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts." Let this not be merely our attitude at stated intervals or at waiting meetings, but let our lives be constantly, incessantly spread out before his searching eye, for our great adversary is ever on the watch to nullify God's working in us.

There is often much special blessing received in meeting together of a few Christians, all of one accord in one place (see Acts iv. 23-31). Therefore, while accepting in faith that which is part of our purchased inheritance, let us also foster in ourselves and in others the habit of waiting before God, both individually and collectively, that He may cast out all that is foreign to his Holy Spirit, replenish that which has been exhausted, and enable us to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, that we may be filled with his life and empowered to speak the Word of God with boldness. Let us expect the fulness of his light to show us the dust and cobwebs on even our most holy things, that in humility we may be brought to the cleansing blood of Jesus.

Let us be diligent to be faithful in the smallest things, in our homes, in our places of employment, amongst our friends, that He may be able to trust us with greater things hereafter. Let us never try to copy other people, nor let us ever insult God by the thought that it is not his good pleasure to fill us with the Holy Spirit yet, but that we must wait his time. He is willing and waiting to fill us, and we have kept Him waiting by our unbelief and sin. Let us recognise this fact, and confess it in dust and ashes before Him, and ask Him to destroy all idols, to clear away all encumbrances, and to keep us in constant communication with the river of God, which is always full of water. W. B.

PLAGUE SPOTS OF LONDON.

By Chas. Cook.

PETTICOAT LANE.

Most persons have heard of Petticoat-lane, but few of the readers of The Christian have any true idea of what the place is like. For many years past it has been noted for the Sunday market which is held in it and the immediate neighbourhood; it is, in fact, quite a rendezvous for the poorer classes, who in the hope of "picking up something cheap," assemble on Sundays from nine till two in thousands in the main street and its outlets.

SECONDHAND CLOTHES

constitute the chief, though not the only, business of this great market; a large amount of money is taken for articles made of shoddy to sell at ridiculously low prices.

When quite a boy I remember going to "The Lane" on several occasions to see what was reckoned one of "the sights of London." I have recently revisited it, and desire here to record my impressions of what I strongly feel to be a foul blot in even this our Godless city.

On my way from the West-end to the Great Assembly Hall, in February of last year, I walked through this district, which is wholly in the hands of the Jews, and if these lines call forth the prayers of God's people for Israel, some good will have been accomplished.

Besides the many shopkeepers, there are hundreds of stall-keepers, and more itinerant vendors of goods, some having but a single article to dispose of. While passing along I saw six coloured pocket-handkerchiefs sold for threepence, three pairs of men's socks for sixpence, and a black frock coat for three shillings, the last article being secondhand, but the others quite new. It is said that you can buy anything in Petticoat-lane and its neighbourhood "from a needle to a waterbutt."

Secondhand clothes, however, are the chief articles of merchandise, and to this centre are brought the old clothes that are bought by the modern "Wandering Jew." There is no doubt that many infectious diseases are by this means carried to the homes of the poorer classes, who are only too glad to get cheap secondhand clothes without asking where they come from. A "reconstructed" suit may be bought for 5s., and a pair of boots for a shilling. Business here never stops for weather; rain or shine, clothes are bought and sold. Recently on a pouring wet Sunday morning I found "Rag Fair"—as it is sometimes called—in full swing. Not only were many of the people wet through, but the clothes offered for sale were terribly damp. In the roadway I saw a pile of clothes several feet high, soddened with rain, no covering to protect the goods, which, when the market was over, would be hidden away in some small apartment till, perhaps, the next Sunday, when, in their damp condition, they might find purchasers, who would wear them to the endangering of their lives.

The filthy condition of the smaller streets—some of which seem given over to the sale of fish, cooked and uncooked, the crowded tenements filled with foreign Jews, many of whom are from Poland and Russia, and the foul smells which surround one when exploring these byeways, lead to the thought that the whole of the district could very easily become a centre of disease and death. But it is the

to which I desire to call attention. A year ago I was alarmed at what I saw and heard, spoke to the police concerning it, conferred with one or two friends about it, but still little has been done in the matter. Here is a man selling a coat. Unblushingly he uses the most shocking language, interlarding every sentence with an oath, and asking his God to strike him dead if every word he utters is not true. Opposite is a rival in business, who surpasses him in the violence and virulency of his speech as he declares his competitor to be a sham and a fraud. Vituperations follow by way of retort, and worse ensues. Let anyone walk the length of Petticoat-lane, and he will hear a dozen salesmen using language that will horrify him.

I spent part of last Sunday morning there, and declare that nearly every man selling clothes in the open thoroughfare is guilty of this abominable practice. But this is not the worst. There are one or two men, known to me by name—shopkeepers also—who go out of their way to use, not only grossly indecent, but outrageously obscene language, and this in the public thoroughfare.

Surrounded by a large crowd of youths and men, with a sprinkling of the other sex, they will speak of immoral acts without disguise, and wait for the laugh that is sure to follow. One man specially is noted by the vast crowd who gather round, apparently expecting him to pander to their depraved taste; but the marvel is that he is allowed to do it. No language is too coarse or unclean for him to use; he seems possessed by the devil, and can be seen to foam almost at the mouth. If we would know what a devil the devil is, we have but to visit Petticoat-lane on Sunday morning and listen to the awful blasphemy and obscenity vomited forth by his too willing slaves.

This man in particular has been visited and spoken to by a child of God, and charged with his sin, and his answer is, "Why, bless you, if I did not do it, I'd not sell a single garment!"

Evidently, then, it is done to draw the crowd, and others, emboldened by this man's example and immunity, are quickly following in his steps. In vain did I look for some servant of my Master; hopeless was my search for some follower of our Lord. Why is this district

GIVEN OVER TO THE DEVIL?

How he must smile at us celebrating jubilees and leaving him undisturbed in this stronghold of sin? Not one ray of light amidst all this darkness could be seen, not a voice is heard for Jesus. Is there not scope for our brother, Wm. Booth, here? Surely there is a need for someone to protest against this iniquity.

Some are asking "Where are the police?" When spoken to, they say, "When we are near the language is modified, and we have no power unless it is strictly obscene." Both the Metropolitan and City Police are on duty in "The Lane," and admit having had complaints made to them. Last year I noticed large crowds also at the Aldgate end of the street, surrounding a tipster, who was offering to give the winner of the Lincoln Handicap for 3d., and hundreds of boys and youths were listening to the lies of the man who was fattening on their hard-earned wages, and helping to turn out gamblers by the score. This I brought under the notice of the police.

Thank God a month ago the police interfered; and now this professional lying for a living has been stopped; and though the tipsters are there, they are not allowed to gather a crowd, but walk up and down among the people offering their "certain winners" to those who are so easily gulled. As I walked away I again heard the foul language of the men referred to, and I am prepared to give names and addresses of the principal offenders. Hard by this plague spot I entered a large Nonconformist building. A mission was being held; forty people were present. Opposite to this stands a magnificent church. I entered; less than forty were there. Adjoining is Toynbee Hall; this also I visited, and found at the 11.30 lecture some twenty young men listening to an historical lecture.

May God give his people the spirit of prayer about this matter, and grant grace and wisdom to those who are seeking to bring about a better state of affairs.

THE WORLD will never become a Christian world until the cradle is a sanctuary and the mother a minister.

WORKHOUSE CHILDREN have no mothers even to lean their poor heads against. What a part "Home, Sweet Home," plays in the education of our children, and how entirely it is left out in theirs. Their unnatural life has stifled and perverted natural feeling, and either produced an unsatisfied yearning or a stolid dull indifference.

"WITHOUT SIN."

Dear Sir,—I have been written to on the subject of what is sometimes expressed as "living without sin." I thought that the substance of my reply would be of interest and profit to many of your readers.

We cannot be indifferent to the supreme claims of righteousness and true holiness upon the life and walk of the believer. God forbid that I should write a single word that should keep any child of God back from "forgetting the things which are behind," or to hinder him "pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." It is well, however, that we should test all statements and experience by the Scriptures of Truth.

No such teaching concerning Christian experience as being sinless, is found in the Word of God; neither is such a condition possible to any man. There never was but One of whom it could be affirmed that He was without sin, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ.

Not long since I heard this statement made before a large assembly: "I bless God I have not sinned for five years." On another occasion I heard these words used: "We believe in taking sin out root and branch." Now, such expressions are not only unwise, but they are out of accord with the Word of God.

Let us consider what sin is. (1) Lawlessness is sin. (2) The thought of foolishness is sin. (3) To come short of the Divine glory is sin. (4) To fail to love God with all the heart, soul, mind, strength, is sin. (5) To fail to hate sin is sin. (6) To be destitute of any of the fruits of righteousness is sin. (7) "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." This is but part of the list, from the Divine and unerring standard, which shows what sin is.

No greater delusion can exist than for a man to believe that, because he is not conscious of overt acts of sin, and does not commit evil in his daily life, therefore he is sinless. Consciousness is neither the standard nor the proof. The friend to whom I referred had not lived a single day, much less for five years, without sin. His mind evidently had been taken up with the thought of not committing evil actions, and was practically closed to the fact of his personal coming-short of righteousness and holiness.

The misleading expression "taking sin out root and branch" does not even touch the meaning of sin as given by the Spirit of God in these words: "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Sin, in this searching passage, means failure to do actual good, and to be like God in these respects. God is not a Being exempt from evil and sin only. He is sinlessly perfect in this, that his goodness and rightness are positive and perfect.

It is not the commission of sinful actions, or the presence of sinful thoughts and desires, which drives many of the children of God, with confession and a deep sense of sin, into the Divine presence; but that upon the tree of our experience and life there is so little of the fruit of righteousness. This to me is a constant cause for sorrow and personal humiliation. In sad reality, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

Mark how we are warned against false views on this important question, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." It is an awful thing to be self-deceived. The deception here indicated is that the truth is not in us if we say that we have no sin. To make choice of a deceitful confession in regard to our condition and experience is bad enough, but to do so at the price of the rejection of the truth of God is terrible. Surely pride and self-righteousness hold the citadel in such cases.

Let it not be forgotten that every time any believer from any cause neglects to do good which he might have done, he contracts sin. Whether this neglect arises from indolence, or from want of will, or of self-denial, or of zealous devotion to God, he is guilty of sin. There is not a Christian on the face of the earth who doeth good always and in these respects sinneth not.

The truth is that we can scarcely estimate the sinfulness of the believer on this ground alone. Thank God for the infinite value which attaches to the expiatory sacrifice of Christ Jesus our Lord in regard to the deep need of his people in all these respects. Let it be ours to the utmost of our power to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," but never let us be guilty of denying the truth by affirming that we are without sin, or sinlessly perfect. That could never be truthfully stated by any believer this side the eternal glory. As a fact, neither in experience nor attainment in this present life, can such a condition be known or be possible.

The tendency of these unscriptural fancies is to give a contracted and superficial view of the evil nature of sin, and to lead men to be self-satisfied and occupied with their own experience. We need to be careful not to change Christ for an experience, lest, being self-satisfied, we give place to the workings of pride, such as the truth of God so well portrays in the words, "Stand by, for I am holier than thou."

In conclusion, be it remembered that if the believer could be sinlessly perfect he would not need the high-priestly functions which now pertain to our Lord. He has, by the appointment of the Holy Father, become the merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God. It is of the whole company of redeemed believers that the words are written, "Wherefore He (the Great High Priest) is able to save them to the uttermost—continually—that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. vii. 25). Intercession implies the sinfulness and need of those for whom the Intercessor ministers. Carefully study Rom. vi., especially verses 12 to 19.—Yours faithfully, Henry Varley.

PROGRESS IN JAPAN.

Twenty-one years last month the edicts against Christianity were removed from the public places, and, though not officially revoked, they have now ceased to be regarded as the law of the land. Up to that date opposition and persecution were not only legal, but really expressed the attitude of the public mind towards a religion whose past history had been of such character as to render its new introduction a matter of serious anxiety and even dread on the part of those who were not acquainted with its true purpose and spirit.

There are some features of the work at present that give anxiety to the labourers now in the field; but when we gather up the various facts that indicate what marvellous changes have taken place, in the attitude of the Government and the public mind, we can but feel that God's hand has not only wrought wondrously in the past, but is still a mighty factor in the history of this interesting and progressive people.

According to the statistics of 1893 there are now 643 missionaries (including wives) connected with the work in Japan, 377 churches (of which seventy-eight are self-supporting), and 37,400 church members, of whom 3636 were added during the year. There are also 7393 pupils in Christian schools, and 27,000 Sunday-school scholars. There are 286 native ministers, 367 theological students, and 665 unordained preachers and helpers. The sum contributed by the native Christians is given as 62,400 yen, or about 40,000dols. U.S. currency.

Besides the regular church organisations and mission work there is now a resident secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association from the U.S., who has been successfully at work in developing and organising the Christian young men into societies for their mutual benefit, and also for aggressive religious work. He reports that "in 1893 the associations of Japan formed themselves into a National Union, having its headquarters and executive committee located at Tokio. The Union now includes thirty-three associations (of which number eighteen are college associations), with a total membership of 1055. Twenty-five other associations, not yet in the Union, are known to be in existence. Their membership is estimated at 600."

The Tokio Association has for its officers men who are nearly all of national prominence, and it is proposed to build up in this political and educational centre a model institution that will make its influence felt throughout the whole land.

About ten years ago a Scripture Union was started in Japan, and it now reports a membership of upwards of 13,000. It has a travelling secretary, and in some parts of the country the local organisations cover the entire field.

But numerical strength alone is not a sufficient index of the growth and power of Christianity in this land. A recent article in The Japan Mail asserts that than the assertion sometimes made that Christianity has gained acceptance only among the ignorant and lowly. In the country at large nearly 40 per cent. of the Christians belong to the "Shizoku" or intellectual class of Japan. In the city of Tokio nearly 75 per cent. of the members are shizoku. In a single church connected with the Congregational body there are to be found two members holding office directly from the Emperor, and not less than twelve who hold appointments from the Council of State with the sanction of the Emperor, and it is asserted that this church is not superior to many others associated with the same or other missions.

It was only a testimony to the character and popularity of the Christian element that in the first Diet twelve members and the Speaker were Christians. In Tokio and Kyoto some of the most influential members of the city and prefecturial assemblies are believers; while in Gumma Ken, out of a total of sixty members in the Assembly, eight are Christians. There is a "Christian Physicians' Society of Japan" which numbers over seventy members. Their object is the free distribution of the Bible among the physicians of the country.

The strongest political organisation in Japan is called the "Jiuto" or Radical Party, and it is likely soon to have a controlling influence in the affairs of the Government. Its vice-president is an Elder of the Presbyterian Church in Kochi, and one of the most active and consistent members.

There are now Christian moral instructors in several of the Government prisons, and their labours have been attended with most beneficial results. Many have been converted, and it is reported that there have been applications for 450 reading lists of the Scripture Union from the prisoners located in the Hokkaido alone. Until recently the Bible was prohibited in the Higher Normal School in Tokio.

THERE IS NOW NO RESTRICTION

in regard to its possession or use. During the year 1893 there were sold at the Bible-house in Yokohama 4,806 Bibles, 16,265 Testaments, and 16,534 portions of the Scriptures; and more than a million copies of the same have been circulated heretofore.

The report of the United Tract Societies for 1893 gives the total sales as follows:—Books, 3114; tracts, 161,816; or a total of 164,930 copies of Christian literature. There were also 113,404 copies donated; so that the aggregate circulation was 278,447. With so much scattering of the seed of Divine truth there must be important and lasting results.

And the blessing of God is resting upon the work in all parts of the land. A letter from the Hokkaido reports that the missionary on his journey "was never treated with more kindness or consideration by the people." He adds that "many heard the Word gladly, while not a few were deeply impressed with the beauty, power, and blessedness of the Christian religion." The membership of the church is increasing, souls are being awakened and converted, and the preachers and members are uniting and co-operating as never before.

One of the missionaries at Nagoya writes that during the week of prayer the interest was so great that it was decided to continue in supplication for increased blessing. So with one accord they met in one place to pray and wait for the desired blessing. The volume of prayer flowed on for two hours at a time, and nothing but the intervention of the leader or the singing of a hymn seemed to check it. Buddhist priests came in, listened quietly, and withdrew in silence. As a result there has been such an awakening as was never known in that part of Japan before; and all are filled with a desire to lead others to Christ. Plans were matured for aggressive work among unbelievers, and evangelistic services were to be held in different parts of the city every night. Already reports have been received of a good number turning to the Lord.

Ten young men connected with the Presbyterian body in Tokio have recently formed themselves into an Association for the special object of carrying the pure Gospel of salvation to the great masses that are without Christ, and many ignorant of even the very first truths of the Gospel. These young men are preachers, or teachers, and already an interest has been awakened that gives promise of most blessed results. H. Loomis, American Bible Society.

Revival Reminiscences.

1859 TO 1891 IN WEST SURREY.

It is not always possible to obtain a connected, nd trustworthy account of the effects of a revival; ven as they may be traced within a narrow area, ut the careful and painstaking habits of the late r. Benjamin Scott, Chamberlain of the City of ondon, prepared and preserved an account of what as done in West Surrey between 1859 and 1891, rom which we draw some important facts. Mr. cott was led, in 1854, to make his home at Weyridge, but finding no Gospel preaching in the arish church, the only place of worship, he went Hersham, two miles and a-half distant. When he ad been attending for five years the ministry of a deoted man of God there, Rev. Mr. Lord, a circumstance ccurred which made a deep impression upon him. He as walking alone in the shrubberies surrounding his ouse one Sunday afternoon, between the services Hersham, when he was suddenly and overoweringly impressed with a feeling of spiritual olation, "so much so that he was moved even to flood of tears." He had not, at that time, a soul ithin a radius of two miles, outside his own ousehold, with whom he could exchange a word spiritual things; and yet Weybridge is only neteen miles from London. He had planted mself, "by no design of his own," where attenance on Divine ordinances involved two journeys and fro, of about ten miles in all, on the Lord's ay, and he saw no opening for better things for mself or his family. Writing of this period, he id: "My spiritual condition, I am now conced, was no better than were my spiritual circumances."

In the month following, during his annual vacaon, which he that year spent at Swanage, in Dort, he received a letter from a friend, and two newspers forwarded by others, all informing him of e remarkable revival in Ulster. A strong desire, rtly curiosity, partly hopefulness, partly incredu, seized him, to ascertain whether the reports re authentic. Notwithstanding the pleasures of cation, and the pleadings of wife and children, started for Ireland.

To quote his own description of what he saw: Religion and religious topics were the main subts of conversation in trains and on jaunting cars; tices of meetings in church, chapel, and the open appeared on the walls of stations in place of e usual subjects of announcement; the summer es at Belfast had been abandoned, no one enter a horse; Wombwell's Menagerie left the dist, for no one cared to patronise it. A meeting d just been held in the Botanical Gardens at lfast, attended by 40,000 persons, at which, from ht stands erected for the purpose, preachers esented the Gospel to the people, who lingered to en until the shades of evening compelled them depart, many of them having to walk twenty les to their respective homes. In truth, the viour's injunction, to put in the foremost place e seeking of the Kingdom of God, was obeyed, for eason, by the majority of the people of Ulster."

During a three weeks' visit he had fellowship h ministers of all evangelical churches, and nd them engaged to the utmost of their strength teaching and guiding souls. "Sectarianism s, for the time, dead and buried." His account stirred Mrs. Scott that she accompanied him on second short visit to Ulster. A brief pamphlet ich he published, telling what he had seen, had a nsiderable sale, and brought him many invitaus to speak. He seldom spoke without good ults following. His own minister was sceptical, in the North of England he had seen exciting vices which had ended in disappointment—a ival made, not a revival sent from above. Mr. rd was, therefore, taken to look for himself, and their return he consented to Mr. Scott's telling people at Hersham what he had seen.

CONVERSION OF A PUBLICAN AND HIS WIFE.

Merely to tell the story of the revival seems to e been enough to cause a revival; life accomied the testimony to the power of God. When Scott told the story at Hersham it was to an rflowing and deeply-moved audience. To furh more sitting accommodation one of the deacons into the beerhouse next to the chapel and ed for the use of some forms. The wife, who in charge, said, "You have got the fools; may have the forms." While these were being placed the audience was asked to bow their heads in silent prayer, a circumstance which made so deep an impression on a prayerless man as to lead to his conversion. The publican's wife soon afterwards got into conversation with Mr. Lord on a question of conscience. "Was it wrong to sell milk on the Lord's Day?" Mr. Lord gave a qualified opinion, and added, "But assuming that there may be justification for selling a perishable article like milk, what have you to say about selling intoxicating drink, which is not perishable, on the Lord's Day?" She burst into tears, and confessed that she had listened unseen at the door of the chapel after lending the forms, and that she had had no peace of mind since. Pointed to the Saviour, she found peace in Him, and was soon afterwards received into the fellowship of the church. A few months later her husband fell forward on the book-rest during Mr. Lord's preaching, and, on removal to the vestry, confessed that he also was suffering from conviction of sin. He, too, was received into the church, and, after living some years as a Christian, and making a good confession, he died a peaceful death. The conversion of this couple led first to the closing of the beerhouse on Sundays and then to the abandonment of the trade altogether. Twelve members were received into the Church through Mr. Scott's address.

Meanwhile, open-air services were organised for the whole of the neighbourhood around Hersham for the rest of the autumn. Then a gentleman at Weybridge observed at the close of one of the services, "The evenings are getting cold and dark; what do you purpose doing with the meetings?" Mr. Scott replied that he feared they must be given up at Weybridge, as there was no suitable meeting place. He at once replied, "I have a disused billiard-room in my grounds which is at your service." From the billiard-room the congregation went to a music-room in Mr. Scott's own house, and from thence into a comfortable church of their own, built by themselves. The benighted condition of the place was not suspected even by Mr. Scott, for when a friend came and said, "There is no evening service in the parish church during the winter months, and there are fourteen places for drinking open on Sunday evenings, which are full of men roaring out the songs of the drunkard," he expressed his incredulity, and was only satisfied when he had made a tour of inspection. Perhaps many estimable Christians are also as ignorant of the state of things close to them, and would have as much cause to be shocked if they knew the facts.

The most striking results of the religious awakening were in and around Cobham. Mr. Bradnack, who had a school for young gentlemen, opened his house in the winter, and so well attended were the services that the flight of stairs, as well as the hall, was crowded with hearers. Then a barn was fitted up, and students came from the Wesleyan College at Richmond to preach; when the barn was too small a tent was pitched in a field, and ultimately the tent was superseded by a permanent chapel. As open-air preaching is an evidence of earnestness, and so makes an impression, so services in irregular places have a similar advantage. Ten cottage prayer-meetings were held weekly in the neighbourhood, these having a good influence as well as the services in larger houses.

PERSECUTION.

The practice at these meetings was simply to aim at the salvation of the people. Mr. Scott remarks: "My sole practice was to promote evangelical teaching." Mr. Bradnack, the schoolmaster, had his school ruined by some secret persecutors; his landlord was induced to give him notice to quit, and he was obliged to leave Cobham; God did not leave him, friends came to his aid, his losses were made good, and he successfully carried on his work elsewhere. One case more of persecution may be named. The police-constable at Cobham had attended the services, and received good. He was waited upon and warned that the county police superintendent would not allow his attendance at chapel services. "This warning he disregarded, and he was at once removed, without reason assigned, to a beat at the top of Hindhead." Mr. Scott sought him out there, and found him much cast down. That very week he was placed in new and better employment, and he became in his new place a useful man. Not one case of persecution was there, which was not overruled of God for good to the persecuted.

The work of God went on gathering strength at its various local centres. John Wilson, who had been converted from a sinful life by the instrumentality of the Primitives, was, at Mr. Scott's suggestion, removed from Bedfordshire, where he had been most useful in gathering converts, to West Surrey, where his labours were equally blessed. He also passed over into Middlesex, and was used of God there. Between the years 1866 and 1885, eight chapels in West Surrey and seven in Middlesex, together with two-thirds of the cost of their erection, or a sum of £10,400, were handed over to the conference.

The result of the revival in this small rural area, looked at from the church point of view, was that between 1861 and 1889 thirty-four chapels were erected, re-erected, or enlarged; twenty-seven of these were new buildings. Get the Spirit, and you get souls, and buildings, and money. Too commonly we begin at the wrong end.

A great many chapels may be got for a comparatively small sum of money when use, rather than ornament, is considered. A large sum of money may be given by the poor when their hearts are touched. The original and effective power in all Christian work is the power of the Spirit of God.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—It has been a real joy to read in The Christian the accounts of the Thanksgiving meetings, and of the growing unity of God's people. Perhaps it will interest you to hear of the Lord's goodness to a little band of women at Aberystwyth, who for the last thirteen years have met together on Tuesday afternoon, for prayer and the reading of God's Word. Our hearts were full of praise and gratitude to our loving Saviour for the great things He has done for us. So we arranged to have a meeting on April 11, that our songs of praise might go up with yours at the Great Assembly Hall. Our little room was full to overflowing; so we moved to a larger one, and we can indeed testify that "it is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises to the Most High." "Jesus Himself drew near," so that "our hearts burned within us," and were filled with an eager longing to do more for the advancement of his Kingdom.

We are waiting upon the Lord for more power and wisdom to win souls, and we expect "showers of blessing."

SOLDIERS' HOME, GOSPORT.

The Misses Ridout have issued their report, which states that:—"The usual work among soldiers and marines has gone on steadily throughout the year, and we thank God for many tokens of his blessing. Several different regiments were represented here during the summer, coming in succession to Fort Gomer for musketry. The Royal Marines, however, continue to supply the largest number of men, both from the barracks and the ships in harbour. It has been a pleasure to welcome home a large number of Christian soldiers from India by the different troopships, as well as men from Egypt, Malta, and Gibraltar."

There have been many cases of blessing. The following illustrates the work:—"One Sunday evening we had the joy of seeing a backslider return to Christ's fold. He had neglected prayer for some weeks and was very miserable. We felt that God had brought him here and was Himself speaking to him. It was not long before he knelt in prayer, asking for pardon, and pleading for grace to stand firm, 'Kept by the power of God.' After returning to his Yorkshire home he wrote:—'I was determined to begin at once to live for Christ, and started by filling my father's place, having family prayers and reading God's Word. I find Christ very precious to me.'"

INVALID CHILDREN'S AID ASSOCIATION is now generally recognised as one of the necessary philanthropic agencies of London. The nature of help given may be the placing of the child in a Nursing Home if the case holds out any hope of improvement; the loan of a wheeled carriage in which it may make its journey to and from the hospital, or be taken to such open space as lies near its home; the finding a visitor to visit, teach, or amuse the helpless one; and finally the putting the little cripple in the way of earning its living. The association keeps its own trained nurse to visit, nurse, and report on the medical or surgical requirements of the patients. Visitors are wanted, so is money, letters for hospitals or homes, clothing, etc. The office is at 18, Buckingham-street, Strand.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 13.—JEREMIAH IX.

The Corruptions of the People (1-9).—The prophet would prefer a caravanserie, with all its discomforts, to the pollutions of Jerusalem. (3) Falseness of speech is a source of weakness. Let us cultivate the habit of sincerity in the smallest matters, exposing ourselves to the searching beams of the King of Truth. Almost insensibly, the habit of insincerity steals upon men, and, having entered, it thrives apace. (8) In how many drawing-rooms and kitchens in modern society these words are verified. It is so hard to find men and women who will be behind your back what they are to your face. (9) But all insincerity to man, made in the image of God, is a crime against God Himself.

Punishment (10-22).—The treeless hills, devoid of life, whence the lowing of the cattle and the song of the bird have passed. (11) The call of the jackal amid the ruins of Jerusalem. The solitude reigning over pasture land and vineyard from which the population had become extinct. (16) The scattering of the people amid the lands of the Gentiles. These were indications of the severity of the judgment incurred by the people's sins. (17) Mourning was a fine art amongst the Jews, and women apt in utterance of mournful cries are summoned to bewail the awful fate of Zion. (19) These expressions are supposed to be employed by the people as they leave their land, casting lingering looks upon the dwellings which their enemies have cast down. (21) In the sack of Jerusalem the soldiers, not being able to enter by the door, burst in at the windows, and children would no more fill the streets with their cries at their play.

The Path of Safety (23-26).—These words are the basis of the Apostle's in 1 Cor. i. 31. None of the attributes of human wisdom or power avail to save men from the results of disobedience. Our only hope then is in the wisdom of God and in his power, in comparison with which ours are as a babe's. (24) Oh to know God, even though we cannot understand Him! To believe that his love is the source of all his other attributes, and the ground of his dealings with the world. Such will be hidden in the day of battle, and sheltered in the cleft of the rock, so that the storm can pass over them. (26) Jews were forbidden to cut or narrow the beard as was the custom of the surrounding peoples.

MONDAY, MAY 14.—JEREMIAH X.

Warnings against Idolatry (1-16).—(2) It is thought that some celestial portent in the sky had filled the people with dismay; or perhaps the reference is general. Idols of wood cut from forest trees, and decked with gold and silver; graven images of molten metal; these were substituted in private houses and in the temple itself for the spiritual worship of Jehovah. (5) They are compared to the palm-tree in their pillar-like righteousness. Mark the place of true sarcasm in human speech. Let it ever be used of the inconsistencies and absurdities of superstition and falsehood, never of people. (6) The outburst of Jeremiah's soul towards God is very refreshing amid the evil that he depicts. Let us often turn from the sin around us to adore Him who is King of nations, and to whom worship properly belongs. (8) The stock which stands for idols is a doctrine of vanities, i.e., the theory of idolatry is vanity. The prophets were never weary in exposing the absurdity of expecting help from idols which were the result of the ingenuity of their worshippers. (9) Uphaz is supposed to be Ophir, from which the best gold came. (10) God Jehovah is Truth, as opposed to the vanity or emptiness of idols. He is life, and the source of life, whereas they are dead. He is everlasting, whereas they are temporary. (11) This verse is written in Chaldaic, as though to supply the captive Jews with an answer to the idolaters around. (12-15) A strain of magnificent ascription, comparable to passages from the Psalms. Since this is our God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, why should we be afraid of nature? We are the brethren of nature's King. Its waters and vapours, its lightnings and wind do Him homage. (16) From all creature-help, and even from the best earthly love, we may turn to the everlasting love of God, which is our portion, and say, "There is something better than these." Mark the reciprocity. God is the portion of Jacob, and Jacob the inheritance of God (Deut. xxxii. 9).

The Announcement of Captivity (17-25).—Jerusalem is the fortress. Her people are bidden prepare themselves to go forth into captivity. (19) The sensitive heart of Jeremiah gives way to plaintive grief. Their sins are his and their grief. (20) This seems like the moan of Jerusalem, bereft of her people. (21) Prayerlessness is at the root of failure. Would you prosper? Learn to inquire of the Lord. (23, 24) This is still the prayer of Jerusalem uttered through the prophet, and there are times in all lives when we pass beneath the correction of God, and ask Him to temper mercy with judgment. How blessed to know that God directs our steps.

TUESDAY, MAY 15.—JEREMIAH XI.

The Broken Covenant (1-8).—This alludes to the book of the law, which had been found in the Temple by Hilkiah, the High Priest, before Jeremiah had become a prophet. (4) An iron furnace, because of the long duration of their trouble. A material less substantial could not long have borne the incessant heat. Has God brought you out of the furnace? It is that you should live a life of more complete obedience, and that He should bring you into the Land of Promise. God's past deliverances of his people aggravated their present sin. (5) It is almost awful to hear Jeremiah's deep Amen of acquiescence in God's judgments of the people he loved so well. Hereafter we each shall utter a similar acknowledgment of the righteousness of God's dealings. (6-8) The prophet was bidden to take a tour throughout Judah, announcing the claims of God.

The Conspiracy against God (9-17).—There was no secret about this agreement. Openly and universally the people broke away from the Divine covenant. Let us take warning. For us also there is an evil heart of unbelief which departs from the living God. (13) Every city, street, and house, had its special deity, and sin had reached so great a pitch as to make intercession useless. There is a sin unto death for which we are not to pray. (15) Idolatry is again, as so often, compared to infidelity on the part of a wife. Till now, the land had fed upon the holy flesh of the sacrifices, now there was no special virtue in the offerings of people who were themselves polluted.

The Conspiracy against Jeremiah (18-23).—His townsmen plotted against his life. God revealed it to his servant, who amidst them was like the pet lamb with which children play. (19) Condemned by his prophecies, they thought to escape their doom by his murder, which would only aggravate it. (20-23) In these words that breathe vengeance we hear the Divine sentence of unimpeachable justice, allotting retribution.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16.—JEREMIAH XII.

The Reasoning of the Perplexed Soul. (1-4) The prophet ventured to expostulate with Jehovah as to the prosperity of the wicked men that plotted against his life. When we are perplexed as to this question, which has been the standing puzzle of all ages, we had best take it into the Divine presence, and pour out our thoughts there. God likes us to reason the cause with Him. (R.V.) But we must never abandon our belief in his absolute righteousness. That is the premiss of all our reasoning. The Judge of all the earth must do right. (2) It is easy to talk much of God, but not to love Him. (3) It is blessed to be able to bare one's heart towards God, as perfectly sincere and devoted. (4) Creation suffers at human sin, whilst men fortify themselves against the allegations of God's Word by saying that their end shall not be as it predicts.

God's Reply (5-6).—His sufferings at the hands of the men of Anathoth (the footmen) were small compared with what he might expect from Jerusalem (horsemen). The pride or swelling of Jordan is an expression for the dense and luxuriant thickets that lined its banks, giving shelter to lions and other wild beasts. When these were dislodged by the periodic overflooding of the banks, they would be awkward to meet. Slighter difficulties are permitted to come to test us before we are involved in greater ones. And we must not suppose that we shall conquer in the greater difficulties or fulfil the larger responsibilities, if we have been unfaithful and defaulting in the less. (6. See R.V.) We may well be suspicious when our enemies, who have tried harsh measures without success, suddenly adopt fair speeches.

Divine Judgments (7-13).—Jehovah is represented as a husband going forth from home and wife, and leaving them to the mercy of the adversary. (8) As a lion wars against man, so Israel had turned against God. (9) As birds will peck and rend some unfortunate member of their species, so would the surrounding nations set themselves against the chosen people. (10) The shepherds here refer to the Chaldean leaders. (11) Better sense is obtained by rendering because as yet. (12, 13) The whole land would be devastated, without exception.

THURSDAY, MAY 17.—JEREMIAH VIII.

The Symbol of the Girdle (1-11).—Israel was as closely attached to God, as the linen girdle to the Oriental, who wears it upon his loins. The mention of Euphrates, where the girdle was to be hidden and marred, was a significant allusion to the Captivity It is to be noticed that though God is willing to cause us to cleave unto Himself, yet it is possible not to hear. We may mar the purpose of God, and reap as our recompense the marring of our lives.

The Symbol of the Wine-skin (12-14). — These skins were filled with water, milk, and other liquids. The prophet's words were not a truism, as the Jews mockingly affected to believe. Wine was the emblem of the wrath of God (Rev. xiv. 10). And that wrath was to be poured out on the guilty people till they were drenched and stupefied with its effects.

The Tears of the Patriot-Prophet (15-19).—Pride is the root-sin. By that the angels fell. (16) The benighted traveller, on whom swift night descends among the mountains, is apt to lose his way or be dashed down the precipice. (17) It is thus that the minister weeps in secret over the carelessness and disobedience of his people. (18) The king was Jehoiachin, but during his minority the queen-mother held chief power. "Ye shall be humbled, for your head-ornament shall come down." (19) Shut up, i.e., besieged by the forces of the foe.

The Devastation of the Country (20-27).—Amazed at the desolation, the prophet asks the city of Jerusalem whither its flocks of men had gone. (21) She would, however, have no cause of serious complaint against God, seeing that she had brought about the connection with those who were to inflict her doom. They had been her lovers in the time of her infidelity. (22) The character of the punishment is that allotted to an unfaithful wife. (23) The Jews had been so inveterate in their sin that it had become a kind of second nature. We have no more power to change our hearts than either of these. But God's grace can do for us what we cannot do for ourselves. (26) Again an allusion to the treatment of an adulteress. As Judah's sins had been before high heaven and all the world, so should her judgments be. (27) And the closing question intimates that the process of cleansing could only be a gradual one, after so long a course of rebellion.

FRIDAY, MAY 18.—JEREMIAH XIV.

The Drought (2-6).—(2) Black, i.e., sad, blackness being indicative of sorrow. The gates, "used for the people that assembled there." It is a touching picture: the fruitless errand; the empty pits; the sigh of disappointment and despair; the untilled fields; the efforts of the wild asses to relieve the fever of their thirst.

Intercession (7-9).—Notwithstanding our sin, we may still plead with God, on the ground of "his Name's sake." "Do thou it" are words in which we may claim the fulfilment of Divine promises. (8) God had promised to abide amongst his people, but now He seemed like a sojourner of the land, careless of its interests. (9) Stunned by sudden calamity, and unable to realise the hopes reposed upon him. God's apparent impotence to help us is the result of our sins and unbelief that fetter and restrain Him. Nothing, however, can break the covenant relation in which we stand to Him. We are still called by his Name, therefore for his Name's sake He must help.

The Divine Answer (10-12).—God never refuses the prayer of contrite hearts, but that which is superficial and formal. Many of our prayers miscarry because of our tortuous life and blunted conscience. If we regard iniquity in our hearts the Lord will not hear our prayer.

The People's Prayer (19-22).—As the prophet may not pray for them, they plead for themselves, acknowledging their sin, and supplicating help because of the tabernacle and covenant of God. Turning from their idols as vanity, they wait for Him.

SATURDAY, MAY 19.—JEREMIAH XV.

God's Reply (1-9).—(1) Moses and Samuel were eminent for their interesting prayer (Lev. xxvi. 16). (3) The most terrible deaths were appointed to avenge the sins of Manasseh. He was dead, but the evil fruits remained. His repentance had not sufficed to blot these out. (6) Full often had God spared the people, and as long as his forgiveness seemed likely to bring them to repentance He forgave. But the limit had now been reached in which forgiveness had any moral effect. (7) It was as if God took them to the frontier of their country, and cast them away as chaff. The widows were increased because of the decimation of the men in the war.

Jeremiah's Lament (10-14).—Jeremiah's sensitive disposition made him suffer keenly from the dislike of his countrymen, who hated him as though he had been a usurer. But God promised him protection amid the sorrows He predicted. God's deliverance would be like steel (northern iron), as compared to the opposition of his foes which would be as iron (13-14) I will make them to pass, meaning their possession and substance.

Divine Assurance (15-21).—Repeatedly the prophet turns to God with these plaintive prayers. Mark the four times repeated me. His love for the word of God; his joy in service; his righteous indignation his deep sympathy with God's purpose. And yet it seemed as though he were sitting beside a drying brook, and as though God's promises of protection were not promised to be fulfilled. (19) Apparently he had forsaken his post beneath the pressure of opposition. He is now bidden to return, and the old assurances of protection and help are renewed. These words afford rich help to the servants of God who have backslidden. In spite of their shortcomings they may be again as God's mouth. F. B. M.

THE CHILDHOOD OF MOSES.—Exod. ii. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Psa. xci. 15.

WHILE the treasure city Pithom was being discovered by M. Naville, the city of Tanis, the favourite capital of Rameses II., was being excavated by Mr. Petrie, of the Egyptian Exploration Fund. Zoan was probably the Hebrew name of the city. It was situated on the Tanitic branch of the Nile, and was a beautiful city, abounding in everything that could minister to the joy of the people. Here Moses was born, probably within sight of the royal palace; and here he spent the first forty years of his life.

His parents were of the tribe of Levi, and the family of Kohath. Their names are given in chap. vi. 20. Their first child was Miriam, the sister who appears in this narrative (4); and their second was Aaron, now about three years old, who appears to have been born before the king's cruel decree was issued (i. 22).

God delivered Moses through his parents (Heb. xi. 23), the chief actor being his mother. As the story reads in this lesson, her conduct is conspicuous for three things. (1) Affection for her child. He was "a goodly child." (2) See Acts vii. 20. There was something in his very appearance which, added to the peril attending his infant days, considerably increased the mother's love for him. So the power of the king of Egypt is opposed by the love which an enslaved Hebrew woman bears for her child. The King's decree says, "He shall die"; the mother's love says, "I will save him." How unequal the conflict appears!

(2) Her love makes her courageous.—She knew that every hour she kept her child under her roof she was exposing both him and herself to the wrath of the king. How easily a cry might betray his presence! But "she was not afraid of the king's commandment" (Heb. xi. 23). What dangers a mother can brave in order to save her child!

(3) And her love prompts to wise action.—The ark (3) was a kind of box or basket, made of the papyrus plant, which grows to the height of from ten to fifteen feet. The rush was used, among other purposes, for boat-building. The two words "slime" and "pitch" refer to the same substance, the one in its hard state, the other when melted. The application of this to the ark would form a hard glossy surface, entirely impervious to water. "The flags" among which the ark was laid, were smaller vegetation, not the papyrus, whose height would have concealed the treasure. This branch of the Nile is said to be the only one not infested with alligators.

In all this the mother's action was prompted by faith in God (Heb. xi. 23). She recognised God as the source of the love she felt towards her child; enabled her to contrast God's command with that of the cruel king; and made her more careful to obey God than Pharaoh.

And now the story introduces to us another woman worthy of special note. It is significant that at every point it is by women that Pharaoh's purpose is foiled—first, by the Hebrew midwives, next by Moses's mother and sister, and now by Pharaoh's daughter. Every true woman's heart was in revolt against so cruel a decree.

The Egyptian monuments enable us to identify his person as Nefer-ari, who was first the sister and then the wife of Rameses II. The term, "daughter of Pharaoh," describes her relationship to the former king. At the time of this incident she was probably a girl of about sixteen. The custom of bathing in the river does not prevail to-day, but it was evidently a common practice in ancient Egypt. Upon one of the monuments is a representation of an Egyptian bathing scene, in which a lady is attended by four servants.

Teachers and parents alike may hear, as if spoken by God to them, the words of Pharaoh's daughter (9). Is not every child a trust committed to us by God, to be trained for God? And the wages He says are not all kept to the last. In the very service itself, if truly rendered, the wages begin to be paid. And in the service which the child may render in future years there is still greater reward. Who can estimate the wages paid to Jochebed, to Hannah, to Eunice by the after service of Moses, of Samuel, and of Timothy?

In his mother's home Moses received the most important part of his training. There he learned to fear God, to know the history and the destiny of his people. But in the home of Pharaoh (10) his training was continued (see Acts vii. 22). He lived in a time of great intellectual activity, as may be judged by the fact that the library at Thebes, built by Rameses II., contained 20,000 books. Amid the splendours of the Egyptian Court he was trained for the work of overthrowing the Egyptian power.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE MOON.*

THE moon exerts a mighty influence on the earth. Although more than 200,000 miles distant, we may daily see the effects of it on the world. By a merciful arrangement of God, the sea is kept in a state of perpetual agitation. The moon is the chief agent in causing the waters to ebb and flow. Tides prevent the ocean from turning stagnant, and help to make it of great service in bringing health to many who are diseased. The influence of the moon is for the good of man and beast. We would not think, as we gaze upon the pale-faced, innocent orb, that she had so much power.

We, too, exert an influence in the world around us, and much greater, perhaps, than we imagine. Every day by our life, and as we come in contact with others, we are influencing them in some degree for good or evil. And when all our words and actions are gathered together, and weighed in the balance of God, it will then be seen whether the beam turns in our favour or against us. We are not saved by good works, but by faith in Christ; yet there must follow our salvation a life of good works. When we come to Christ for pardon and regeneration, we have implanted in us the power of becoming a mighty blessing in the world.

The new life given to us is an abundant life, whose manifestations will speedily betray its presence, and its effects will be felt in the world. And this because it is the life of God in us causing us to do God-like works. These are the works that prove the reality of our faith. We cannot live in the world without leaving our marks in it. And, whether old or young, learned or unlearned, we have an influence either for good or evil. The Great Day shall reveal whether our lives have been a blessing or a curse.

A MISSIONARY'S LETTER.

This is the time when the missionary societies are having their great meetings in London to hear news from the far-away lands where missionaries have gone to preach to the heathen the glad tidings of salvation. One of the most earnest and faithful missionaries that ever went out from this land was Mr. James Gilmour, who travelled through some parts of a country called Mongolia, telling the people of Jesus and his love. After he had been there for some years his wife died, and his two boys were sent to Scotland, his native land, to be educated. Mr. Gilmour wrote many letters to his boys, and some of these are printed in a book called "James Gilmour and his Boys," published by the Religious Tract Society. It is a capital book for young people, and we hope many boys and girls who read THE CHRISTIAN will find out all about this good man and what he did for Jesus in Mongolia. We copy one of his letters to his sons out of the book:—

"My Dear Sons,—I am getting on well. I have had terrible weather lately, though my tent is only a cloth roof on six bamboo poles, put up in the market-place. We have have had three days' wind. The first day the dust was terrible. But I had lots of patients, and remained out all day. Next day the tent was blown down twice.

"I am so glad the people like us and trust us, and come about us for medicines. Just now the schoolboys have holidays for the fair, and they stand for a long time together looking at me doctoring the people. When a man comes to have a tooth pulled, even the men are delighted, and advise him to have it out. They want to see the fun. Mothers send their little boys for medicine, and I am so pleased with some of the little lads. They are so modest and polite, making a deep bow as they go away. Always be modest and polite, my sons, and people will love you, and treat you well.

"The boys buy a lot of books, too, and I preach to them earnestly, because in ten years to come they will be men, and if they know about Jesus now, they may more easily become Christians some day soon. You, Jimmy, know Jesus. Does Willie? Teach him. Mamma is not here to teach him, and I am far away. You are his big brother.

"The other day when I was preaching a man was standing beside me with a little black pig under his arm. He wanted to hear me preach, but the pig would not be quiet. He held its mouth shut, but the little pig would still manage to give a squeak now and then. At last it would not be quiet at all, and he had to go away with it. I could not help smiling at him.

"The other day I had to pull my own tooth. It was the back tooth, and had been painful for days. There was no one who could do it for me, so I sat down with a little Chinese looking-glass before a candle, got a good hold of it, and after a good deal of wrenching out it came. He was a deep-pronged fellow, and he did bleed. I was so thankful that God helped me to get it out. I can sleep all right now.

"Our Mongol donkey man wants to be a Christian. I hope he is sincere, but he is very dull and slow at learning. There are three other men here who are learning about Jesus, but it is too early yet to say much about them. A good many people learn some and then stop.

"Praying that God may bless you, my sons,
"I am your affectionate father,
"JAMES GILMOUR."

* Extracted from a chapter on "The Moon" in FRUIT BLOSSOMS, a series of addresses to the young, by Rev. John Mitchell. (1s. George Stoneman, Warwick-lane, E.C.) This little book will be a very useful adjunct to a teacher's preparation work, full of suggestive outlines on subjects of common interest not often devoted to purposes of instruction—such as windows, bells, keys, kettles, and many others—of which all may be turned to good account.

"CITY SPARROWS."

A LADY correspondent sends us a long poetic plea for the "Day in the Country" fund, for which we have not space. She describes in musical and sometimes amusing rhyme many country attractions of which the town-bred child is ignorant. We heartily endorse the sentiment of one of her closing stanzas:—

Ho! ye who live in luxury,
Ho! ye whose lives are sunny,
Throw open wide your gates and fields,
And send the "Fund" some money.

THE LETTER MISSION.

"Evangeline," writing from 24, Rozel-road, Clapham, says: "The greater number of our correspondents have been anxious to know, 'what must we do to be saved?' Eighteen of these have been young men. The greater number are now rejoicing in the knowledge of Christ's power to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him. Some backsliders have been restored and others helped to seek and find full deliverance from sin by the indwelling of Christ. We have had letters during the year from India, China, and America, as well as from all parts of Great Britain. All to whom we write do not readily respond to the Gospel message, but we do not quickly give them up, but write again and again, and pray continually for them."

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—The Fo'c'sle was crowded on Tuesday, May 1, at the muster of the "Christian Life Boat Crew." Miss Child gave out the text for the month, 1 Tim. vi. 6. The opening up of a new branch in Sydney was reported; a lady had taken a house near the Quay. Mr. William Luff gave interesting details of the mission to Cambridge. Addresses followed by Mr. S. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, Hon. Miss Waldegrave, Miss Watts (Manorway), and several seamen and bargemen.

LEEDS.—Six years ago the Hall, in Argyle-road, Burmantofts, was built at a cost of £750; it seats 500 persons, and in it services are held three times every Sabbath Day. Open-air bands of workers go out into some of the poorest districts in Leeds. The Sunday-school numbers over 300 children, from five years of age, and is held at present in the Hall. It is now contemplated to build a school-room on land belonging to the Mission. All efforts are voluntary, and the services are well attended and growing. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. Henry Till, 15, Brudenell Mount, Hyde Park, Leeds.

AMONG THE POOR IN ROME.

In the eighteenth report of her work among the poor of Rome, Mrs. E. J. Wall states that, owing to the financial crisis in Italy, which has affected all classes of society, the need of sympathy and help has been more pressing than ever. In addition to the very poor who attend the weekly meetings and receive a piece of bread worth about three sous, another class of persons is now calling for aid—those who, having seen better days and moved in respectable circles of society, are now, owing to the failure of banks and want of labour, reduced to living in one little room, without sufficient food, instead of in a comfortable dwelling, with all they needed to eat.

We make some extracts from Mrs. Wall's deeply interesting report :—"Our Medical Missions have been in active operation in some of the most thickly-populated parts of the city. The attendance at one of them frequently exceeded 200 in the week. Our great need is Christian helpers to follow up this work by visiting the families of those who come. Are there not some Christian women in England, having a sufficient income, who are willing to work for Christ in this city, where for so many centuries the Bible, the blessed Word of God, was kept from the people, and instead of the glorious Gospel truths their minds were filled with vain repetitions to the saints and prayers to the Madonna?

"The voice of Lorenzo B. has often been heard at our meetings rendering grateful testimony to the loving care of Jesus for him and his poor old wife. Looking at him, you would almost wonder that he likes to come with those who are so badly dressed, and who look just the contrast to his neat and tidy appearance; but if you asked him how it is that he has nothing to do, you would find that for the last twelve years he has been almost blind. It was soon after this dreadful calamity befell him that he found his way to our meeting for the very poor, the blind, and the infirm. Since then he and his wife have had a very hard battle to earn the five sous that he pays every day to keep his little room, so that they might not be obliged to go to the public dormitory, where they know they would have to hear the most profane language, and to mix with those who have no fear of God before their eyes.

"I should like you to listen to a little conversation that Lorenzo and I had together, not long since, when he came, as he has been accustomed to do, to collect old paper and rags. I said, 'Tell me, Lorenzo, how you are getting on; do you ever find time to talk with Jesus?' 'Yes, Signora; my wife and I never go to bed without praying, and we never leave our little room in the morning before asking Jesus to take care of us during the day, and to forgive all our sins. We were never so happy as we are now, although often we are without anything to eat. We never have anything to do with the priests. Every week when my wife comes from the meeting she tells all she has heard, and teaches me the verse she has learned; we then sing over our hymns as well as two such poor old people can; and when it is my day to go to the meeting I do the same—I tell her all I have heard.' I said, 'Lorenzo, can you say from your heart, "I am saved"?' With his eyes full of tears, he replied, 'Yes, Signora, by the grace of God I can say, "I am saved." I know I am a great sinner, the very worst of sinners. When I lose patience and get out of temper with the way people treat me, it makes me feel quite bad; but then I confess my sins to Jesus, and He forgives me.'"

The poverty of the Roman poor is keen in the extreme. Mrs. Wall gives other stories illustrative of the Christian fortitude of some of its victims. Her address is, 35, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

THE CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

For many years the Church Association has been chiefly known for the uncompromising resistance it has offered to Ritualistic practices and Romish tendencies in the Church of England. Its "forward" movement, begun just over a year ago, gives it a claim upon wider sympathies, and should engage the interest of all Protestant Christians. The new departure took the form of dividing England up into twelve districts, of one or more dioceses, to each of which a Gospel van was to be appropriated. This scheme is gradually being developed, and the Association has already got eleven vans, which are in charge of earnest colporteur-evangelists, going through the land. In addition there is a similar staff of workers, who disseminate simple Gospel truth, travelling on foot.

For the most part the vans are worked with the co-operation of local associations. The "Wycliffe" van takes the York diocese; the "Rowland Taylor" takes the Suffolk district, embracing Hadleigh, his place of martyrdom; the "Bishop Hooper" commemorates the work of that good Bishop in Gloucestershire and the West of England; the "Oxford Martyrs" takes Oxfordshire and district; the "Anne Askew" looks after the Protestant interests of Lincolnshire, of which she was a native. The pedestrian colporteurs have each charge of a county, and are required to go from village to village, distributing tracts, selling books, preaching the Gospel, and warning the people against the inroads of Ritualism.

CHURCH ASSOCIATION VAN.

The vans visited London a week ago, and in the presence of a large number of friends, were inspected by General Sir Robert Phayre at Vale Grove, Chelsea, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Barrett. The passing of the beautifully-finished vehicles through the streets of London was a veritable demonstration against Ritualism; the testimony of the colporteur-evangelists afforded stronger grounds of encouragement. In a hearty address, Sir Robert Phayre expressed his warm interest in the work of the Association, and said he believed that no agency was more likely to prove a blessing. He narrated his own experience in lecturing against Romanists, showing the power of the truth in opening the eyes of priests and people. The vans are sent forth to teach the truth in the villages where too many know little of the Gospel, and the people have little or no idea of the difference between Romanism and Protestantism. Captain Cobham, Chairman of the Council of the Association, remarked that last year the Association was in the possession of two vans; now it has eleven.

The reports of the captains are full of interest, and demonstrate the usefulness of the agency. These men are judicious as well as enthusiastic, in fact well adapted for their special work. During last year 136,933 publications were distributed free, 42,701 sold (value £511 7s. 9d.). Villages visited, 2584; miles travelled, 23,545; addresses delivered, 2298. In some places the clergymen have welcomed the evangelists, and addressed meetings from the vans; in other places Ritualists have come forward with challenges, and, encouraged by Romanists, threatened to smash the vans. In some cases ignorant and prejudiced people have resorted to outrage, and police protection has had to be accepted by the workers. It is not surprising that, combining evangelistic effort with Protestant instruction, the income of the Association should last year have been larger than ever before. To complete the scheme, will require still increased support.

HOPE FOR THE HOPELESS.

Our bright party of sturdy laddies who left us but a few weeks ago is now all distributed; ere long they will become smart young farmers, earning board, lodging, and fair wages for their next year's requirements. Ontario alone is well able to absorb thousands, instead of hundreds, if they can only get the chance of an outfit, and passage, and railway expenses paid. How full their first letters are of gratitude for all the help through the past winter!

Our Training Home is filling with young girls, and gradually the past circumstances are being forgotten.

The following letter tells of possibilities in Canada. The writer, now thirteen years old, we snatched six years ago from great destitution, which must have landed her in a workhouse. It is written in almost copper-plate style, and is a sweet return for responsibility assumed on her behalf :—

"Dear Miss Macpherson,—I thought you would like to have a letter from me. I have been in Canada six years this spring. I would like to thank you for bringing me out here; it is a lovely country. I would not go back to England to stay for anything. I am still going to school, but will stop when harvest comes. I am living with an old lady and gentleman, and call them grandma and grandpa; they are very kind to me. I help grandma milk the cows, and do odd jobs in the house, and sometimes I take the horses down to water for grandpa. We have seven horses, seventeen head of cattle, and thirteen sheep. I have a pet lamb, and often have some fun with it. I was so pleased that L. and M. came out to Canada; they had grown so big I hardly knew them. L. has been staying with me for a week. We had good times together.

"Grandma had a quilting-bee last Wednesday. There were ten people at one quilt. The quilt was fastened on to a frame, and they sat around, and worked and talked, and had great fun; when it was finished they had a good tea, and then their buggies came for them and they drove home. That is how people get their work done out here; they invite their friends, and they all work for one another. Is it not a nice way? I spent two weeks at Stratford last summer; I was so sorry I missed seeing you. I often think of the good times we used to have at Hackney, and I wonder what the Home is like without our dear Mrs. Meing.—Louie."

Scarcely a week passes with a cheering letter from Canada, telling of success and blessing resting upon one and another. This week it is from a young man now settled upon his own farm, married to one of our own girls, requesting that a boy might be entrusted to him so that he might bestow upon him in return the kindness shown to him by the dear Canadians during these twenty years in the one home, where he had lived, and served, and saved enough to start for himself.

THE LATE PASTOR JOHN VICTOR, OF CLEVEDON.

Born at Marazion, on the shores of the lovely Mount's Bay, about the year 1820, John Victor possessed in a marked degree the natural characteristics of the Cornish people. He always retained a strong affection for his native county, which he visited for the last time in July, 1888, on the occasion of the Wesleyan Conference at Redruth. His early religious associations were among the Methodists, and for them he entertained to the last a warm regard.

Converted at the age of seventeen, he soon gave evidence of Christian zeal, together with some gift for preaching, a fact which soon obtained recognition for him and placed him among the "local preachers." As a proof of his earnestness it may be mentioned that he learned the French language in order that he might preach the Gospel to the crews of the French vessels visiting the seaport town where he was tutor.

While quite a young man he went to Bristol, and connected himself with the church at "Bethesda," Great George-street, under the pastoral care of Mr. George Müller and Mr. Henry Craik. At this period he devoted himself to evangelistic work in one of the low parts of Bristol, preaching in the open air, and subsequently in a room in Goat Alley. This was the beginning of a work which has since grown to large proportions, through the energy and devotion of the late Major Tireman, and more recently under the pastoral labours of Mr. W. J. Morgan.

In 1852 Mr. Victor removed to Clevedon, and settled there for his life work. He took the oversight of a small company of believers, meeting in a room in Copse-road, under the care of the Hon. Mr. Methuen, formerly rector of Corsham, Wilts. At that time Clevedon was little more than a village. The blessing of God rested manifestly on the labours of his servant, so that the premises used for the meetings became inadequate, and a chapel was erected.

The church was established on the principles known as those of "Open Brethren," and so continued for many years. Experience, however, led to the adoption of important modifications. After considerable exercise of mind and prayer, the open meeting was discontinued, and a regular preaching service substituted. As time advanced, and the blessing of the Lord continued to rest on Mr. Victor's labours, his ministry ripened, and attracted larger numbers, so that the place again became too strait for them. An enlargement took place, followed in after years by a still further extension, and resulting in the present commodious building with its schoolroom.

The appreciation of Mr. Victor's ministry was by no means confined to his regular church and congregation. Clevedon grew in public favour as a holiday resort, and many of the visitors delighted to listen to the eloquent pastor of Copse-road Chapel. Indeed, his ministry powerfully influenced the choice of many, and took them year by year to the same spot, that they might gain in spiritual blessing as well as in bodily health. The extent of his usefulness in this way it is impossible to trace.

One of the most important organisations in connection with the church was the village work. Preaching stations were established in several surrounding villages, and for the supply of these Mr. Victor made himself responsible. He frequently visited the various stations, and it was a great delight to him to get among the village folk. With great love of nature and agricultural life, he delighted to make surrounding objects the vehicle of spiritual lessons.

In a remarkable degree Mr. Victor combined the gifts of pastor, teacher, and evangelist. As pastor he was full of sympathy and continually alive to the needs of the people. He lived among them, and was ever ready with sympathy and help. He was emphatically a teacher, and his ministry was eminently calculated to edify believers. At the same time, the elementary truths of the Gospel ever had a prominent place in his preaching, and made his discourses second to none for evangelistic tone and quality. In substance, his sermons were mainly expository, the subject of each text being elucidated by the general testimony of Scripture.

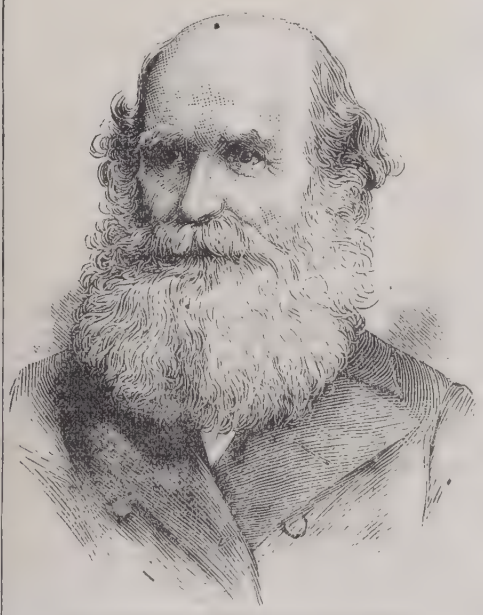
He had learned the true secret of a staying power in ministry—the inexhaustible nature of the Word of God. He was a diligent reader and close student of the Bible, and was enabled continually to "bring out of his treasury things new and old." Thus he was able to continue in the same pastorate for forty years without apprehension as to pulpit resources on his part, or wearisomeness on the part of his hearers.

Up to advanced age he retained much youthfulness of spirit and brightness of manner, which made him a great favourite with young people, while their company was always a delight to him. He abounded in quaint sayings, anecdotes, quotations, and riddles, in all of which ways he sought to communicate some spiritual truth, while he greatly enlivened social intercourse.

His catholic spirit was another pleasing feature in his character. While he had his own principles, and held firmly to them, he allowed others to do the same, and did not let difference of opinion on non-vital points hinder Christian fellowship. He was on the happiest terms with brother ministers of various denominations in the same town, meeting with them in fraternal association periodically for fellowship and prayer.

Mr. Victor was laid aside from active work for about three years before his departure, during which period he had to endure intense suffering. The end came peacefully on March 22, 1894, at the age of seventy-four.

When such a life terminates the gap left is very great, and the loss cannot but be keenly felt. Yet we trust that the memory of a beloved pastor will prove an inspiration to those who remain, and that the work established on such solid foundations will continue to benefit coming generations.



THE LATE PASTOR JOHN VICTOR.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A meeting, representative of many churches and mission organisations in the city was held on Tuesday evening, the 1st inst., in the Common Hall, Hackins Hey, Liverpool, to meet Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-air Mission, and to confer on open-air work. Mr. J. J. Grylls presided, and after Mr. Cockrem's address an animated discussion took place on a proposal that an auxiliary of the Open-air Mission be formed for Liverpool, with a view to unite all workers engaged in Gospel effort in the open air, and to develop and extend the work. Finally this course was unanimously approved, and a local committee appointed. Mr. F. W. Hall, 3, Hackins Hey, undertook the office of honorary secretary.—The Finsbury Park branch of the Mission held its first annual meeting on Monday evening April 30, in the school-room of Finsbury Park Wesleyan Chapel, at which there was a large gathering of members and friends. The chair was taken by Mr. R. C. Morgan, and an encouraging report of the last season's work was read by the hon. secretary, Mr. Henry Hammond. The meeting was subsequently addressed by Rev. James Stephens, Rev. James Crabtree, Mr. B. Barry Wake, and Mr. Frank Cockrem. The honorary seretary's address is 15, Russell-road, Holloway, N., and he will be glad to hear from any Christians willing to help in the work during the present summer. Singers and musicians are greatly needed.

A FRENCH PRIEST'S STORY.

Professor Bertrand, whose work among the French Roman Catholic priests is well known, writes to us:—

Some months ago I sent a converted ex-Jesuit, named Aubert, to our Protestant Preparatory Theological Seminary. At Easter, a companion, an ex-Roman Catholic Seminarist, visited Aubert's parents while I was in England. I felt sure that the Jesuits, who know everything, would seize that opportunity, and try to induce the young man to return to the Compagnie de Jésus. I therefore asked that a copy might be sent to me of any letters received and written. A few days ago I received a bundle of such correspondence. In one letter the Father Superior tries to frighten Aubert. "My dear son," says he, "you are tied by a promise to the Society of Jesus. The best you can do is to come back to us, make penitence for twelve or fifteen days in our convent, and if you obtain absolution, we will cut the knot, so that you may be free to go down, as now, on the decline to rapid perdition; or, if you desire, return to the ever-blessed company. If you do not come, excommunication is inevitable, and you will be damned for ever; no Church can save you. Two of your former beloved colleagues leave Lyons for Paris to confer with you. I do not know what they mean to do and to say [O Jesuit!], but I hope they will not have spent money and time for nothing." Here is my young friend's answer:—

"Dear Abbot—You call me your son; excuse me for not calling you father. Jesus Christ and his Gospel do not allow me. I have seen my two former colleagues, who pretend, like you, that I am 'on the decline to perdition.' Let me simply quote a fact. A year ago, whilst crossing a boulevard at Cairo, in Egypt, a European Benedictine stopped me. His dark complexion, wild, terrible physiognomy, his neglected beard and squalid dress—all was repulsive and frightful. He seemed to discern my most secret thoughts, for he whispered in a sepulchral tone the three words, Etiam fidem perdidi. Then he extended his dirty and fleshless hand, and went away.

"A shiver passed through me, and I remained as motionless and stiff as a statue. That man, to escape Ultramontanism, had gone to poverty, to hatred, and was going to Atheism. Was that Benedictine the image of what I was to be? A shriek rose from my throat and heart: 'Lord, Lord, is it true that there is nothing between Rome and Atheism? Is it true that the Church of Rome is the depository of the religion of Christ? If so, I would commit suicide, for Etiam fidem perdidi—I also have lost my faith in the Church of Rome.' That prayer was not, surely, Apostolic. However, God heard it, for a friend came to speak to me of Christ as being between Lourdes and Voltaire,—of Protestantism, of England. I threw my cassock into a ditch and fled to England, and then to Rouen, without knowing why.

"At Rouen the Protestant pastor told me, 'Go to Paris and see the director of the Mission to Converted Roman Catholic Priests.' I went. The director listened to my story, examined my papers, gave me 30 francs for my railway ticket, and sent me at once to a holy family at Cherbourg. Since then I have daily read the Gospel in French, daily prayed in French, with English and French Christians, worthy of the Apostolic age, who have brought me from Jesuitism to Jesus, from the Syllabus to the Gospel, from Rome to Jerusalem. And you ask me to return to you and to the Pope; id est, to the Benedictine, to the Aubert of Cairo! It is as if a negro of Dahomey wrote me:—'You, white and free man of Paris, come to us; become a negro and a slave under the fatherly and divine protection of the infallible Behanzin!'

"Dear Abbot—At Cairo I might have committed suicide; but that horrid chapter is over, the leaf is turned. I have gone back to school as a child, I study as a child, I obey as a child. But when I have completed my course of study, I have promised my God and the director of the Mission to Converted Roman Catholic Priests to commit the daily suicide of St. Paul—i.e., to die daily, in order to save the soul of my brother, French or African. Christ, not the Pope, has saved my life. That life is his, and my joyful and future self-mortification will prove it. I will not return to you.

"Victor Aubert, ex-Jesuit."

The May Meetings.

Women's Work in Palestine.

The annual meeting of the Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission was held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Tuesday week. The chairman (Rev. J. E. Campbell-Colquhoun) spoke of the value of missions in general, but especially of those whose sphere of work is in the land which the Lord loveth. Rev. F. Whitfield gave a description of the remarkable increase of population during the last ten years, and also spoke of the wonderful opportunities for labourers in that harvest field. The secretary read the statements of receipts and expenditure, from which it was gathered that eleven hundred pounds were spent during the year in mission purposes. The report states that in addition to a large number of persons visited and conversed with, 2,217 patients were actually relieved during the past year at the dispensaries and by the nurses. Openings lie around on every hand. During the past year the committee sent forth three trained missionaries.

Miss Cavendish, who has laboured for eighteen months in and around Jerusalem, read extracts from recent letters, showing how gladly the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is accepted in many towns and villages through the medium of medical assistance, commenting thereon from her own experience. Rev. J. B. Barraclough followed with a stirring address, in which he pleaded for all missions to the Jews, but especially for the mission represented, making an urgent appeal for missionaries and money. Rev. Walter Horne also spoke.

Drift Children's Mission.

The annual meeting of Mr. C. L. Boyer's Drift Children's Mission and Home Cripples' Band was held on Tuesday, last week, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. A large company of the children and their mothers sat down to tea, the party numbering nearly 600, of which about fifty were crippled children. Following the repast was a display by the Forest Gate Boys' Brigade, whose ambulance work, smartly and quickly accomplished, was well received by the large company.

At the meeting the chair was taken by Mr. C. Boardman, who said that he had known Mr. Boyer from the very commencement of his work in East London. He considered him highly suitable for labour among children by reason of his Christian sympathy, and he imagined that if the Master were upon earth, this work among Drift children would be one of the first occupations of his loving nature. The work being eminently spiritual, he was glad to give it all the assistance in his power. His daughter had been on a round of visits among the cripples in company with Jessie, the blind visitor of the Mission, and had found that everywhere she was as a beam of sunshine.

The report was an amazing record of Godly and self-denying activity on the part of the workers of the Mission—treats to the children, teas for 6500 cripples, days in Epping Forest, trips in invalid carriages and chaises (freely provided for the use of the cripples by friends), short stays at the seaside, Christmas-tree treat to 19,500 children, lantern Bible talks, and many other agencies of loving and self-sacrificing labour for the little ones. Some intensely interesting reminiscences of Mr. Boyer's early days in this country, from 1888 onwards, were furnished by himself in his statement as superintendent. The secretary had previously informed the gathering that Mr. Boyer was personally known to 30,000 children and 400 cripples in the East-end districts; the chairman had dubbed him the "Slum Children's Prime Minister, Friend, and Fairy Godfather," so that the audience were anxious to hear from his own lips the story of the year's work. In closing, Mr. Boyer expressed his willingness to "be anything to make a child happy," and this is really the secret of his marvellous sway.

Mr. R. C. Morgan expressed his appreciation of the work of Mr. Boyer. The total expenditure for the year had been less than £500. The work could not have been done for £50,000 without a large loving heart, such as Mr. Boyer had; the financial side of the Mission, although very necessary, did not represent its real value. Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall, heartily commended the Mission, and called attention to the Christian character of the work.

With great kindness, and at the sacrifice of important engagements, Madame Antoinette Sterling attended, and stayed throughout the evening. Her sweet singing charmed young and old alike. Once, instead of the expected appearance for a song, the deep tones of Madame Sterling's splendid voice were heard pleading for the little ones. Very affecting was the appearance of one of the cripples to sing a solo. She stood, supported by her crutches, close to the gifted songstress, who just previously had taken her seat amidst loud and well-deserved applause. With an evident nervousness the pinched face of the cripple lighted up to the task—surely never before attempted by her—of facing a thronged audience. But the simple little song of "The pearly gates are opened wide" was very sweetly sung, and the applause was none the less hearty than was that accorded to the accomplished professional, she, too, being among those who rendered the heartiest acclamation.

What sights there were all around! On the floor of the hall were the cripples' carriages, and every now and again the eye would light upon lameness or blindness in some unfortunate child.

Religious Tract Society.

The ninety-fifth anniversary of the Religious Tract Society was celebrated on Friday evening at Exeter Hall. Though the meeting was not crowded, it was very hearty. Rev. Dr. Green, secretary, read an abstract of the report, which, as usual, introduced colossal figures. The Society has already published in 209 languages, dialects, and characters. During the year 583 new publications (151 of them tracts) were issued, the total circulation from the home depôt (including books, tracts, periodicals, and cards) being 47,590,600. From foreign depôts about 20,000,000 publications were issued. The grants made during the year in aid of mission work amounted in the aggregate to £28,654. The Society's exhibit at the World's Fair, which gained a bronze medal, was handed over to Mr. Moody for the library of the Chicago Bible Institute.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost, having in early life passed from the printing office to the editorial chair, spoke with some familiarity on the power of the Press. He enlarged upon its usefulness when applied to good ends, and its mischievous character when in the hands of evil men. The R.T.S., in succession to the strong men of Reformation times, has laid hold of the Press for Christian work, and published tracts which at once prepare the way for the Bible and supplement its use. The speaker eulogised the "Present Day Tracts" and other series intended for studious people. He had been a writer of tracts for twenty years, and had been cheered to learn that God had blessed them.

A story illustrated this. About six years ago, the doctor was travelling to Edinburgh to speak in the Free Assembly Hall, and at Newcastle-on-Tyne a young man entered the railway carriage. He seemed to have something on his heart, and after a time said, "Excuse me if I ask whether you are a Christian." The doctor, instead of answering, drew the young man into conversation on Christian doctrine, greatly to the interest of fellow passengers. The young man added that he was going to Edinburgh to hear an address by Dr. Pentecost, whom he had longed to see since his conversion six years previously, after reading one of his Gospel tracts. In conclusion, still ignorant of the person with whom he had been speaking, he asked the doctor's acceptance of a copy of the tract which had been so signally blessed to himself!

Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot spoke in terms of warm appreciation of the Society's work. A hearty address was also delivered by Sir Douglas Fox, who occupied the chair. When a young man he undertook tract distribution in the Mall in London, and was agreeably surprised by the readiness with which the tracts were received. He told stories of blessing attending tracts distributed in public-houses by London City Mission workers. Some of these tiny books travel long journeys. A tract was given to a barmaid, who read it and gave it to another, who passed it on to a third. The lady manager of the house then received it, and sent it to her aged mother in the country, who in turn enclosed it in a letter to a son in China!

As usual, the proceedings were brightened by melodies sung by a choir of school children under the direction of Mr. J. Frank Proudman.

Miss Weston's Work.

The annual meeting in connection with Miss Weston's admirable work amongst the sailors of the Royal Navy was held at Exeter Hall on the afternoon of Tuesday week. Miss Weston herself presided, and expressed her deep thankfulness at being able to record progress all along the line during the past year. The Navy was ever popular with our countrymen. Although the time was looked forward to when war should be no more, yet in the meantime it was their duty to work for the welfare of those who were engaged in the service of their country.

Miss Weston described the various agencies, such as Temperance Societies, Royal Navy and Christian Union, Royal Navy Scripture Society, and referred in touching language to the loss of the Victoria last summer, and described with a pathos that visibly affected her audience the harrowing scenes of distress she witnessed amongst the bereaved families. More than £3300 had been sent to her from all parts of the country for the immediate relief of the bereaved. Temperance work in the Navy was progressing by leaps and bounds. In every warship there were many temperance members and workers. Last year 4791 temperance pledges were taken at the Sailors' Rests, exclusive of those taken on warships all the world over. Nearly 1000 members of Temperance Committees were on the ships of the Navy. The publications circulated were "Ashore and Afloat," of which 407,803 copies were distributed last year, also 532,000 "Monthly Letters." She described the work in the Rests at Chatham, Devonport, and Portsmouth as rapidly increasing, so that extension of the premises was necessary; and for this expenditure she made an earnest appeal. No less than 123,617 men had slept in the Rests last year, and nearly £13,000 had been taken over the counters, so that the Rests were self-supporting, and showed a balance of £2000 on the year's working.

At the conclusion of this address Messrs. Edmonds and Bennett added a few words of personal testimony to their appreciation of the good work done.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

There was a large gathering on Wednesday last week, at the annual meeting, in Exeter Hall, of the British and Foreign Bible Society. An abstract of the report, circulated through the building, was, as usual, a study in large purposes and gigantic performances. The total issues of the year ending March 31, 1894, in Bibles, Testaments, and single books or groups of books of the Scriptures amounted to 3,664,456, and the number would probably have been much nearer four millions but for some delayed returns. The total receipts amounted to £234,284, which covered the expenditure, and left a balance of £11,437 in favour of the Society.

Lord Harrowby, who occupied the chair, surveyed the year's work in an able address. Referring to Bible women societies at work among the zenanas of the East, he said: A few years ago we decided to help twenty-seven Bible-women's societies. Now we are helping societies that have increased their number by thirty-two, and have employed some 400 of these excellent Bible-women. There are some in India, some in Ceylon, some in Palestine, some in Egypt, some in China, some in the Mauritius, and so on. As a rule—certainly as to colporteurs, and in many cases as to Bible women—these people are not English. Generally we have devoted people of each country. On the subject of translations, the speaker said: An interesting feature about the versions is that we get more and more University men engaged in the mission work abroad, and therefore we get more and more skilled linguistic ability to help in translation work. When you remember that whereas at the beginning of the century the Bible was only in about thirty languages, and that now the Bible Society has been so happy as to have a hand in producing the Scriptures in 320, I think you will agree with me that, with the fresh countries opening up, and the fresh tongues and languages coming before us, we ought rather to quicken our work than to slacken it. His lordship read a letter from six elders of the Uganda Church, to each of whom the Society had sent a well-bound copy of the New Testament. These interesting people said: "The Word of God, which possesses life everlasting—that is, the book, so beautifully bound, which you have sent us. Our friends, in this you have shown us your regard for us, for our Saviour Jesus Christ has made us one with you by the death of the Cross, although we are black. And you have made us understand that we are one brotherhood in the sight of our Lord, and that we shall reign with you, where there will be no distinctions between black people and white, in his kingdom when He shall appear."

The Earl of Winchilsea, in the course of a sympathetic speech, said regarding France: "Perhaps an impression of my own may be interesting to this audience, for it has been my lot to pass many months there of each winter during the last few years. The population of France, and especially the male population—I think that it is a sad fact, but a true one—are becoming more and more divorced from the Church which is the Church of their own country. But at the same time one cannot mix with them, and still less can one endeavour to spread these truths amongst them in any way, however humble, without coming to the conclusion that there is a very great and marked opening for a truly Bible Church in France at the present moment. If that is so, I believe that we owe it, I will not say entirely, but we owe it very much, to the fact that the Bible Society has been spreading abroad the good seed all over the country."

Dr. Pentecost followed with a stirring speech not so much on the Society as on the Book it circulates. He said: To my mind, back of all our religious and philanthropic, and, I may say, of all our civilising, projects and enterprises, lies this one great Book. Take that away, and as a people, as a country, as a nation, as societies in whose breasts there breathes one atom of love to man, they all fall to pieces without an inspiration and without a conviction. After speaking on the authority and inspiration of the Book, the Doctor said: If I wanted to circulate literature that would stimulate scientific and philosophical inquiry, I would even put the Bible in the hands of all nations as the surest guide; for in these last days our best philosophers, metaphysicians, and scientists have come to the conclusion that when Paul announced that magnificent doctrine that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal, Paul was long in advance of the latest researches and conclusions of the best philosophy. We are just now discovering that the last discoveries are but the conclusions which the best intellectual research of the world has compelled men to, and that when they have reached them they have had to open this Book, take off their shoes, and bow themselves in humble acknowledgment to the precedent announcement of the Word of God. In conclusion, Dr. Pentecost said: People killed Him who was the soul of the Book, and He rose again from the dead. They have tried to kill this Book, and it has risen again from the dead; they have imprisoned it, but the angel of God has opened all its prison doors; they have burnt it, but out of the ashes of the fire which burnt it have come new editions. They have relegated it to the back shelves of the past, as Voltaire did a hundred years ago, saying that at the end of his century it would be a literary curiosity, but this century since the days that Voltaire wrote has told us of the numberless millions in which the Bible has been circulated. It is a live Book; it cannot be killed. It has in it the breath of the Spirit of Him who is the Resurrection and the Life.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man, after speaking on the Pope's attitude towards the Bible, at one time forbidding its study, and at another commending it, said: "Every year I live I am more and more deeply impressed with the grandeur of this Society, and, above all, with the grandeur of the Book which it circulates. The grandeur of this Society is that its sole aim is to circulate this blessed Book, and to leave it to the Holy Spirit of God who inspired it to carry it home to the hearts of the people where it is delivered. Of the grandeur of the Book I need not speak. Everything around us is change and flux. Empires change and nations change. Everything around us changes, but the glory of Bible is that it never changes. "The word of the Lord abideth for ever," and this is the word which, through the agency of this Society, is being spread from pole to pole.

Dr. J. G. Paton, the celebrated missionary, in the course of an address which was listened to with rapt attention, said: For the last thirty-six years I have been a member of an auxiliary of this Society, and, if all the auxiliaries of this Society appreciated its labours as thoroughly as that auxiliary, it would have doubled its funds with which to circulate the Word of God, and it would have the sympathy and the prayers of every contributor. When I went to the South Sea Islands, thirty-six years ago, the Bible was not in a single language in that group; and yet, by God's blessing on the efforts of our missionaries, we have now on the New Hebrides group alone the Word of God translated and printed into sixteen different languages, and read by the natives who speak those languages. If I could take those persons who doubt the inspiration of the Bible down to those islands, and let them see the marvellous results that the Word of God has accomplished, they would soon change their minds, and feel that there is a living power in the Word of God that enlightens the human mind, and moves the human heart, and changes the whole tenor of man's life, as nothing else does.

Addresses were also delivered by Sir George Hayter Chubb and Mr. Caleb R. Kemp.

Moravian Missions.

The London Association in aid of the Missions of the "Unitas Fratrum," commonly called Moravians, held its annual meeting in Lower Exeter Hall, on Thursday, Mr. J. H. Buxton presiding.

Rev. W. Wetton Cox, who was heartily welcomed after his long illness, presented a summary of the report, showing that life and progress are evident in every field. The London Association, formed to aid the Moravian missionaries, raised last year £10,502 4s. 11d. Many new fields are opening, extension is needed; the men are not lacking, but the funds to send them are not yet forthcoming. Mention was made of Missions in various parts of the world, while it was added that the two new Missions (East Central Africa and North Queensland), the fresh openings in Central America, Surinam, Alaska, and South Africa, are only some of many immediate needs. The statistics for 1894 are (in round numbers): stations, 150; missionaries, 400; converts, 92,000; schools, 250; scholars, 22,000. Special mention was also made of the Medical Mission Training Fund, which is felt to be of singular importance.

Rev. Henry Lansdell, D.D., said that having visited 170 mission stations in 110 localities connected with eighty different organisations, and carried on by about 400 missionaries, he had some knowledge of the exigencies of missionary life. Among all the missionaries he had thus visited he had been peculiarly impressed with the quiet endurance of the Moravian missionaries and their wives at Leh. In an isolated, barbarous, inhospitable region, these carried on with singular devotion a work in which little encouragement appeared at the time. Both have now laid down their lives for Christ, but their record remains, and Miss Taylor and her party and other labourers will doubtless find their way prepared by these heroic pioneers.

Mr. C. H. Polhill Turner began by testifying to the romance of the story of the Moravians in Tibet. He knew of few episodes in the history of missions to equal the heroism of the labourers at Kyelang, Poo, or Leh, the three Tibetan stations, where Moravians have laid down their lives for Tibet. The speaker passed on to give some account of his own experiences in Chinese Tibet and among the Lamas, some of whom were very kind and, indeed, anxious to hear what he had to say. He closed by asking prayer for the poor dark Tibetans.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence very warmly supported the claims of this Church, whose devoted members are to be found in some of the most bleak and inhospitable climates of the world.

Rev. E. J. Peck (C.M.S.), who has spent fifteen years among the Esquimaux, gave some description of what the Moravians have been honoured to do in Labrador, where there are now some 3000 souls gathered out to Christ who a few years ago were in gross darkness. He passed on to advocate the need for an Arctic Mission to reach wandering Esquimaux in the icy lands beyond Hudson's Bay. He himself has offered to go, a companion has been found, the way has been opened, and he hopes to start in June for Gospel work in the Polar regions, operating from Cumberland Sound as a centre.

Dr. Grenfell, who last year visited four Moravian stations, and who hopes this year to visit six Moravian missionaries in Labrador, urged the tremendous need for medical missionaries in that land, where scarcely a doctor is to be found.

The London City Mission.

This great home Mission had its assembly on Thursday morning, when Exeter Hall was crowded. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and, after praise and prayer, called upon the secretary.

Rev. T. S. Hutchinson presented an outline of the report, which proved unexpectedly cheering. The number of missionaries employed is now 483, or two less than last year. The total receipts for the Society's general fund during the past year have amounted to £68,621 6s., or £18,023 17s. 3d. in advance of the total receipts in the preceding year. This is a matter for which the committee are deeply thankful to God, as it has enabled them to meet the expenses of the past twelve months, and to start the new financial year with a fair balance in hand. It is, however, entirely due to an increase in the receipts from legacies. Among the difficulties of the work are ignorance, overcrowding, poverty, drink, gambling, and, in a lesser degree, scepticism. The L.C.M. gives peculiar prominence to the Word of God, which the missionaries are expected to read in every house and room. Some of the night workers have committed portions of the Scripture to memory in order to repeat these when reading is impossible.

One of the most interesting facts in connection with the circulation of the Holy Scriptures which has come to the notice of the committee during the past year is, that eighteen years ago a Bible was placed by a missionary in an East-end eating-house, which is much frequented by cabinet-makers, bricklayers, and labourers of various kinds. This Bible has been much studied by the customers, and is well thumbed. The missionary himself often takes a meal at this house, and when he sees a man reading the Bible he takes the opportunity of entering into conversation with him, and commenting on the passage. The result has been that the missionary is able to speak of upwards of one hundred men who owe their conversion, in great measure, to these studies of the Word of God. Special missionaries are appointed to look after particular classes of men cut off by the circumstances of their calling from ordinary means.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, reviewed briefly the experiences of the year, pointing out that while the balance is on the right side, this is owing to the large amount of legacies rather than to the liberality of living friends. This he regretted, feeling that it could not afford a satisfactory basis for advance. Moreover, the total number of missionaries has fallen off slightly. This is to be deplored, because, after all, it is the living agents whom God blesses; and the "man with the book," going from door to door, and mixing with men of all sorts, is the means God is chiefly pleased to own.

Col. the Hon. Francis Bridgeman, M.P., was thankful that this great work for God was carried on in quiet and steady fashion. For his own part he could bear witness that the work was not in vain. Having seen a good deal of the labours of an ordinary district L.C.M. agent, and of a special missionary, he had come to the deliberate conclusion that, for the evangelisation of what had been called "the lapsed masses," nothing better could be done than to multiply largely the number of the London City Missionaries.

Canon W. J. Edmonds said that the great cities of the world had always presented the hardest of all religious problems. Beginning with Babel, and passing on to Nineveh, Tarshish, Jerusalem, and Rome, he showed that where multitudes are massed together, sin is apt to lift up its head. But this modern metropolis, London, is vaster than any of these, and hence the urgency of its moral needs. We dare not neglect its evangelisation. Some means must be found to bring moral truth before the people, and no better can be found than such missionaries as sent out by the L.C.M.

Rev. J. G. Train, in opening a vigorous speech, in which he carried his audience thoroughly with him, laid much stress on the necessity that agents sent to the homes of the people should speak the language of the people, understand their habits of thought, and even their pursuits and ambitions. He supported the L.C.M. heartily because it sends out men who are in touch with the people, because it keeps in touch with the Bible, and because it is in touch with the churches; it is, he maintained, no antagonist of the churches, but rather a helper of them all.

Mr. John Davis, missionary in Bermondsey, who served in the American Navy during the Civil War, explained in vigorous terms, and in a humorous style, how he gets hold of the people. He himself, it was delightful to hear, was converted during Mr. Moody's mission in Burdett-road in 1875, and now, years after, he is found doing yeoman service in one of the roughest districts in London.

London Jews' Society.

Friends of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews mustered in good force at the eighty-sixth annual meeting, in Exeter Hall, on Friday last, although the meeting was not so large as the friends of the Society would have liked to see. The report told of varied and widespread operations—evangelistic, educational, and medical—at home and abroad. Many of the details were cheering in a high degree, and it was all the more regrettable that commercial depression has adversely affected the funds of the Society. The aggregate income during the year was £35,492, which was £3069 less than the expenditure. The report concluded with the remark that never has the great Jewish question attracted so wide an interest as at the present time; and never has the voice of prophecy received more remarkable fulfilment than in the passing signs of the times.

Sir John Kennaway, the genial chairman, in the course of an address warm with interest, styled the work a signally ambitious one, carried on in the face of many difficulties. The mission is a necessary and blessed one; and, considering the opinion of Jewish missions held in the outside world, he was thankful that so much has been contributed to carry on the work. He made the welcome announcement that a union of Jewish missionaries has been formed in London, not for co-operation in a general way, but for consultation on matters connected with the temporal relief of converts. This will prevent unworthy persons from exploiting the charitable funds of Jewish missions.

Archdeacon Sinclair spoke on Jewish characteristics, and Gospel work among God's ancient people. Though the final vision of the truth concerning Christ must be the work of the Holy Spirit, it is possible to overcome many obstacles which are a veil between Christians and Jews. By far the larger number of Hebrews in Great Britain know nothing about the Christian faith; all they know is that those among whom they pass their time are called Christians, though these are in reality no recommendation of any form of religion at all. More brotherliness and kindliness is required in work among them, and every effort should be made to enlighten them as to the Gospel.

After an address by Mr. R. Williams, an account of work in Damascus was given by Rev. J. Segall, one of the Society's missionaries. The ancient city is a very difficult field of work; the Jews in Syria have adopted many of the customs of the neighbouring peoples, and are very fanatical. The educational department of the mission has secured the allegiance of many of the parents, and has been instrumental of much good among the young people. Two years ago a remarkable movement was developed, and special arrangements had to be made for the instruction of many families in Gospel truth. A system of persecution was, however, brought to bear, and in course of time the whole of the inquirers were starved into submission to the rabbis. Still there are signs of the Spirit of God beginning to move in Damascus, and a strong appeal has been made for a medical missionary. Jews have of late bought large tracts of land in the region, and there are many indications of a largely increased Jewish population.

Rev. Dr. Bruce, of Persia, spoke of solidarity—first as describing God's plan for the world, and then as expressive of Satan's opposition thereto. The blessing promised to the seed of Isaac, and the prophecy concerning the seed of Ishmael, are both finding fulfilment, and the evidences present themselves forcibly to workers in Bible lands. On the black side of the picture we see each branch of the Christian Church anathematising its neighbours; and all of them being detested by Jews and Mohammedans, who, moreover, fiercely hate each other. Mohammed was not only the scourge of the corrupt churches of the East, but in the wonderful providence of God, his followers, as descendants of Ishmael, have trodden down the Holy City, Jerusalem, and persecuted the Jews, the people of the promise. Dr. Bruce regarded these facts in an allegorical light, as set forth in Galatians iv., pointing out, however, that in due time the usurper must be cast out (verses 12-21). In conclusion, he urged Christians also to show solidarity, or unity, in carrying the Gospel to Jews and others in the lands of the East.

Mr. M. Norollah, of Persia, in a brief address, said that there are at least 75,000 Jews in that country. They are open to the Gospel, and one rabbi has allowed Dr. Bruce to preach in his synagogue. He asked that English Sunday-school children should be interested in work among the Jews.

West London Mission.

The conductors of this Mission, we think, will have no reason to regret the change of date for their anniversary from autumn to spring. The meetings of Friday last showed no decrease in attendance or fulness of interest. These occasions are always a rich means of grace to those who enter into the spirit of the great work which is being done for the evangelisation of West London by Mr. Price Hughes and his enthusiastic helpers.

As usual the public proceedings of the day began with a sermon from Rev. Mark Guy Pearse; this time at Craven Chapel, which bids fair to recover its ancient glory in the service of the Mission. Mr. Pearse forged some "golden links of love" from the story of the healing of the centurion's servant, applying the incident to the circumstances and the needs of West London to-day.

After the public luncheon in Craven Chapel lecture room, several of the workers rehearsed the Lord's doings with them during the past winter, and words of encouragement were spoken by Rev. Walford Green, the general treasurer, Mr. R. Cory, Mr. S. D. Waddy, and other friends.

The Sisters' meeting in the afternoon in Craven Chapel was a truly delightful and inspiring occasion. Baroness Langenau had come specially from Vienna to preside. She not only gave the weight of her hearty advocacy to the work of her English sisters among the London poor, but proved the reality of her sympathy by a munificent gift. She handed to Mrs. Price Hughes, to be sold for the benefit of the work, an extremely handsome pearl necklace with ruby brooch set in diamonds, which had been a present to herself from her late husband when Austrian Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg, and which cost him £2000. The Baroness declared, moreover, that if she had been younger she would have deemed it an honour to come to London and work as a "Sister of the people" under Mrs. Price Hughes. We can only hope that some wealthy nobleman will purchase the valuable ornament and so gladden the heart of Mrs. Hughes.

The addresses that followed from four of the Sisters were such as one seldom hears from public platforms. Coming straight from the heart of these devoted workers they found their way to the hearts of the hearers; no one could surely listen to them unmoved. Sister Dorothy spoke of some aspects of social life in poor London that contrast sadly with German city life: the cheerlessness of the homes, the sadness of the people, and the absence of good elevating music. Then she told of the work of the Girls' Club, which is her special department, and which is doing great things for the lasses of the Soho region. Sister Hope was no less pathetic in her description of the blessings that flow from the Crèche, and she pleaded very hard indeed for a house in which she could gather many more of these babies while the mothers were at work. Sister Elsie works among the older children, and visits hard cases throughout the district. Some of her tales of the awful power of the drink, and the struggles that poor women undergo in fighting their way back to sobriety, were as tragic and realistic as any modern novelist could desire. Last of all came Sister Emmeline, the theme of whose eloquently able address was the need for personal sympathy on behalf of the lost ones. Telling of one whom she met, and who often cried to God for help at the street corners while treading the pathway of sin, the Sister said she felt that such prayers were sent back by God to earth, for answer through a human voice and a human hand, which are all that these lost and weary ones can recognise.

During the meeting Mr. Price Hughes, speaking on behalf of his wife, asked for additional promises from ladies to collect a guinea annually for the Sisters' work. Nothing, he said, would so speedily restore his wife's health as this co-operation.

The evening assembly in St. James's Hall was not a whit behind former anniversaries, from any point. Mr. John Cory was in the chair, and backed up his earnest speech with a gift of £200 to the exchequer of the mission. Dr. Joseph Parker failed for some unexplained reason to put in an appearance, but the lack was amply compensated for in the weighty addresses of Dr. Rigg, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. H. P. Hughes, and Mr. Josiah Nix. The marvellous success that God has vouchsafed to the mission during the seven years of its existence, the many and important developments of the work, the memories of past triumphs at St. James's Hall and "old Wardour," the added facilities that have come with the acquisition of Craven Chapel, and the unique importance of such a Gospel centre at the very heart of mighty London's influence, were all dwelt on and pressed home with much power.

On these public field days there is not much opportunity for going into detailed accounts of the work and its many ramifications. The printed report happily supplies all omissions on that score. We wish we could persuade every reader to get a copy and carefully con its inspiring pages. Mr. Josiah Nix, 124, Gower-street, London, will post a copy to anyone for sevenpence, and we do not know of a better investment for the amount.

Church Zenana Missionaries.

Meeting in connection with the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society were held on Friday in St. James's Hall and in the Regent-street Polytechnic. The report stated that during the past year twenty-two new workers had been added to the roll. China received six of the new workers, raising the total number in the Fuh-kien province to twenty-seven. The larger proportion of the reinforcements were distributed among the Indian Missions. Last year's credit balance of £2018 has been absorbed, and the year closes with a deficit of £846.

Sir C. U. Aitchison, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., who presided, opened with a review of the position of India in the mission field. He believed that the winning of India was the prelude to that of China and Central Asia; and if India was to be won at all it must be through the women.

Bishop Stuart spoke of his twenty-two years' experience as a missionary in India. Forty-four years ago, when he went out, the men were accessible, while the women were not. Now the doors are opened to women missionaries. The work described in the report is full of encouragement, and he was thankful to know that increasing attention is being paid to the villages.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites recalled something of what he had seen of zenana missionaries during his recent visit to India. He pictured in graphic terms the condition of women in some great house where there might be perhaps eighty women of various ages and positions, all living and dying in ignorance of Jesus, unless the lady missionaries bring them the Gospel. With regard to the Bible work, he told of a meeting he had with a number of native Bible women, who gave him a variety of interesting particulars as to their experience. He also visited some of the girls' schools, and found many brave young confessors of Christ; as, for example, two little ones, who being threatened with death if they should become Christians, baptized one another in the garden, and went running to the teacher, exclaiming, "We are Christians now; we have baptized each other."

Miss Hessie Newcombe told a remarkable story of the Lord's work in Fuh-kien, where there has of late been a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. In one city, for example, there has this year already been eighty-seven baptisms. In a little leper village near the city, there was not a single Christian when she went out in 1888; now the village is nominally Christian, the little temple has become a Christian church, and more than half the lepers have been baptized. So it has been in many parts of the province. Again and again God has made the wrath of man to praise Him, and where the opposition has been hottest the most blessed work has been done. Several native believers were then described as humble devoted followers of Jesus, inspired many of them with a passion for souls and an intense love of the Bible. Some of these had, in their simple faith, utter devotion, and eagerness to win souls, been an inspiration to the missionaries themselves.

Rev. Rowland Bateman, C.M.S., Punjab, spoke briefly of the women of Northern India, and the remarkable work which the ladies have done.

London Missionary Society.

A series of meetings to celebrate the ninety-ninth anniversary of this Society was commenced on Saturday afternoon by a children's demonstration in Exeter Hall, and the building, which had seen so many crowded audiences through the past few days, was again thronged by a very large attendance, chiefly of young folk. Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith presided, and on the platform were several missionaries and missionaries' wives arrayed in divers coloured and varied costumes, representing the native dress of different lands, and their appearance gave great delight to the large number of young people assembled. Mr. Pye-Smith is the chairman of the Ship Committee of the society, and the maintenance of these vessels had for many years been successfully undertaken by the children. The new steamer now lying in the East India Docks, and being paid for by the children, is the fourth of her name, the John Williams, so called after the martyr of Erromanga. She was built at a cost of £17,000, of which £11,677 has been collected, and is intended entirely for missionary service in the South Pacific.

Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith, in his address, treated his youthful audience as shareholders in the new ship, and said from year to year they would want to know what she was doing. The first address was given by Rev. J. Stonehouse, of Pekin, China, who enlarged on the teaching given by the missionaries to the children of that empire. Mr. Stonehouse was followed by several missionaries from various countries, who gave specimens of the different languages by repeating the alphabet and parts of the multiplication table in different tongues, while Mrs. Owen, from China, and others sang hymns in various languages. Mrs. H. T. Johnson, of Fianarantsoa, Madagascar, gave some particulars of the teaching given to boys and girls there.

All these things immensely delighted the thronged audience of bright-faced boys and girls; but the climax was reached when Captain Turpie, the commander of the new ship, rose to address the children in all the glory of his new uniform. He was greeted with rounds of cheers. He has, it appears, sailed the Pacific for thirty-eight years in connection with the Society's vessels, and with him, on the new steamer, is to be associated Mr. E. C. Hore, formerly of Tanganyika, as chief officer. Captain Turpie gave a spirited address.

Rev. A. N. Johnson announced that over £5000 was still required, and that all those who had a share in the ship—that is, he said, who had subscribed half-a-crown—could visit the vessel freely on Saturday of the present week and on Whit Monday, but for others a small charge would be made to go over the vessel.

The Protestant Alliance.

A series of meetings in connection with this Alliance was held on Monday in Exeter Hall. At the morning Conference General Sir R. Phayre, K.C.B., presided, and in the afternoon General Copland Crawford took the chair. At these gatherings vigorous addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Ayerst, J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D., W. Kennedy Moore, D.D., W. S. Sinden, A. Roger, and others.

In the evening the Large Hall was crowded by an enthusiastic audience. Hon. P. Carteret Hill, D.C.L., who presided, opened the proceedings by dwelling on the disastrous results of the Lincoln Judgment in the rapid spread of Ritualism in the National Church, eating out the spiritual life of the Church and sapping the prosperity of the nation. The only real remedy, he maintained, is the truth of God, the open Bible in the hands of the people.

Rev. R. J. Lynd, D.D., who followed, spoke chiefly of priestly tyranny in Ireland, and of the danger, he dreaded, of the establishment of a Roman Catholic and hostile power on our very coasts. He defined Protestantism as peace with God and war with Rome. Rev. C. H. Wainwright, D.D., began by observing that the presence of so many young men in the audience was a hopeful augury for the future. Passing on, he showed that Rome of to-day is the Rome of the middle ages, and that wherever she gains the ascendant decay sets in and the prosperity of the nation withers away.

Dr. Barnardo announced that in answer to prayer the money required to preserve one of his institutions from very serious danger had been secured. He then proceeded to deal with the enforced attendance of Protestant children at Roman Catholic schools, and showed some of the unhappy results. Rev. James Paton, of Glasgow, deplored that children of Protestants should in certain places be forced to attend Roman Catholic schools, in which, although rate-supported, the conscience clause is systematically evaded. He protested against such schools, manipulated by priests and deliberately intended to undermine the simplicity of faith, being supported by the ratepayers without any corresponding public control. Men have, he said, read history in vain if it has not taught them a hatred of priestcraft and a distrust of all that would come between God and the sinner.

Revs. J. B. Meharry and H. Lindsay Young concluded the proceedings with brief but ringing words.

Native Races and Liquor.

The annual meeting of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee was held last week at Grosvenor House, by permission of the Duke of Westminster. The report states that the working of the Brussels General Act has been satisfactory, but the committee are anxious, on the revision of the Act in 1895, to secure further restrictions. In Basutoland, where in 1887 the liquor traffic had ceased to exist, there has been much drunkenness and smuggling of intoxicating liquors, and the committee have drawn the attention of the Colonial Office to the subject, and urged further restrictions.

Rev. Dr. Paton, the well-known missionary in the New Hebrides, was able to speak happily of the co-operation existing in that quarter among the various Christian bodies in trying to prevent the introduction of "fire-water" amongst the natives. He went at some length into the difficulties experienced in dealing with traders, who readily made promises not to tempt the natives, but easily broke them under pressure of "business necessity." The venerable speaker paid a high tribute to the manner in which the efforts of the missionaries had been approved by successive Presidents of the United States; but he had, on the other hand, to regret the withdrawal of France and Russia from pledges given at the Brussels Conference.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

The annual meeting of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, which was held on Monday evening at the Mission House in Finsbury-square, was a miniature convention of Hebrew Christians as well as an interesting anniversary celebration. The audience included the most honoured missionaries and the steadiest friends of all the Hebrew-Christian societies and agencies, and a common joy was felt at the measure of success which was reported by the secretary of the Mission, Mr. C. T. Lipschytz. Perhaps there is not an experienced Jewish missionary in London who is not known by fellow workers in most of the capitals of Europe; so Mr. Lipschytz was glad to welcome among his audience missionary friends from France and Germany, at present on a brief visit to England.

The report told of encouragement as well as anxiety; the work grows, and the Mission House becomes a centre of increasing usefulness. Women and children are reached as well as men, and stations on the Continent have been opened, with the result that in centres where the Jew meets with little or no public sympathy, efforts are put forth, under the auspices of this Mission, for his enlightenment in Gospel truth. The death of Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, the president of the Mission, was mentioned with regret, and the several speakers during the evening referred in terms of warm affection to that good man and his love for Israel.

Archdeacon Sinclair, the new president, who occupied the chair, spoke of the difficulties of Gospel work among the Jews, and pointed out how influential for good is a genuine Christianity faithfully lived and lovingly taught. Rev. Dr. Adams, late rector of All Saints, Dorchester, followed with an able address, in which he indicated some of the signs that Israel is now entering upon a new chapter of her history. The fig-tree that was cursed is beginning to put forth leaves; therefore summer is nigh (Matt. xxi. 19; xxiv. 32). He recalled services held specially for Jews in London churches, a few years ago, when crowded audiences attested a general willingness to hear something of the Gospel.

The other speakers were: Revs. F. J. Hamilton, D.D., and C. A. Schönberger, who enlarged upon the importance and urgency of Jewish mission work, not overlooking the great fruitfulness that has attended it; Rev. J. W. Pratt, M.A., who spoke from intimate knowledge of several of the converts of the Mission, and testified to the excellence of the influence of Mrs. Lipschytz among the mothers and children; and Rev. M. Nachim, who thanked the Archdeacon of London for the interest he is taking in mission work among the Jews.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

The seventy-sixth annual meeting of this society was held on Monday afternoon in the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor presided. The secretary (Rev. E. W. Matthews) announced that £90 had been received from the young Queen and Queen Regent of the Netherlands for the benefit of seamen, and especially for the work being carried on amongst them at the Port of Rotterdam. The report showed that a real advance had been made at several points of the compass.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal said there was no part of the community which furnished a larger number of Christian representatives than the seafaring class. He suggested that agents should be provided to meet "Jack Tar" upon his landing, as the first persons to greet him were those most likely to have the greatest influence over him. Mr. Richard Cory also spoke. Dr. Pentecost congratulated the Society upon the progress made at home as well as abroad. One characteristic of the present society was that it was a thoroughly catholic one, and, as such, deserved every support.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

The annual meetings of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society were held on Thursday last—one at noon at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., and others in the afternoon and evening at the Society's new headquarters, St. George-street, London Dock, E. At all the gatherings testimony was borne of the spiritual aims and methods of the work, and of the blessing which has attended the varied operations of the Mission.

The noon meeting, presided over by Mr. M. H. Hodder, was of a devotional character, but the few words spoken afforded a good idea of the character of the work. One after another sailors rose and praised God for the Society and its agents. The experience of one had brought him to the point of realising the great need for wisdom and an understanding of God's Word. A coloured man, who for seven years had been a disciple of Christ, rejoiced that believing sailors were watched by unbelieving companions, and prayed that all who name the name of Christ may show His mind and spirit.

One of the Society's missionaries, who has for over twenty years laboured for God among the sailors, and of late has found his sphere in East London, remarked upon the changed disposition of toilers on the deep in relation to the Gospel. Years ago, he said, we used to meet with harshness and indifference; now the truth is listened to with respect, and we are heartily welcomed on board ship. Sometimes meetings that should last only an hour had been extended to three, such is the desire of the men to hear the Gospel, and to ask questions on points of difficulty. The missionary spoke as a hard worker, declaring that, while aware that people must rust through inaction, he had never known a man to wear out through work.

The secretary of the Society, Rev. G. J. Hill, pointed out that the work is forty-eight years old, and never was doing so much as it is to-day. There are altogether eighteen missionaries and agents in the organisation, and nine sailors' rests, including one sailors' home. At most of the rests there are reading rooms, and other accommodation is provided for the use of sailors, free of charge. The mission has twenty-two stations, and besides the paid agents, there are over a hundred voluntary workers. About a hundred meetings are held weekly in different languages. The new headquarters in St. George-street, London Dock, E., is the centre of varied effort, and there is a noon prayer-meeting every day.

Mr. George Williams presided over the evening meeting, which was addressed by Mr. J. W. Benn, M.P., General Sibthorp, Rev. J. G. Train, Messrs. H. W. Maynard, W. H. Seagram, and other friends.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The first public session of the Union Spring meetings was held in the City Temple on Tuesday morning, when a very large company gathered to hear the presidential address of Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich. He took for his topic "The Secularisation of the Pulpit"—meaning by that "the process of deterioration, often of slow and silent deterioration, which takes place in preaching, when topics of temporal and material, or even intellectual, interest, are allowed to usurp the place in the sermon which ought to be given to those solemn and eternal verities which Christ has commissioned his ministers to proclaim."

After magnifying the place and the power of the pulpit in the Nonconformist Churches, Dr. Barrett pointed out how the prominence now given to social and material questions may be a source of danger to the pulpit. Admitting that the Gospel of the Kingdom is a thing all-embracing in its scope, and that there are many crying social ills that need to be swept away, he yet contended that the great work of the Christian preacher is not so much "to save the body from suffering as to save the soul from sin." "The brotherhood of humanity will never be reached until all men realise that they are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "The love of man is always the child of the love of God, and philanthropy and social reform are never sure of their own permanence save as they are built on the Cross of Christ."

Another pulpit peril on which Dr. Barrett enlarged was the substitution of questions that relate to the literature, the poetry, or even the ethics of revelation for that which lies at its heart—the doctrines of grace and redemption. On these points some very fine and telling things were said, but space forbids more than a single quotation:—

"I am the last man, I hope, to grudge or to deny to the intellect its own rightful province in the ministry of the Gospel; but it is rarely, if ever, that the intellect quickens faith in a doubting soul. It is what we believe ourselves, the vision we have seen of God, the touch we have felt of the wounded hands, 'the truth as it is in Jesus,' the strange, solemn accent that comes to a man when he can say, 'This, then, is the message we have heard of Him, and declare unto you:' it is these things which give the words of the preacher all their power and charm for the waiting heart.

"And what is true of intellectual and argumentative sermons is equally true of ethical preaching. To say that ethical preaching is not Gospel preaching is to have a narrow conception of what the Gospel really means, and to forget the nobleness and loftiness of the ideals of conduct Christ holds up for all who are his, and the large place assigned to morality in the Epistles of the New Testament; but it is also true that ethical preaching may not be Gospel preaching. I may speak much of conduct, but little of Christ; I may preach about morality, but fail to root it in the Cross; I may be eloquent on the virtues of the Divine life, but strangely silent on the life itself. The morality of the Gospel is large and pure, but all its sweetest flowers and most precious fruits are fed by the springs which flow from the Cross of Christ.

"It comes to this, that the permanent power of any man's ministry is far more in the message that is preached than in the messenger who preaches it. I do not forget how much depends on the man—but, after all, the message is the chief thing, and we messengers are only of any value as we faithfully deliver the message entrusted to us. It is the Word of the Lord, not the word of the man, which constitutes all the power of, and gives all his authority to, the prophet of God."

The last point considered was the danger that comes from a lowering, from any cause or causes, of the spiritual life of the preacher himself. "When this spiritual deterioration takes place in any man it will be sure to show itself in his ministry. No man can for long preach sermons which are much better than himself. The water will not rise above the lower levels from which it now springs, and though there may be times when, under the stimulus of a large audience and of the physical excitement of preaching, the old fire seems to be burning in his heart, yet even then, if all were known, it would be seen that his heart was only like a lens that even at the moment of setting other things on fire remained itself unmelted and cold."

There is only one real safeguard, that of daily fellowship with God; added to that there is the value of directly spiritual work in helping to maintain and refresh the preacher's own spiritual life. "I know nothing that brings us so near to God as the effort to bring others to God, and one such faithful act of service will more than compensate in its influence on our own hearts for all the weary hours we are compelled to spend in the dry and monotonous details of other work, and will lend to our more public ministry a fulness of spiritual power which will often give to the simplest sermon and the most familiar words a strange spell over the hearts of men."

At the business meeting of the Union on Monday Rev. Urijah Thomas, of Bristol, was elected chairman for the next year. It was hoped that Dr. Griffith John, of China, might have been eligible for the post, but we suppose that circumstances have prevented.

OUR FOREIGN MAIL.

The extra pressure on our space through the reports of the spring anniversaries necessitates brevity in other directions. We give the substance of a number of letters that have reached us from various parts of the mission field.

AFRICA.

Rev. Walter Searle, of the South Africa General Mission, writes from 130, Longmarket-street, Cape Town, addressing a cordial invitation to any Christian missionaries who may be leaving England for any part of South Africa to call at the Mission Home, 48, Loop-street, Cape Town, and share the hospitality his Mission may be able to accord them on their way to their respective stations. The South Africa General Mission, being undenominational in its principles and practice, is ready to assist all churches and societies in carrying on the work of God in the "Dark Continent."

COLOMBO.

Mr. J. S. Corlett, of the Wesleyan Mission, Colombo, Ceylon, appeals on behalf of a new scheme for working amongst soldiers and sailors in Colombo. It is one of the most important ports in the East, while the Fort of Colombo is the chief military station in Ceylon. The mission has taken a building which will be utilised as a combined Soldiers' and Sailors' Home; and to provide sleeping accommodation for sailors ashore. Mr. Corlett asks for papers, magazines, and good and interesting books, as well as money help in meeting the initial expenses.

SYRIA.

Mr. D. Oliver, writing from Beyrout, speaks with thankfulness of the work which is bravely sustained there, amid many difficulties, by Miss Taylor, of St. George's Moslem School. He wishes to correct the erroneous idea that Miss Taylor's work is identical with the British Syrian schools. They are distinct missions. Miss Taylor's work is entirely among the Moslems and Druzes. She is not connected with any society, and receives the freewill offerings of her fellow-Christians. The secretary of the Mission in this country is Mr. W. Ferguson, Kinmundy House, Mintlaw, Aberdeenshire.

Miss P. A. Fry, of Bristol, writes from Brumana: "We have been much interested in seeing some of the mission work going on in this Bible land. A ride on horseback of four hours from Jerusalem over a very rough stony road brought us to Ramallah, where American Friends have a training home for girls, a day school, dispensary, and much useful work. Here at Brumana, on Mount Lebanon, 2,500 feet high, under the care of English Friends, is a home for boys, another for girls, a hospital and dispensary, day schools, and other evangelistic work, which is growing. In some of the villages branches have been begun. The missionaries are much encouraged, for their labour in the Lord's vineyard is richly blessed. The influence of Bible teaching is reaching many, and raising the tone of these villages, socially, morally, and spiritually."

INDIA.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, writing to endorse Mr. Alexander's remarks on the drink question in India, says that while the American missionaries in that country are total abstainers to a man, such is not the case with British missionaries. The natives, he says, who drink for the express purpose of intoxication, naturally think that non-abstaining missionaries do the same, and this alone ought to induce all missionaries to practise abstinence. Mr. Evans appeals to the officers of Missionary Societies to make total abstinence a sine quâ non of acceptance for the foreign field, and thus remove a sad stumbling-block to the progress of the Gospel in India.

Rev. W. E. Cooper, of Mungoli, Central Provinces, writes of interesting work in many villages and bazaars, extending over an area of fifty miles by twenty. Books and tracts have been circulated freely.

Rev. G. K. Gilder, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, Hyderabad, writing from Sironcha, Central Provinces, refers to an aboriginal people known as the Kois, speaking the Telegu language, among whom his mission has commenced an interesting work. The Kois are a simple, manly, industrious, hardy race, presenting a promising field for Christian effort. The headquarters of the work have been established at Sironcha, and it is purposed to open up school, medical, industrial, and evangelistic work both among the Telegu and the Koi population. Funds are urgently needed for an orphanage, for a training school, and for the support of a dozen native helpers.

Captain Barlow, of the Bethel Santhal Mission, writing from the "Bethesda" station, reports work in about eighty villages where the Gospel was proclaimed and literature distributed in three languages. A magic-lantern was found a very helpful auxiliary for evening meetings in the open air. There is much sickness, says Mr. Barlow, among the Santhals this year, and the homœopathic medicines were in great request.

Mr. Ira A. Richards, of the Kolar Mission, wishes it to be understood that the work of this mission is now practically in two departments—the industro-educational and the evangelistic. Friends who contribute should specify which branch of the work they desire to help. The Gospel is preached in villages and at fairs, and every effort is made to influence and elevate the people.

CHINA.

Mr. J. M. Allardyce, of the L.M.S., West City, Peking, pays a remarkable tribute to the value of Mr. W. M. Murray's system for teaching the blind to read, as adapted to those who can see, but who are unable to give the long time needed to learn the ordinary Chinese characters. The experiment was tried in a country-women's class, a blind girl from Mr. Murray's school acting as teacher. At the end of two months a woman who was obliged to go to her home could read anything in the New Testament presented to her, and could also write correctly. A month later the whole class was examined, with the most satisfactory results. The Bible-woman, adds Mr. Allardyce, was able to read and write the system at the end of a week, studying only in her spare time. Mrs. Allardyce also learnt the system, so that she can correspond with the women of her class after they had left. This method, which can enable ignorant countrywomen to read the Scriptures with ease and fluency at the end of three months, is a great boon to the nation.

Writing from the L.M.S. station at Tientsin, Mr. D. S. Murray tells of fruitful united services as an outcome of the Week of Prayer. The enthusiasm and brotherly love generated by these meetings have eventuated in a united Society of Christian Endeavour, from which much is expected in bringing out the working capacities of the Christians and keeping them active in service. Similar meetings have been held at Lanchow and Pekin.

Miss E. A. Watkins, of the C.I.M., writing from Yang-Chang, speaks of the ravages of the opium habit, and calls on English Christians to help in lessening that terrible scourge. She says:—"We constantly hear of deaths caused in a few hours by opium, and I am pained beyond description by seeing its victims as they pass along the streets."

Mr. W. D. Rudland, of the C.I.M., Tai-Chow, tells of an interesting conference of native Christians, held in the end of February. The discussions were thoroughly practical. One session was specially devoted to the temperance question, and some forty of those present signed the abstinence pledge; as many more signing afterwards at the mission stations. Reports of many open doors for work were made; the great lack is that of workers. Cases of persecution were mentioned, and at the same time a considerable increase in the number of inquirers. At the close of the conference a praise meeting was held, when many gave personal testimony of God's goodness to themselves and his blessing on their work. Mr. Rudland thankfully records the fact that at many of the stations the harvest of a long season of patient sowing is now being reaped.

HINTS TO INQUIRERS.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

At this time of widely-spread religious interest, there are a great many who are asking that question which is as old as human sin: "What must I do to be saved?" To those who honestly desire to be saved from a sinful heart and life into a life worth living, I venture a few frank and friendly hints. No two personal experiences are exactly alike; yet as certain kinds of food and drink are suited to everybody, so there are certain spiritual prescriptions that meet about every case.

1. You say that you are "feeling deeply." About what? If you feel deeply what an enormously wicked thing sin is, and that you are a sinner, then thank God for it. But do not be content with mere feeling. Tears never washed away guilt or saved a soul. The world of woe may contain myriads who are weeping over lost opportunities and wasted lives. Your Bible does not say weep and be saved; it says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and be saved." An ounce of practical faith is worth a ton of mere emotion. To "feel deeply" is well as far as it goes if it is followed by action; but feeling involves one great danger. To sorrow over your sins, and then to stick to your sins, is a grievous wrong to the Holy Spirit, and an equal wrong to yourself. It hardens the heart most terribly. The most difficult persons to reach are those who have sorrowed and sighed, and made good resolutions a hundred times, and yet have never repented of sin or lifted a finger to obey Jesus Christ.

2. The first message with which Christ began his earthly ministry was "Repent!" When the Apostle Peter was dealing with hundreds of awakened souls at Jerusalem he condensed his directions into this short, sharp sentence; "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." Genuine repentance means a vast deal more than grief over sins, or even hatred of them; it means to turn from your sins and abandon your sins, with a full purpose of obedience to Jesus Christ. It signifies both a change of heart towards sin and a change of conduct. The way for a tippler to repent is to break his bottle; for a profane man to repent is to stop swearing; for a dishonest man to repent is to make restitution to those whom he has cheated. I knew of a certain person who was pungently convicted in a revival meeting, and espying a man there whom he had wronged, he called the man out into the vestibule, and humbly asked his pardon for the wrong. That was the first step towards a sound conversion. I emphasise the duty of thorough repentance, because in these days there is not enough made of it. Cheap surface work makes cheap Christians; deep subsoil repentance makes strong, healthy Christians, who will stand wash and wear.

3. Another vital point is unconditional submission to God. General Grant's memorable answer to the commander of a conquered fort was "unconditional surrender"; and that is what your heart must make. Don't attempt to bargain with God. Saul of Tarsus yielded everything when he cried out from the ground, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" An intelligent woman who had been in sore distress for many weeks said to her pastor, "I am done quarrelling with God. I have resolved to submit to Him and serve Him, and to do all the good I can while I live, and then go to hell as I deserve." Her pastor smiled, and quietly replied, "You will find it hard work to get to hell in that way." The honest-hearted woman soon found that her willing submission of her heart to God and her patient readiness to obey Him and do her duty, was bringing her a calm, abiding peace. To know Christ's will, and to do it in Christ's strength, is the very core of true religion. Do not try to bargain for the ready pay of "joy" and "happiness." When the festering rifle ball is extracted, the wounded soldier finds comfort, but not before. When the sin gets out of your heart and Christ gets in, you will obtain real comfort. Paul was not continually begging to be "happy, happy, happy," like some thin, watery Christians nowadays. He bore sharp sufferings cheerfully, and to do Christ's will and to save souls was his joy and crown. Don't try to get to heaven before your time. If I can first get to be holy —i.e., to be healthy in heart, I have no fear but that my Master will give me the full joy of salvation.

4. You may inquire, "Where does faith come in? Must I not believe on the Lord Jesus Christ if I would be saved?" Yes, very true. But saving faith is vastly more than opinion or a devout purpose. It is an act; it is the act of yielding your heart up to the atoning Saviour, the act of joining your poor weak soul to Him as your Redeemer and your Lord. When Christ was on earth He did not say much about "believing"; but He did demand prompt obedience. "Follow Me!" Whoever would not take up his cross and follow their new Master could not be his disciple. Begin then, my friend, to do the first thing that Jesus bids you do. The Holy Spirit, working on your conscience, bids you do a certain thing to please Christ. Do it. At whatever point the Spirit presses you, yield! Obey Jesus Christ! When you honestly take any step either in abandoning a sin or in doing a duty, and do this simply to please Jesus Christ, then conversion has begun. That is the first movement. You have changed masters. To be willing to trust on Christ and to go with Christ even for a single step is the beginning of a Christian life. As for raptures and ecstasies, you will have enough of them when you get to heaven. The smile of conscience and the smile of Christ will be enough. Any loving unselfish deed you can do to please your Saviour is a step into the new life.

5. I have not said anything in these simple plain counsels about prayer. If you are honestly striving to quit sin and to follow Jesus, you will instinctively pray. Real prayer is sincerely asking for what you really want. Unless you do what Jesus commands you, years of prayer will never save your soul. Remember, also my friend, that you will make no headway without the help of the Holy Spirit. He alone can regenerate your heart. He may be striving with you for the last time, and if you drive Him away you are lost! Quench not the Holy Spirit! Every delay is at a terrible risk. Perhaps the loving Saviour in the still small pleading voice of his Spirit may be giving a last final knock at the door of your heart.

Finally, the whole great question of your salvation must be settled between you and your Saviour. Scepticism (if that is your trouble) can only be conquered by trying Jesus Christ for yourself. Go to Him, with your Bible and on your knees. Surrender yourself to Him. One honest hour with Christ is the "inquiry meeting" you need most. No preaching, no talking, can save you; Jesus can. "Whatever He saith unto you, do it!"

SOHO AND ST. GILES' MISSION.

The lease of Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho, having been renewed, it was found necessary to renovate the building, and it has now been made attractive and pleasing with a view to win the poor of that densely crowded neighbourhood to the Gospel services held there. The reopening was signalised by an eight days' mission, and the people were gathered night by night and heard the Gospel with profit and blessing. On Sunday last a series of open-air services were held in the Soho and St. James's districts. Nearly every street was visited between Oxford-street and the Shaftesbury Avenue, and Regent-street to the Charing Cross-road. A large company of singers and preachers formed circles in the streets, so that the people could hear the Gospel in their own homes.

The regular work carried on week by week is varied to suit the spiritual and physical needs of the people. More than 400 poor women attended the mothers' meetings. The Mission has one of the largest Bands of Hope in London, has special missions to sandwichmen, does a good work in the lodging-houses, and a large amount of open-air preaching, visits the sick and dying, had weekly dinners for destitute children during the winter months. The recent expenditure upon the hall, etc., has left the treasurer without a penny, and funds are urgently needed. Mr. W. Harrison's address is 20, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E.

A TRUE MOTHER never lives so little in the present as when by the side of the cradle. Her thoughts follow the imagined future of her child. The old ark never made such voyage as the cradle daily makes.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—At a district meeting of the Soldiers' Christian Association, held at Portsmouth last week, the secretary reported that seventy-six regimental branches had been formed since last July. The most satisfactory feature of the work was that no sooner had branches been formed than they had invariably led to conversions to God in the barrack-room.

BEAUTIFUL NORTHFIELD.

The season is at hand now when many Christian friends in this country will be deciding where they shall spend their yearly holiday. We trust that not a few of them will elect to visit "beautiful Northfield," the home of Mr. Moody, and the centre of so many blessed influences. In an interesting article in The Hermonite for March, Mrs. G. C. Needham expatiates on the four-fold attractions of the place—its natural beauties, its moral atmosphere, its educational advantages, and its religious privileges. We make a brief extract or two:—

"It is most rare to find a locality where there are no drinking saloons, and where no liquor can be bought; where a smoker on the street or campus is a novelty to be ashamed of himself; where the song of praise is far more frequently heard than the oath of profanity; where there is no police force but the voluntary vigilance committee of all the citizens; where one's personal property is perfectly safe, and one may forget to lock his front door and retire in blessed safety. But such are the unexaggerated facts about Northfield, the queenly town of decency and good behaviour.

"'Wisdom is the principal thing. With all thy getting get understanding.' This seems to be the legend that Northfield has engraved upon the lintels of all her dwelling-places. It would be rare to find in all the townships a home where there was not an ambitious student. One may visit other collegiate towns and not necessarily meet its toiling, struggling students. But not so in Northfield. Mr. Moody's schools are in the foreground. The girls of the Northfield Seminary and the boys of the Mount Hermon School ramify everything and everywhere. A heart of leather must that visitor carry who can reside in Northfield one month and not have the emotions and admiration stirred to their depths by contact with these heroic young people. You meet them everywhere; and each meeting is a turn in the kaleidoscope of Providence, giving you a fresh revelation of what self-denial and perseverance truly mean. That young lady whose brilliant scholarship declares her superior and analytical mind, may be found between school hours meekly doing domestic service in some farmer's kitchen. That young man who mows your lawn, grooms your horse, or splits your wood on the holiday Monday, has a big purpose in his heart. No wonder he sings a hymn while he toils. One day, not far distant, the ends of the earth shall hear of him, and nations now in darkness shall revive under the light he shall bear to them; for he is to be a missionary of the cross of Christ; and to this end he is studying and working, working and studying, early and late, to equip himself for this grand intention. For Mr. Moody has removed many barriers hitherto considered insurmountable, and made it possible for any who are conscientious and persevering to acquire an education.

"And they who ask the secret of Mr. Moody's influence and God-given favour in the eyes of the Christian world will do well to find their answer, not by watching the public platform and the evangelistic campaign, but by turning aside to quiet Northfield, and there observing the methods of the three great schools—Mount Hermon, the Seminary, and the Women's Training School—which he, in the providence of God, has been raised up to establish.

"The brief interims between last year's three convocations were filled with Bible study. The church, the hotel, the grove, the famous Round Top, were utilised for daily meeting places. It was no longer called 'Convention month'; it was 'Convention summer.' In the coming season as much may be expected, and as much more as there is any margin for. July and August, however, may be guaranteed as prime months for the more definitely programmed conventions. Let those who would believe come up and see. Let those who would have their spirits refreshed come away from the clatter of the cities to the silence of Northfield. Let those who would seek a channel for their unused moneys, who are now laying by legacies for Antichrist, come up and see how well it pays to put the earnings of stewardship to the use of young men and women of character and consecration. Let those who would have a baptism of the Spirit come where the showers are falling and the raindrops are making hearts to blossom as the rose."

IF WE DENY OURSELVES for our children, we must expect that they also should do the same for us.

Letter to the Editor.

DR. BARNARDO'S VILLAGE HOMES.

Dear Sir,—I wish to ask all your readers to join me in a note of devout and hearty thanks to God for his recent great goodness to his own work in my hands.

As you are aware, that work has lately been threatened by a grave disaster; nothing less serious than the loss of a considerable portion of the premises used and required by the Girls' Village Home at Ilford, and the acquisition of the same by a Roman Catholic sisterhood. When the danger was discovered much earnest and united prayer was made on our behalf, and a statement of the case was also sent out to all our donors and set forth in the columns of The Christian. Now, I rejoice to be able to announce that not only has the whole amount needed for the purchase of the threatened property been received in gifts or promises, but enough has come in to enable me further to make good all dilapidations and to effect the needful repairs prior to our taking over permanent possession. The actual transfer of the property has not yet been accomplished; there are still some difficulties in the way, but I think I may say that these are of an almost technical character, and that ere long I hope to be able to announce that the whole property has been actually acquired and vested in the trustees of the institution, who already hold the earlier portions for the benefit and purposes of the charity.

Within the last few days certain organs of the Roman Catholic Press have given currency to an announcement that no religious body connected with the Roman Catholic Church had ever contemplated the purchase which I stated was imminent! I am not concerned to explain matters to The Tablet, or even to Truth, which appears to have adopted this announcement as indisputable. Suffice it to say, that if I had failed in my appeal we would have heard a very different story! Because, however, I was providentially able to expose the intrigue, and to defeat its aims by obtaining the money in sufficiently good time to prevent the sale of the land to my rivals, I am now denounced as "an unscrupulous proselytiser" and a "truculent philanthropist," who appeals to the "very lowest form of sectarian bigotry." I am further a "belligerent Protestant," and as to "the plot" itself, it only exists in my "excited imagination." Let those think so who will. I, however, who know the facts, am sufficiently persuaded that the averted danger was no "bogey," and that had but a few days' delay occurred, the whole work of years would have been imperilled. As it is, I am content to know and feel increasingly that our work for the children is in our Father's loving hands, and that "no weapon formed against it will prosper."

May I offer my sincere and hearty thanks to all those who, by prayer, good wishes, kind letters, or gifts, have helped to lift from my shoulders one of my heaviest burdens? Thos. J. Barnardo.

THE CORK OPEN-AIR MISSION.

Last Sunday, for the first time since street preaching was begun six months ago, a man was arrested for assaulting the preachers. Mr. Williams and his party took up their position at Sutton's-corner and began to sing, whereupon a large crowd collected. Immediately a detective sounded a bugle for the police. Fully three minutes elapsed before the police got to the scene, and no blow was struck until the mob saw them coming. Then half-a-dozen men rushed at the preachers and struck them in the face with their fists. County-inspector Gibbins scattered the mob before him until he reached the missionaries, and then he arrested a man of powerful build named Gargan, whom he caught in the act of striking one of the evangelists. Gargan was taken to the Bridewell, and the police escorted the preachers to their Queen-street-hall. The Marina meeting was noisy, but the police successfully protected the preachers, among whom were a good number of ladies.

Mr. George Williams, organising secretary of the Open-air missions, writes to the Cork papers indignantly denying the charge made against him by Mr. John Morley in the House of Commons, that he had had several physical encounters with the police, and that he had violently resisted them. "The Holy Scriptures," he says, "forbid me, admiration for the Royal Irish Constabulary restrains me, and bodily infirmity hinders me from so doing." At the close of the street preaching the police found it necessary to escort a Jew who was mistaken for a preacher to the Jewish quarter of the city. No sooner had the police turned their backs than the mob attacked the houses of Jews, smashed the windows, and looted a Jew's shop. A scene of much violence and disorder prevailed for a considerable time.—Times.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The annual meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was held in the Examination Schools last week, when the Duke of Marlborough presided, and able speeches were made by the Dean of Christ Church and Mr. Waugh. The Society's agent in Oxford is doing excellent work, and the Oxford branch is strong and well supported.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) continues to have large attendances at his Sunday evening Greek Testament readings, which is a very encouraging sign in the summer time. The subject is Romans xiv. and xv.

Oxford now has two vigorous P.S.A. meetings. The younger one (at Cowley Road Church) last week had a special meeting, when Mr. J. Crofton Rainey gave an address on "Christian Character." Mr. Rainey is presiding at present over the P.S.A. at the Y.M.C.A., in the temporary absence of the President, Mr. R. Souttar. Mr. Rainey's residence near Oxford gives him an opportunity of services in the city, which are very acceptable to various workers.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence has paid a very welcome visit to us, addressing several meetings of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. On Monday he spoke at Mr. Rice's house, giving an account of Keswick, and urging all who could to go to the convention.

Mr. Montague Beauchamp, of the China Inland Mission, gave the address at the Missionary Union last week. His account of his conversion and call to the mission field, together with his work in China, made a deep impression on the men present.

CAMBRIDGE.

The seventy-sixth anniversary of the University, Town and County Branch of the Church Missionary Society has been held upon the days between May 3 and May 7. Meetings for prayer were held in the Henry Martyn Hall on Thursday and Friday; a Children's Drawing-room Meeting at Holy Trinity Vicarage on Saturday, an address being given by Dr. Bruce, missionary in Persia; while in the evening a social gathering was held at Ridley Hall of the members of the Cambridge Missionary Union. This gathering, composed solely of University men, was addressed by Bishop Stuart, late of Waiapu, New Zealand, who is hoping shortly to proceed as a missionary to Persia. On Sunday evening a meeting in connection with the Cambridge Mission to Delhi was held in the Divinity School, presided over by Professor Stanton. An address was given by the Bishop of Lahore.

A couple of striking sermons were preached on Sunday in the Downing-street Presbyterian Church by Rev. John Watson, of Liverpool. In the morning the subject was, "A Plea for the Study of the Bible," and in the evening, "Jesus Christ and Democracy." These sermons were of uncommon power, freshness of treatment, and breadth of sympathy.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Dundee Advertiser is giving a series of interesting sketches of the work of Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes of Scotland.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of the Free East Church, Aberdeen, has accepted the call to the Presbyterian Church, Notting Hill, London. His departure for the South will be a distinct loss to the Granite City.

Helensburgh has lost a noble citizen by the death of Mr. McGregor, of Bonnington, who actively interested himself in every scheme that could promote the public welfare, and was for many years chairman of the Infirmary Committee.

At a Salvation Army Sale of Work, which was held for five days in the Temperance Hall, Kilmarnock, Provost McLelland said he considered it was only his duty, as Chief Magistrate, to assist the Salvation Army, because he believed the good work which it did had the effect of lightening the duties of the magistrates.

On Saturday the most recent addition to the Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir was formally opened by Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, in presence of fully 3000 persons. The new home is called the "Sabbath-school Home," from the fact that the £1300 necessary for its erection was subscribed by Sabbath-school children and teachers.

In connection with the Mizpah Band, Glasgow, a conference on the spiritual life was held on Saturday last in the Tent Hall, off Saltmarket. The speakers were Dr. Elder Cumming, Mr. John Anderson, Mr. W. D. Dunn, and Mr. P. W. Hughes. There were many Christian workers present, and the proceedings were solemnizing and stimulating.

The proceedings at the annual meetings of the Congregational Union of Scotland, held this year in Edinburgh, were exceptionally interesting, because of the report on union with the Evangelical Union Church. It was unanimously agreed that such a union was desirable, and the scheme was sent down for approval to the separate congregations. There is every likelihood that this union will be speedily consummated. At the close of the meetings, a conference was held, at which Rev. James Stark, Aberdeen, read an able paper on "Spirituality, the Antidote of Restlessness in the Church." Rev. W. S. Thomson also read a paper on "Some of the Conditions of Spirituality in the Church."

A remarkable temperance revival has been experienced at Helmsdale, Sutherlandshire. So many of the villagers—among them the worst drinkers in the place—are joining the ranks of the teetotallers that the publicans are losing much of their trade. One public-house in particular which used to be crowded on Saturday night is now practically deserted. A movement was started to have all the public-houses closed during the fishing season, and so enthusiastically was the petition received by the people that it obtained over 500 signatures. The justices so far agreed to the wishes of the people that they ordered the public-houses to close at 9 o'clock all the year round, and at 6 o'clock on Saturdays during the fishing season.

IRISH NOTES.

The Irish Church Conference is to be held in Cork in September next.

Nine eligible young men are offering themselves for the Methodist ministry in Ireland at present.

A meeting to protest against the spread of Ritualism in Ireland was held last week in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

Rev. R. W. C. Graham, Baptist missionary on the Congo, has finished his deputation tour in the South of Ireland by preaching twice to large and interested congregations in Waterford Baptist Church.

A Methodist new church was opened at Balmoral, Belfast, last Friday, by Rev. T. G. Selby, of Liverpool. This is the third Methodist church which has been opened in Belfast within the last six months.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN BIRMINGHAM.

Mrs. Baeyertz has just concluded a successful series of meetings at Birmingham, in connection with the Mount Zion Baptist Chapel. Large preparations were made by earnest workers, who, by personal solicitation, or distributed handbills, invited many thousands of the neighbouring inhabitants to attend the meetings. From the first service on Sunday afternoon, April 8, to that on Tuesday evening, April 24, increasing congregations gathered, till on the last Sunday evening, and at the holiness meeting on Tuesday, from 1800 to 2000 persons were present. The subject of each address was announced beforehand, and the people listened with close attention to the unfolding of God's Word as declared by this honoured evangelist. After each service, excepting the last, anxious hearers flocked into the inquiry room, until more than 700 names were taken of those who had professed to receive Christ, or were seeking salvation.

Some very striking presentations of truth were given, especially that of the Jews' Passover, present, past, and applied to Christian life. In the inquiry room, Mrs. Baeyertz set forth, with clear and forcible emphasis, the actual promises of God on which the seekers and converts could rest, and each one was furnished with a copy of the New Testament to verify the quotation from the printed page. The afternoon Bible readings for believers were held in the Y.M.C.A. Assembly Rooms, and here also the attendance increased till the room was full. Numbers spoke of the instruction and blessing they had received through these quiet afternoon gatherings. The holiness meeting on the last day of the Mission was a memorable occasion. Admission was by ticket, and many representatives of other churches were found amongst the audience. About 350 of those who had attended the inquiry room responded to the pastor's personal invitation to meet Mrs. Baeyertz on Thursday, last, when a very interesting meeting was held, and many testified to the blessing they had received at the services, and told of their confidence that their sins were forgiven.

Among the children of the members the Word was very effective, and it was pleasing and delightful to see them confessing Jesus. During the coming months and years this church and other churches in Birmingham will, no doubt, be considerably augmented by those who have been thus taught of God.

Walter Hackney, Pastor.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Twenty-six new societies were registered last week, representing nine different denominations.

The Grays Society commenced about six months ago, with a membership of thirty; it now numbers eighty members.

About one hundred persons assembled in the Baptist Sunday School, Golborne-street, Warrington, at the first anniversary meeting of the C.E. Society.

At a social evening of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church Society, Tunbridge Wells, lately held, addresses were delivered by Revs. G. W. Cowper Smith, Arthur Pringle, and Mr. S. E. Haward.

A junior society has been started by the Wellhouse (Moravian) C.E. at Mirfield. Over thirty between the ages of seven and fourteen are already enrolled as members. A "Lookout" "Prayer Meeting" and "Sunshine Committee" are at work.

The first anniversary of the Y.P.S.C.E. at Christchurch, Hants, was held last week, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding in the afternoon, and General Ward in the evening. The Society is the outcome of a veritable revival, during which Mr. George Clarke had been the means of blessing to many, and he had organised it not in connection with the different Churches, but one Society for the whole town.

At the fifth quarterly meeting of the Three Counties Union, held at Hemel Hempstead on May 1, four new societies—Biggleswade, Ampthill, Fenny Stratford, Toddington—were received. Papers on "Junior Societies," "An Ideal Consecration Meeting," "The Responsibility of Associate and Honorary Members," "The C.E. and its Relation to Foreign Missions," were read. A public tea was followed by a united consecration service.

The National C.E. Convention of Whit Monday and Tuesday, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, promises to be a large and successful gathering. An introductory meeting will be held on Saturday evening at the Walworth-road Chapel, and on Sunday special sermons will be preached in sixty-four chapels in and near London. The Convention will commence on Monday morning at 9 a.m., and continue throughout the day. There will be sessions on Tuesday morning and evening, while several denominational rallies will be held in the afternoon.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., presided at the opening of a sale of work held for the West Norwood and Tulse-hill Branch, 399, Norwood-road.

At East Dulwich, the Boarding House and Institute was removed some little time back to more comfortable quarters, having every convenience for visitors. The Home, the Bible meetings, and the Employment Agency have proved useful to many. The Institute is at 4, Primrose Villas, Overhill-road, S.E.

A large amount of excellent work is being carried on at the Cambridge Institute, 463, Holloway-road. Since the Institute was started eleven years ago, 1066 members have been enrolled. There are 232 members, sixty-one having joined during the past year. The Bible-classes are highly valued. Music lessons, drawing and singing classes, home and foreign missionary working parties have been conducted.

The Westbourne Home at 49, Porchester-road, has been increasingly successful. The report states that during the year 291 young women have availed themselves of its friendly shelter, an increase of ninety-six on the previous year. The letters of those who have lived in the Home testify to lasting gratitude for its benefits. Bible-classes and other useful work are carried on. Miss Herring is Resident Superintendent.

The report for 1893 of the Convalescent Sick-aid and Holiday Department gives touching instances of girls who have been helped. "Days in the Country" have brightened the lives of some 900 tired workers. The report says: "Whilst gratefully acknowledging the faithful support of those who subscribe annually to our fund, we wish very earnestly that many others who have all and to spare might be aroused to practical sympathy with our working girls, and experience the joy of brightening those lives so much less favoured than their own." Mrs. Smurthwaite, 107, Upton-terrace, S.W., is the hon. secretary.

The Central Institute, 316, Regent-street, has issued a "Record for 1893." On Monday and Tuesday evenings there are a gymnasium class, choral class numbering forty or fifty, cookery and nursing classes, and a girls' "At Home." Occasionally on Tuesday social evenings are held on a large scale. Wednesday, evangelistic services are held; Thursday, Bible study; and Friday, missionary working party. The Sunday Bible-class numbers from 120 to 150. The membership is now 811, of which 293 have joined during the past year. Many of the members have been organised into voluntary bands for helping forward the work of the Institute. Adjoining the Institute are the Welbeck Home and Restaurant and a Servants' Home. Honorary Superintendent, Miss Wingate; Resident Superintendent, Miss Willmot.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE APPROACHING JUBILEE.

This event, which falls due to the day on Wednesday, June 6, promises to be full of interest. It has been looked forward to by Association workers in all lands with happy expectancy. Already some of the delegates are in our midst and others are arriving from day to day. It is expected that fully two thousand will be present on the opening day of the Thirteenth Triennial Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations throughout the world—with which the Jubilee celebration is associated.

Large delegations are expected from the United States, from Germany, and from Sweden; and smaller bodies from seventeen different nationalities. The Jubilee doxology in the Conference hymn-book, prepared for the occasion, is printed in twenty different languages.

An interesting feature in the Swedish delegation is the presence in their midst of the Upsala University Choir—66 voices—which will not only give brightness to the Conference proceedings, but will also be a pleasing feature in the vast Jubilee gathering in the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening, June 6. With a view to raising funds to assist in Association work in Sweden the choir will also give a concert of Swedish music in the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, on Tuesday afternoon.

On Friday, June 1, the proceedings commence with a special service in Westminster Abbey, when the Bishop of London will preach a special sermon. This will be followed by a reception of delegates at Exeter Hall by the president and council. On Saturday, June 2, the Conference proper will be fitly commenced by three addresses (in English, French, and German respectively) on "The necessity of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the Associations and in their work."

On Sunday morning a special sermon will be preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle to the delegates by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. In the afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., will address the English-speaking delegates and young men generally in Exeter Hall. In the evening a special sermon will be preached in the City Temple by Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D. More than a thousand clergy and ministers in London and throughout the country have promised to preach sermons in connection with the Jubilee.

On Monday the Conference will be continued throughout the day, and in the evening the Lord Mayor and Corporation will welcome the delegates to a conversazione in the Guildhall.

The Conference on Tuesday is brought to a conclusion for the day by a thanksgiving service in St. Paul's Cathedral, a special sermon being preached by the Bishop of Ripon.

On Wednesday, Jubilee Day, Mr. George Williams will preside in the forenoon at a praise and thanksgiving meeting in Exeter Hall. In the afternoon a meeting for testimony and congratulation will be presided over, it is hoped, by Count von Bernstorff. In the evening it is expected that the vast Albert Hall will be filled by the members and friends of the Association. A varied and pleasing programme has been prepared for this occasion. Canon Fleming and Dr. Parker, amongst others, will deliver brief addresses. Madame Antoinette Stirling has kindly consented to sing on this occasion. There will also be an excellent choir, conducted by Mr. William Carter, in addition to the Upsala Students' Choir.

The Conference will be brought to a close on Thursday, June 7, by an excursion to Windsor. Her Majesty the Queen has granted many gracious favours and facilities in the arrangements for the delegates. They will be conveyed to Windsor by special trains on the London and South-Western and Great Western Railways, trains being generously provided by Mr. John Cook (Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son).

Dinner and tea will be served daily (Sunday excepted) in a vast pavilion on a site on the Thames Embankment, kindly lent by the Corporation.

A prettily-designed album of arrangements of the Conference for the use of the delegates is in the press, as is also an Illustrated Jubilee Programme for more public use (sixty illustrations, price sixpence, by post eightpence), published at the office of Association News, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. The proceedings of the Conference will be conducted in English, French, and German by means of interpreters.

There are many former members of Y.M.C.A.'s and friends of their work, whom the National Council have been unable to reach through the post. They would be glad to receive information from these by May 15 of their willingness to co-operate in this movement.

We would again commend this important Conference to our readers as a subject for earnest prayer. The Conference meetings at Exeter Hall (except business meeting on Tuesday afternoon) will be open to the public, as also the services at St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey and the meeting at Albert Hall, all by ticket, to be obtained by letter addressed to the Secretary, Jubilee Council Office, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. Bevan is to speak at the Jubilee anniversary of the Adelaide Association on April 5th.

Mr. W. G. Sprigg, late of the Melbourne Association, has been appointed Secretary of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A.

In Western Australia, where young men are flocking after gold, Mr. Kevern is organising vigorous association work.

In connection with the Glasgow U.Y.M.C.A. a Missionary Union has been formed, the members of which agree to pray, to give, and to do what each can to rouse missionary interest.

Mr. Hugh Matheson presided over the annual meeting of the Hampstead Y.M.C.A., and was supported by Archdeacon Sinclair, Canon Girdlestone, Dr. Newman Hall, and many others. An encouraging report was presented.

The New Brighton Y.M.C.A. and Christian Mission reports that the various meetings and agencies go on well and have been blessed by God to many. Special efforts among lifeboat men and fishermen have proved most encouraging.

Dr. Geo. B. Thompson, who lately sailed for the U.P. Church Mission in Old Calabar, was a member of the Alloa U.Y.M.C.A., and was brought to the Saviour at a series of meetings for the young mainly conducted by members of the Association.

New branches of the Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union have recently been formed at Egham, Dorchester, Reading, and Hackney. Mr. Horace B. Wilson, hon. sec., delivered his lecture on "The Story of our Bible" at Shrewsbury and Manchester during April.

The Sunday afternoon evangelistic services in Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, so long associated with the name of Captain Dawson, and now carried on by the Y.M.C.A., have been brought to a close for the season by a most successful mission conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne.

The report of the Leamington Association shows that the spiritual agencies are kept well to the front. The Sunday Afternoon Bible Class affords opportunity for mutual Bible study. The Monday Evening Devotional Meetings have proved seasons of much power and blessing. A new feature of these meetings is that once a month missions and missionary work are the especial objects of prayer.

The President of the Trinity University, Texas, speaking recently on the relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the Churches, said:—"I well remember the time, and that was twenty-five years ago, when such a thing as personal work was never thought of, and I say emphatically that the Y.M.C.A. has brought this into our churches. We are beginning to awaken to this great need of definite work for young men. The Association is part of the Church because of its loyalty to the Church."

The Kingstown Association reports increased usefulness and blessing. The devotional meetings are well attended, whilst the Bible class has been most profitable. The Evangelistic meetings, as well as special mission services, have been blessed to many young men. Great attention is paid to missionary matters, and a flourishing auxiliary of the Qua Iboe Mission is maintained. The report, which is singularly interesting, may be had of the secretary Mr. S. A. Martin, Y.M.C.A., Kingstown, Ireland.

The quarterly paper of the Scottish National Union of Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Unions says:—"Probably never before has there been manifested amongst our members so deep and widespread an interest in foreign missions as has been shown during the last few months. That interest has revealed itself not only in the desire for missionary intelligence, but in the banding of members together to subscribe certain sums regularly, and to pray for some particular branch of foreign missions. But, better than all, members have offered themselves for the service of Christ in the dark places of the earth. Alongside that awakened interest in the Christianising of the heathen world, there are numerous indications that our Associations are nobly trying to do their part in evangelising 'the masses' at home."

A REPROOF once given should be left to do its work. Silence and the custom of ignoring past misdemeanours have worked wonders in the character and life of more than one child.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. W. T. Stead is said to contemplate an early visit to Australia.

The Bishop of Bedford has, we are glad to hear, returned home in better health and ready for work.

Rev. H. M. Dyke and Mrs. Dyke, of the French Mission in Basutoland, after a brief stay in Europe, have returned to their sphere of labour.

Rev. Thos. Cook has arrived in Australia, and commenced his mission at Perth, W.A. Thence he goes to Adelaide, Melbourne, and some of the other colonies in succession.

Rev. H. B. and Mrs. Macartney reached Melbourne safely on March 6, receiving a very warm welcome from many attached friends, who boarded the s.s. Armand Béhric to greet them.

Miss Gurney, accompanied by Mrs. Walker, so well known in connection with the Christian Police Association, are now at the Antipodes, hoping to organise work among the police of the Australian Colonies.

Rev. H. Hovhannessian, of the Aintab Orphanage, Turkey in Asia, is at present in Scotland, where his work has some warm friends. Communications to him may be addressed, 375, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow.

Rev. Egerton R. Young sails for America, by the Etruria, on Saturday. He expects, however, to return to this country in September, having already made many engagements for the autumn. Communications may be addressed, Mr. T. E. Tydeman, Gutter-lane, London, E.C.

Mr. A. R. Fenn, Madrid.—We regret to learn that this good brother has been for some time in indifferent health. He writes that he is praying to God to raise up someone to take his place so that the work may be vigorously sustained. He reports some interesting special meetings about Easter.

Mr. Thomas Meadows, a City merchant, has left a number of legacies. The Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, the Home for Little Boys, the Sailors' Orphan Girls' School and Home, the Warehousemen, Clerks, and Drapers' Schools, and the British and Foreign Bible Society receive £250 each; while to the Church Pastoral Aid Society a sum of £500 is left.

Mr. Fanstone, who has long laboured in Brazil, has again been over here awakening interest in the needs of that large country. He is about to return, accompanied by three more missionaries, Mr. Joyce, Miss Melville, and Miss Vigor. We understand that a farewell meeting will be held on the 29th inst., in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, at 7 p.m.

Rev. R. W. Dale.—There was much regret at the non-appearance of Dr. Dale at Union Chapel, Islington, on Sunday morning. For many years this pulpit has been occupied on "Missionary Sunday" by Dr. Dale, and he was announced as usual, but his doctor compelled him at the eleventh hour to cancel the engagement. The attack of illness is, we are glad to say, by no means serious.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Peill, who have been home for some time on furlough, are now returning for the third time to Madagascar, where their labours have already proved abundantly fruitful. Mr. Peill spoke at the Central Noon Meeting on Monday, asking prayer for their future service, and giving some details of the work amongst those who, while professedly Christian, are many of them in total ignorance of the Gospel and the power thereof.

The Bishop of Rochester writes: "I have much to be thankful for in the steady progress I am making towards recovery from an illness which might easily, I am told, have had a different issue. But the process of recovery is exceedingly slow. For the greater part of each day I am still a prisoner in bed, and I find that several weeks must elapse, even at the best, before I shall be allowed to undertake any work involving serious physical exertion."

Rev. David Baron starts on Monday for itineration work amongst Jews in Austria Hungary. This will be his ninth missionary tour among the children of Zion, proclaiming that the Saviour has come. Speaking at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting on Monday, he mentioned that there are some 800,000 Jews in the northern part of the Austrian Empire. In Galicia, which is the stronghold of Rabbinical Judaism, he hopes to find many openings from place to place. Mr. Baron would be glad of prayers on his behalf.

THE LOCAL VETO BILL.—About 800 Primitive Methodist ministers havesigned a petition in favour of this Bill.

A MISSIONARY STATION BURNT.—We mentioned in our issue of Aprilthe 9, calamity which had fallen on Dr. and Mrs. Batstone in the burning of their home and whole possessions at Jagdalpur. A few friends are endeavouring to raise a little fund to replace personal losses in the way of clothing, books, medical and surgical appliances, etc. We should be glad to receive and forward any gifts for this purpose.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a most successful mission at Rayne, Essex. Much interest was aroused, and many professed faith in Christ.

Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a nine days' mission at the Blechyndon-street Hall, Notting Hill, at which much blessing was received.

Mr. G. J. Comber has been labouring at Maynard's Green and Heathfield for the last eight or nine weeks. The Lord has greatly blessed the word spoken, both to the unsaved and to the building up of believers.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke began a mission in Johannesburg on April 8, amid many tokens of unusual interest. The opening services were attended by vast audiences, which seemed to be greatly impressed by the fresh and fervid preaching of Mr. McNeill and the admirable song of Mr. Burke.

Messrs. Merton Smith and Ritchie Bell have had a time of wonderful blessing at Bay City, Michigan. The local press speaks in the highest terms of the mission, which extended over three weeks. One paper says a thousand homes have been made blessed by the influence of the words and work of the evangelists.

Ireland.—Evangelistic services extending over a period of three weeks have been held in Cootehill by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Evangelist, and similar meetings have been held at Mountpottinger, Belfast, by Mr. John Brandon and Miss Knox, of Canada. In each case several are believed to have decided for the Saviour.

Castleford.—A ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. C. Knight, was closed by a service of praise on Thursday evening. It had been feared that the long evenings and other circumstances would lessen the attendance, but the services, which were characterised by deep spiritual fervour, were well attended, and it is noteworthy that on every evening visible results were obtained.

Holy Island.—Mr. W. Hall, of Annan, has for the past three weeks been conducting special evangelistic services in the Presbyterian Church, Holy Island. The meetings were largely attended from the start, and the addresses were listened to with the deepest interest. As the result of the mission, many have been brought into the peace of the Gospel, while God's own people have been greatly revived.

Mr. Richard Weaver is suffering from bronchitis, and was unable to fulfil his engagement at Pontymoile. His eldest son, Samuel Weaver, took his place on Sunday, the 29th ult. God blessed the word. The services were continued through the week by several friends. Many testified to having received definite blessing. It is hoped Mr. Weaver will soon be restored and able to fulfil his promise.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding a special mission at St. Louis. The church where meetings have been held is the only one except a Catholic church in that part of the city, where half the population reside. The evening meetings have been largely composed of men, mostly non-church-goers. The experience of the young converts is quite remarkable as they tell what their former lives have been, and how they have been brought to Christ.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, which has been attended with much blessing. Christians have been stimulated by the evangelist's bright and helpful addresses. There has been a real work of grace among the unconverted, and many have professed faith in Christ. Mr. Notman also conducted services at the "Boys' Home," Stepney-causeway, and the "Girls' Village Home," Ilford.

Mr. W. R. Lane held last week a three days' mission in "The Old Welcome," Little Britain, the headquarters of Mrs. Fisher's efforts on behalf of the work girls of the City. Great interest was manifested, large numbers assembled, and real blessing was granted, many seeming aroused to a sense of their need of the Lord Jesus Christ. The workers were greatly cheered to find that some who professed to accept the Saviour at a similar mission, held a year ago by the same evangelist, were now among the most active in seeking to win their companions to Christ.

Bournemouth.—The Sunday afternoon evangelistic services in the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, so long associated with the name of Captain Dawson, and now carried on by the committee of the Y.M.C.A., have been brought to a close for the season by a ten days' mission conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. The afternoon Bible readings were especially appreciated, and the thoughtful expositions of the Word created a growing interest day by day. The evangelistic meetings were fruitful in awakening souls and winning many for the Saviour. At the concluding meeting for praise the new converts were urged to join the Y.M.C.A. or Y.W.C.A. with a view to their being helped on in the Christian life.

Exmouth.—A most successful ten days' mission has been held here by Rev. T. Waugh. Prayer meetings preceded the mission, and an augmented choir, an active band of workers, and much enthusiasm in the members generally, prepared the way. From the first, large congregations showed that the little town was moved. The two men's meetings and the one for women were remarkable, both in numbers and blessing, multitudes filling the chapel, many of whom had never been in it before. Not a few yielded themselves to Christ. Some particularly satisfactory conversions of whole families and of elderly men were among those which gladdened the hearts of friends who were making them the subjects of special prayer.

Mr. J. J. Sims and Mr. W. P. Crombie, from Canada, will commence an eight days' Gospel mission at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, on Sunday next, May 13, continuing till Sunday, the 20th, each week night at eight o'clock, Sundays at seven. Christian workers and friends invited one hour before each service.

OBITUARY.

MR. GEORGE BRIDGE, L.C.M.

The death is announced of Mr. George Bridge, who, as a London City missionary, did for over twenty-seven years most valuable work in the Gray's-inn-road and King's Cross districts. He passed away at his residence in Isledon-road, Holloway, on Thursday evening. He had been suffering for the past two years from creeping paralysis which rendered him speechless and helpless. The funeral took place on Wednesday at Finchley.

BISHOP PELHAM.

Just after we had gone to press with our last issue, we heard with regret of the falling asleep of Dr. Pelham, who for thirty-six years did valuable work in the diocese of Norwich. Ordained in 1834, he was rector of Bergh-Apton for fifteen years, then incumbent of Christ Church, Hampstead, for two years, and rector of Marylebone for three years. In 1857 he was appointed Bishop of Norwich; and never was a Bishop more faithful or devoted to his charge. The diocese contained nearly 1100 churches, and he made it his aim to visit and preach in all. Dr. Pelham was thoroughly a missionary bishop, and he loved the C.M.S. He was a staunch and loyal Evangelical of the old school.

MR. EZEKIEL MARGOLIOUTH.

We learn with sorrow that Mr. Ezekiel Margoliouth, one of the many useful workers of the London Jews Society, has passed away. A native of Russia, he came to England about fifty years ago, and shortly afterwards confessed Christ. He determined to devote his energies to Gospel work among his Jewish brethren, and his service took a variety of forms. For a time he laboured as colporteur; subsequently he engaged in mission work, and revised the Society's tracts and books. He had reached the advanced age of eighty, when he fell asleep a few days ago, without sickness or pain, at Victoria Park. Professor D. S. Margoliouth, of Oxford, the distinguished Orientalist, is a son of this lamented Hebrew Christian.

REV. THOS. MORIARTY, D.D., TRALEE.

The South of Ireland has lost a very remarkable man in the person of Rev. Dr. Moriarty, late rector of Tralee and Dean of Ardfert, who has passed away, aged eighty-two years. Deceased was in early life a Roman Catholic, and was educated for the priesthood, but just before accepting ordination he was asked by a friend to read the New Testament. He consented to do so, and came to the conclusion that Romanism was unscriptural. He joined the Established Church, and founded a school at Ventry, co. Kerry, where Irish-speaking men were trained for the ministry. He was for some time rector of Mill-street, Ballinacourty, and Tralee, and was a most earnest, devoted man of God, and a thoroughly Evangelical minister of the Gospel of Christ. The work which he accomplished in co. Kerry during the last fifty-four years, eternity alone will reveal.

AN UNUSUAL PHASE OF CHRISTIAN ACTIVITY says The Congregationalist, of Boston, U.S., is the quiet efforts in behalf of the Jews carried on by Messrs. Wilkinson and Adler from London. Clarendon Street Baptist Church and Park Street Church have been the scene of impressive meetings while, with the mission hall on Hanover Street as basis of operations, much effective work with individuals is being done. The visit of these brethren from over the sea coincides designedly with the Passover celebration of the Hebrews, and this circumstance offers a favourable avenue of approach to those whom it is sought to reach. An all-day conference of Hebrew-Christian missionaries in different cities is called for the third week in May, at which Mr. Moody, who passed through the city last week on his way to Salem, where he preached on Sunday, is likely to be present.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Humanitarian for May contains a paper on habitual drunkards by Dr. Norman Kerr.

The Corporate Property Committee of the London County Council have resolved to surrender the licence of a public-house near the Blackwall Tunnel.

The Band of Hope Chronicle states that the whole of the £10,000 fund for continuing the school lecture scheme during the next five years has now been promised.

Rev. H. B. Blogg has issued (C.E.T.S.) under the title of "What I saw of the Gothenburg System in Bergen," a pamphlet giving an account of observations on the working of this system.

"Wings," the organ of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, gives in its issue for May a portrait of Mrs. E. W. Brooks, with an outline of her service, also much good and useful temperance matter.

The Duchess of Albany will open an Industrial Exhibition, in connection with the Lambeth Band of Hope Union, in the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell New-road, on Tuesday, 22nd inst.

The thirty-seventh anniversary of the Midland Temperance League has just been celebrated at Redditch with a Band of Hope demonstration, a great public meeting, and fifteen sermons on Sunday.

The report of the London Temperance Hospital shows that 1036 patients were admitted last year, while the out-patients numbered 5104. The new children's ward is doing good work. It is shown that of over 9000 patients actually treated the mortality has been only 6·3 per cent.

Drink is still the cause of more than seven-eighths of all the crime in Ireland. Out of sixty persons brought up last week in the Cork Police-court, over fifty were there as the direct result of drink; out of 160 persons who came during the same period before the Belfast Police-court, 140 were there directly as the result of intemperance.

"Special attention is called to a special jug and bottle bar for children's accommodation." These are the closing words on a handbill issued by a publican in the north of London. So long as it shall remain awful for parents and others to send children with jugs and bottles for intoxicants, this sort of thing will go on without mercy.—Temperance Record.

The Baptist Total Abstinence Association report that the secretary visited last year 134 towns and villages and held 274 meetings, at which 825 pledges were taken. There are eighty-five affiliated societies, and a much larger number of others have been aided. The ministerial membership steadily increases, and with fifty new adherents now numbers 1467, and of 80 students in six of their nine colleges there were only two non-abstainers.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union, which has prosecuted its work with great vigour throughout the year in London and the provinces, holds to-day and to-morrow its annual meetings. This evening, at 7 p.m., the public meeting will take place in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, under the presidency of Mrs. Henry J. Wilson. To-morrow (Friday) a conference will be held at the S.S. Union Lecture Hall, 56, Old Bailey, E.C., when Mrs. E. Crossley will preside, and papers on "Doctor's Orders," by Mrs. Doncaster Sheffield, and "How to abolish Grocers' Licences," by Miss M. E. Docwra, will be read and discussed.

THE B.W.T.A.

THE annual meetings of this now extensive organisation are being held during the present week, the chief of them taking place this (Thursday) evening in Queen's Hall. An all-day meeting in Holborn Town Hall on Tuesday, for prayer and exhortation, was a new and important feature. The hall was crowded for the forenoon gathering, and a spirit of deep devotion was manifest. Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, and other leading friends of the work "for God, and home, and fatherland," were present, and took a share in the proceedings.

One of the morning speakers was Rev. W. R. Powell, who gave a weighty and earnest exhortation, on the need of having a continuously fresh sense of the evil of sin in the sight of God, and of cherishing a deep dependence on his power in combating such evils as intemperance.

Near the close of the first session, the coloured evangelist, Mr. Dickenson (one of the original band of Jubilee singers), touched all hearts by his singing of "Steal away to Jesus." Miss Willard followed with a pathetic petition to God for a greater baptism of the spirit of love and devotion, in seeking to free those who are enslaved by the drink, and bring somewhat of heaven down to earth.

In the after part of the day, Rev. C. G. Moore, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Bramwell Booth, and others took part.

The Book World.

A THEOLOGICAL MANUAL.

THE late Professor David Gracey, of the Pastors' College, exercised a powerful formative influence over a large number of Gospel preachers. Such as was his influence in life, so now is his literary ministry, through the volume edited by his sons, with the title, SIN AND THE UNFOLDING OF SALVATION, being a Three Years' Course of Theological Lectures. (7s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) Though taking account of systems, this is emphatically a Biblical work, and addressed to men in training as evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Holding that without faith it is impossible to benefit man, as it is impossible to please God, Professor Gracey suggests no doubts in these nineteen lectures. After dealing with questions of method and order in theological study, he discusses sin, first in itself, and then as to its relation to law. Depravity supposes an antecedent state of integrity, as sin supposes a former state of uprightness; accordingly, "total depravity" is shown to express the true measure of human corruption. This sad truth does not obscure the rays of "original brightness" that may linger around human deeds: rather it compels us to expect and to acknowledge some traces of faded virtues. After a lucid study, historical and Scriptural, on the imputation of sin, and its contrary, the imputation of righteousness, there is a faithful chapter on "The Outlook of Sinners." Then the Divine Remedy is introduced, salvation being described from various points of view, and analysed in a remarkably instructive manner, first on the basis of the expressions defining it, and then from its marvellous unfolding in prophecy. It is well observed: "Every phase of man's misery is a proof of the need of some system of restoration. Nor is the hope of some kind of rectification quite absent from mankind, though it may be traced to different sources. Dim and uncertain at best, or else most earthly when most definite, this hope is in some form the heritage of the race." In due order comes a grand chapter on the Saviour, followed by others on conflicting views regarding his person and work. To erroneous and faulty doctrines the antidote is forcibly supplied, and there is a powerful statement on the effects of Christ's redemption upon men. Professor Gracey tersely says: "Without a spiritual connection with Christ, of which faith is the conscious sign and proof, no man can claim to be a recipient of the saving benefits of the Cross. That the believer is 'the heir,' I take to be the teaching of Scripture from first to last." It is shown, with abundant Scripture proof, that sin is removed sacrificially, by pardon, by justification, and by sanctification. The work is sound and thoughtful, succinct and comprehensive, and will prove of great service to those who would study theology in the light of Holy Scripture. There is a pleasant introduction by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, also an appreciative preface by Mr. Gracey's successor at the College, Professor McCaig.

THE A.B.C. CHURCH AND CHAPEL DIRECTORY (3d. E. Banks & Sons). This guide to ministers, churches, and chapels in London and the suburbs appears in time for the May meetings. Many will welcome it as a really useful handbook.

THE PLEDGES OF HIS LOVE, a little volume of thoughts on the Holy Communion, by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, B.D., is a devotional and explanatory manual, which, while it is calculated to help all spiritually-minded Christians, will be most highly appreciated by Evangelical members of the Church of England. (1s. Seeley and Co.)

THE TENDERNESS OF CHRIST is a devotional volume of considerable merit, by Bishop Thorold. It contains nine meditations, which are, speaking generally, helpful in substance and choice in style. Some sacramental allusions are objectionable; baptism is styled the sacrament which "initiates the Divine life in man"! The references to judgment will not be approved by those who distinguish the dispensations. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR, edited by Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M.A., proceeds apace. Already over a score volumes have been issued, presenting a prodigious amount of useful matter, expository and homiletical, relating to some of the most important books of Scripture. The latest volume is devoted to LEVITICUS AND NUMBERS, and the seven hundred large pages contain the cream of a theological library. Home and foreign literature has alike been laid under contribution, and the result is a work which cannot but prove of great service to preachers and teachers. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

THE PROTESTANT PRAYER BOOK, edited by Rev. Charles Stirling, M.A., is a revision of the Book of Common Prayer, described on the title page as "amended in accordance with Holy Scripture," and "for the use of the Protestant Church of England, and of other Evangelical bodies." The preface says: "The blots of Popish error have been entirely removed, nor is there left, as the revisers believe, a single phrase upon which the now prevalent Romish and Romanising doctrines and practices can possibly find support." The baptismal service is specifically for believers, and there is a form of dedication for infants. Various other features make this very carefully edited volume one which cannot but interest Christians of all denominations. (1s. C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street, W.C.)

THE PHYSICIAN'S TESTIMONY FOR CHRIST, an address which Sir Andrew Clark, late President of the Royal College of Physicians, delivered in 1890 at the annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, now sees the light for the first time. It made a strong impression when delivered, and should now be useful in dealing with agnostics and other intellectual unbelievers. There is a sympathetic preface by Sir Dyce Duckworth, treasurer of the Royal College of Physicians, who says: "As physicians we are brought so directly in contact with humanity in all its phases, and see so deeply into the hidden realms of its woes and its needs, that we come to know well where true healing is to be found. We are thus able to bear witness to the light in which it is best to live; and we believe, further, that the Christian faith is not only the best one to live by, but the best one to die with." (6d. Christian Evidence Society, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand.)

CLERICAL APPAREL AND BOWING IN THE CREED is a striking and timely booklet by the author of "The Church of England in Canada." (Willard Tract Depository, Toronto.)

A very interesting story is told in a little book bearing the full title, A LONDON BURGLAR, NOW A DEVOTED MISSIONARY, a memoir of the conversion of Albert P. Woodcock, of the Brighton Young Men's Christian Association. (2d. Leominster: The Orphans' Printing Press, Broad-street.)

JEREMIAH AND EZEKIEL. A little work which should prove of special value just now, when members of the Bible and Prayer Union are reading the prophecy of Jeremiah, is THE PROPHECIES OF JEREMIAH AND EZEKIEL ARRANGED FOR READING IN CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER, by E. S. Elliott. It is a carefully-compiled harmony and commentary from Scripture only. (6d. Hazell, Watson, & Viney.)

"VOX DEI," OR ECLIPSE LINE OF TIME. By J. B. Dimbleby. This sixteen-page pamphlet may be the great revelation which its author claims, but we have been totally unable to profit by it. Doubtless the intention is good, but there is neither cogency nor lucidity in the pages, and lack of these qualities cannot be compensated for by a parade of distinctions conferred by an association unknown in the republic of learning. The Hebrew calendar with which the pamphlet concludes gives month-names of which no Jew ever heard as yet. (1s. E. Nister, 28, Paternoster-row.)

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR SAILORS.

MISS R. CHILD, of the Welcome Home, has had it in heart to have a small Convalescent Home, to accommodate a few ailing sailors, where they could get up strength for their next voyage. Many of the men are ill through various causes, and are often discharged by the doctor hardly fit to go to sea, and in such a state the roughness and hard work of the next voyage leave them disabled for life. A short time with care and rest in such a Home would be indeed a great boon and help in spiritual blessing also. Mr. J. E. Mathieson very cordially supports this proposal. We commend it heartily to the loving consideration of our friends.

SUMMER FLOWER MISSION.—We commenced the third year of our weekly flower mission among the very poor and sick of Deptford, New Cross, etc., with our twelfth May morning service of flowers and song, and we invite all friends of the poor to give us their co-operation. In Lower Deptford we have as much extreme poverty as in any part of London. Our mission is entirely unsectarian, and we shall welcome gifts of flowers or plants. Our distribution is made on Saturday in each week, from May 12 to July 21 inclusive; boxes, hampers, and other gifts should be delivered on the Friday night or Saturday morning, addressed to The Flower Mission, 8, Brockley-road, Lewisham High-road, S.E.

UNITED OPEN-AIR GATHERING.—In accordance with the custom of some years past, mission workers in North London connected with the Church of England, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, and Salvation Army, were invited to a United Open-Air Service last Sunday morning at nine a.m. They responded well, and a fine service was held in Palatine-road, Stoke Newington, when addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Johnson, Messrs. W. Noble, C. J. Collins, and others, the singing being led by the Salvation Army band. The workers afterwards separated for their respective fields of labour, quickened by the fellowship with their common Lord and with each other. A thanksgiving service is to follow on Wednesday, May 23, at eight p.m., in the New Primitive Methodist Chapel near Abney Park. Mission workers in our cities and towns would do well to hold such meetings to promote love and good works while preaching the Gospel.

GATHERED GOLD.

The world is wide
In time and tide.
And—God is guide.
Then do not hurry.

That man is blest
Who does his best,
And—leaves the rest.
Then do not worry.
—The late Dr. C. F. Deems.

Multitudes are ready to speak for Christ, or to sacrifice themselves in labouring for his cause. But the utterances are too few that come from sitting at his feet, or leaning on his breast.
The late Professor Milligan.

Sanctified Knowledge saith: "There is an infinite fulness in Christ, the fulness of an ocean." Faith saith: "This is all for me, for He is my husband." Then said Prayer: "If all this be thine, I will go and fetch it for thee." And Thankfulness saith: "I will return praise to God for it."—Matthew Lawrence (1657).

"IT IS HIGH TIME TO AWAKE."
Rom. xiii. 11.

We accomplish nothing while we sleep. If only men could be paid for it, there are some of us would get rich; but it is all the other way. While we sleep weeds grow and cattle stray. Fires break out in the night, and while it is yet dark the thief gathers his harvest. Take out of the world all ills that happen in the night, and the newspapers would not have such tales of woe to tell. Let us awake, then, and put on the beautiful garments which belong to the day.—Thomas Champness.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

Nothing keeps our doctrinal system in such ripe proportion, or gives such real dignity to our spiritual consciousness, or such power to our confession of faith, or such help for deep repose to our inmost, deepest being, amid the cares and bustle of life, as communion with Christ in his Word, where mind and heart, intelligence and devotion, seek Him and find Him together. He has his special secrets for those who are at the pains to come and ask for them. And He not only teaches but comforts. "Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them" (Psa. cxix. 165); and it is because they love Him.—Bishop Thorold.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Do we know the Holy Ghost? The Father is God above us, and for us; the Son is God with us; the Holy Ghost is God in us. As the Spirit of Christ, the glorified Son of Man, He descends into our hearts, and brings to us with quickening and renewing power, the love of the Father and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. Through Him, God works in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do we rely continually in humility and gladness on his help and on his power? Do we enter into the covenant-blessing, that God the Father will dwell in us and take up his abode in our hearts? Do we know that we are anointed, and thus one with Him who is the Christ; or do we not often attempt to know and trust the Father and the Son without the light and strength of the Spirit, by whom alone Divine life is kindled and sustained in the heart of man? The Spirit is Christ's gift and the Father's promise. God's thoughts and works are fulfilled by Him.—Dr. Saphir.

HOUNSLOW HEATH MISSION HALL.—On Wednesday, May 2, the friends from Mortlake and Richmond joined the members of this hall at a farewell meeting to bid "God-speed" to Mr. Turrell, who is giving up business in London, and joining his brother in missionary work in Spain. Addresses of encouragement were given by Messrs. Budd and Bates. Mr. Miller, who has visited the work in Spain, spoke of the need for devoted labourers in that part of the mission field.

POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The seventh annual conference of the Bristol and Western District branches has been held in the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Hall. Colonel Molesworth presided in the afternoon and Mr. Gardner in the evening. Addresses were delivered by several friends, including Revs. W. J. Morgan and J. G. Mantle, Miss Edmonston, Miss Pollock, and Miss Isaacs. At the close four postmen and two messengers professed conversion to God, amongst these was one who for years had been an active Secularist. He paid but little attention to the first few addresses, even remarking to his neighbours that it was "all nonsense," when suddenly the Holy Spirit revealed the truth to him, and he was the first to go forward to declare his wish henceforth to serve Christ. On arriving home he burnt his infidel books, and made known to his acquaintances that he had entered upon a new course of life.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Prebendary Beresford, of Wells, has been seriously ill, and is now ordered away for rest and change.

The Church Pastoral Aid Society reported very satisfactorily on its work generally, but many fresh parishes are pressing for additional help.

To the delight of many evangelical workers, Rev. F. W. Mortimer, of Seaton Carew, has been appointed to Darlington, where he will be warmly welcomed.

Canon M'Cormick will be instituted to St. Augustine's, Highbury, on Thursday next, 17th, and the induction will take place on Saturday, May 19, at 7 p.m.

The Bishop of Mashonaland, who has been invalided home, says it would be simply suicide for him to return to his diocese until after the next rainy season.

Rev. Richard Pringle, who recently resigned his ministry at Shipley with the intention of entering the Church of England, has been accepted by the Bishop of Exeter.

The Missionary Leaves Association had a good meeting last week. Its object, as shown in the report, is to supply all manner of Bibles, books, and material needed by missionaries in distant lands.

The new vicar of St. Crispin's, Southwark Park-road (Rev. J. Wallace), is introducing the new Church of England Hymnal, prepared by Canon Bell and Rev. H. E. Fox, in place of Hymns Ancient and Modern, which he found in use. He has also commenced evening communion, which is largely attended.

Rev. J. F. Kitto has arranged for a course of sermons to be preached in St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the Sundays in May, June, and July, dealing with "Religion in Common Life." The series commenced on Sunday, when Prebendary Shelford preached in the morning on "The Religious and Social Use of Discontent." Amongst the preachers announced are Archdeacons Farrar and Sinclair, the Dean of Bristol, Canon Acheson, and Dr. Wace.

The Bishop of Southwark, speaking at a drawing-room meeting on behalf of Church work in South London, held at the residence of Lady Herschell in Grosvenor-gardens, stated that University men were amongst the ablest workers in the slums. He cited the case of two young University men who had been engaged side by side in slum work in South London, and remarked that while one is still working ardently in South London, the other is at the present moment the Prime Minister of England.

At a meeting of the friends of the Oxford Pastorate Scheme held last week in London, Rev. F. J. Chavasse dwelt on the evil tendencies of the day, and added that in Oxford "the influences on the side of religion were, with scarcely an exception, High Church. On the Evangelical side, their own proper duties were enough to fully occupy the staff of Wycliffe Hall and the five Evangelical incumbents with their 12,000 poor. The need of the scheme was thus manifest. The success hitherto was most encouraging, and there were distinct signs of a revival."

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel is being erected at South Beach, Southend.

Melbourne Church, Cambs, has been celebrating its bi-centenary.

The John Pendy Memorial Chapel, in Chester, was opened on Saturday.

As the result of a special mission in Bolton, a new chapel is about to be built in the Victory district.

Rev. T. Rhondda Williams has been able, after his illness, to resume his work at Greenfield Chapel, Bradford.

The chairman of the Essex Union, in his presidential address last week, contended that a more expository form of preaching was needed.

The John Williams, the new L.M.S. ship, is now lying in the East India Docks, and is open to visitors on certain days and terms, which may be ascertained at the L.M.S. Mission House, Bloomfield-street, E.C.

At the annual meeting of the church at Castle-street, Abergavenny, the pastor (Rev. T. Bowen) gave a most encouraging report of the year's work. The several branches had made such progress, especially the Sunday-school, that it had been decided to build a new schoolroom.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have accepted offers of service from Mr. A. McConnachie, a student of the Evangelical Hall, Glasgow; Mr. Elliot Curwen, M.A., M.B., B.C., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., who has been appointed to take charge of Pekin Hospital; Mr. F. W. Willway, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., who was accepted as a missionary candidate in 1888 during his early course at Western College, Plymouth, and has since taken a full medical course at Bristol.

Calls: Rev. R. Wells, of Havant, to Boscombe; Rev. George Sadler, of Portsea, to Weedon.

BAPTIST.

A new chapel has been opened at Ruabon.

At Swansea the furnishings of the Tontine Chapel have been sold for rent.

A marked improvement is reported in the health of Rev. John Thomas, of Myrtle-street, Liverpool.

Rev. George Duncan, D.D., who has just moved from Hornsey to Gravesend, is continuing at Windmill-street Chapel, his new charge, the popular Wednesday evening lectures which attracted some attention in North London.

The Girls' Institute in connection with Regent's Park Chapel attracts some forty young workwomen each night for Christian and educational training. A branch of the British Women's Temperance Association has been started with a membership of fifty.

Pastor John Felmingham has resumed his ministry at Northcote-road, S.W., after a two months' trip to the Cape. Crowded congregations gathered on Sunday. At the "welcome" meeting it was announced that the cost of the trip had been specially subscribed as a thankoffering for the pastor's restoration to health.

A proposal has been made at the Metropolitan Tabernacle by a certain minority that Dr. Pierson be invited as co-pastor, an arrangement which they believe would "preclude exhaustion, give increased variety and richness to the teachings of the pulpit, and add to the efficient working of the manifold organisations that find their centre and impact at the Metropolitan Tabernacle."

Special blessing was given in connection with the recent Sunday-school anniversary at Wellington-street Baptist Chapel, Stockton. The sermons were preached by Pastor Geo. Wainwright, of Bournemouth, formerly minister at Stockton. After the Sunday evening service there were over fifty inquirers, chiefly from the Sunday-school. The public meeting on Monday was made of an evangelistic character, and was followed by an after-meeting, at which other scholars gave in their names as inquirers.

Calls.—Rev. F. Durlin, late of Colombo, to Bideford; Rev. T. Jones, of Slaithwaite, to Mount Zion, New Cross.

Resignations.—Rev. M. Cumming, of Bury St. Edmunds; Rev. W. Burnett (through ill-health), at Brasted, Kent.

METHODIST.

A new chapel has been opened at Stretton, in the Burton-on-Trent Circuit.

New chapels have been opened at Tankersley, Hastings, Silsden, Outlane, near Huddersfield.

Special services in the Garrison Church, Old Brompton, have been accompanied by much interest.

Mr. John Sampson (Cornish evangelist) has conducted a mission at Park Chapel, West Bowling, Bradford.

New chapels are being built at Kelk (Driffield), Hemsworth, Wereton, near Audley, West Wycombe, and Ryde.

Rev. D. M'Nicol, who has been in the ministry twenty-six years, has been elected President of the New Zealand Wesleyan Conference.

The Methodist Evangelist (New Connexion) in its "annual roll-call," makes the net Connexional increase of members in the home circuits 418.

The Bible Christian Foreign Missions Committee has accepted a candidate who will go forth to strengthen its staff in Yunnan, China. The workers in the field report prospects brighter than ever before.

Rev. F. Galpin, writing from Ningpo, says that, with Mr. Swallow, he has visited one of the country stations, and attracted crowds by a lantern exhibition illustrating "The Pilgrim's Progress." The sheet was hung upon the trees, and the mission boat was utilised for the lantern. An exhibition was also given in the village ancestral temple.

Evangelical worship carried on in Cap de Pera (Majorca) since 1879 is now prohibited, and permission to erect a school-church on land purchased by Rev. F. C. Smith has been withheld, a formal appeal to the Minister of State having received no answer. "The case," remarks Work and Workers, "is now under the consideration of the General Committee in London. But all the signs of the times in Spain point to a revival of anti-Evangelical zeal."

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel has been opened at Bull Bay, Anglesey.

A capital work is now in progress at Whitefield Church, Drury-lane.

Efforts are being made to amalgamate two churches in Whitehaven.

Professor Bruce, of Glasgow, occupied on Sunday Mr. Meharry's pulpit at Crouch Hill.

Rev. R. H. Watkins, of Graig, for some time Baptist minister, has joined the Welsh Calvinists.

It is proposed that the General Assembly of the Welsh Calvinists be held next year in London.

Dr. W. M. Taylor, of New York, is, it is stated, in a condition of health which causes his friends some anxiety.

We hear that the Presbyterian has changed hands, and that Rev. J. Reid Howatt is to undertake the editorship.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker will lead the Swedish annual Congress.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth's present series of afternoon holiness meetings terminate in three weeks.

General Booth, during his recent short stay in Christiania, conducted seventeen meetings, two being among the largest that he had ever led on the Continent.

The majority of the slum officers in Stockholm have passed an examination and received certificates for nursing, which makes their work invaluable amongst the poor.

Commissioner Railton has been conducting meetings in the Tivoli Hall, Dresden. He comments upon the marked attention paid by the vast audiences, and considers that altogether a great triumph has been achieved.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Weston-super-Mare, on 24th ult., Rev. E. B. W. Venables, of Redhills, Ireland, aged seventy-one.—At New Quay, Rev. Edward Watson, aged seventy-five, a useful Methodist minister.—At Ditteridge House, near Box, Rev. W. N. Heathcoate, aged sixty-six, rector of the parish.—In Dene Chapel, Alresford, on 28th ult., suddenly during service, Mr. J. Freemantle, a true follower of Jesus.—At St. Austell, Rev. T. Aspinall, aged seventy, for many years a useful Methodist minister.—At Clifton, Mr. George Cooke, aged eighty-nine, a firm and fearless evangelical and a leading church worker.—At Stockland, Honiton, on 1st inst., Rev. J. M. Cox, aged seventy-seven, vicar of Stockland-cum-Dalwood.—At Craigleith, Edinburgh, on 23rd ult., Major Thomas Graham, aged seventy-seven, a helper of many.—At Burwell, Cambridge, Mr. H. Martin, for more than sixty years connected with the Sunday-school, a trusted leader in Christian work.—At Bowness-on-Windermere, on 27th ult., Mr. John Barraclough, aged seventy-five, well known as a Christian worker in Halifax.—At St. James's-square, Notting Hill, on 22nd ult., Dr. James Kellie, a true Christian and useful helper.—At Cardiff, Rev. W. Seward, minister of Llandaff-road Chapel.—In Glasgow, 11th inst., Miss May Riddall, a C.M.S. medical student, who was looking forward to missionary service.—At Aasleagh, co. Mayo, Rev. T. Clesham, for twenty-four years incumbent of Aasleagh parish, a devoted Christian man.—At Dublin, Anne, wife of the late Rev. Dr. Dobbin, Presbyterian minister, Ballymena, aged seventy-one years.

Appeals.

Haiti, West Indies.—Mr. L. Ton Evans, of Preswylfa, Jaomel, Haiti, writes:—"We shall be thankful for English and French illustrated tracts, also French and English New Testaments. Young people call at my house almost daily asking for something to read."

Jews in Leeds.—Mr. Isidor Gelbfisum, 9, Amberley grove, Leeds, writes: "Some of the Jewish children who come to my Sunday meetings are very poor. I should like to help them with clothing, and therefore I appeal to the liberality of Christians who have at heart the salvation of God's ancient people."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That the five tents of the Gordon Evangelistic Mission, which are to be pitched in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, Elgin and Kincardine this season, may be much blessed.—Also for meetings to be held for four weeks from May 12 in the Gay-street Mission Hall, Liverpool.—For a blind evangelist who has laboured in the Gospel for the last thirty-five years in many parts of England and Wales, but is now suffering through sore afflictions in his family.—For a nineteen days' mission at Twickenham, commencing Sunday, the 13th, by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society.—For a blessing on Irish Evangelisation Society's service near St. Johnston, and also near Convoy, co. Donegal

Notes and Comments.

The publishers beg to state, for the information of those who sent in their names as subscribers to "Apocalyptic Scenes," by the late Sir S. A. Blackwood, as well as in answer to other inquiries, that it has been decided not to republish the papers in book form. A few sets of the numbers of The Christian containing these papers are still available, price 4s. 3d. post paid.

A fourth edition of The Coming Prince, the Last Great Monarch of Christendom, by Dr. Robert Anderson, has just appeared (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.), containing an additional chapter, which is "a Retrospect and a Reply." We hope in an early issue to say more about this work.

Canon Scott Holland is preaching at St. Paul's on the Sunday afternoons of the present month. Last Lord's Day his text was John xvii. 21, "That they all may be one . . . that the world may believe. . . ." Among many excellent remarks that fell from the preacher's lips were these: "The Church was made to be one, as man was made to be good." "Prophecy is the perpetual assertion of what God is pledged to perform." We rejoice to believe that the people of God are awaking to the necessity and the possibility of the oneness for which the Lord Jesus prayed and which God is pledged to effect.

The Daily News of May 10th says that Lord Rosebery's "success for the first time in one of the three greatest races of the year will give universal satisfaction." It appears that a horse owned by the present Prime Minister won a recent race for two thousand guineas at Newmarket. To a very large number of the community, the tidings will give anything but satisfaction. It is to them a matter of the deepest regret that the racecourse should be patronised and supported by men occupying such a position. Of what use is it to denounce the evils of gambling, as The Daily News does, and yet to encourage the turf? So long as the racecourse is made respectable by the patronage of princes and peers, and by the favourable notices of our daily press, so long will the gambler continue his evil work.

The railway bookstalls have to a considerable extent secured a monopoly of our periodical and other literature; and while other booksellers frequently sell at a discount of 20 or 25 per cent., the full price is charged at the bookstalls. It becomes a very serious evil, not only that our young people should more and more be tempted to frivolous reading, but also that the sale should be encouraged of periodicals distinctly demoralising in their tendency. We beg the attention of the proprietors of the bookstalls, of railway directors and shareholders, and of the respectable public generally to the indelicate, indecent, and lewd pictures and letterpress in publications of which the sale is evidently increasing, to the great detriment of our boys and girls, our young men and young women.

Seldom has the unwisdom of spending unnecessary sums of money upon church buildings been so powerfully brought home to us, as by a statement on church extension in the last report of the Congregational Union:—

> If a redistribution of religious accommodation were possible, there are chapels enough to meet every existing need. But chapels cannot be folded like tents and pitched again in some more convenient place. They remain stationary, while the people are in motion; and the tendency is for the chapels to be without people in the old neighbourhoods, while the people are without chapels in the new.

Thus the minimum provision would at once require in Sheffield 20,000, in Liverpool 21,000, in Greater Birmingham 87,000 additional sittings. The reflections caused by these facts are painful. Enormous sums of money have been spent on many of these central chapels, when something far less costly would have done equally well; they have also been obstinately worked on certain old lines for the sake of a handful of respectable people, when they ought to have been adapted to new and local needs. At the same time new chapels for new populations ought to have been built. A movement at the centre and from the centre would have necessitated a movement in and for the suburbs. Chapels and churches should exist for souls and for Christ.

The C.M.S., as we noticed last week, got out of its immediate financial difficulties through several large contributions from wealthy individuals. The London and Baptist Missionary Societies will, we believe, have to resort to other means; they will have to train their subscribers generally to make the support of the Gospel a matter of loving self-denial. A week of self-denial in the year is good, especially if it leads to a revision of personal and family expenditure all the year round; but for a family to cut off a few things for a week while they are living at a high rate for fifty-one weeks is a mockery. Only rich men can lay down their thousands. The Moravians are not rich, and yet their rate of giving for the Gospel would, if universally adopted, supply us with twenty millions a year, instead of the million and a-half we now raise for the spread of the Gospel. This would imply more faith and love, more looking to God, more simplicity of desire to glorify Christ—an infinite gain all round. Let the burdened societies seek this grace for their friends.

Zeal is good, but it should be according to knowledge. The necessity of knowledge is well shown by Turretin in these particulars: 1. That we may distinguish truth from falsehood, as there may be zeal for error or false doctrine as well as for that which is true; 2. That we may understand the comparative importance of things, so as not to magnify what is little, and make little account of what is great. 3. That we may prosecute and defend the truth in the right way, with prudence, firmness, fidelity, and meekness. 4. That our zeal may have the right object, not our own interest and reputation, but the glory of God and the salvation of men. Had knowledge occupied its right place in the Christian consciousness and service, we should have been saved from many foolish and unseemly and hurtful things. Some professors of religion seem afraid of it, as if it might quench zeal, but it is at once an impulse and a guide in every work of faith and labour of love.

We cannot but believe that there are signs that the invasion of the Church by worldly things has reached its bounds. Dr. Barrett's address to the Congregational Union on the "Secularisation of the Pulpit" was one. True, he dealt, for one thing, rather with the custom which has come in among us of speaking on social questions than with the things to which we have just referred, but the principle which is to rule the Church is the same in both cases. Her great business is to preach Christ crucified, so that men shall be brought to love God and each other; and from this supreme object nothing must turn her aside. Another sign of it is the experience which is being gained of the inefficiency of worldly things to do what was expected of them; they are a failure even from the lowest point of view. By enervating the Church as a spiritual institution they unfit her for her work. Says a not unsympathetic observer of an attempt to get hold of the working classes by means of piquant sermons and an adapted service: "They come for that night; then they go, and the minister sees no more of them until the next special service; meantime, the spirituality of the Church is being damaged."

Yet it is notorious, from many examples of a different sort, that working men can be got at and retained by the preaching of Christ week after week, and that hundreds and thousands of them can be built into the ordinary fellowship of the Church. We believe that young persons, and, in fact, persons of every age and condition, can be reached by the same means, and when so reached and won they will have no hankering after these worldly things, but to all tempters they will be able to say, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of."

The Herald of Peace announces a forthcoming American book, entitled, "Friends in the Army." It reveals the sufferings of the Friends in the South during the Civil War. They were heroic, for after all other inflictions failed these Quakers were compelled to stand in front of contending armies, with guns lashed to their shoulders to stop bullets, because they would not fight! The cowardice was only equalled by the cruelty of the fighters who could so treat them. Yet, while many of the fighters fell, not one faithful Friend suffered a violent death during the war, though several were condemned to be shot. Soldiers detailed to shoot them, when they heard their prayers—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do"—would drop their rifles, saying, "We can't shoot such men." Officers who tried in vain to compel the Friends to fight, on seeing their fidelity to Christ, and hearing their reasons for obeying Him, repeatedly exclaimed, "I wish we were all Quakers." "One Friend who yielded to the demand to fight was shot in the first battle in which he engaged." There can be no doubt that the Friends have borne a precious testimony, and that it has been of vast use; its full value has yet to be seen.

Thanksgiving and Substance-giving.

In the East-end there was recently witnessed a great gathering with gracious intent, to offer thanks to God for his mercies and lovingkindnesses throughout the bygone generation. Might not that gathering, imposing so far as numbers were concerned, and of one heart and mind in testifying to the wonders of the grace of God, be emulated by a meeting in the West-end of a more select character to consider the cognate question of substance-giving? Were such a meeting convened, many Christians, if they knew the day and the hour, would unite in fervent prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit of God that wealthy Christians might be led to entertain lofty conceptions of their privileges and opportunities, and so inaugurate an era of giving to the Lord such as may not yet have entered into their minds.

The Church of Christ is confronted over and over again with the grave scandal attaching to names which had been honoured in their lifetime as liberal helpers of the cause of missions at home and abroad, but which are linked also, when they have departed this life, with figures which reveal their ownership of vast undistributed wealth; wealth which the wisdom of all ages, inspired and uninspired alike, has concurred in affirming will become a doubtful blessing to those who come after them; wealth which, it is to be feared, has proved in most instances a hindrance to personal growth in grace and holiness, and thereby has diminished or obliterated the hope of any better future prospect than may be summed up in the expression "scarcely saved"; wealth which, thus accumulated and destined, is one among the many stumbling-blocks to men of the world concerning the reality of Christian profession. The confession of an American millionaire on this subject is interesting but portentous. Making money up to a certain point, namely, the attainment of such a fortune as would secure the supply of all his individual and family needs, with enough to give away to the ordinary claims made upon a prosperous man, "Up to that point," said he, "I am getting the money, but beyond that it is the money that gets me." What an awful truth! What a perilous position! An intelligent human being becoming the slave of inanimate gold!

Looking moreover at the difficulty of keeping money after it has been gathered, in consequence of the ever-increasing ingenuity of company promoters and other swindlers, and the rapidly incoming wave of insecurity which now threatens all kinds of earthly possessions; looking, as students of prophecy are forced to look, at the prevalent "distress of nations with perplexity," which is characteristic of our time, and is one of the signs of the end of the age, what advantage is there in amassing great fortunes which will be swept away in the social revolution which seems so near at hand, fortunes which therefore must prove but a monument to the folly of those who amassed them?

The world shows up better than the Church in the matter of liberal giving. But a week or two ago a lover of music gave £45,000 to build a house for a college of music. In the philanthropic sphere also there seems little difficulty in raising large sums to found hospitals or polytechnic institutions. Why are Christians less loyal and liberal in supporting the claims of Christ for the furtherance of missions at home and abroad?

There is sometimes made a ludicrous attempt to satisfy the conscience by the gift of a tenth of one's income; but surely the Pharisee did better than that. He said, "I give tithes of all that I possess." Does not that mean the gift of a tenth of his capital or entire possessions, whether in money, in houses, or in land? It is curious how rare are the examples in modern Christian story of men copying the early example of Joseph, surnamed Barnabas. Barnabas, who, "having land, sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the Apostles' feet." It is particularly in regard to landowning, though not exclusively, that the confession of one of old holds true, "my soul cleaveth unto the dust." One recalls with gladness the case of Count Zinzendorf in Germany and the brothers Haldane in Scotland. In days when we hear landowners saying they can get little or nothing from their estates, is it not a pity some of them don't sell a few farms, and do as Barnabas did? But the possession of land is one of the fetishes of English Christianity; its worshippers to-day are more numerous than ever.

Now for a practical suggestion. Will some one of our honoured liberal givers who may read these sentences gather around him a score or two of the men and the women possessed of redundant wealth, and prepare for them and for himself a great and real joy? It would need one of the columns of this magazine to tabulate a list of important Christian institutions, chiefly evangelical and undenominational, which to-day are languishing for want of a large amount of support, and whose promoters and workers are heavy-hearted because of the seeming apathy of wealthy Christians. Let the owner of £500,000 devote £50,000 to the Lord, then lay hold of some organisation in need of some such amount of beneficent giving and become its "nursing father." Others might follow with tenths of their capital, and bestow their £40,000, or £30,000, or £20,000, and so on, following up their gifts with life-long interest in, and intermeddling with, and (if need be) amendment of, their one chosen institution. We have reached a crisis in the evangelical history of England. The pure Gospel has become overlaid with Romish accretions in belief and worship on the one hand; and is honeycombed with thinly-disguised unbelief on the other. A religion of forms and ceremonies is being thrust upon us by one party, and a barren and unsatisfying intellectualism is starving many congregations; meanwhile pure and Scriptural efforts are slighted and discouraged. It surely is the time for making a special effort to show that our evangelical convictions have power over our pockets and purses and property.

The Young Men's Christian Association (and probably the Young Women's Christian Association also) requires this year a large sum of money. Mr. Russell Hurditch's noble Gospel work is in danger of being diminished in extent, though not in earnest endeavour. Mildmay, that mother of conferences, with its deaconess missions in the slums of London, greatly needs a helping hand. Dr. Barnardo, Miss Macpherson, Mr. Fegan, and Mr. Henry Toye, with their thousands of poor orphans, are always with us. Grattan Guinness and his missionary training institutes have strong claims upon our best sympathies. Who will come to the rescue, and help to bring in a fresh time of blessing from above? "Bring ye the whole tithe into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house; and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Malachi iii. 10, R.V.).

JEWISH NOTES.

AMERICA.

The tidings from New York are most encouraging. In addition to the Saturday afternoon services at the De Witt Memorial Church, which continue to be thronged by eager Jewish audiences, Mr. Warszawiak now holds meetings every night at No. 17, St. Marks-place. A novel feature of these meetings is the opportunity given to Jews to confess Christ before men by personal testimony. On March 13, Mr. Warszawiak writes:—"It is now 11.20 p.m., and I am just come up from my meeting, which was a marvellous one. Over thirty persons confessed Jesus Christ before their still unbelieving brethren, and one Jew of sixty-six years of age accepted, with tears of gratitude in his eyes, the Lord Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour, after having searched and prayed for the truth for the last two months."

The number of applicants for baptism, both men and women, is remarkable. In one week there were between thirty and forty applications, but Mr. Warszawiak has decided not to baptize any more until "Christ's Synagogue" has been erected, and he is able to shepherd the converts. The need of this building, which will be capable of seating about 2000 Jewish worshippers, is a crying one, and friends in England who wish to share the privilege of contributing towards so unique an object, should communicate at once with Miss Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh. At the great Missionary Convention in Toronto, Mr. Warszawiak was given frequent opportunities of pressing the claims of Israel upon Christians, and of preaching Christ to his fellow-Israelites. Mr. Warszawiak was enabled to organise a "Jewish Mission" in the city, towards which about 1000dols. were subscribed on the spot.

SOUTH AFRICA.

From Johannesburg, Messrs. Day and Malbert, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, proceeded to Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal. Here they received much assistance from Mr. Baker, of the South Africa General Mission. Besides holding meetings for Jews, an address to Christians was given in the Baptist Church, which was filled to overflowing. Ministers of every denomination were present, including clergy of the English Church, which, in South Africa, usually refuses to give any countenance to inter-denominational work. Three leading public officials of the Transvaal were present.

On quitting the Transvaal, the evangelists proceeded to Blomfontein, in the Orange Free State, where they visited every Jew in the place. After a meeting held for Jews one of them asked for an interview, at which he said, "Convince me logically of the truth of Christianity, and I'll go and be baptized to-morrow." Of his own accord he proposed to correspond with the missionaries by letter—a proposal which was readily accepted.

ARABIA.

It was stated in a recent note that the Mildmay Mission to the Jews had been praying for some time past that the Lord would open a door for carrying the Gospel to the Yemenite Jews in Arabia. It is therefore satisfactory to find that arrangements have now been made with the American Arabia Mission to send one of their missionaries, Rev. S. M. Zwemer, on a journey to Sanaa, the capital of Yemen, for the express purpose of reaching the Jews there and in other places. Mr. Zwemer will start, God willing, from Aden about July 1, and will carry a large supply of Hebrew New Testaments. Prayer is asked that God's blessing may rest upon this effort, and that not only the Jews may be reached, but also their brethren the Arabs, among whom Mr. Zwemer has been labouring with great devotion since the mission was first founded about three or four years ago.

RUSSIA.

Writing to Rev. John Wilkinson from Wilna, Dr. Althausen reports an increase of interest in the Gospel among the Jews of that city. "Our missionary meetings are well attended, so that many are obliged to stand, packed like sardines. We notice, too, a great change for the better, for there is not so much disputing and asking questions as there used to be, but the chief desire of the Jews seems to be to listen to the Gospel of Christ. As for me, I have never been so happy as now, for, besides the meetings, I have some proselytes living in my house who are daily listeners to the Word. It is a real spiritual enjoyment to unite oneself with such souls in the daily study of God's Word."

Our Priest and our Confessional.

Of late years, by teachers and preachers, much prominence has been given to Christ dwelling in the heart by faith: Christ in you the hope of glory. A very blessed and inspiring truth is contained in these wondrous words. Yet this is not all the truth, and it needs to be held in conjunction with other equally important truths. It is equally true that we are in Christ, members of his body, and that our life is hid with Christ in God. And it is no less true that He is in heaven and we on earth. That He is our great High Priest, ever living to make intercession for us, and therefore able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him; as well as our Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous.

It is seldom that the truth is held in Scriptural proportion either by the individual Christian or by the Church as a whole. At different periods special truths have been made prominent to the neglect of others; and every truth out of balance with other truth becomes so far an error.

A wise woman once said that some Protestants had become so incensed against Mariolatry that they could scarcely speak respectfully of the Virgin Mary; and we might add that in our zeal against the priestcraft of paganism and popery we may slight or overlook the Priesthood of Jesus the Son of God.

All history bears witness that otherwise the power of the priest in all ages, all nations, and all classes, would be an inexplicable enigma. The most enlightened and the most degraded peoples throughout the world have ever been ruled and exploited by the priests. And England in the nineteenth century, "the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of time," is no exception to the rule. Rome, like Babel, her prototype (it has been well said), has the form of every truth of God, but she builds her tower with brick for stone and slime for mortar.

Our faithful Creator, the Father of our spirits, has not left us without a merciful and faithful High Priest, holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. He arrayed his Son, on the day of his resurrection, in garments of glory and beauty as God's High Priest. For "Christ glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest, but He that said unto Him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee" (from the dead, cf. Ps. ii. 7; Acts xiii. 33). "Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek: first being by interpretation King of Righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of Peace."

That we have such a High Priest is the crowning point of the argument of that wonderful Epistle in which the Old Testament is condensed in substance and expanded in spirit. And "seeing that we have a great High Priest that is passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God," we are invited, encouraged, commanded, to come with confidence, to tell out everything (that is contained in the Greek word translated "boldly"), at the true confessional, the throne of grace, that we may obtain compassion and find grace to help in time of need. Then, after a long discussion and exposition, extending through five chapters and a-half (from iv. 14-16 to x. 19-24), the Apostle returns to his urgent exhortation and affectionate appeal. Observe the close connection between these two passages, and especially the importance given to the fact that we have a High Priest, and such a High Priest.

HEB. IV. 14—16.

"Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our confession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

HEB. X. 19—24.

"Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God: let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the confession of our faith without wavering (for He is faithful that promised), and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

The high priest was the most important person in Israel of old; and having exercised his office of Prophet during his ministry on earth, and now waiting until He shall return as King, the present interval is specially the time in which the First-begotten from the dead is engaged as the true Priest: after the type of Aaron indeed, but after the order of Melchizedek. Dear reader, wait a moment, and ask yourself whether you have any practical knowledge of Jesus, the Son of God, as your High Priest; by whom you come to God; and who is able to save you to the uttermost, continually, for ever, seeing that He ever liveth to make intercession for you.

Surely all evangelical men must always set in the forefront of their teaching, the untransmissible priesthood of the great Priest over the house of God; our great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God; who has been in all points tempted like as we are, without sin; who, having suffered being tempted, is able to succour them that are tempted; who was made, like us, partaker of flesh and blood, that through death He might make expiation for the sins of the people, and bruise the head of him that had the power of death (that is the devil, — the accuser), and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage; Christ, who has entered into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.

Surely this must ever be one of the leading themes of evangelical discourse. Alas, no. The blessed relationship implied in the Apostle's prayer, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" is expounded by some in such a way as to leave apparently little or no need for the ministry of our Melchizedek Priest. Some regard the Epistle to the Hebrews as Jewish, and give it only a secondary place in Christian teaching. And so, while Rome is flooding our beloved country with pagan sacramentarianism and sacerdotalism, this Holy Writing, the Epistle to the Hebrews, specially adapted, as it is, to counteract these heathen and corrupt superstitions, is almost a dead letter as regards the subject of which it chiefly treats—the Priesthood in heaven of Jesus the Son of God, on behalf of those on earth, whom, though compassed with infirmities, He is not ashamed to call his brethren.

It is written to "holy brethren," it discusses their holy standing, and sets up the Divine standard of holy living: yet the present office of Christ as our High Priest is conspicuously absent from what is called, however questionably, "holiness teaching." We affectionately and respectfully ask that this important portion of Divine truth may receive, from all who claim to be regarded as evangelical teachers, the consideration which its prominent position in both Testaments demands.

THE LESSON OF PENTECOST.

By Rev. WILLIAM CROSBIE, Nottingham.

Pentecost suggests the solution of the spiritual problems of the age, and the solution of every church and missionary problem. Numerous and various are the suggestions made, and the methods adopted, to remedy matters within the Church, and raise the Church to the level of her opportunities and fit her for her work. But the true and only effectual remedy is that set forth in the historic fact of Pentecost. Pentecost was not meant to be an exceptional thing in the Church, but the rule. We have made it the exception by the weakness of our faith, the coldness of our desires, and the worldliness of our life. The measures of the Spirit were not exhausted at Pentecost; the tide of spiritual life did not reach its height just for once. Below that height it ought never to have fallen. To fall below the level of Pentecost is to fall below God's level. The standard is the spiritual condition of the Church of Pentecost. And when the spiritual condition of the Church is not the realisation of that standard, the hindering cause is, in no sense, in God; it is wholly in us. The high-water mark of Pentecost is at once the Church's privilege and her condemnation.

"Be filled with the Spirit," is an inspired precept, and is enjoined on every Christian; and the standard is the standard of Pentecost. "That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God," is an inspired prayer, and is a prayer for every Christian; and the standard is the standard of Pentecost. But, measured by that standard, where are we? and what are we? Alas, fallen! And we shall never rise until we re-enact the praying and the waiting of Pentecost. The inflow of the Spirit, with his blessed life and energising might, is conditioned on praying and waiting, like the praying and waiting of Pentecost. "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "Tarry!" And let the time of tarrying be a time of prayer. Look up in faith and desire and expectation, and the Spirit will enter in, and flood all your being with "power." The looking up in faith and desire and expectation is the gateway and avenue of his entrance.

And the "power" He brings, and with which He "endues," is power for "witnessing." "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me." Power to be witnesses; not physical or temporal power, nor mere intellectual power, not the power of the logician and rhetorician, nor the power of wealth and social position; but spiritual power—the very energy of God.

Power to be witnesses:—Power to see and know Jesus, and to speak for Him, representing Him perfectly—power to live for Him, and to live Him—power to do, and dare, and suffer, and die for Him—power to be seers, and prophets, and priests, and kings, and heroes, and martyrs.

Power to be Witnesses:—Power to be like Jesus in everything, to be reflections and revelations of Him, and so to preach Him that those who hear shall see Him, and Him only, and shall embrace Him as their Saviour and their all.

Oh, for such witnesses! The Church on her knees before God,—penitent, humbled, believing, prayerful, expectant,—would soon be a Church of such witnesses, because filled with the Holy Ghost, and, in senses unknown before, on a scale the largest, the commission and the programme would be fulfilled, "ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

The GOSPEL of the GRACE of GOD.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

At what point in the Holy Scriptures does the full Gospel of the Grace of God begin? The answer given to this question is of the utmost consequence in the present day, when all sorts of Gospels of "wood, hay, and stubble" are abroad. The Bible student, the teacher, and especially the evangelist, ought to be able to give a clear and distinct answer. For there can be no success in attempting rightly to divide the Word of Truth, whether for teaching or evangelistic work, unless we know where to begin.

The Circle of Divine Revelation is a perfect circle, but it is not given to everyone to discern this fact, and perhaps to still fewer to know where to commence in this circle. The old circle of the Zodiacal Constellations, mapped out in antediluvian patriarchal days before the dawn of the nations of antiquity, which embodied in pictorial symbols the prophecies of the Coming Redeemer, was a circle complete in itself, before one of its twelve signs was altered by the Egyptian priesthood, or others before them, to accommodate it to their departure from the primitive truth which it originally symbolised. But where to begin this circle? The sphinx or key of the Zodiac lay between Virgo and Leo—the Seed of the Woman and the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the signs of a suffering but ultimately victorious Messiah.*

God's written Word, his complete circle of revelation, is our priceless possession. Do we know at which book to begin when preaching the Gospel in this nineteenth century? The reformers knew—Luther knew, Melancthon knew, the Martyrs knew. The keynote was "The just shall live by faith," as interpreted in the Epistle to the Romans, and as again quoted in the Epistle to the Galatians, and yet once more in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Yes, the Romans is the point at which we should begin to read the circle of Divine Wisdom.

And why so? The trial of man under responsibility had just come to an end; the inspired history of the Four Gospels and the Acts, shows us this. It shows us that the last test had been put to man's heart—"Surely they will reverence my Son," "My Beloved?" No; when they saw Him, they despised Him, they saw no beauty in Him; and so He who was their Messiah, the faithful Servant and Prophet of Jehovah, the gracious Son of Man, and the Son of God, was betrayed, given up into the hands of wicked men, and numbered amongst the transgressors. The history of the trial of man does not end with Malachi—far from it.

Yet pause awhile—"Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." A most gracious provision in the Law was the Cities of Refuge for those who shed innocent blood, for those who killed their neighbour ignorantly. In the Acts of the Apostles, where the Israelites in their synagogues are still being appealed to, we read the solemn and heart-stirring appeal:—"And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it." Repent, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, that He may come back again and introduce those glorious times of refreshing. What forbearing love and mercy! But this appeal, too, was all in vain, for the nation as a nation; the remnant only were saved out of it. And yet even now they are cut off nationally for a time only: "For out of Zion shall come forth the Deliverer, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God: how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!"

Now we may say that the historical portion of Scripture ends with the Acts of the Apostles. The solemn and altogether unique history of man, the first man, is there closed, till we open the Book of Revelation, to read the brief history, written beforehand, of his last rebellion and awful doom. But whether without law, or under law, or under the first covenant; whether under the Kingdom, or whether in the very presence of the gracious King Himself, and with even yet one more appeal through the Holy Spirit (in the Acts) and after atonement had been made—man was found utterly wanting, his heart hardened against God, dead in trespasses and sins. So his mouth was closed, and all the world proved guilty before God!

It is at this point that the Gospel of God's unspeakable love and grace shines forth in all its fulness. A special Apostle is called and specially enlightened; he receives his commission direct from heaven—the great Apostle of the Gentiles, set apart for the Gospel of God.

Yes, begin with the Romans, for no foundation can any man lay than that which is laid in Christ crucified and raised again. See this foundation of God's salvation through faith, through faith in his redeeming blood, declared openly as in Rom. i. 17 and Rom. iii. 21—26. Learn the first eight chapters of the Romans every word by heart, and then, in the light of the Gospel of unmerited grace and very special love, read your Bible all over again, and see for yourselves that the circle of Divine Truth centres in the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Yes, the true beginning in unfolding the wonderful circumference of Truth, is that Epistle which contains the most complete explication of the Gospel of the grace of God. No definition of Christianity is complete without the Pauline Epistles; and of these the Epistle to the Romans is one of those special characteristics which mark off the inspired Book of books from all other writings ever penned by the hand of man. C.

COMMUNION HYMN.

Jesus, bless us as we meet,
Grouped about thy pierced feet;
Thy last wish hath summoned us
Till Thou come, to gather thus;
Feasting on the bread and wine,
Thine own covenanted sign,
Teach us, Lamb of Calvary,
How to best remember Thee.

By sore conflict agonised,
Thou wast thorn-wreathed, bruised, despised,
Bound, and on that altar laid,
Where no voice the offering stayed:
While the wondering angels gazed
On their suffering King upraised,
Melt us, Lamb of Calvary,
Move to tears, remembering Thee.

Thou the dark wine-press didst tread
Till thy garb with blood shone red;
And did'st travail desolate,
Closed against Thee heaven's gate.
Love, unclasping its embrace,
Hidden from Thee God's dear face;
Help us, Lamb of Calvary,
Heart-bowed, to remember Thee.

Quit we now the sacred feast,
Sin more loathed, and love increased—
But thy bond-slaves stand we bound
Since this cup with us is found!
Oh! our risen Lord, we vow
Thou shalt rule us, only Thou;
That by holy living we Ever may "remember" Thee.

THE SPIRIT OF PEACE.

Three years ago we had a gracious work of the Holy Spirit among our people at Ambohimanga, the ancient capital of Madagascar, and twelve miles north of Antananarivo. Some time before this commenced, we had been praying for and very earnestly desiring it, but the way seemed quite closed. It was the quarrels, petty jealousies, and miserable squabbles of the Christian natives that stood in the way of revival. We invited a few, both men and women, who, we believed, desired this blessing equally with ourselves, to meet with us every afternoon for a week for united prayer, searching of the Scriptures, and heart-searching before God. By the end of the week we had discovered that the great hindrance was really in some of these very people who seemed most anxiously to desire to see the power of God. In the meantime, therefore, the meetings were discontinued, as being utterly useless, for we knew that the Spirit could not work where there were divisions and jealousies, or amongst people who felt bitterly and uncharitably towards one another. For a time things continued thus, and we went on praying for a better condition, hardly daring to hope that it was possible.

Some time after this I was led by the Spirit to preach at a united meeting of our four churches in the town from the words of the Lord's prayer, which, in the Malagasy Revised New Testament, read: "Forgive us our trespasses, for we have forgiven them that trespassed against us," making God's forgiveness of us dependent on our forgiveness of one another. I was led to expand and explain and illustrate Christ's own emphatic teaching on this subject, where He distinctly states that "if ye will not forgive men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive your trespasses."

After that address two women, both Christians, who had entertained bitter and unkind thoughts of each other, and who had not even spoken for weeks, passing each other on the road without even a sign of recognition, both impelled by the same spirit, shook hands and each begged the other's pardon. That same day two church leaders, a pastor and an evangelist, forgave one another and were reconciled, and the spirit of reconciliation spread, until a much better and more loving spirit ruled in the hearts of many of the people. Then the way was opened, the Holy Spirit was able to bless; hindrances were removed that had blocked up the path, and many were converted and turned to the Lord, in answer to the now united prayer and desire of God's people.

"They were all with one accord in one place" on the day of Pentecost; united in sympathy, in prayer, in desire, in heartfelt love to their Risen Lord, and waiting for his promised gift, and they received the gift in overflowing abundance. The conditions are still the same. "God has promised nothing to dissension." When Christians fight or hate or are jealous, and harbour unkind and ungenerous thoughts of each other, they shut the Holy Spirit out of their own hearts, and more than that, they act as clouds to prevent the sun from shining upon others. God is the God of order and of love; he is not a God of discord or of strife. They who would enjoy his presence, and receive his blessing, must always be "of one accord," whether they can be "in one place" or not.

If, under our present conditions, controversy cannot always be avoided, nay, is sometimes necessary, in order to maintain purity and righteousness and uphold the truth before the world, a controversial spirit between Christians ought to be sedulously avoided, for it "evermore brings with it the desolation of spiritual leanness." SOUTH MIDLAND PROTESTANT UNION.—Colonel Ball Acton, of Worcester, presided over the annual gathering of this Union, which was recently held at Tewkesbury. Rev. R. Pilson (Birtsmorton) spoke on current fallacies, being followed by Revs. Beauchamp Stannus (Arrow) and A. G. Lawe (Fosbury). An instructive paper was read by Rev. P. Ashkenazie, of Bredon, on the corruptions of the Greek Church. Others speakers were Revs. T. Davis (Harborne), F. W. Davenport (Malvern), and C. H. Wainwright (Blackpool). Special sermons in connection with the conference were preached by Revs. A. M. Coxwell-Rogers and E. H. F. Cosens, hon. secretary of the Union. An extended report of the proceedings appeared in the Tewkesbury Weekly Record for May 5.

By Richard Francis Weymouth, D.Lit., M.A.,
Fellow of Univ. Coll. Lond., Editor of the Resultant Greek Testament.

Ἡ ἱκανότης ἡμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.—2 Cor. iii. 5.

[The object aimed at, however imperfectly attained, is to express as exactly as possible in the English of the nineteenth century the true sense of the Apostle's words as given in the best editions of the original Greek.]

21 I use the language of self-disparagement, as though admitting our own feebleness. Nevertheless on whatever ground any one is audacious (I speak in mere folly), I am
22 audacious also. Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Israelites? So am I. Are they descendants of Abraham? So am
23 I. Are they servants of Christ? (I speak as out of my mind;) much more am I such; more abundantly serving Him in labours, more abundantly in imprisonment, in floggings of excessive cruelty, with risk of life many a
24 time. From the Jews five times have I
25 received forty lashes all but one. Three times have I been beaten with the Roman rods, once have I been stoned, three times I have been shipwrecked, once for full four and twenty hours I was floating on the open
26 sea. I have served Him in frequent travelling, amidst dangers in crossing rivers, dangers from brigands; dangers from my own countrymen, dangers from the Gentiles; dangers in city, dangers in wilderness, dangers by
27 sea, dangers from spies in our midst; with labour and toil, with many a sleepless night, in hunger and thirst, in frequent fastings, in cold,
28 and in insufficient clothing. And besides other things which I pass over, there is that which presses on me daily, my anxiety for all
29 the Churches. Who is weak, without my being weak? Who is tripped up into sin, without my burning with indignation?
30 If I must boast, I will boast of things which 31 display my weakness. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, He who is blessed through the Ages, knows that I am speaking the truth.
32 At Damascus the Ethnarch under King Aretas kept guards at the gates of the city to 33 apprehend me, but through a window I was let down by the wall in a basket, and so escaped his clutches.

12. I am compelled to boast (no profitable employment!), but I will proceed to visions and
2 revelations vouchsafed by the Lord. I know a Christian man who fourteen years ago —whether bodily I know not, or as disembodied spirit I know not, God knows—was caught up (this man that I speak of) even to
3 the highest heaven. And I know that this man—whether bodily or apart from the 4 body I know not, God knows— was caught up into the Paradise and heard unspeakable things which a man is not permitted
5 to repeat. Of such a one I will boast; but of myself I will not boast, except in my weak-
6 nesses. If however I should choose to boast, I should not be a fool in so doing, for I should be speaking the truth. But I forbear, lest any one should be led to estimate me more highly than what his own eyes attest, or what
7 he hears from my lips, or judging by the stupendous grandeur of the revelations.

25 I was floating, etc.: in the case of many of the other sufferings it may be taken for granted that some permanent ill effect, or at least mark, remained; but the tense used here, the Greek perfect, seems designed expressly to indicate some such result. Compare note on xii. 21.

6 Should . . . should . . . should: even a tiro in Greek knows that to this form of the hypothetical sentence in English the Greek form that corresponds has the verb in the optative mood; but it will be useful to some to remark that in the Greek of the N.T. the optative is never so used.

7 Or: lit., and. In both Latin and Greek and is often used for or.—(Judging) by: see Jelf, Gr. Gram. § 609. 3.

ZACCHEUS.

The earthly ministry of our Lord was nearly over, and just as the sunset is often the most gorgeous part of the day, so the course of the Sun of Righteousness grew most beautiful towards its close. It was a solemn journey that the Saviour of Man was taking, passing on to Jerusalem with the Cross and the Agony in full view, and yet with his attention entirely given to the needs and the happiness of others. In the crucial times of life we readily become self-absorbed, and if we can face the approach of some imminent sorrow with a fair show of bravery, we think we do well, and so perhaps we do, for we are but human, and the flesh is weak. But it is grand and stimulating to see the Lord Jesus Christ going to his death-agony with senses so keenly alert for others that the pitiful cry of the blind beggar arrests Him at once, and before He passes on again He has given light to the darkened eyes, and turned the shadow of death into the morning. And that He should stop once more when He came under the tree where Zaccheus was hidden, and, in the absence of any appeal to his compassion, court an interview with a despised and undeserving man, seems still more wonderful, and gives a worthier idea than we are generally able to form of "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathise."

It was the last thing Zaccheus would have thought possible. He was bitterly conscious of his bad odour amongst the people. To be a collector of the taxes by means of which the galling Roman yoke was fastened more firmly on the necks of his fellow-countrymen, would have made any Jew unpopular, but this man was not only unpatriotic, he was extortionate as well. So we cannot wonder at the ill-will of the multitude. And yet, deep down in that unpromising character, there were splendid possibilities that only needed the Divine touch to quicken and develop, and already, in his social and moral degradation, he was being acted upon by the magnetic power of Christ, working at first probably upon his curiosity, with a great desire to see this wonderful Prophet, of whom he had heard such wonderful things.

At this point the sturdy disregard of obstacles in the way of advancement, which characterises his race—for he was "a son of Abraham"—served him in good stead. He was little of stature certainly, but he was fleet of foot and agile of limb, and very soon he was high over the heads of those more favoured by physical advantage, seeing, and as he thought, remaining unseen. There must have been a strange sweetness in his surprise when the face of the august Stranger he was so eagerly watching was raised towards the sycamore, and tones that mingled so much authority with their tenderness, called him by name, and bade him descend and entertain Jesus of Nazareth as his guest.

His prompt response was admirable. Never, even in Bethany, had the homeless Christ received a more ready and joyous welcome, and it must have been specially valued now, on this first stage of the Via Dolorosa.

And now Christ and the sinner had met. The people knew him as "the man that was a sinner," and said so very unceremoniously. Christ knew it, and yet graciously gave him his company. Zaccheus was probably the only person in this crowd who was unconscious of the fact.

But as he ministered to that honoured Guest with true Oriental hospitality, and his solemn words concerning righteousness of life penetrated the long-scorned publican's conscience, he too began to understand the crookedness of his past ways; he had for the first time in his life come to the measurement of a perfect standard, and as the Holy Spirit flashed conviction of sin into his heart, he leaped to his feet, and once more "made haste" to do the right. "Lord"—an avowal of his divinity—"the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore unto him fourfold." We have heard of "a power outside ourselves working for righteousness"; here this power was in fullest illustration, only by the marvellousness of this Divine energy it was now inside the man, impelling, propelling, as no other power that is dreamt of in our philosophies can ever do.

If there is one thing more than another that makes us highly estimate our Christianity it is its fruits. Look at this history. When Christ came in at the door of Zaccheus's house all the selfishness, and greed, and injustice flew out through the window; nothing but bright beautiful character remained, and when the patient feet of the world's Redeemer resumed their journey to Calvary, "sweetness and light" overflowed the limits of that home, and made scores of defrauded homes in Jericho glad that day by the fourfold restitution. We see Zaccheus no more. In the compass of eight verses his wonderful story is told, but our imagination can readily fill in the picture of future nobility of character and well-doing and well-being to this favoured son of Abraham.

Let no one in his presence complain of obstacles in the spiritual life. To those who honestly wish to see Jesus there is always a tree which they may find and climb. Thousands of instances attest this. And no one who craves a sight of Jesus will be disappointed. He who saw Nathanael under the fig-tree and Zaccheus in the sycamore, sees every sign of approach to Him, and is always ready with his word of encouragement.

But there are many who do not wish to see Jesus. Their lives of indifference to Him and his claims, say plainly that so far from taking any pains to come in contact with Him, they do not even care to open their heart's door when He comes along the road of life, and condescends to knock, asking for admittance. And yet amongst these there are some who are considered models of moral excellence, who would proudly point to a stainless record, and ask, "What lack I yet?" If nothing else, surely the commonest gratitude. They treat no other friend so ill as this incomparable Friend, who for their salvation counted no cost too great, but poured out his life's blood for them. Even the stainless record of which they make their boast is probably due to restraining grace granted to the prayers of a Godly ancestry, whose faith they have not followed. And if from this point of view they are convicted of "defrauding" Christ of the glory due to Him, surely all honourable feeling will constrain them to "restore Him fourfold" in a life of future devotion and service.

A very noticeable lesson from our Lord's treatment of Zaccheus is his recognition of the good rather than denunciation of the bad in him. He did not use the unsightlinesses of his past life as weapons of attack. He anticipated the poet's vision, regarding them as stepping-stones of dead self to higher things, and crediting the man with good; as has been so beautifully pictured in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the good became possible. Let us take care; many a nature, groping in the darkness towards the light, has been badgered or suspected into deterioration.

The best thing in the world we can do for any one is to bring them into contact with the Lord Jesus, if by no other means, then by prayer. But a very potent factor is the revelation in our own lives of his power. Many in Jericho that day would be constrained to believe in Him, when they saw the avaricious publican so marvellously changed, and held in their hands, with amazed gratitude, his ample restitution. Let us be lights rather than trumpets. It is the noiseless, self-evidential shining of beautiful lives that makes men glorify our Father in Heaven, and the gracious Master, Christ Jesus, in whom we have been "created unto good works."

THE SYMBOLIC TEACHING OF THE CATACOMBS OF ROME.

By Rev. W. Preston, D.D., Runcorn.

Those halls of gloom and silence where peacefully slumber the remains of many a martyr, and many a bold confessor of the pure Christian faith, contain teachings of that faith embodied in symbol and sacred device.

The first employment of art by Christians is found in the decorations of the tombs which exist in the Catacombs. They sought "to typify in the earthly and perishing the abiding and eternal." What was done was devoid of all that was sensuous, and consisted of what was spiritual and ideal. It sprang out of what already existed; and selected that which was in harmony with the Spirit of the undefiled religion of Jesus Christ, and with the Scriptural faith of these early Christians. They distinctly rejected everything which savoured of superstition and of idolatry.

Some of the symbols were, indeed, common to pagan art, but they were elevated to a higher, nobler, and purer purpose.

THE REASON FOR THE SYMBOLS.

The main design of the employment of such symbols by these primitive Christians was as a precaution when persecution hotly pursued them. They wished to conceal the mysteries of their exalted faith from the profane gaze of ruthless foes, and at the same time to make manifest to their fellows the deep convictions of their souls, and the holy truths which they stedfastly believed. They desired to preserve them from being profanely caricatured by their enemies, who were quite prepared to do it. There was thus created an actual necessity for some religious symbolism, which amongst the initiated, would be a common sign of the common faith; and a vivid expression of religious feeling. Hence these symbols, though at times rude, and by their extreme uncouthness calculated to create a smile, must not be judged by the rules of a high critical standard, and cultivated taste. They were addressed to the eye of faith, not to the cultured taste. They spake to the inner, not to the outward sense. They were suggestive of eternal verities connected with the eternal world and the life beyond. Their true merit lies, not in any artistic beauty and elegance of design and execution, but in their extreme appositeness and deep religious significance.

The majority of the early Christians were illiterate. Many could not read any written language. Pictorial representation became a matter of necessity. Amid the numerous tombs in the vast labyrinth of the Catacombs survivors naturally desired some marks whereby they could recognise the last resting-places of beloved relatives and friends. These symbols supplied the want.

SOME SYMBOLS AND THEIR MEANING.

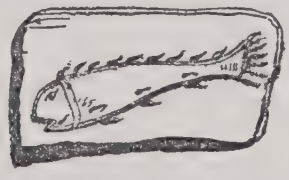
One of the most important of the symbols which the Catacombs reveal is the Fish. It is likewise one of the oldest. Here is an illustration of it, as frequently appearing in the catacombs:—



Significant teaching lies beneath the rude form. What is its nature? We have here an abridgement of the creed, and an emphatic profession of faith in our Blessed Lord and in his twofold nature of God and man. The Greek term for Fish is Ichthus. The initial Greek letters of the phrase, "Jesus Christ, Son of God, the Saviour," make up the Greek word which signifies "Fish." As one of the great Christian fathers says, "Ichthus is the mystical name of Christ, because He descended alive into the depths of this mortal life as into the abyss of waters." The Fish is frequently associated with some other symbol, such as the "anchor," to denote that the departed was at rest in Christ; or the "dove," to signify that in Him he had found peace.

Another very common symbol is the monogram of Christ. This is formed by the combination of two Greek letters (chi and rho) of the word Christos. Its form was thus:—

Frequently the Greek letters alpha and omega are added, in order to express "the first and the last," in allusion to the passage in the Book of the Revelation, where they are employed as titles of the Saviour and descriptive of his eternity. At times we find these letters reversed in their order. This was due to the ignorance of the artist who made the inscription. For example, you have here a rude illustration.

This reads as follows; "Tassaris in Christ, the First and the Last." The meaning of this is clear.

The Dove was another expressive symbol. It was employed to proclaim the peace of the deceased, his entrance into the "rest which remains for the people of God." It is the symbol of that "peace of God" which the Saviour's death hath purchased, and which is the believer's possession. It is found in conjunction with the monogram of Christ, and with the words, "In the peace of God," i.e., the beloved was resting in God's eternal peace, and had died at peace with God through the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Ship was employed in pagan art as the emblem of the close of life. The Christians adopted it, in order to denote the soul sailing over the troublous waves of times to the country beyond, where "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." "Faith, her sails filled with the Spirit of God, navigates." And in allusion to the language of St. Paul, who speaks of the Christian's well founded hope as being the anchor of the soul, one both "sure and stedfast," we find a rudely drawn anchor frequently represented.

As already remarked, Pagan types were used by the Christians, but with a new significance. Thus, the Peacock, the bird of Juno, is met with as the emblem of Immortality. The Stag, associated with Diana, spake of the Christian thirsting after the Water of Life; and perhaps with reference to the words of the Psalmist, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so longeth my soul after Thee, O God," and so on with other and different symbols.

But there was yet another species of symbol which was indicative of the name and the occupation of the departed. This had not the same religious significance as the former. For example, we meet with a rude engraving of a lion. The Latin for this is Leo. The figure is employed to point out the tomb of one whose name was Leo. Again, we have a cask, for which the Latin is Dolium. This was drawn to symbolise the name of Doliens. Another slab bears the outline of a little pig. In Latin this is Porcella. The inscription reads, "Here sleeps Porcella in peace." Frequently there are drawings of the implements employed in trade. These pointed out the employment of the deceased during his lifetime. With respect to there are but few found in the Catacombs. Images of suffering are not met with. However much the Cross may be regarded now as the emblem of man's redemption, in the earliest ages of the Church it was a badge of shame, and it was regarded with abhorrence. By the Romans it was viewed with repugnance. Its very name was an abomination. It was an object of scoffing by the heathen persecutors of the Christians. This being so, the Christians would not expose such an emblem to the gaze of their profane enemies. The first example of the distinct Cross in the Catacombs is of the year 407 A.D. Later on it became quite frequent. The monogram of Christ in time underwent transition, and the cross was the outcome. The Greek letter X was altered to an upright position.

The Cross was to the Christians not an object which pointed to a dead or suffering Christ, but to a risen and glorified Redeemer. It became an emblem of their faith in Him who "died for our sins, and rose again for our justification," and who sits at the right hand of the Majesty on high, as the alone Mediator between God and man. It was regarded as "a pledge of the resurrection rather than a memorial of the passion." But with reference to the CRUCIFIX, the Catacombs present no instance of it. It was about the year 586 A.D. that a representation of our blessed Lord's sufferings first appeared. This was in a small Syrian Evangelarium. It was not till the eleventh century that He was represented on a cross with outstretched arms; and it was not till the fourteenth century that the figure was presented nearly naked, the loins only being covered with a girdle.

The General Council of Constantinople, 754 A.D., condemned as idolatrous all symbols of Christ except the Eucharist. Pope Gregory II. became the ardent champion of image worship in the West. Thus the image of a dead Christ was thrust between men's souls and their ascended and living Lord. An idolatrous veneration of a lifeless image set in; and, contrary to Scripture, men were taught to walk by sight rather than by faith. In the Church of the Catacombs, deep though the natural gloom be, yet all is bright as respects the hopes of those who made them their home. Images of sadness have no place. They needed no graven image to remind them of their Master, or to reveal Him to their souls. His image and love were in their hearts.

From their hallowed tombs is loudly uttered the expression of the faith and hope which possessed them, of the peace and joy which filled them. They bore the ills of life resignedly. They met death with calm composure and assurance, confident of "the resurrection to eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The symbols depicted on their tombs speak the utterances of those for whom, "To die is gain"; yea, saith the Spirit, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. They rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE, DRURY-LANE.

Owing to improvements in the district, the house at 73, Drury-lane, in which this Home has been carried on, is to be taken down, and the Home has been removed to 31, Stanhope-street, Clare Market, where the committee have secured a suitable residence. This new Home was opened a few days ago by Rev. J. T. Coxhead, in the presence of many clergymen and friends interested in the work. The Home receives twenty resident girls, friendless in London and working at factories and shops in adjacent streets. A girls' club is held in the evenings, including sewing-classes, recreation, and temperance gatherings; ninety names are enrolled as out-door members, from fifty to sixty average attendances.

The sick and poor are visited and helped in various ways. There is also a Bible-class on Sunday afternoons, which the girls placed out at service are invited to attend and spend their "evenings out" at the Home. Will not the Lord's people help us to gather from the surrounding sin and degradation these young people into the fold of Christ? Communications may be sent to the secretary, Mr. W. F. Barrett, the Working Girls' House, 31, Stanhope-street, Clare Market.

"I MEANT TO SAY IT."

By MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

Office hours were over, and one by one the employés had gone away to their different houses, glad to escape the monotonous round of duty. Lewis Neilton, the master of the business, was a successful man; perhaps not too particular on some points, and certainly rather severe upon those who worked for him. As his aim had been success, he unscrupulously removed all obstacles in the way, Having obtained enough for general comfort, he was about to put out the bait that assuredly would win for him the coveted treasure of a handsome competency; he only needed the courage for the big speculation.

But on that day just closing, he was not in his usually sanguine state of mind. Taking his watch out as the last clerk went from his presence, he decided to wait for the later train, and began re-adjusting his papers, meanwhile giving time for thought. Then hastily shutting his desk and turning the key, he said, "What ails me? I'm a strong man, and years are before me, I have a wife and children to provide for; it is absurd to halt and fear. I'll shake this feeling off."

But he could not do as he would with himself. For surely there is in fervent and believing prayer a power which, cast around a life, must tend to hold it in control, and govern its movements; and Lewis Neilton was unconsciously realising the result of his father's availing prayers. He had been one of the noblest of Christians; his religion elevated and beautified all he touched. Leaving his son to face a hostile world, he bequeathed to him the heritage of holy influence and prayers, riches that remain in sure keeping against the hour of need. As yet, Lewis had not drawn upon that capital, although ever and anon he had some gentle reminder of such resource, as he gave a thought to that sainted one long gone, but wear and tear of business dulled and deadened the sensibility, and tended to the hushing of upright feeling.

In the railway carriage he shut his eyes, willing to sink into forgetfulness of everything for the while, and meet his family with a leisure mind. Opening his eyes wearily at the second station, he saw a face before him, and their glances met. No one else was in the compartment. Those men had met before somewhere. It was soon explained as, with questioning look, they accosted one another. Many years before, at the funeral of Neilton's father, David Evanson had stood beside him. Now that he clasped hands with the same man the memory of the magnetic power that drew him to that Christian youth all came to him afresh.

"You look weary. Is business prospering?" asked Evanson.

"Yes, but it's harassing work still. I made up my mind for success."

"You resolved on that when you left the town where your father died, I suppose?"

"Well, no; I can't say that I had made up my mind to anything then," said Neilton.

"I never could have thought mere business success would have been sufficient to fill the soul of the son of such a grand man."

"I don't say it is. When he passed away I had a wish for a higher and greater prosperity, but—here we are. Come over and see my place to-morrow; it is near where you are staying."

As Lewis Neilton turned out the large lamp flame that night he was saying: "A man has seen his best chances, I'm inclined to think, when he nears fifty; and yet here am I halting and questioning myself as though I had life before me. The wife may well say I am indisposed and quiet."

Another day of rush and whirl, and evening found him at home, and anticipating the visit of Evanson. An hour of pleasant tête-à-tête, and in the man of the present he saw the glowing spirit of the youth of those other days. He felt a re-kindling of the former admiration of goodness, which made his own course and conduct since then appear a blank.

"Yes, it is all good enough as far as it goes," he answered, as Evanson praised the house and grounds. "The success achieved is in a measure gratifying, but seeing you brings within my ken some larger vision of a higher kind of success. Once I touched its border line, and it was you, I'm thinking, who held me there. It was my halting time; all youths know such a period before they start on life's course; it comes once. Ah well! it's gone for me."

"I remember how anxiously I sympathised with you then. I longed to see you take a right stand, Neilton."

"Evanson, for God's sake why didn't you say so?"

"My dear fellow, you startle me. I meant to say it many times, but it never seemed the right time or place."

"I firmly believe, had you then and there spoken, and said to me, 'Play the man, take a brave stand as your father did,' I should have done it, and conquered. But other voices spoke, and I heard, and there's no standing still, and now I've had my run, and got my desires, but it will all end in that, one day," and Neilton snapped his fingers in derision.

"We Christians will have big arrears to account for. You only add to my opinion on this score. Three times lately I have been faced by my negligence. The lame excuse has escaped my lips, 'I meant to say it.'"

"I believe my father's influence has been graciously following me, somehow, all the way, Evanson, but the devil had his fling at me, and almost felled me. I was sinking to the pitiable level of a merely successful worldly man, and on the eve of a venturous speculation, when I hesitated. You met me, and brought me face to face with the starting point. I see my mistake, and stand here with a full hand and an empty soul."

David Evanson had swayed the lives of many, but in the presence of this confession of a misspent life, he only heard "The voice of thy brother's blood (wasted life) crieth to Me from the ground." For the word that might and probably would have saved the one before him, he only meant to say, but never did.

"In the name of your father's God, Neilton, forgive me. I meant to say it. Leaving the years of emptiness to his mercy, arise, and go to your Heavenly Father. We are both to blame, and need pardon, and may He save others through my painful experience, from having to say, when too late, 'I meant to say it.'"

ROME IN NEW SPAIN.

By J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

Nothing more truly represents the present condition of Mexico than its ancient symbol, dating back to Aztec times, the eagle striving with the serpent. From the time when, eighty years ago, the first determined attempt was made to throw off the yoke of Spain, then herself under the thrall of France, the real battle has been not so much with political foes without as with religious foes within. Had Mexico been, as the States of New England were, in substance Protestant, the victory would have been hers since 1821, when independence was first obtained, and all strife would have ceased when that independence was formally recognised by Spain in 1836.

Since that time, however, until quite recent years, the history of Mexico has been one of almost continual strife, stirred up by, and in great measure directed against, the Romish party. More bloodshed has been caused here by wires pulled from Rome than by all the purely native insurrections put together. The unsuccessful attempts to foist upon the Mexican nation a European ruler were made far more in the interests of the priestcraft than in those of the people, if indeed the people were ever considered; and as soon as complete independence was obtained, the authority of the ecclesiastical party was overthrown more thoroughly than in any European revolution.

Now, New Spain glories in greater religious liberty by far than does Old Spain, and with all the attendant benefits of extended education she is promising to take her place ere long beside the progressive nations of the world, having outstripped her parent in national prosperity as well.

Nevertheless, it will be long before, even in Mexico, so closely following the example of the United States, the evils of ages can be overcome, for the state of the bulk of the people remains extremely sad, since Rome, with all her zeal, has failed to raise them much above the level at which she found them. Better far than any words which a Protestant could pen, descriptive of their religious and social condition, are those of a Romanist writer, Madame Calderon, who had the boldness to say in her "Life in Mexico":—

> The cross was planted here in a congenial soil, and, as in the pagan East, the statues of the divinities frequently did no more than change their names from those of heathen gods to those of Christian saints, and image-worship apparently continued, though the mind of the Christian was directed from the being represented to the true and only God who inhabits eternity; so here the poor Indian bows before the visible representations of saints and virgins, as he did in former days before the monstrous shapes representing the unseen powers of the air, the earth, and the water; but he it is to be feared lifts his thoughts no higher than the rude image which a human hand has carved. . . . He kneels before the bleeding image of the Saviour who died for him, before the gracious form of the Virgin who intercedes for him, but he believes there are many virgins of various gifts, and possessing various degrees of miraculous power, and different degrees of wealth, according to the quality and number of diamonds and pearls with which they are endowed—one even who is the rival of the other—one who will bring rain when there is drought, and one to whom it is well to pray in seasons of inundation. . . .
> If anyone wishes to try the effect of strong contrast, let him come directly from the United States to this country; but it is in the villages especially that the contrast is most striking. Travelling in New England, for example, we arrive at a small and flourishing village. We see four new churches, proclaiming four different sects: religion suited to all customers. . . . The whole has a cheerful, trim, and flourishing aspect. . . . Everything proclaims prosperity, equality, consistency. . . . No beggars. . . .
> Transport yourself in imagination from this New England village to that of ——, it matters not which—not far from Mexico city. Look on this picture and on that. The Indian huts, with their half-naked inmates and little gardens filled with flowers, the huts either built of clay or the half-ruined beaux-restes of some stone building. At a little distance a hacienda, like a deserted palace, built of solid masonry. There, rising in the midst of old, faithful-looking trees, the church, grey and ancient, but strong as if designed for eternity, with its saints and virgins, its gold and silver and precious stones, whose value would buy up all the spare lots in the New England village; the leper, with scarce a rag to cover him, kneeling on the marble pavement.

Thank God, those artists have toiled already for twenty years, with a higher aim than this, and with higher results. Realising that the power has not been theirs, they can rejoice in much accomplished, giving thanks for many congregations drawn from the natives of the country, and serving God in all simplicity. Already the church buildings have been declared national property, those still occupied by the priests having to be hired like any other houses, and some of them are in the hands of the Protestants. The power of Rome is at last distinctly on the wane in Mexico, and the undimmed light of the Gospel is as steadily increasing.

There is probably no instance on record of a more complete subversion of one creed and the substitution of another than was effected three centuries ago in Mexico by the conquering Spaniards. No pretence at persuasion was made, only brute force and barbaric cruelty were employed, exceeding far the horrors attendant on the early spread of Islám, crimes which even roused the indignation of one of the priests themselves, the noble Las Casas, "the Indians' friend." Everything which savoured in the least of the primitive idolatry was destroyed with ungovernable zeal, and it must at least be said of these misguided pioneers, that their desire to possess themselves of the New World's gold by no means exceeded their desire to spread what they considered Christianity.

A Spanish writer has truly recorded of his people's policy in Mexico that "instead of civilising its inhabitants, first we baptized them, and then we cut their throats, the sooner to despatch their souls to heaven. Instead of opening up the New World to the industry and resources of the Europeans, we shut it in with a thousand locks, and set the Inquisition on the watch to prevent their entrance, as the angel with the sword of fire guarded the gates of Eden."

Such, then, having been the doubtful benefits conferred by Rome upon the Mexicans, can the enlightened churches to-day show too much zeal to counteract the effects of all the evil wrought there in the name of Christ? It would be impossible for me to urge the claims of this country upon the Christian public better than in the words of the venerable Dr. Butler, so long a faithful worker there. I quote from his "Mexico in Transition," which should be read by everybody interested in the subject, to which I am indebted for some of the points of which I have now made use.*

> Mexico is destined to a high mission on this Continent. Her evangelisation will aid gloriously in the redemption of Central and South America. Ere long the States beyond, who imitate her example, will receive her missionaries, who, using the same melodious language, will speak to those millions and so consummate the evangelisation of Spanish America.
> Living or dying, I appeal to thee for them—the Mexicans. Give them, O, give them quickly, thine evangelical faith and thy saving Gospel. Give in adequate measure for the consummation of the blessed change for these millions of dying men, that Mexico may become that "delightsome land" which the Lord of Hosts has promised, where her "sun shall no more go down, neither shall her moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be her everlasting light, and the days of her mourning shall be ended."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 20.—JEREMIAH XVI.

The Divine Prohibitions (1-9).—The prophet was forbidden to take a wife and form a home, because of the terrible devastation of human life that was shortly to ensue. Those were to be congratulated that had only themselves to think of, those were happy who had already died. There would be no going to the tomb, no funeral feast, no opportunity of conforming to the heathen ceremonies that had been introduced contrary to the Divine law (7). The anticipation of these coming sorrows should be enough to make joy impossible. Perhaps if we realised the impending fate of the ungodly, there would be a shadow upon our joy, and a sorrow in our gladdest hours.

Sin and its Doom (10-13).—That which was Israel's sin should be the bitterest ingredient in her penalty. They had walked after other gods, but in the land of their captivity they would have to serve those other gods day and night. It is said that brandy-drinkers can be cured by soaking every morsel they eat with brandy. Perhaps a surfeit of sin will be the most terrible retribution for sin.

The Restoration (14-18).—The Divine voice cannot utter judgment without mingling some tones of mercy. The outcasts shall be gathered home. When their iniquity and their sin have been recompensed doubly, i.e., to the full, then Jehovah will bring them up again from the land of the north. Have you been banished to that sunless region? He that scattered will gather. The Divine eye is on your track, and from every place the banished shall be brought home. Seek, O Christian soul, to be numbered amongst the fishers or hunters that God sends to recapture his own. The restoration of Israel shall surpass the wonders of the exodus.

Jeremiah's Prayer (19-21).—From his ministry of denunciation the prophet turns to pour out his heart into the ear of God. How tender the appropriation of the thrice-repeated my! From Jew he turns to Gentile with the assurance that they shall know Jehovah's name, and forsake their idols. Ask God to make men know his hand, his might, and his name.

MONDAY, MAY 21.—JEREMIAH XVII.

The Inveterate Evil of Judah's Sin (1-4).—The heart refers to the inward propensity, the altar to its outward expression. (2) Well would it have been if the children could have forgotten, but alas! our sins are the one thing our children do not forget. (3) Mountain is Jerusalem, field the land of Judah. (4) Even thyself, i.e., through their own sins. Nothing can make God break his eternal purposes save our faithlessness and inveterate evil. If we choose idols we shall have to serve enemies.

The Blessing and the Curse (5-8).—The Jews were always seeking alliance, either from Egypt or Babylon. What was true of them applies to us all. We cannot trust man without departing from the Lord. Our attraction is the measure of our repulsion. The heath is by some rendered the juniper, a lonely tree amid wastes of sand unvisited by refreshing dews. It is remarkable that those who trust in men are generally deserted by all men. On the contrary, the soul that rests on God is watered from his throne. Her roots travel to the river of life. Her resources in the unseen and eternal make her independent of the temporal and seen.

The Heart's Deceitfulness (9-13).—Deceitful, i.e. supplanting (Hos. xii. 3). Desperately wicked, i.e. sick (R.V.). The relevance of this following on the previous paragraph arises from God alone knowing which heart trusts and which departs. He alone can give every man according to his ways. (11) It was the ancient notion that the partridge stole the eggs of other birds, and hatched them as her own. "The covetous man is as sure finally to reap disappointment as the partridge which piles up eggs not of her own laying, and is unable to hatch them." (12) God's glorious throne is a source of defence to all who trust Him. (13) Whilst those who depart from him shall be forgotten, as a legend written in the earth is wiped out by the next puff of wind. Contrast Job xix. 23, 24.

TUESDAY, MAY 22.—JEREMIAH XVIII.

The Parable of the Potter (1-10).—God often speaks to us amid the industries of men. (3) God would fain mould us on the wheels of circumstance and of heavenly influence. Oh, to be plastic! (4) The failure was due not to the potter, but to the clay. There are many marred vessels in the world that have refused the moulding touch of God. But even now God can make something of them if they will let Him. (5, etc.) The whole drift of these words is not to show the indisputable sovereignty of God; but his willingness to adapt Himself to the varying conditions of human souls. If they turn from evil, he will repent of the evil. If they turn to evil, He will repent of the good. God's ways are invariable, it is we who change his dealings with us.

A Searching Appeal (11-17).—Before the evil descends, the call to repentance is heard. (12) In the case of Israel it seemed as though repentance was useless and their case desperate, and that they might therefore as well pursue their own evil courses. (14) Is there any man who would renounce the cool waters of the streams of Lebanon, flowing from it as a great rock in the field of Palestine, in order to drink of the brackish rain-water of the cistern? Yet this is what the chosen people had done in leaving God.

Conspiracy (18-23).—Exasperated by his words, the people determined to close the prophet's mouth, as men now attempt to drown the voice of conscience. To God Jeremiah turned. He pleaded for deliverance because of the good he had uttered, the intercessions he had made. From prayer he turns to bitter imprecations, which remind us of several of the Psalms. It would seem as if he were predicting their doom. Swift vengeance could not but follow on such inveterate wrong-doing, and of this he is the spokesman.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23.—JEREMIAH XIX.

The Breaking of the Potter's Vessel (1-13).—This incident took place in the valley of Hinnom, which had been specially associated with Israel's sin. It was to be the scene of her suffering the extreme penalty. (1) "Ancients," i.e., elders. (2) The east gate might be rendered better the pottery gate. (4) "Estranged," i.e., used it for purposes foreign to God's original purpose. (5) These sacrifices were made in this very place (2 Ch. xxxiii. 6). (7) The people had many plans for escaping the Divine judgments, but God would make them void. It is of no use for wicked men to scheme to evade the laws of the universe, which are the expression of the Divine will. Ultimately they must reap as they have sown. (9) This had been predicted long before, and was literally fulfilled (Deut. xxviii. 53; Lam. iv. 10). (11) Signifying the ease with which God would vindicate his righteous judgments. (13) 2 Kings xxiii. 12. As the roofs were flat they were used for altars of high places.

The Proclamation in the Temple (14, 15).—Wherever Jeremiah had an opportunity he was instant, in season and out of season, in warning the people of their impending doom. Oh for a similar eagerness, that we might be always on the alert to do the Divine errands, whether of warning or consolation! As surely as God brings to pass his judgments He will fulfil his promises.

THURSDAY, MAY 24.—JEREMIAH XX.

Jeremiah's Incarceration (1, 2).—Pashur was of the same order and family as Jeremiah. He had supreme jurisdiction in the Temple, and took the opportunity of arresting Jeremiah during his proclamation there, referred to in the previous chapter. To strike the prophet was indicative of extreme malignity. The stocks would keep the body in a very restrained and painful position. The Hebrew word means to rack. The gate of Benjamin was in the temple wall, and corresponded to the one in the city wall.

His Solemn Warning to Pashur (3-6).—The first name means prosperity or largeness on every side; the second, terror round about. (5) The fruits of labour and human industry. Thus John the Baptist remonstrated with Herod. Words like these were spoken by Knox, Huss, Luther.

His Lament and Complaint (7-10).—Deceived might be better rendered, as R.V. marg., enticed; as though Jeremiah felt that he had been led to undertake work which was too hard for him. (8) Whenever he spoke, he had to cry out and threaten violence and spoil. This was a very heavy burden to his tender spirit. (2) At times he resolved not to prosecute the prophet's work, but whenever he came to that conclusion, a rush of inspiration would sweep down upon him and allow him no option but to speak out against his people's sins. What a glorious confession! Thus should it be with us all. That burning fire that must have vent! May God, the Holy Spirit, kindle it within us. (10) His every movement was watched by spies, who eagerly waited to find some occasion against him; and even his familiar friends hoped that he might take some false step which would give them an occasion against him. (11) When God is with a man, how futile is the opposition of his foes. He goes from strength to strength. He stands like a rock amid the foaming waves. (12) See that there is nothing in your heart to hinder God's gracious and righteous work through your life, then leave all the rest with him. (13) The song of deliverance shall come in thy sad heart; so glad, so exquisite, that thou shalt forget thy grief. Let us, like Jeremiah, praise for the joy which is coming.

A Violent Relapse (14-18).—Some have thought that this paragraph of bitter complaint should follow ver. 7. But when we are passing through deep anguish the transitions are very violent. (10) Let him be kept in a state of perpetual alarm, as those are who live in a besieged city. Let us beware of indulging in impatience with the will or way of God, and imitate the meekness and patience of the Lamb of God.

FRIDAY MAY 25.—JEREMIAH XXI.

The chronological place of this chapter is supposed to be after xxxvii.

A Message from the King (1, 2).—Zedekiah was a very weak man. Though he did not dare to show it outwardly, he seems to have had a great regard for Jeremiah, and consulted him privately. Having repulsed the Egyptians (2 Kings xxiv. 7), the Chaldees were advancing for a second time to besiege Jerusalem. The king desired to know how far he might rely on the Divine deliverance. Pashur, not the same as is mentioned in xx. Zephaniah is mentioned 1 Chron. xxiv. 18.

The Prophet's Reply (3-14).—It was divided into three portions—to the city, to the people, to the king. (5) We are reminded of the wrath of the Lamb. Nothing is more terrible than when He turns against us and becomes our enemy. (9) This was a great test of faith. It seemed better policy to remain in the city than to go forth; but the latter was the way of safety and life. (13) Jerusalem is here personified, situated partly on hills and partly in valleys. The people thought their position impregnable; but if God was against them nothing could withstand the overflowing tide of his wrath. It appears as though, even in this eleventh hour, there was one last chance of deliverance, if only Zedekiah could have accepted it. There must be instant repentance and its fruits, and the Divine judgment would be stayed. (14) The fire of God will either consume or destroy. Happy the soul that dares to expose itself to be purged of sin, so as to be saved from final destruction.

SATURDAY, MAY 26.—JEREMIAH XXII.

Jeremiah sometimes groups his prophecies according to their subjects. This chapter belongs to the reign of Jehoiakin and Jeconiah. It may be associated with the former against Zedekiah to show that all the kings alike came short of the glory of God; Shallum, v. 11; Jehoiakim, v. 13-18; Jeconiah, v. 24; Zedekiah, xxi.

Promises and Threatenings (1-9). — "Go down," because the temple stood above the palace on Mount Zion. The kings of Judah taxed their people heavily to levy tribute for Egypt or Assyria, and took their labour, without pay, to build gorgeous palaces for themselves. (3) God, through his prophets, was always the advocate and patron of the poor and oppressed. Our treatment of such will largely determine his treatment of us. (6) The meaning seems to be: that though the royal palace was like Gilead for beauty, and Lebanon for majestic height, yet it should be invaded and rendered desolate as they had been.

The Fate of Shallum (10-12).—Josiah, slain in battle, was taken away from the evil to come, but he was greatly lamented; but Shallum, or Jehoahaz, his son, was carried off by Pharaoh-necho, never to see his native land again. It is thus that God still takes away his people from the evil to come (Is. lvii. 1).

The Fate of Jehoiakim (13-19.)—This refers to the building of his palace by forced labour. (15-16) Josiah enjoyed all that he really needed for the supply of his physical needs, without the ostentatious display to which his son gave way. His care for the right and just were clear indications that he knew and loved God. (17) The stability of a reign depends not on its massive structures, but on its righteousness and justice. (18) He was not to be lamented as his father had been, and his corpse was to be no more cared for than the carcase of a dead ass. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6 intimates that Nebuchadnezzar thought to carry him to Babylon. He probably changed his mind, and slew him outside Jerusalem, leaving his body on the road. 2 Kings xxiv. 6 refers not to his burial, but that he was gathered to his fathers by death (compare 2 Kings xv. 38 and xvi. 20).

The Fate of Jeconiah (20-30).—This is addressed to Jerusalem, who is bidden as a bereaved woman to go up to the highest mountains and lament. "The passages," better Abarim. (22) The Chaldees should sweep away king and princes as the sirocco withers the parched grass. (23) "How gracious," rather how pitiable. (24) Coniah reigned only three months and ten days; he died in Babylon, and none of his children came to the throne. (26) His mother (see 2 Kings xxiv. 6, 8, 15, 28). He had been idolised by the Jews, but God broke their idol. (29) Let us hear the word of the Lord speaking from the Cross and the Throne. Let its promises allure, and its threatenings deter us.

SUNDAY, MAY 27.

Moses Sent as a Deliverer.—Exod. iii. 10-20.

Golden Text—Isa. xli. 10.

For nearly forty years (Acts. vii. 30) the home of Moses has been with the Midianites, "probably in the vicinity of Sherm, at the southern point of the triangle of Arabia, between the two arms of the Red Sea." At first sight it appears like an utterly wasted period, in which God apparently forgot his sorely-oppressed people, and allowed the man who had been willing to help them to spend his years in a lowly and almost worthless service. But through those years of apparent neglect God was preparing his servant for the work of delivering his people. Forty years were not wasted if they taught Moses his own weakness, and led him to rest more entirely on God alone. He failed in his first attempt because he was too self-confident. He had to learn that the only man through whom God can do all things (Phil. iv. 13) is the man who of himself can do nothing (Jno. xv. 5). Teachers, let us learn the lesson.

During this period two other things had occurred. First, the bondage of the Israelites had become more bitter. It is at the extremity of our need that God's help comes. Not before, lest we should undervalue it; not after, for that would be too late. And, secondly, King Rameses II. had died (ii. 23). This was the king before whose wrath Moses had fled. His son Menephtah reigned in his stead. The body of this king has never been found; but "a monument in the Berlin Museum tells us that he lost a son by a very melancholy and sudden death." Was not that by the last of the ten plagues?

There is much instruction in the call of Moses, and in God's method of overcoming his objection.

The call came from the burning bush (1-3). The bush was a common acacia thorn bush, useless and fruitless. The same word is used in the parable of Jotham when he speaks contemptuously of the bramble (Jud. ix. 14). It was a fitting symbol of what Moses felt himself to be. He did not think so forty years before (Acts vii. 25); but he knows himself better now.

The fire was an invariable symbol of the Divine presence. See Isa. x. 17, and Heb. xii. 29. The action of fire is various: it destroys God's enemies (Lev. x. 2); it refines his people (Mal. iii 2, 3); and it empowers his servants (Acts ii. 3, 4). The fire in the bush represented God in the midst of his despised and oppressed people, and especially indwelling his consciously helpless servant. This is the vision every Christian worker needs to see. God's strength, like the fire, is always associated with those who are weak, like the bush. Without the truth this vision presents Moses could not have responded to God's call (10). With this truth clearly apprehended the most difficult task becomes possible.

The Difficulties of Moses are of three different kinds. The first concerns himself, and is met by a promise which contains an explanation of the symbol of the burning bush (11, 12). The bush is, of course, able to do nothing; but what is not possible to Him who dwells in it? To know that you can do nothing is not a reason for indolence, but a condition upon which God's strength can use you.

The next difficulty concerns the people. How can they trust an unknown God, and expect any deliverance from Him? If there were any God of whom they could speak as their own, and if He possessed power greater than the gods of Egypt, would He have left them so long under oppression? (13). God's answer is a declaration of his name, first as "I am"—Jehovah, declaring Himself as the ever living, self existent, unchangeable God (14). Then, as the God of their fathers (15, 16). The names of the patriarchs were not altogether forgotten. What God had been to them He was still to their descendants. Their misery and degradation did not lead Him to disown them, but commanded his truest sympathy (16), and the promises made centuries ago (Gen. xv.13—20) were about to be fulfilled. Hope begins for this people when their thoughts are turned towards their God. In what He is they are to find all their confidence.

The third difficulty concerns Pharaoh. Moses does not mention it, but God anticipates it (18, 19). The first demand was not for entire liberty, but for three days' journey, in order to worship their God. Pharaoh's refusal of such a modest demand commenced a conflict between Jehovah and the gods of Egypt (20). The ten terrible plagues which followed decided the issue, made Pharaoh willing to send his captives away, tended to wean his people from any love of idolatry contracted through their stay in Egypt, and increased their acquaintance with God.

For the Young.

THREE ORPHANS.

My Dear Children,—When boys and girls have lost their parents by death, they are, as you no doubt know, called "orphans." That is a sad word, bringing to mind a condition of loneliness and friendlessness. True it is that many orphans have kind friends; but, for all that, uncles and aunts and good neighbours are not always able, if indeed they are willing, to take fatherless and motherless boys and girls into their homes, and care for them as loving parents are so anxious to do. Consequently Homes called "orphanages" have been provided, in which all that is possible is done for the welfare of these needy little ones.

Ernest Wilfrid, a little boy seven years old, had some friends, kind though poor, with whom he lived for two years after the death of his father, who was an engine-driver living in Essex. He had had no mother for four years, and those who knew him, so bright and lively, were sure that he would be better off in an orphanage than living with hard-working relatives, who were unable to attend to all his wants. So I wrote to Mr. George Müller, of the Orphan Houses, Ashley Down, Bristol, and found out that this case was one of the very kind which could be received into his institution. A few days ago little Ernest was taken to Bristol, and now he is a happy inmate of one of the five houses in which about eighteen hundred other children are lovingly cared for.

I need hardly tell you that the members of this large family are not only educated for the duties of this life, but also instructed in the things which make for peace with God. They are apprenticed to suitable trades in order to earn a livelihood, and they are told of the Saviour, through whose death for our sin we may all, whether orphans or not, find pardon and become children of God.

Now Ernest had two sisters, Florence, aged nine, and Minnie, aged eleven. Would you like to know what became of them when their father died? I will tell you. After living for awhile with some friends, they were sent to an orphanage. I think you ask me "where?" Well, it was at Bristol, and the very one into which Ernest himself has now been received! So all three are under the loving care of Mr. Müller and his large staff of helpers, and they will see each other, and be happy together as they should be.

A grown-up brother, with whom he had been for some time living at Stratford, E., took Ernest to Bristol. Of course, our little friend was very glad to see his sisters; and for some days before taking the journey he was counting on the joy of seeing those from whom he had been separated so long. Really a year is not very long, but to Ernest, being only young, it seemed long. He was much surprised to find how Florence had grown since he saw her last. Minnie is not so strong; but it is hoped that she will now be happier and soon grow stronger. Both girls spoke of the kind treatment they receive. Ernest had heard of this before, and now, though the third member of one orphan family, he is enjoying the same benefits.

What a grand institution is that which Mr. Müller conducts! It is nearly sixty years since the work began, and thousands of dear children bless God for having provided such Homes and given them the advantage of them. There is accommodation for over two thousand children in all the houses, so that there is yet room for orphans whose relatives cannot support them. The expense of carrying on the work is very great, but this is met by gifts of money generously sent by Christian people from all parts of the world.

In a "Brief Narrative of Facts" (3d. Scriptural Knowledge Institution, 78, Park-street, Bristol), Mr. Müller every year gives an account of his work, and then he trusts God to lead his people to supply its great and pressing needs. This has always been his plan; and when we remember that for all these years the food and clothing, shelter and training, have been supplied, we see a very remarkable way in which God is really the Father of the fatherless. (Psa. lxviii. 5). Let us remember the New Orphan Houses, and pray for their many inmates and those who have charge of them.

WHATSOEVER.

"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."—John ii. 5.

I had high dreams, and visions fair and golden,
Of lofty service for the King Divine,
Not long ago—yet now the days seem olden
Wherein such visions and such dreams were mine.

Oh, not for me such service great and holy!
Never for me, his least and weakest one:
With heart grown humbler, and with thoughts more lowly,
I bring Him now one prayer, one prayer alone.

"Teach me to do thy will!" This, and this only,
Whether it be to labour or lie still!
To toil for others, or, unseen and lonely,
To walk in shadows; teach me but thy will.

If Thou would send some cup of cooling water
To some poor tired pilgrim passing by,
And calling me, shouldst say, "Bear this, my daughter,"
Should I not answer, gladly, "Here am I"?

If Thou wouldst have some message penned or spoken,
Or sung in simple lay that I could sing,
And Thou shouldst say, "Child, take for Me this token!"
Should I not joyful cry, "I go, my King"?

And so I ask not now a corner even
In yon wide, hallowed harvest-fields of thine;
Enough that such stray tasks as these are given,
Straight from thine own dear pierced hands to mine.

Only do with me all thy heart desireth!
For thine own glory "make the most of me";
Tune Thou my life to all thy will requireth,
Thy "Whatsoever!" shall its key-note be.

Yea, Master, "Whatsoever." Forward going,
Just when and where thy hand throws wide the gate;
Or staying still, if such thy pleasure, knowing
"They also serve who only stand and wait."

I need not tell Thee that I am not worthy
Of thy least errands. Lord, Thou knowest all:
How soon my heart from heavenly things to earthly
Is drawn aside: how oft I fail and fall.

Thou knowest. And if such as I Thou usest
(Upholding me by all-sufficient grace),
To Thee be all the glory, Thou who choosest
The weak things, and the foolish, and the base.

Here at thy feet I pray but to be taken
Just as Thou wilt, to use or lay aside,
Like some frail harp, whereon my King shall waken
What chords He please, so He be satisfied.

Sketches from Sicily.

BY REV. O. GOLIA MAURO.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CONVERT IN GIRGENTI.

D. M——, a young man of scarcely twenty years of age, is truly exceptional for his serious and spiritual character, which I can speak of with certainty, seeing and coming in contact with him, as I do, almost every day. If for the last eighteen months or two years his life has been that of a persevering martyr, his entire youth was consecrated to a search for God, who, indeed, has not left his sighs unanswered.

He was still quite a boy when he already began to take great pleasure in what the Catholic religion calls "spiritual exercises," frequenting all the churches, and reciting litanies and rosaries to the Virgin. Although he did not yet know the world, he had a fear of it, looking upon it as wicked, shunning all amusements with his companions, and wishing only to become a priest, and to spend his life in preaching and praying. And thus, on August 15, 1885, he entered the Seminary. There he thought to find lives of true humility and religious severity. On the contrary, he witnessed great indifference, unlovely and impure conversation, and even found out one day that his colleague R—— kept in a hidden box a little loaded pistol, whilst colleague B—— was nearly always armed with a long dagger; and almost all—some more, some less—would often steal and become intoxicated. Two years later he went in for the examination for removal from the Seminary to the Order of the Liguorini, hoping at least there to find the holy Christianity which he longed for; and so he quitted Girgenti for Naples.

On his arrival at the Convent they placed him in a cell which had been set apart for him for the six months of the noviciate, during which time he was forbidden to go down to the chapel; his window was continually kept closed, and neither air nor light could pass; he was not allowed to wash his face in the morning, but should he feel great need of so doing, he must first gain the permission of the Superior, and should he obtain this, he must afterways stay with his face all wet for a considerable time, and then ask also permission to be allowed to dry it.

As a novice, they obliged him to take his meals alone, either in the kitchen or stable, and in company with, and out of the same plate as, a big black cat, or else in the fowl-pen, with his dish on the ground so that the fowls might share the food with him, so that he began continually to say to himself, "I was searching for the Lord! I thought I should have found Him here, but what have all these things to do with the soul and my God?"

What astonished him more was the vigilant watch they kept over him, treating him as though he were a brigand—coming to surprise him in his cell at any moment and asking, "What are you doing? What are you thinking of?" Then, feeling more unhappy than ever, he decided to escape, and during one night he did so, and after a journey full of dangers, he reached Girgenti and his family. The Bishop then sent for him at once, to try and persuade him to go back to the seminary. "At the seminary, Monsignor," replied young D. M——, "they feast, they get intoxicated; they do not pray!"

"Unhappy one," answered the Bishop, "you are blaspheming and unworthy of my pardon," though notwithstanding that, he persuaded him to be a monk, and he became "Cappucino" at Canicatti (Sicily), where in blessing his cassock they gave him the name of "Frate Geremia."

But there too, he found, more than anywhere else besides—"the world"—a table covered with numerous and exquisite wines, conversation running always on eating and drinking, and other subjects still more sensual, etc., etc. But what especially made him come down from the clouds was the conduct of the Director of the convent—Father Gioacchino—who was looked upon as a saint; to such a degree that the peasants came from the country bringing him the garments of their children to bless.

One day Frate Geremia, as novice, had to accompany him on an almsgiving tour which he was undertaking. During this, he saw Father Gioacchino carry with him, concealed in each of his large sleeves, a small pistol loaded with powder and shot, and in the large alms-bag which covered his chest a long dagger — arms which, he said, he kept always ready to make use of against "his much beloved children"—as he called the faithful laybrethren—should the case require it. With such arms on his person, Father Gioacchino celebrated mass in no less than eight villages, everywhere being taken in triumph, and carried as a man of God. He at that time collected 6000 francs, but delivered up only 3000 to the convent.

Scandalised by these and other discoveries, our young D. M. resolved a second time to escape, "but before that," said he, "I will openly tell them what they are." And indeed, he was often to be found in the corridor, preaching against the sins of the convent, and proclaiming the anger of God. At his words the Capuchins in the midst of blasphemies cried out to the devil, and, saying that he was mad, they shut him up. When he came out again he continued as before, denouncing the sins of his colleages, until the Bishop sent to call him to Girgenti, and told him that he was expelled from the convent. At this news D. M. was filled with joy, but his religious cravings were by this time becoming arid, and he shunned the churches, and for a time passed into the horrors of scepticism, and even in a moment of terrible despair attempted to take his own life. But God, in his mercy, finally made Himself known to him in causing a Latin Bible to fall under his notice, which he perused and read secretly during the night, and which turned out to be his greatest happiness, for he found there what he had so much desired, and sought in vain of the priests, and in the convents, "the truth which satisfied his soul."

What especially opened his eyes, and spoke to him of God, was the "Sermon on the Mount," and after then the Gospel became the motive power of his life. But nobody took any notice of it, and although he was employed in a Government administration, they just treated him as a young monk, and amused themselves at his expense.

But, from the very commencement of a Protestant Church being founded there, D. M. began to be a chief centre of conversation on all sides,—and not only of conversation, but of persecution also—all of which he has borne with a faith, a perseverance, and a joy most exemplary. The Bishop set the example, for every time he met him, raising his right hand in the air, he makes the sign of the Cross, which means that he promises him absolution, if only he will repent and return to his fold. Soon after the gauntlet was taken up against him by the neighbours and street boys, whose greatest pleasure was to hurl at him as insults such epithets as "excommunicated Protestant," "sold soul," etc. Not satisfied with that, everywhere on the walls near his house they placarded calumnies concerning him. This hatred was also manifested at the office where he is employed; his most intimate friends began by refusing to shake hands with him, or to receive him at their houses, saying, that to have contact with him was dangerous; his colleagues, knowing how he condemns indecent conversation, take delight in carrying on, during their work, discourses of the impurest kind, whilst they load on him insults and the most infamous accusations; at the same time inciting the subalterns, and inviting them to mock at and disobey him.

One of his colleagues had two children ill, and speaking of D. M. said that the heretic had touched him, and thus brought misfortune and sickness into his family.

Little by little also the head of the administration began to show opposition, and to load on him much extra work. Until this time he had received 50 francs per month salary, and from last summer he should by right have had an advance, so he presented himself to the director with his request, and the answer he received was: "I have nothing to complain of in your conduct; you certainly do your duty, but I understand that you are a reformer. Therefore I cannot give you an advance." Not content even with that, he has forwarded false reports of him to the Ministry, with accusations of idleness, and of late has diminished his salary from 50 to 30 francs per month.

But the members of his own family are those who have rendered his existence very painful, and still continue to do so. As soon as anything goes wrong, they exclaim, "It is because we have an excommunicated one in the house." The father, an old man of eighty-two years, goes repeating everywhere that he no longer recognises him as a son. One day, noticing the summary of the law suspended to the wall over his bed, he immediately tore it down; and the mother, on the advice of the priests, forced open his drawers during his absence, and took out and burned all the religious books she could find. The confessor, time after time, has said to her, "If you wish me to pardon your sins, and not abandon you as a dog in the day of death, then you must not only chase your son from the house, but burn the very bed he has slept on, for the whole place is contaminated by him." His young brothers and sisters have naturally imitated the example of their parents; in his presence their delight has been incessantly to make in a loud voice the most wicked allusions to him; in his absence to take his writing paper, tear it up, and throw his ink on the ground, also in the food prepared for his meals (a plate of soup, for example) to contrive to put pieces of soap and other such obnoxious substances.

Indeed, at last, father, mother, sisters, and brothers carried things to such a length, that he was literally obliged to quit the house and take refuge at an uncle's. Of course, this just pleased them, but the uncle, after sheltering him for a month, persuaded him to return home again. This he consented to do, but the sacrifices and sufferings he has had to go through there have rendered his face pale, his eyes hollow, his body feverish and bent as with age. A hole, near the roof—damp and full of openings—now constitutes his sole apartment; whilst the family profess to look upon him as mad; and though he has always brought all his earnings home to his mother, now that it is only thirty francs a month his food consists entirely of boiled herbs. He is forbidden to take into the house either Protestant book or paper, and is indeed obliged to keep his Bible secreted under a tile in the roof; and as each morning they look at his little lamp to see how much oil has been consumed, he buys a few candles, so that in the quiet hours of the night, instead of sleeping, he may be able to read the books and papers which I lend him, and which he makes his companions and solace.

Of his health, which is declining, and his feet, which are coming out of broken shoes, and often soaked in the rain, he takes no heed. Each week he devotes a few coppers to the work here, and at the end of each month never forgets his contribution of half a franc. I can truly say I have never in my life known a Christian so detached from and disinterested in the things of this earth. When he sees me he often recites passages from the Psalms, many of which he knows by heart, and which much console him. In speaking of his sufferings and persecutions, he continually affirms, "If, as I pass along the street, they throw stones at me, the stones are but as sugar; it is Christ only who gives me strength to bear all. When I think of the imprecations of my old father, whom I love so much, then I suffer terribly in my heart, but my soul is kept joyful in the Lord!"

May our Heavenly Father, who has brought this earnest young disciple thus far, and given him strength and firmness under such bitter persecution, grant him grace to continue stedfast in the faith, and an abundant measure of that Love that "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

DUNKIRK SAILORS' HOME.

Dear Sir,—For the last fifteen years or more, Christian work has been carried on in Dunkirk among sailors of every nationality sailing under the British flag, in connection with the "Sailors' Home and Institute," established in this town. In this building there are comfortable reading-rooms for officers and men. Attached to the building there is a hall capable of seating some 200 persons, in which religious services especially for sailors are frequently held each week. The French Protestant pastor and his wife hold a temperance meeting in it once a week; and its use is at all times freely offered to any Christian worker who may wish for it.

During the past four months of the present year 266 ships have been visited in the harbour, much religious literature distributed, religious services held, and upwards of 1200 men have frequented the reading-rooms. The lease of the present institute terminating this year, we have been most fortunate in securing, though at an increased rental of some £50 a year, a much more commodious, and in every way more suitable, building in the immediate vicinity of the docks. We earnestly ask for sympathy and practical help from Christian friends in England. The hon. secretary, Mr. E. Seligman, 8, Rue St. Jean, Dunkirk, or the British Consul, Mr. E. Taylor, would willingly supply any information that might be asked for.—Yours faithfully,

W. J. Drought,
British Chaplain.

"EVEN TO HOAR HAIRS."

In the villages we find many aged persons, and some "rich in faith." One chilly March evening in visiting we called at a small house, and, rapping at the door, had the frequent "Come in" for an answer. On entering we found an old man reading John xi. to his wife. Putting one finger on verse 25, the old man looked and read, "I am the Resurrection and the Life." Then followed a sort of exposition of this kind, "Yes; He is the Life." It says, John i., "In Him was Life." Then Jesus said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." "I am come that they might have Life, and have it more abundantly." Or with Paul, "When Christ, who is our Life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory!" Those two aged faces beamed with joy.

One Saturday afternoon, in entering a village, reference was made to the Lord Jesus. An old man, digging in his garden, turned round, and, smiling, said, "He is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely." On another occasion, on the Cotswolds, when the same name was mentioned, an old man, resting in front of his house, said, putting his hand on his heart, "I've got Him here."

Once we were exploring one of the loneliest, narrowest lanes in Herefordshire, looking for hop-pickers in the moonlight, when we came to a few houses. Going to the first, I came to the door with "Will you accept a little book? It tells of the Lord Jesus." An old man's voice inside said, "Come in; we likes to hear about Him here." We were soon seated round the fire, and the old man began tell how most of his life he feared God—was afraid of Him. "But," said the old man as I read, 'He loved me, and gave Himself for me;' then, 'Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins;' and again, 'Perfect love casteth out fear, because fear hath torment,' the fear went, and love filled my soul." I found, too, that his wife was a Christian. He described his daughter as a seeker, but when I told Christ's word, "Seek and ye shall find," she said, "I have found Him."

Three years passed away, and we came to the same lane, but, failing to find anyone at home in the houses, we went a little further, to a pretty spot to get our midday meal. Soon an old man came along, and we found it was the same. We gathered round him for a little prayer and praise. The old man said, "I am eighty-two years old, and I do so long to be with the King, that I may be like Him." The next year we were talking about him, on the same spot, when a young man came up. We asked if he knew our friend, when he said, "He was my father." The previous winter his children were summoned to see him cross the river. "Do you want anything?" they asked. "No," was the answer; "Jesus is waiting for me." The question was then put to the son, "And what do you think of the Lord Jesus?" "I can't help loving Him," he said; "seeing what He did for father." Some distance off we met with another of the old man's children, who gave a similar testimony.

On the other hand, we have met with old people seventy and eighty years of age who received the truth as a little child. One old man, eighty-four years old, had been a notorious drunkard for many years, but it pleased the Lord to afflict him, and direct us to his sick room. Slowly the light dawned, and during the remaining years of his life, for he lived to be ninety, he gave a clear testimony that he was born again. An old farmer, over eighty, probably a backslider, came in our path. He was forsaken of everybody, and almost dying alone in a small cottage. He was anxious, and confessed what a sinner he had been. We knelt beside him, and in prayer our thoughts were turned to the prodigal. "Lord," we said, "our friend here is like the prodigal in the far-off country, may he say with him now, 'I will arise and go to my Father.'" "Amen," said the old man, and other words expressing similar thoughts. After a pause, the prayer was, "And not merely may he say it, but may it be said in heaven to-night, 'And he arose and came to his Father.'" Again the cry went up to heaven, "Amen, Lord, amen." We lingered, for it seemed as though the meeting had come. Slowly we went through the narrative, and we seemed to realise, "This my son was dead, and is alive again." "And we began to be merry!"

MR. HUGH D. BROWN,

BAPTIST PASTOR, DUBLIN.

The name of Pastor H. D. Brown, of Dublin, is becoming more widely known. A brief sketch of his past life and labours will interest many.

There is little worthy of special record as to his early years. Born in 1858 of godly parents, he was educated amid the influences of a Christian home. His father was a Scotchman, who by his rare mercantile ability started and built up one of the largest and best-known business houses in the city of Dublin. Like Peter of old, whom he not a little resembles in his quick, nervous, impulsive disposition, Mr. Hugh Brown was led to the Saviour by his brother, and he soon proved the genuineness of the change by active personal work for his new-found Master.

After a successful career in Trinity College, Dublin, from which he graduated as moderator and medallist in ethics and logic, he proceeded to legal studies, having chosen the Bar as a profession. To the Bar he was duly called, and he practised for about two years. It was a profession for which he was excellently fitted by nature, circumstances, and attainments. But a higher sphere called him, and a heaven-born ambition moved him to obey the summons. A small church connected with the denomination to which he had united himself, happening at the time to be without a pastor, extended to him a unanimous call, which he accepted. It had long been the growing desire of his heart to obtain an opening for Christian work larger than that which he could occupy while pursuing his profession; here seemed the answer to his prayer.

The sequel proved the church's choice to be a wise one. The small church, under God's blessing on the new ministry, grew so fast and strong that its boundaries soon became too straitened for it, and under the stress of its continued growth, new accommodation had to be sought. A handsome and completely equipped building was erected, with seating accommodation for one thousand people. With the opening of the new chapel came an era of even greater blessing. The pastor's attitude largely explains this, he said:—"Each gift in our church should be utilised, developed, and consecrated to the Redeemer's glory." A pastor with such views will soon be surrounded by a band of willing and gifted co-workers. Such was the case here: new branches of Christian activity sprang up on all sides, until the chapel has become the centre of a network of agencies extending in every direction; a heart with many arteries, sending life-blood to the outermost bounds of the city, and making its beating felt throughout the country—north, south, and west.

In 1892 two important developments were started. The first and most significant was Rockefeller House, named after Mr. J. D. Rockefeller, of U.S.A., who generously aided in the enterprise. This is an Irish Baptist Training Institute for the equipment of young men for better Christian service, whether as pastors, evangelists, or business Christians. The other new departure, on the north side of the city, Glendinning House, received its name from Mr. R. Glendinning, of Belfast, to whose Christian munificence its existence is due. It is a home for aged ladies of limited means, who are furnished free with every necessary, except food, which they provide for themselves. Connected with the home is a small chapel, where evangelistic services are held.

But the influence of Pastor Brown has not been confined to his own city. In 1887 he was elected hon. sec., and, subsequently chairman of the Irish Baptist Home Mission, a position which he has filled ever since. Connected with the Harcourt-street Church was an Evangelists' Association, which has recently been amalgamated with the Irish Baptist Home Mission. Several new evangelists have been sent out; four new chapels have been built at Belfast, Cork, Limerick and Tubbermore. The churches already existing have been stirred up and strengthened.

What are the secrets of the great success which has accompanied Mr. Brown's work? They are, humanly speaking, three in number. First, the heartfelt prayer of his people; second, his determination to preach the whole counsel of God; third, the absence of "ministerialism." He speaks as a man to men, and receives an honest and intelligent hearing.

As a preacher, Mr. Brown is Biblical, textual, expository. That such preaching is still attractive and abreast of the needs and feelings of the day is fully proved by the large congregations which fill Harcourt-street Chapel both morning and evening. His sermons, delivered extemporaneously, are full of apt illustrations, brilliant metaphors, couched in eloquent language. Practical work keeps Mr. Brown from writing much; beyond a volume of sermons, recently published by Messrs. Alexander and Shepheard (London), and such other of his sermons as have been issued in single numbers, little has come from his pen.

We sincerely wish for Mr. Brown health and length of days, that he may carry on and still further develop the important work committed to his care.

TRAINING FOR SERVICE.

In Mr. D. L. Moody's management of the Columbian evangelistic campaign in Chicago last year, he was fortunate in having at command one indispensable agency on which he could draw for helpers in every emergency. This was the Chicago Bible Institute, organised by himself, several years ago, for the training of Christian workers for all departments of service. There he found a small army of trained young men and women ready and willing to serve at call.

Some interesting facts concerning former students of the Institute have recently been collected, showing that already not less than 129 of their number have gone forth into the field of missions, sixty-four into Africa, Burmah, China, Japan, Corea, India, Ceylon, Persia, Syria, Siam, Turkey, Micronesia, the West Indies, South America, and Mexico, and fifty-five have taken up home mission work, in city and country, among Indians and Freedmen, and for Jews and Greeks. There are twenty-eight engaged as secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, pastors' assistants, and church visitors. Over seventy have become pastors of churches in eight different denominations; forty-one have entered into evangelistic work, and eight are Gospel singers. There are twenty-three in various positions of responsibility, as superintendents of mission halls, principals of academy and college, secretaries of various Christian organisations, matrons of industrial schools, choir leaders, colporteurs, &c. A large number have also entered various theological and medical schools, to secure fuller preparation for home pastorates or foreign missions.

Thus already have the working forces of the Kingdom of God been strongly reinforced through the agency of the Chicago Bible Institute, while hundreds more are passing through similar training, preparing for work of a similar character.

A CHILD, with its highly organised and delicate constitution, is the most dependent and helpless being born into the world; he needs most care, and is unable to provide himself with the necessaries of life for a much longer period than the offspring of any other living thing. Therefore it is that a child's necessities, his dependence and helplessness, constitute his right and claim upon others.

THE DIVINITY STUDENTS.

BY REV. J. B. STURROCK.

In a small room a student sat at a table which was covered with books and loose sheets of paper. He was upwards of thirty years of age, having begun his studies for the ministry after he had been in business for a considerable time. During his course at Aberdeen College and the Divinity Hall, he had supported himself by acting as a missionary in connection with a large city congregation. As his labours in the poor district which was assigned to him had been greatly blessed, he was regarded by his fellow-students as the one among them who was most skilled in guiding souls to peace and joy in believing. This gave him great influence among them, as many of them felt that from his conversation they got hints which would be of invaluable service to them in the practical work of the ministry.

Late one night, towards the close of his last session at the hall, whilst he was busy over his studies for the next day, he was agreeably surprised by a visit from one he had every reason to respect. This was a young man who was acknowledged by all as the ablest student of his year. He had carried off the leading bursaries and prizes, and was now about to be licensed to preach the Gospel. Hitherto he had thrown his whole strength into his studies, and these had so absorbed him that the question of his individual salvation had never troubled him. Now, however, that he was to go forth to proclaim glad tidings to his fellow men, it took hold of him with a firm hand and shook him to the centre of his being. Hence his visit to his humble class-fellow the missionary, whom he addressed somewhat as follows:—

"I'm here on an errand that will surprise you, for I have come to ask you, What must I do to be saved? Quite so; I see you feel inclined to interrupt me by some remark about that paper on the 'Atonement' which I recently read in the class; but I tell you frankly that, although I can set forth all the doctrines of grace to the satisfaction of my professors, I don't know Christ savingly. I see the scheme of redemption quite clearly, and could pass a creditable examination upon it to-night; but, alas! all the knowledge of it which I possess yields me no peace of conscience and no restfulness of heart. Now, you have peace and joy in believing; and what I wish to know is this, how did you find these priceless possessions?

"Again I see you would interrupt me, but allow me to proceed, for I have not yet reached the heart of my difficulty. Very likely you meant to remind me of Paul's advice to the Philippian jailor, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.' Well, that leads me right up to my difficulty, for I find that the salvation this anxious inquirer experienced on believing instantly introduced him to joy—'He rejoiced with all his house.' And here am I without joy, though I am familiarly acquainted with all that the Bible reveals concerning Christ. I cannot, therefore, have that faith which Paul recommended, and I cannot, therefore, be saved. Now, I have resolved that I will not take licence until I am able to offer to others what I have received myself—a salvation which brings me joy. Can you, by God's help, guide me to this?"

The missionary listened with breathless interest to this confession of his companion's condition, and, before answering, retired to an inner room to collect his thoughts and breathe forth a prayer for light and leading. On coming back, he was thus addressed by his visitor: "I see it all, the gift of God which is eternal life is now mine, and I have joy. When you left me, I took up this Bible which was lying open on the table beside me, and began to read without any set purpose. I had not got through many verses when I became deeply interested in this passage, which I will read to you, 1 John v. 9-12: 'If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which He hath testified of his Son. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made Him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.'

"These words have brought light to my darkened mind and peace to my troubled heart. Up till now I have been looking upon the Bible simply as a book, and not as God's testimony to me, a sinner, concerning his Son Jesus Christ, the Saviour. I never before felt my responsibility in dealing with it as God's testimony concerning Christ. I have felt that now, and, instead of rejecting this testimony and thus 'making God a liar,' I have accepted it—yes, I have 'set to my seal that God is true.' I now see that in this book, which is well called God's Word, God testifies that Christ is the Saviour, the only Saviour, the all-sufficient Saviour, the Saviour sufficient for me; and on Christ thus commended I have cast myself. Yes, yes, I now 'believe on the Lord Jesus Christ' and have the salvation experienced by the Philippian jailor, for I 'rejoice with an exceeding great joy.' Now I will become a preacher of the Gospel."

His was a remarkable conversion experience, which ushered in a short but powerful ministry. His first address was given in a humble mission hall, and he had souls for his hire that very night; but though his services were greatly sought after in the home field, he accepted an appointment in the West Indies, where his ministry was accompanied with continuous tokens of the Spirit's presence and power. The climate was, however, too trying for his constitution, which was never very robust; and after three years' work he was taken to his reward, leaving behind him a name which is still remembered by every devoted Christian in the island where he laboured.

INEBRIATE WOMEN.

A quiet but effective work for the reclamation of women who have fallen victims to the insidious power of alcohol is carried on at West Holme, Hounslow. The hon. sec. is Miss H. S. Pollock, Woodlawn, Hanworth, Middlesex. In her little report, lately issued, she says:—

"The question is often asked, 'Can a woman ever be entirely reclaimed from habits of intemperance?' Speaking from personal experience, we answer emphatically, 'Yes.' The work is difficult, but by no means impossible. Each case varies, and must be dealt with according to its own peculiar circumstances: some must be kept in their own homes, while for others the treatment in an Inebriate Home is better. Two aspects of this evil must be always kept in view—the moral, in which it must be acknowledged to be a sin, and the physical, in which it must be considered as a disease.

"There is abundant proof that a year is the shortest time in which to hope to effect a lasting cure; we have ourselves proved it in West Holme, nor do we find our patients themselves think otherwise. Several who have returned to their own homes, or have entered afresh into service, and who are doing well, declare themselves to be grateful for the pressure brought to bear on them that induced them to remain the full time in the Home. This we know, however, is not in itself sufficient; for in each case it is the Divine touch alone that can complete the healing.

"Another year has passed, with its usual round of labour and teaching, and we have had cause for much praise. Our wants have been supplied, a higher spiritual tone has characterised the work, and we have been conscious of his presence in our midst, whose glorious power is mighty towards those who are lost and out of the way. Touching evidences have been given that the weekly Bible class is valued: many who have left write asking to be specially remembered in prayer at the class; and from time to time they come to spend Friday afternoon with us to be present again themselves, and recall thankfully the help and comfort God's Word has been to them."

Twenty patients are received. Friends can materially help by furthering the sale of the needlework made at the Home.

MR. NIX'S NEW SPHERE.

After seven years' faithful and efficient service as organising secretary of the West London Mission, Mr. Josiah Nix is removing to a new and wider sphere in connection with the Regent-street Polytechnic. To gain some particulars with respect to this change and to his plans for the future, a representative of The Christian called upon him.

"What is the meaning of this new move, Mr. Nix? I had come to regard you as a sort of fixture at the West London Mission."

"It is true I have been organising the work there, to a great extent, since its commencement. My principal centre of work has been Wardour Hall. As you know, that is not now available for the work of the Mission, owing to the action of the Woods and Forest Commissioners. It was felt both by Mr. Price Hughes and myself that under the new arrangements my sphere of work would be too contracted, and we came to a mutual understanding that I should hold myself open to enter any suitable opening that might present itself." We need not repeat the details of the interesting story that Mr. Nix told of how his services came to be secured for the Polytechnic, in a providential way, without any seeking of his own. The general secretary, Mr. Robert Mitchell, now gives his exclusive attention to the educational department, which is so extensive and important that it is subsidised by the London County Council. This change created an important vacancy on the staff, and there can be no doubt Mr. Nix is the very man to fill it.

"What will be your duties under the new arrangement?" inquired the visitor.

"There are something like thirteen thousand members of the Polytechnic," replied Mr. Nix; "it is the busiest centre of young people in the world. My principal work will be to try, by adaptation, to win these young people to Christ. The ruling powers will provide me with a big hall somewhere, in which to preach to these young men and women on Sunday nights. My aim will be not only to get them converted, but to find suitable spheres of Christian work for them. I have long prayed earnestly for the conversion of the West-end of London; I begin to see that here is a marvellous opportunity. The best of our young people in all parts of the country come to the West-end, and I am hoping that many will be led to give themselves to Christ for his service all over the world."

During the coming summer months Mr. Nix will take charge of the "Poly" cruises to Norway, and we foresee that under his conductorship many hundreds of young people will have a good time, in every sense of the word, during their holiday.

"How will all this affect your Epsom campaign, Mr. Nix?" our representative asked.

"Providentially, we last year started the Race Course Mission. I shall undertake the campaign on Epsom Downs myself in the early part of June. This year it will be more especially under the auspices of the West London Mission. The authorities at the Polytechnic are in full sympathy with it, and will be glad for me to continue this and any other aggressive work."

"How many helpers will you have at Epsom?"

"I expect to have about a hundred young men to help during the week. Of course, we shall have the tent as usual, and we shall want all kinds of provisions for the large staff of workers. I shall require about £50 in money; and in addition to that fifty thousand tracts. One lady has already set an excellent example by sending me about £5 worth of Gospel temperance pamphlets. I have found that the most effective thing for distribution on the race-course is the penny Gospel; many who are not credited with having any love for the Word of God have come and asked for a copy. A kind friend last year sent me £5 for this purpose. I am hoping some one will send me £10 this year; and I should like it soon, as I am anxious to mark all the copies with red ink at John iii. and Luke xv. Everything that I have mentioned can be sent to my address, 124, Gower-street, London."

Before parting with Mr. Nix, he asked our representative to mention—first, that in the campaign at Epsom he is desirous to work in harmony and Christian love with all others who are trying to do the same kind of work; and second, that he continues to be on the friendliest terms with Mr. Price Hughes and Mr. Mark Guy Pearse, and he will take every opportunity of rendering what service he can to the West London Mission, where he has laboured so long and so happily.

The May Meetings.

Medical Missionary Association.

The annual meeting of this Association was held in the Morley Halls, W., on Wednesday week, the Hon. R. Moreton presiding.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell presented the report, from which it appeared that the interest in medical missions continues to grow. The past twelve months showed a larger number of recruits than has yet appeared in any one year. The actual number of new medical missionaries was thirty-six, but by reason of deaths and withdrawals the permanent increase amounted to twenty. The friends of medical missions have cause to rejoice that both in the Church and in the circle of medical student life there is a deepening concern for the evangelisation of the world, and with it a fuller appreciation of the power of the medical missionary agency. The Christian life in the medical schools of this country demands much prayer from the churches. In these schools we have an army of men who are not needed at home, but who are sorely needed in the heathen and Mohammedan worlds; and seeing that in so many of the schools there now exist associations of Christian students who might be, by God's grace, the torch for a great spiritual conflagration among thousands of their fellows, there is a special call for definite and earnest prayer in their behalf. The report showed the steps taken by the Association to further this end, and touched briefly on movements in various fields, and the work of the Islington, Canning Town, and St. Pancras Medical Missions.

Dr. John Dixon gave an account of medical mission work among the Jews, telling how prejudice had been removed and bitterness of heart allayed by the ministration of Christian love in the time of sickness and pain. The need for such work among the East-end Jews is very great, and the speaker gave one or two cases to show that its results are real and permanent.

Dr. P. Anderson told of similar service among the heathen, as illustrated by fifteen years' experience in Formosa. As regards medical aid the people are deplorably destitute, the native remedies being worse than useless. Dr. Anderson believed that, next to the Gospel, the greatest blessing we have bestowed on China is quinine, owing to the prevalence of malarial fever. He showed how willingly the people hear the Gospel, and stated that in all his experience he had met with only a few refusals to listen, and in these cases the patients proved to be Roman Catholics. He urged specially the need of trained Christian nurses for China.

Dr. A. C. Hall, of the Islington Medical Mission, spoke of medical mission work at home among our own poor, where it is needed just as much and proves just as effective as in other lands and among other races. God is greatly blessing this noble ministry in the back streets of Islington.

British Jews' Society.

The annual meeting of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, which was held on Wednesday last week in Exeter Hall, was invested with a special interest consequent upon the present being the jubilee year of the Society. It is the joy of the friends of this organisation to look back upon a grand history, the pages of which bear the names of Ridley Herschell, Murray McCheyne, and Andrew Bonar. By special efforts, the friends of the work are laying themselves out for great things in the future, in reliance upon the God of Abraham, whom so many converts of the Society delight to know as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Society has twenty-six missionaries and many voluntary helpers, engaged in work in various countries of Europe. Like other mission agencies, it has of late suffered greatly from shortness of funds, and the balance-sheet presented by Mr. F. Y. Edwards, the treasurer, showed a deficit of £1800. Financial stress has driven the committee, with painful regret, to inform the missionaries that their stipends must for the present be on a reduced scale. The work of the past year, which was outlined by the secretary, Rev. John Dunlop, evidently yielded much encouragement to those who engaged in it.

The president of the Society, Rev. Dr. Hiles Hitchens, occupied the chair, and after an address by Rev. Richard Roberts, of St. John's Wood, on God's abiding love for his ancient people, speeches were delivered by two gentlemen who were admittedly new to the platform of Jewish missions. The first of these was Rev. Henry Harries, M.A., of Clapton Park Congregational Church, who spoke with power of the duty of Christians to evangelize Israel. Professor Reid, of Cheshunt College, was of the same mind, and enlarged upon the dearness of this people to the Redeemer's heart.

Miss Georgina Watson, who has for some years laboured in Palestine, told of the disappearance in many parts of the East of the prejudice which has stood in the way of the Jews learning of Christ. An aged missionary told her that fifty years ago the faith of Abraham, the meekness of Moses, the patience of Job, the wisdom of Solomon, and the wealth of Rothschild were necessary before any impression could be made in Jewish work; but the conditions are no longer exacting in the same degree. Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., urged Christians to renewed devotion in the work; and Rev. L. Rosenberg, missionary of the Society at Adrianople, followed with an interesting story of personal effort.

Missions to Seamen.

The annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen was held last week in St. James' Hall, the Bishop of Chester presiding over a large attendance. Comr. Dawson, secretary, read portions of the annual report, which stated that the total receipts were £33,454 4s. 5d., being, apart from legacies, an increase of nearly £3500 over the contributions of any previous year. But the increase was mainly in the London fund for the erection of the Missions to Seamen Church and Institute for the port of London, which still required £5000 to complete the buildings.

The Bishop of Chester felt that the title "Missions to Seamen" did not adequately represent the scope and operations of the Society. It ought rather to be the "Missions through Seamen," as those men were missionaries really of England, of civilisation, and of Christianity. Lord George Hamilton said they were called upon now-a-days to give their support to a great number of good works, but those who did all they could to improve the condition of the sailor, morally as well as spiritually, were especially worthy of sympathy, as there was not a class that deserved help more than the seafaring community. The other speakers were Sir J. Colomb, Revs. J. B. Barton, Canon Austen, G. F. Wilson, and Sir W. Willis.

Protestant Reformation Society.

While the great Protestant meeting noticed in our last was being held in the Exeter Hall, the annual meeting of this Society was held in the lesser hall. The report, read by Captain Williams, the secretary, described the Gospel mission work carried on by the Society among Roman Catholics, an account being given of efforts put forth at Weston-super-Mare, Northampton, Oxford, Manchester and Salford, Leamington and Warwick, Leicester, Halifax, Hastings and St. Leonards, Mayfield, Bristol and Clifton, Bournemouth and Boscombe, Wimbledon, and Edinburgh.

General Sir R. Phayre, who presided, very cordially supported the claims of the Society, and told of his own observation of its work at Hastings. Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D., gave some particulars of the visitation work of the missionaries, and passed on to speak of the lamentable progress which Romanism is making in our land. Rev. Dr. S. Wainwright followed with a vigorous address, dealing with some recent statements made by Cardinal Vaughan. Proceeding, he said that he believed in great plainness of speech in this matter, He asked how it was possible to be loyal to the Lord Jesus and yet to designate this baptized Paganism as the Christian religion? He knew it would be said that he was singular in this denunciation, but he counted it an honour to be singular in a worthy cause. He was not alone in this matter, for the greatest and wisest of his countrymen, long before the Reformation, thought the same as he thought to-day. At the time that England was most anti-Papal she was at the zenith of her power. Let them, therefore, determine that as antiquity had been faithful to them, so would they be equally faithful to the posterity which they hoped would follow them. The great Bishop Burnet had told them to learn to view Popery in its true light. "Popery," the Bishop said, "is a mass of imposture," and the speaker was prepared to maintain that, in any suitable place and on any public platform. Popery was the same to-day as when she slew the martyrs and subjugated the liberties of the people.

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. W. J. Fraser and Rev. W. R. Mowll.

Lord's Day Observance Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday week. The report read by Rev. Dr. Peake showed that the income had been £1572, and the expenditure £1397. The report entered into some detail of the various public events bearing upon the work of the Society which have transpired during the year. "Our publications and special circulars have supplied materials for the advancement of Sabbatarian principles and the repelling of Secularist attacks, in well-nigh every place in which the Sunday question has been raised." The activity described in these general terms took many forms both in and out of Parliament.

Sir Douglas Fox, who presided, reviewed various movements on the Continent in favour of a better observance of the Lord's Day. In reference to the Registration Bill now before Parliament, the speaker pointed out that polling was to take place on Saturday. If the counting of votes was not to be held over until the Monday, the arrangement would lead to a wholesale secularisation of the Sunday, and perhaps eventually to the adoption of Sunday as the day on which to hold the elections themselves.

Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot did not think, so far as his own observation went, that Lord's Day desecration was increasing. Rev. J. B. Barraclough spoke of the success which had attended his starting a Juvenile Sabbath Union, pledging those who joined it not to buy or sell or cause unnecessary labour on Sunday.

General Touch moved a resolution in a few earnest words; and Rev. H. Stevens seconded it, making especial reference to the recent Sunday opening of the Guildhall loan collection of pictures. The excuse for such opening of picture-galleries on Sundays was often, he said, that they would draw away persons from the public-houses. It was forgotten that the public-houses, with the exception of the hours 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., the hours when the majority were taking their mid-day meal, were shut all day until six o'clock. The competition of the picture-gallery, therefore, was not with the public-house, but with the Sunday-school and the House of God.

Irish Church Missions.

The annual meetings of this Mission, held last week at Exeter Hall, were well attended. The Dean of Norwich, who presided, discriminated between Roman Catholics and Roman Catholicism. Roman Catholics called forth sympathy and prayer, but Roman Catholicism was very different, and it was our bounden duty to protest against its teachings. Although friends of the Society spoke most reasonably of their difference of opinion, they were called bigots, partisans, and, of course, narrow-minded. They were taunted with being the remains of old-fashioned Protestants. In closing, he commended the work of the Society as most urgent and most blessed.

The Secretary presented an abstract of the report, showing many tokens of God's favour. Amongst these were—(1) an increased spirit of inquiry, and a corresponding increase in the circulation of copies of God's Word; (2) the development of the itinerating work in fairs and markets; (3) the public renunciation of Rome by fifty-six adult converts of the Dublin branch; (4) the addition of a goodly band of new workers; (5) the adoption of a definite scheme for extension, and the effective occupation of Cork, the third city of Ireland; (6) the gracious provision of a larger income than could have been expected in view of exceptional financial depression throughout the country. Two hundred fairs and markets were visited, and the Scriptures circulated far and wide to an extent hitherto unknown.

Several addresses followed. Rev. Henry Sharpe described a recent visit to Ireland; Capt. W. D. Chapman spoke of what he had seen in Dublin, and said that success in the past inspires the workers to greater effort for the future. Rev. Henry Fishe gave an account of a visit to Connemara, and of the work of the missionaries there. He had great faith in tracts, and advised the sending of wholesome literature to Roman Catholics in England. At the Dublin Mission they had been wonderfully encouraged by the number of inquirers, both poor and well-to-do.

Mr. H. Mumford, the itinerating evangelist of the Mission, took up his position on the platform as if he were about to address a crowd at an Irish fair. He opened his little table, placed some books on it, and then sang a hymn, accompanying himself on his accordion. He said that in twenty-two weeks he visited 111 fairs and markets, and preached at seventy of them to over 10,000 Roman Catholics. He sold 1204 Douay Testaments, 1131 Penny Authorised Versions, 2436 portions of Scripture, 561 "Glories of Jesus," 1242 "Talks on the Road," and circulated thousands of pamphlets. In one place he sold forty New Testaments where not one had ever before been sold.

B.W. Temperance Association.

The annual rally of this growingly influential body of Christian women has been of the most encouraging and stimulating character. The zeal and ability of the noble President seem to have drawn around her a band of capable and devoted ladies, who are determined to do battle with the greatest curse of modern society. Throughout the proceedings of last week there sounded an unbroken note of courageous hopefulness that augurs well for still greater advances in the near future towards the goal of the workers—the extinction of the deadly drink traffic.

The Council meetings at Holborn Town Hall, extending over two days, were closely attended by over four hundred delegates, coming from all parts of the kingdom. A number of foreign friends were also present. Lady Henry Somerset gave her presidential address on Wednesday forenoon. It took about an hour to deliver, and touched on many points relating to the temperance reform and associated topics. The ramifications of the evil are so many and so all-embracing that Lady Henry strenuously advocates all possible methods of combating it — preventive, educational, evangelistic, social, legal, and political. Speaking of her own share of the active work of the past year, she was able to report that during seven months in England she had held 115 meetings and twenty-seven conferences, addressing an aggregate of 175,000 people and travelling 8000 miles. What an expenditure of vital energy and physical force these figures mean, the reader may try to imagine. We do not wonder that she has resolved to draw bridle somewhat. As to the progress of the year, the President said that 300 new local auxiliary societies had joined the Association—nearly a doubling of its strength.

The address was not only long but highly eloquent. The rationale of total abstinence was defended; the progress of repressive legislation in other lands described; the relation to the movement of increased political power for women explained, and many other features dwelt upon in glowing terms. A strong plea was put in for combining social purity work with temperance effort, and some sympathetic words were uttered as to the position and perils of the barmaid. The need of more attention to juvenile work was insisted on, while thankful reference was made to the growth of the movement among young women of good social standing. The proposed Industrial Farm Home for Women is in a fair way towards realisation, nearly £2000 having been contributed. The finances of the Association generally are sound; it is now entirely free from debt, largely owing to Lady Henry's own exertions.

Many topics of pressing interest were brought forward in the deliberations of the Council, and resolutions passed. Among these were police matrons, grocers' licences, Sunday closing, the sale of liquor to minors, etc. Lady Henry Somerset was re-elected president, with Mrs. Eva McLaren as vice-president, so as to relieve her ladyship of detail work.

The public meeting on Thursday evening in Queen's Hall was a very notable occasion. The fact that a formal farewell was to be given to our guest from the other side of the Atlantic, Miss F. E. Willard, helped to draw together an immense and brilliant assembly. After a stirring address from Lady Henry Somerset, who presided, a resolution approving of the Direct Veto Bill, and calling for its speedy introduction into Parliament, was moved in characteristic fashion by Sir Wilfrid Lawson; a still more eloquent seconder was found in Canon Wilberforce; and the motion was carried by acclamation. An exceedingly able and telling address from Miss Willard was the central feature of the proceedings. She enlarged on the importance and power of combined effort in dealing with crying evils. Great reforms, she said, were not accomplished by sitting about in an aimless way, but by praying devoutly and hammering away stoutly. Later in the evening Miss Willard was the recipient of some presentation gifts from different branches of the Association, and these tokens of love and good will were received with very pathetic words of response. All the speakers of the evening (who included Sir B. W. Richardson, Alderman Ben Tillett, Mr. W. S. Caine, and Mr. Raper) made very appreciative reference to the splendid services rendered to the cause by the guest of the evening, and wishing for her a perfect restoration to health and an early return to our shores.

Not the least interesting item in the evening programme was the presence and song of a little company of ragged girls, who rendered "There's a Shadow on the Home," with the help of a white-robed and ribboned choir, whose prosperous appearance formed a striking foil for the poverty and neglected condition of the slum children. Madame Sterling charmed the great audience with several sacred solos.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.

The members of this vigorous Union held last week a series of conferences for the consideration of methods of work. The public meeting was held in Princes' Hall, which was filled. Mrs. H. J. Wilson, who had that day been elected president of the W.T.A.U., occupied the chair.

An outline of the report, read by the hon. sec., Mrs. E. W. Brooks, dealt with matters which had led to the formation of this Society, and described the work of the past—the initial year. In September the Union numbered fifty federated societies; to these have been added other fifty-three, making a total of 103 Women's Total Abstinence Societies affiliated, sixty-nine of which report a total membership of 5840. The financial statement for the ten months to the end of March, shows a favourable balance of £104 3s. 3½d., gratifying proof of the confidence and interest of friends. The Bureau has already done a useful work in helping total abstainers to secure the services of abstainers, and those needing employment to find it in temperance families. The work of the various branches was described with thankfulness to God.

The President opened the proceedings of the evening with a closely-reasoned address on the wrongs that womanhood has suffered through strong drink, and the reasons why women should be active in opposing this evil.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., felt that the W.T.A.U. had already done splendid work, and was likely to do more in the warfare against custom, appetite, and vested interests.

Lady E. P. Biddulph dealt practically and clearly with various aspects of the movement, insisting strongly on the importance of all Christian workers being total abstainers. During the evening Mrs. Harvey, A.L.C.M., sang a couple of beautiful solos. Addresses followed by Mr. Raper, Dr. A. Pearce Gould, Mrs. Caine, Rev. S. Buss, and Mrs. Hawkes. A welcome surprise awaited the audience in the advent of Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Canon Wilberforce, who were enthusiastically greeted, and who spoke in ringing tones and in sympathetic terms of the work of the Union and its bearing on the temperance movement of the day.

At the workers' conference on Friday morning, Mrs. Edward Crossley presided. A paper was read by Mrs. Doncaster, of Sheffield, on "Doctors' Orders," contending that the Temperance Hospital furnished sufficient proof that cures could be effected without the use of intoxicants. There were now many physicians who recognised the evil of the indiscriminate use of alcohol as a remedy for sickness and disease, and other gentlemen of the profession were rapidly coming to that view. Miss M. E. Docwra followed with a paper on "How to Abolish Grocers' Licences," remarking that statistics showed a steady increase of drunkenness amongst women, which was attributable to the retail sale of intoxicants by grocers and other shopkeepers. It was imperative that concerted action should be taken for the abolition of such licences. With that object she advocated that special meetings should be held, petitions sent to Parliament, and various resolutions passed which, though useful as supplements to petitions, must not actually take their place. Numbers of letters could also be sent to members of Parliament on the same day asking for their vote and influence. She also advocated that, as temperance workers, they should deal with those grocers only who did not hold licences for the sale of intoxicants. Discussion followed both papers, the views of the writers being heartily endorsed.

London Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of friends of the London Missionary Society was held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall. The report for the hundredth year of the Society's work described the outlook as one in which hope and anxiety are closely associated. In many parts the mission fields are white unto harvest, but where are the labourers who are to reap them, and how are they to be maintained until their work is accomplished?

China has not yet become reconciled to the intrusion of Christianity, and painful evidences arise from time to time of the bitter hostility which the governing class of that country cherishes toward. the "foreign superstition." India is more advanceds The Madagascar mission has some heavy moral and ecclesiastical clouds in its sky. Africa appeals to sympathetic consideration, and there is marked advance in the manifestation of a missionary spirit among the Congregational Churches of the Cape Colony. The Central African mission no longer causes anxiety, and yet it is not in such a condition as to call forth the enthusiasm which is attendant on great success. The South Sea missions present one of the most anxious problems of mission work.

The Society has 1476 native ministers, 6758 other male native workers, 94,192 church members, and 125,984 scholars in its schools. The influence of the Forward Movement was much more marked this year than last year. As a centenary fund it is proposed to increase the free income of the Society to a sum not less than £125,000 a year, and in addition a special thankoffering of not less than £100,000 is to be raised as a further provision for the Society's needs. Twenty-five missionaries, of whom thirteen were ladies, had been sent forth to the field during the year. The income was £117,572, the balance-sheet showing a deficit of £33,215.

In the course of an able address, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary, said that the financial position of the Society, though undoubtedly serious, was no reason for panic.

Mr. A. Hubbard, J.P., who presided, referring to the Forward Movement begun three years ago, said that sixty-seven of the hundred new workers had already gone forth. Except financially, the movement was a great success, and it had greatly cheered the hearts of missionaries everywhere. He believed the income of the Society might be doubled without any self-sacrifice if there was less desire to aggregate wealth. The contributions to missionary work had not kept pace with the great development of wealth, and until Christians realised their responsibilities in this matter, proper success could not be attained.

Rev. Maurice Phillips, of Madras, spoke of the progress of the Gospel in India, dwelling on the encouragement with which he had met in his work. Many of those who had passed through English schools and colleges had broken away from religion altogether, but that was not absolutely discouraging, as atheism and scepticism were a stage of development, and the darkness before the dawn of Christianity. There were many secret followers of Christ in India, who were not prepared to declare themselves, in the face of the social ostracism that would follow.

Professor E. Armitage, of the Yorkshire United College, Bradford, asked Congregationalists whether they were not glad, debt or no debt, that the Society was leading them forward, with the great advancing line of Protestant Churches, to claim the nations of the world for Christ. They might be a little anxious about the debt, but there would, he said, have been a very different anxiety in their hearts if there had been no Forward Movement. Within this century God has brought the world to their doors, and it is the duty of the Church to pass through the door God has opened. After seeking to understand the position, he said calmly that Hinduism and the great systems of thought in China could not survive another century.

Addresses were also delivered by Mrs. Owen (Wuchang), who has been working as a medical missionary in China for seven years, and gave distressing accounts of cases that had come under her own observation; and Rev. Yung-King Yen (Shanghai), who said he expected great things from the London Missionary Society, whose members are the most numerous among Christian bodies in China. The opium curse, he said, cannot be exaggerated; it is undermining the life of the people, and is a serious hindrance to the spread of the Gospel. An address was also delivered by Rev. J. Pearse, of Madagascar.

On Friday, Rev. Dr. Barrett presided over a conference on the work of the Society, in view of the approaching centenary. After addresses by Revs. R. Wardlaw Thompson, H. Arnold Thomas, Stanley Rogers, and Dr. Berry, a statement was made by Rev. Richard Lovett referring to the Forward Movement. He said the directors did not feel justified in incurring further liabilities until the annual income was more in proportion to the expenditure. The first business was to pay their debt, but unless they had £20,000 more of income they would have a heavy debt again next year; and to complete the Forward Movement they would require another £20,000. Rev. S. Pearson thought it would be a shame and a scandal to go back on the Forward policy, until they had fathomed the resources of the churches. But the directors, determined to behave like honest men, had found it necessary to call a halt. Rev. J. G. Rogers held that the contributions of some of the churches were disgracefully meagre. A resolution was adopted urging the directors immediately to initiate a Centenary Fund.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

The Lord Mayor presided over the tenth annual meeting of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday last week. There was a large gathering, and some distinguished personages supported the Chief Magistrate of the City on the platform.

The report for the year was in many respects of an encouraging character, although the committee had to record a falling off in the income. The magnitude of the work may be seen from the fact that 109,364 children were benefited by it, not by being removed from their homes, but by those homes being made endurable and happy. In accomplishing this the Society procured the conviction of 6500 parents, who had been fined and imprisoned according to their deserts. With insignificant exceptions, the one result of the Society's action has been a new sense of parental responsibility. That there was little need of second prosecutions was shown by the fact that out of 7398 persons taken into court about 6700 were now living again with their children, and only 100 of these cases had required a second prosecution.

The Duke of Norfolk pointed out that prosecutions are not the only means by which the Society strives to do its work. On the contrary, a prosecution is only resorted to when all other means fail; and a feature of the work is that in the vast majority of cases cruel parents have been induced to revert to kindliness towards their children. That is an encouraging fact, but he reminded the meeting that in one sense it tends to make the collection of funds more difficult, because it is work that is done very quietly.

Lord George Hamilton called attention to the fact that in no less than 21 per cent. of the cases in which the Society has had to interfere the children were under three years of age. Those were children who were absolutely incapable of defending themselves, and it was almost impossible to imagine the frame of mind of the father or mother who perpetrated outrages upon these helpless creatures. In conclusion, the speaker mentioned that it is proposed to raise a fund which would always be available should the income for any one year fall short of the needs of the Society owing to financial depression or other causes.

Archdeacon Sinclair alluded to the various methods adopted by the Society for the prevention of cruelty, and said he felt sure that when the work was thoroughly understood by the large masses of the people it would receive an even greater national recognition than it had had before.

Addresses were also delivered by Earl Stanhope, who expressed the conviction that drunkenness is the main cause of cruelty to children; Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., who suggested that pressure should be brought to bear upon small tribunals in order that adequate punishments may be meted out to offenders; Dr. Adler, Chief Rabbi of British Jews; and Messrs. Agnew and Collingridge.

The Railway Mission.

Exeter Hall was well filled on Thursday evening, May 10, by an enthusiastic gathering of railway men and their friends. The occasion was the annual meeting of the Railway Mission, and it proved to be a most delightful time. Judging from the hearty applause which greeted each point made by the various speakers, the railway men are warm believers in the work they have in hand.

The chair was taken by Mr. John Cory, who said in his address that he felt peculiar pleasure in being present, as he and many others thought the Railway Mission meeting was one of the brightest and best of the May meetings. He was deeply interested in the Mission, knowing from experience what a blessed work it is doing for the spiritual and moral welfare of railway men. He was best acquainted with its work in Wales, and could testify to the change for good that had taken place in many of the railway men there through the influence of the Mission. He earnestly commended it to the generous support of the public.

Mr. R. Nixon, B.A., secretary, gave some points from the report for the last year, which showed progress in several directions. Thirty-five new branches of the Mission have been formed in the United Kingdom, 605 members have been added to the Railway Mission Christian Association, making a total of 8605 members, all of whom profess to be converted. New halls have been erected and opened at several branches, and at Brighton a chapel has been purchased at a cost of £2500 for the use of the Mission. The Convalescent Home at Hastings has proved a most successful branch of the work. Since it was opened in March, 1892, over 230 railway men have been admitted as patients. These came from sixteen railways, and included twenty-four different grades. Over forty of the patients were led to trust Christ during their stay; several of these have since passed away, the others are witnessing for Christ on the lines. The leading railway officials show a growing appreciation of the work of the Mission, through seeing what it has done for the men. The General Manager of the Midland Railway said recently: "I have had intimate association with the Railway Mission, and am proud to say it has done a great and good work. I wish the Mission God-speed." At one branch between seventy and eighty decided for Christ, and at another sixteen railway men were converted during the year. In a mess-room, where twenty-four engine-cleaners meet for a weekly service during part of their dinner hour, ten are Christians, and seven of these were converted during the first three months of this year.

Mr. S. G. Sheppard, hon. treasurer, read a financial statement, which showed that there is a deficit of £200 in the funds.

The Bishop of Liverpool, who was very warmly received, said he was delighted to speak in support of the Railway Mission, which is seeking to help one of the finest bodies of men in the country. This was the first time he had been present at the annual meeting of the Mission in Exeter Hall, but if God spared him it would not be the last. Few people realised their deep indebtedness to railway servants. He considered it to be the duty of the public to support this excellent Mission more liberally than they had yet done. He would have been glad to see several of the bishops present to support the movement. Such an enthusiastic meeting would have done them good. He came to spend his birth day among them, and thought he could not spend it in a better way. He said he did not mind telling them that on that day he was seventy-eight years of age. Loud and prolonged applause greeted this statement. The Bishop earnestly exhorted the railway men to see to it that they were on the right line to heaven. Many voices would try to get them on wrong lines, but there was only one way, and that was through the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, in an original and spirited address, also urged the men to get on the right line. He took up and used the initials of the various railway companies to illustrate his subject in a striking way. The G.W.R., or good works line, would not bring them to heaven. Zaccheus was a first-class passenger on that line, but he did not get salvation till Christ brought it to him. The G.E.R., or good education line, would not lead them to God, and the G.N.R., or good name line, was no better. He bore one of the best names he knew, but dare not trust to his father's name to get him to glory. The North-Western, or N.W.R., suggested not worthy, but the S.W.R. meant sinners welcome, and the S.E.R. salvation for everybody who cared to accept it. He trusted the men present would accept Jesus, and get on the main line. Several delegates gave stirring testimonies, and after the collection, Rev. T. J. Madden held the audience by his manly and earnest words. He pleaded with the men not to throw away the precious opportunities that God has given to them, but yield their all to Him at once.

After a few words from Mr. T. A. Denny, the Bishop of Dakota pronounced the benediction, and the enthusiastic audience dispersed. During the evening Miss Ada Rose sang several beautiful solos with much effect.

Presbyterian Missions.

The Presbyterian Churches are deeply interested in missions, and their annual meeting is usually full of interest and enthusiasm. So it was on Friday evening, when Exeter Hall was crowded. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided.

The report showed that the Mission has six centres of work, viz.:—Amoy, with fifty stations and forty-three native agents; Swatow, with twenty-nine stations and thirty-two native agents; Formosa, thirty-six stations and thirty native agents; Singapore, ten stations with three native agents; India, at Rampore Bauleah, with two native agents; also work among the Jews in East London and North-West Africa. The Mission has also fifty-six European missionaries, twenty-two being ladies, and ten medical mission hospitals, with an average of over 3000 patients a year each. The hospital at Swatow was the largest in all China, with 7400 patients in 1893. The income for the year was £19,858 for foreign work, and £1757 for Jewish work. The special aim of the work in China is to raise up a Chinese Christian Church, which shall be self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating. There are forty-five organised congregations, with 4267 communicants, 110 native Evangelists.

The Chairman said he thought they had been relying too long and too exclusively on paid missionaries, and that the time had come when they should invoke the aid of men and women of means. Nothing could better serve the cause of missions than that young men and women should be found devoting their lives and their means to the noblest of works. There was no better missionary in a heathen country than a layman, be he merchant, civil servant, engineer, or soldier, who devoted his leisure to mission work among the heathen. After referring to the "dangerous and deadly trade" in opium, which had been an untold curse to China, he pointed out that the Mission was steadily and rapidly expanding.

Rev. Donald MacIver, of Hakkaland, South-Eastern China, said that the Chinese were a splendid people, with a great history and a promising future. Only Christianity was needed to make China the most magnificent country in the world. He proceeded to speak of the native agents as a splendid band of workers, and urged his hearers to support Missions on principle—not because of sensational stories, but because it was the chief work of the Christian Church.

Miss Ricketts, of the Women's Missionary Association at Swatow, who had been sixteen years in China, gave some particulars of her work.

Rev. R. Wright Hay (Baptist), from Dacca, North East Bengal, gave the greetings of the Baptist Society to the Presbyterian, and proceeded to speak of his labours in India.

Dr. John G. Paton stirred every heart by his oft-told, but ever fresh, story of the trials and triumphs of Presbyterian missions in the Southern Pacific.

Rev. Yung-King Yen portrayed, in his own characteristic style, the ravages of opium among his own people of China.

A few words from Mr. H. M. Matheson concluded the proceedings.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—The annual meeting for praise and prayer was held at Lincoln House, 12, York-place, Baker-street, on Wednesday afternoon, May 9. Mr. John Shrimpton (honorary director) presided. He stated that the nine homes had fully maintained their home-life usefulness, and that 2124 young workwomen had lived in them during the past year. The meeting was purely devotional. Rev. R. Percy Thompson, Rev John P. Hobson, Rev. H. L. C. de Candole, Captain Wisely, Mr. Edward Trotter, Mr. Daniel Wellby, Mr. C. F. Higginson, and Dr. Heywood Smith took part in the proceedings.

Y.P.S.C.E. CONVENTION.

MEETINGS IN LONDON, MAY 12—15.

The fourth National Convention of the British section of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour has this year been held in London, the Whitsuntide holidays being chosen as a time when a large number of young people might be free to gather together without interference with the ordinary routine of business or school life. Delegates and visitors from all parts of the British islands and from various foreign countries have assembled together in their hundreds at the meetings, which have been characterised throughout by remarkable enthusiasm, and have been most inspiring seasons of refreshing to all who have been present.

All the principal meetings have been held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the many hallowed associations of which have lent an added charm to the spiritual atmosphere of the gathering. The whole building with all its convenient offices has been freely put at the disposal of the executive committee by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon and his deacons, and nothing has been left undone to make everything as comfortable and congenial to the visitors as was possible. Nor has there been any cause for disappointment, for everyone has gone home from the meetings thoroughly pleased with the hospitality which they have received at the hands of the London friends, and full of inspiration and new spiritual impetus for the work of the future.

The proceedings of the Convention commenced on Saturday evening with a reception meeting held at Walworth-road Baptist Chapel. Two or three thousand delegates from the provinces and abroad have been present at the Convention, and warm and hearty words of welcome were spoken to these friends by several of the London ministers. The right key-note was struck at this meeting by one of the speakers, who in a word reminded the audience that the aims and objects of the Christian Endeavour movement were first and last and always spiritual. Another speaker referred to the gratifying and significant fact that such a large number of young people were willing to give up all the attractions of holiday time for the purpose of engaging in a religious convocation and seeking after spiritual good.

On Sunday, in many of the London churches, special sermons were preached dealing specially with the work of the Y.P.S.C.E. and the needs of young people generally.

The proceedings of Monday commenced with a prayer and praise meeting in the Tabernacle at nine o'clock, when there was a large muster of earnest Endeavourers, and a most happy time was spent in rendering to God thanks for all his goodness in the blessing which has followed the work of the Christian Endeavour Society, since its start in America thirteen years ago; and in prayer for still greater and more extended blessing in the days to come.

At eleven o'clock the first session of the conference was held, presided over by Alderman F. F. Belsey, of Rochester, who publicly welcomed the provincial delegates to London, expressing his belief that the enthusiasm from the northern societies would give additional impetus to the movement in London and in the southern counties. Those hallowed walls, he said, had rarely contained an assembly presenting features of greater interest than that convention of the youth of the churches consecrating their opening lives to Christ and his Church. He referred to the phenomenally rapid growth of the movement, and spoke with hopefulness as to the blessings it was conferring on the churches. The movement had grown because the churches appreciated it, saw its possibilities, and knew its power.

A number of bright papers were then read on "The Work of the Committee," those dealt with including the "look-out," prayer-meeting, social, temperance, sunshine, and good literature committees. A free parliament followed, one after another rising until about twenty had spoken, telling of ways of working in their own societies, and making all sorts of useful suggestions, and throwing out valuable hints for improving and adapting the "machinery" in use. Emphasis was repeatedly laid on the necessity of getting the members interested in such practical work as spreading the principles of total abstinence, and helping to stem the tide of drink. In this direction it was urged that the members of the C.E. society in the church should conduct the Band of Hope. Another told of a society where nearly every week members brought bunches of flowers to be taken to the homes of the sick and the poor, thus to prepare the way to speak words of help and comfort with the direct aim of winning souls. A delegate from Birmingham referred to the way in which the churches and the members of the C.E. societies in that town had united together in prayer and effort against the opening of the new racecourse there, and called upon all Endeavourers everywhere to stand together in opposing the evils of betting and gambling. Representatives spoke from India, New South Wales, America, and South Africa. The interest shown in the work of foreign missions was remarkable, and it is something to thank God for that so many young people are devoting their attention constantly to the work of evangelising the heathen—doing the work at home while preparing to go out and do it abroad. Rev. Wm. Carey evoked a loud outburst of applause when he said, "Let every Christian Endeavour Society have a foreign mission committee, and let there be a missionary in the field representing the society, and let there be a special fund to support such missionary."

The afternoon session was presided over by Mr. Charles Waters, and the subject of conference was "The Christian Endeavour Society the place for training the young Christian." On this practical topic several provincial ministers spoke from experience of different sections of Christian work, and gave much valuable counsel on such heads as using God's Word, engaging in public prayer, witnessing for Christ, and generous giving. The free parliament which followed was again the opportunity for a number of friends to give testimony and helpful hints on Christian service. Mrs. Peill drew a very interesting picture of the Christian Endeavourers in Madagascar going out into the ricefields and telling the bright glad news of the Gospel to their heathen brothers and sisters. A worker from Berkshire told of earnest Gospel effort being carried on in the villages; another told of a society in London the members of which organise picnics for parties of poor children, who seldom have a sight of the green fields in the country; and a delegate from Birmingham brought a message from Dr. Dale, who has a live C.E. society at Carr's Lane. The afternoon closed with an address by Rev. F. B. Meyer on "The Baptism of the Holy Ghost." Mr. Meyer's earnest, searching words were listened to by the large congregation with close and earnest attention, and produced a deep impression as he pleaded for a renewed consecration to the service of God, and urged his hearers to seek a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit's power.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon was the chairman at the evening meeting, and he bade the visitors a cordial welcome. After telling of some of his experiences with Christian Endeavourers in New Zealand, he gave a brief address, exhorting all Endeavourers to covet earnestly the best gifts, and to be constantly provoking one another to love and to good works.

A report of the year's progress was presented by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, one of the secretaries of the British National Council, who remarked that he knew of no movement which had made so rapid and solid an advance as the Christian Endeavour movement. There is now scarcely a country that has not been reached and touched by its influence. In this country alone the advance has been wonderful. At the convention held at Bradford last June the existence of 650 registered societies in Great Britain was reported. The registered number is now 1453, or an addition of 803 societies in one year. The societies are distributed among the churches of all denominations. The figures show that there are 391 in Baptist churches, 353 in Congregational, 85 Presbyterian, 4 Episcopalian, 37 Wesleyan, 49 Primitive Methodist, 18 Bible Christian, 69 United Methodist Free Church, and 66 Methodist New Connexion. In an approximate estimate of membership Mr. Chaplin said there were 40,750 active, 18,710 associate, and 5,980 honorary members, making a total of 65,440.

In the course of his address, Mr. Chaplin said:—"This Society is not merely a literary society, not a social club, and not a musical 'free and easy.' The Y.P.S.C.E. lives for the soul. Its element is the spiritual element. It does not sacrifice other interests to this element, but sanctifies them, and makes them the servants of that which is first and highest. One of the strongest proofs of the utility and permanent value of the C.E. movement has been its acceptance by churches of all denominations. It has been found to work well in every church. Not that denominational fences are being broken down, but that Christian Endeavourers are growing so tall that they can look over the fences and recognise the oneness in Christ of Christians of every name. The C.E. Society is inter-denominational, not anti-denominational. It aims at making the Baptist a better Baptist, the Congregationalist a better Congregationalist, the Methodist a better Methodist, and the Presbyterian a better Presbyterian, and, above all, to make them all better Christians, and to inspire them to work together in Christian brotherhood for the one great end of saving the world from sin."

A message from Dr. F. E. Clark, the founder of the C.E. movement, was read, sending his own affectionate greetings and the greetings of the American societies. An address of fraternal fellowship was then delivered by the Hon. John Wanamaker, ex-Postmaster-General of the United States. His rising was the signal for a remarkable outburst of enthusiasm, everybody in the building standing and waving handkerchiefs, while the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes were crossed and held aloft, while the audience sang the hymn,

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love.

Mr. Wanamaker gave some interesting particulars of the progress of the movement in America, remarking that an average of 100 new societies were being registered every week. In closing he called upon all Endeavourers to advance all along the line, to keep the flag flying, and to sing the song and tell the story till the whole world is girdled with the love of Christ.

Further meetings were held on Tuesday, to which we hope to refer in our next issue.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSION.

The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has, during the last few months, by meetings throughout the country, been seeking to increase interest in medical missionary effort. Last year, with the view of having such work systematically carried out and in order that local auxiliaries, where not at present existing, should be formed, and that existing ones should be extended, Mr. G. A. Barclay was requested by the directors to undertake the organisation of this department of the Society's work.

Since then, in addition to great meetings held in Edinburgh, a vigorous campaign has been conducted in some parts of England, and over a considerable portion of Scotland. The Society supplies fully-equipped medical missionaries to all the Protestant Missionary Societies which are at work in the foreign field, and its students are to be found as medical missionaries in all parts of the world. It also supports medical missions of its own at Nazareth, under Dr. Vartan; Damascus, under Dr. McKinnon; and a Medical Missionary Training Institute for Indian Natives, at Agra, under Dr. Colin Valentine.

During the past fortnight very successful meetings have been conducted in the north of Scotland. Inverness, Nairn, Forres, Elgin, and other places have been visited, and large and interesting meetings held. A series of splendid lime-light views, illustrating Medical Mission work in India and Palestine, were exhibited, and were pronounced the best ever seen in that district. A deep interest has been created, which has resulted in the establishment of influential auxiliaries.

The superintendent of the Association is Dr. Sargood Fry, 56, George Square, Edinburgh.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—In connection with the Jubilee of this society, a district meeting was held last week in Chiswick. Alderman Beachcroft, L.C.C., who presided, gave a brief sketch of the origin, progress, and results of Ragged schools, and called on Mr. John Kirk, who said that while they needed money they yet more urgently required personal service. He wished to press home the thought "What am I doing to help on the work?" There was scope for any amount of effort, the gift for it was needed, and if their hearts were in their work the power to teach these little ones would be given them. He would like that jubilee meeting to be the occasion of an addition to the number of workers. Amongst the other speakers were Revs. A. J. Palmer and J. Simmance, Messrs. J. H. Rushbrooke and D. Tweedie.

REVIVAL IN THE BAHAMAS.

During the past winter it has been my privilege to visit the Bahama Islands, a group situated some three or four hundred miles off the coast of Florida. Most of my time was spent in the capital, Nassau, and it was proposed that the resident Baptist missionary, Rev. C. A. Dann, and the two native pastors, Revs. J. T. Roberts and W. F. Willerup, should unite with me in holding special revival services in the three churches.

It must be remembered that the inhabitants of Nassau form a mixed population of black and white people. Although the black people greatly preponderate, they are all English-speaking, and to a large extent English in their manners and customs. We accordingly agreed to set apart the last two weeks of November, 1893, for special prayer and special services to be held alternately in the three chapels.

From the first it was evident that God's blessing was upon the effort. When we arrived on the Monday evening at Bethel Chapel, the scene of our first prayer meeting, we found the place crammed full, with people standing six deep outside the windows, which are built low, and open to admit as much air as possible. We opened in the usual manner, using Sankey's hymns, and then threw the meeting open for prayer. It was indeed a prayer meeting. Everybody seemed to want to pray, and at times two, three, and four would commence at once, while not infrequently two would proceed right the way through with their prayers at the same time. Throughout the meeting they interspersed their prayers with choruses, some from Mr. Sankey's and others peculiarly native, reminding one of the Jubilee Singers. Throughout the meeting those whose hearts were stirred gave free vent to their feelings in cries, some just audible and some very loud, of "Jesus," "Oh, my Lord!" or "Christ have mercy on me," etc. If at any time we were desirous of having a break in the prayers, to sing a hymn, we had literally to watch our opportunity lest a brother or sister should commence praying before we could announce the number.

Without dwelling at length on any one prayer meeting (the average length of which was two hours), I will select items of interest, and mention them. It must be remembered that the coloured people are decidedly an emotional people, and the excitement of crowded meetings, combined with the consequent heat, did much to increase their emotions. Before the close of the week it was evident God's Spirit was at work, and we began to see signs of conversion even before we commenced the actual revival services. At the last prayer meeting we had not proceeded very far, having just finished singing the hymn, "Take me as I am," when I suggested that all who truly desired to give themselves to God should take up that chorus as a prayer, and yield themselves there and then. At once they commenced to pray, one after the other, "Take me as I am," "Lord, take me." In about one minute we had ten or a dozen of these brief petitions, when suddenly the meeting was disturbed by a loud shriek, followed by another, and then shriek after shriek rent the air.

Not at first understanding, I quickly made them resume singing in order as far as possible to drown the sound, but was soon reassured by the native pastor Roberts that these were cases of people seized with deep conviction of sin. I had never seen anything like it before; they seemed to have no power over themselves. In some respects it resembled hysteria, although there was neither laughing nor crying, but simply violent muscular action and shrieks. Nothing could be done with them at the time; later in the meeting the shrieks subsided. Afterwards, on making further inquiries, I was assured by several women that they themselves had been converted in a similar manner. They informed me that they had been living bad lives, and God had seized them in that way at a meeting, and they had remained in a state of trance for as long as three or four days without eating or drinking. When they came to themselves, though very exhausted, they were conscious that their hearts had been changed, and since then they have been living for God. Such authenticated instances serve to show that there may be good even in such excitement, and that the workings of the same Spirit may be manifest in different ways.

The following week was devoted wholly to revival meetings. The addresses of the coloured pastor, Rev. J. T. Roberts, were remarkable throughout for simplicity and power, and to him was due in no small measure, by God's grace, the large blessing vouchsafed.

All the meetings were crowded to excess as early as an hour before the time of commencing. When at the close of the addresses the time came to invite all who wished to decide for Christ to raise their hands, it was almost impossible to count them, so rapidly were they raised. The after-meetings were times of special solemnity, as with most of these people there is some definite sin existing in their lives which must be put away; this was clearly pointed out, and the step they were taking was made quite plain to all.

Several cases were worthy of note. A young mulatto girl of about fifteen years, seated right in front, was seized with conviction of sin, causing her to break out into shrieks. I went to quiet her myself, and had some very helpful talk with her, which ended in an intelligent decision for Christ. She regularly attended every subsequent meeting, and at the concluding testimony meeting was the second to rise, and in a few bright words tell how she had found Christ. One poor woman, about whom Mr. Dann had for some time been anxious, was heard at our first meeting to cry out, "Lord! have mercy on my soul," and again at the second meeting in agonising tones she cried, "Lord! have mercy on my poor soul." At the third meeting we lost sight of her, but at the fourth she told us that she had found her Saviour; she just quietly repeated the words:—

My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear.
He owns me for his child,
I can no longer fear.

Many other cases might be cited. The blessing was more than we had ever expected, and the services will long live in the memory of the people of Nassau. Louis C. Parkinson, B.A.

GOSPEL WORK IN BELGIUM.

Our work of evangelisation in Belgium has from the beginning prospered, and is increasingly so today, after fifty-five years of labour. The work carried on is known and recommended by those who have visited it, and the proofs of the Lord's blessing are many. In all parts of our field the number of hearers increases so greatly that it becomes urgent to enlarge several of our places of worship or build others. We hear on all sides of remarkable conversions. It is not only Roman Catholics who embrace the Gospel with joy, but unbelievers, atheists, drunkards, persons known for their violence and their blasphemy, who are transformed.

The numerous and fervent prayer-meetings, the zeal and activity of these new Christians to spread the Gospel around them and to win their neighbours to Christ, show the sincerity of the conversion, of which further evidence may be found in their remarkable liberality. Instances abound of poor workmen, miners and others, depriving themselves of many comforts in order to help to support their minister, to contribute towards the building of their chapel, or to help neighbours poorer than themselves. Notwithstanding all the efforts and sacrifices, the work cannot be carried on without the help of friends abroad. Our churches are poor, and every year our deficits become more threatening. We pray that God will open the hearts of new friends to respond to our appeal. Assembled recently in Belgium, the pastors with generous self-devotion, recommended that the committee should reduce their stipends—already very small. May this step be averted! DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN DUBLIN.—The third Home in charge of Miss Carr was opened a few days ago at 6, Northbrook-road, Leeson-road, Dublin. In the three Homes there are now 68 boys and 100 girls, all belonging to the poorest classes. These children have been rescued from a life of misery, poverty, and crime, and are educated and maintained in comparative comfort and on strictly Christian principles, until in a position to take service whereby they can support themselves. Children are received in the Homes from two years old upwards, and at the present time there are no less than ten of them out at nurse. The new Home is a model of comfort, cleanliness, and general attractiveness. The premises were originally built at a cost of £4000 for the Clergy Daughters' Society, and as a memorial of Mrs. Whately.

UNION CONVENTION, MELBOURNE.

PRESBYTERIAN FELLOWSHIP UNIONS OF AUSTRALIA.

The second inter-colonial convention of these unions was held in Melbourne from March 23 to 27, the first having taken place in Sydney in April, 1892. The welcome meeting to delegates took place in Scots Church on Good Friday evening. It was mainly of the character of united worship, and was followed by the Communion service. Unfortunately, the Mildmay plan of using unintoxicating wine at the Lord's Supper has not yet been adopted by the Presbyterians in Victoria, and the Union did not consider it should make such an advance on the Church at large. The consequence was that some kept away from the service, while others remained, but kept apart, or passed the wine. This was the subject of remark later in the Conference, but with consent, out of deference to the opinion of the Church, the matter was allowed to pass, with the result that hardly a word was spoken on the evils of the use of intoxicants.

The Sunday was spent by delegates visiting such associations as were nearest to their temporary homes, so as to avoid Sabbath travelling. Several of the intercolonial delegates took part in a service at Rev. Mr. Rolland's church, and gave interesting accounts of work done for the Master.

Monday and Tuesday afternoons and evenings were times of great refreshing, the Scots Church Hall being well filled at all the sittings. The papers read were good, and the discussions which followed exhibited admirable Christian feeling, mixed with considerable fire, while many sparkled with wit and good humour. The whole tone of the meetings was excellent. The conference was sadly moved by the somewhat sudden death of Mr. John Thompson, a delegate from Hamilton, who, after enjoying some of the preliminary services, was taken ill, and expired on Tuesday morning. But John Thompson, of Hamilton, being dead, yet speaketh. In another form, some years ago, I referred to the splendid work of this gentleman, who at the early age of forty-six has had to leave the scene of his labours.

He was a good business man, and did not spare himself or his means in his Master's service. At his own expense he had built a handsome lecture hall as an adjunct to his own house. Here Sabbath after Sabbath some fifty youths and maidens met for training in the study of the Bible, for prayer and mutual help. The Fellowship Association, as a result, was a real live body in the Church, and the Church was constantly augmented by recruits from the class and the Association.

Members from five of the Australian colonies read papers and took part in the discussions, and while the subjects of these addresses were all bearing upon the life and work of the members, and might have been considered commonplace, the interest shown in the proceedings indicated that it was the glory of God that was sought in all the efforts put forth. Much stress was laid on family religion and the upholding of family worship, not only at home, but even in lodgings or elsewhere when several could be gathered together.

Professor Andrew Harper, of Melbourne, delivered an admirable address on "The Value of a Knowledge of History contemporaneous with the Bible," which was most cordially received. He showed how every year was only adding to our historical knowledge of ancient people and their doings, which tended to confirm the authenticity and accuracy of the Scriptures.

The evening gatherings at the Melbourne Coffee Palace were most enjoyable. Here there was the social intercourse when friends from different colonies met and interchanged greetings. Short speeches were made and impromptu hymns were sung. Briefness and brightness characterised these portions of the Convention. In Victoria the numbers in fellowship are 1400 women and 1600 men, and this is the strongest union in the colonies. But the spirit of the members is everywhere the same, though Presbyterianism has not so large a hold as here. The kindly feeling on all hands was most delightful, and the cordial relations which have hitherto existed between the colonies will have become more binding than ever.

EVENTS IN IRELAND.

(By a Special Correspondent.)

All last week the interest of Irish Christians was focussed upon Rev. Thomas Connellan, who was obliged to face the ordeal of a law court in order to crush a vile conspiracy, formed with the object of blasting his character, and undermining his growing influence with Roman Catholics. Much prayer went up before the Throne of Grace during the past fortnight on his behalf. Those who know him saw at a glance what were the objects of his enemies. God seems to be putting his servant through experimental processes, and he can now testify that "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

On Wednesday, May 9, the case was opened in the Court of Queen's Bench before Mr. Justice Johnson and a special jury. The plaintiff is a beggar-woman, about fifty years of age, and the mother of four children, two of whom were her only witnesses in the case. The claim was for a sum of £68 15s. for the support of a child born more than three years since, and of whom she alleged that Mr. Connellan was the father. Seven of the jury were Roman Catholics, and two eminent barristers, one of them a Q.C., were retained for the woman.

The degraded appearance of the plaintiff, and her shocking levity in narrating a most loathsome story, produced a marked impression upon a crowded court. Her two children had been carefully trained to repeat their lesson as if by rote, but the Solicitor-General and Mr. Campbell, Q.C., Mr. Connellan's counsel, tore the vile concoction to shreds upon cross-examination.

The court was packed after luncheon, when Mr. Connellan mounted the witness chair. He denied in detail every allegation of the plaintiff. His cross-examination by Mr. Drummond, Q.C., only served to strengthen his case, and the attempt to influence the jury by quoting certain of Mr. Connellan's writings against Romish errors was promptly put an end to by the judge. Instead of Mr. Connellan having left the Church of Rome because of any difference with his bishop, it has now been established in open court that upon his return to Ireland in March, 1889, the local parish priest waited upon him three times in his father's house, and, with the approval of his bishop, each time used all his powers of persuasion to induce him to return to the church and the ministry he had left. It was not until the 23rd of May, 1889, and after the publication of "Hear the Other Side," that sentence of suspension was served upon Mr. Connellan, and he was excommunicated on the following Sunday. All this he deposed to upon oath, and although the Church of Rome in Ireland has moved heaven and earth to crush this man, neither his bishop nor any of his late confrères in the priesthood dared to go into the witness chair and contradict him.

Miss Connellan was a valuable witness on her brother's behalf, while a man named Michael Conlan, a Roman Catholic, swore that the plaintiff had told him that certain persons, whose names he mentioned, had induced her to concoct the story in order to "knock thirty or forty pounds out of him, and then leave the country." The learned judge commented severely upon the utter improbability of the woman's story, and described her as "by her own sworn testimony more degraded than the beast of the field." The jury, after three minutes' deliberation, found a verdict for the defendant, and the finding was received with a burst of applause in court.

The result has gladdened the hearts of all God's people here. Mr. Connellan's position has been strengthened fifty-fold. How signally have the Psalmist's words been verified: "They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune of laying snares privily. But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded. So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves" (Psalm lxiv. 5-8). Our brother has gone through a fiery trial, and been subjected to much worry and expense, for he cannot realise costs from a beggar-woman. He has, however, the consciousness of Divine protection, and is once again in harness for the Master.

Many Christian friends in England will regret to learn that the Dean of Achonry has been ordered by his doctors to take a period of complete rest. He is at present at his home near Coolaney, co. Sligo, and the prayers of the Christian community will be sure to rise to the Great Physician, that He may soon be able to don his armour and go forth to battle for the right.

REV. W. H. AITKEN IN IRELAND.

A fortnight's mission services have been held in the parish church, Ballymena, by Rev. Wm. Hay Aitken, being assisted by Rev. C. F. D'Arcy, the rector, and others. The morning addresses were on the spiritual life, and these were very helpful to Christian people.

The special sermons for men only on Sunday afternoons were of a most encouraging nature, quite 700 men attending the last service. The subjects of the sermons were Righteousness, Temperance, and Judgment to Come. Many men came long distances to hear the mission preacher.

The parish church, which holds 900 people, was filled at all the evening meetings, the congregations being drawn from all the religious denominations in and around Ballymena. The services were characterised by earnest seeking after the Saviour on the part of those present, and there is every reason to believe that many have decided for Christ.

During the time of the mission, meetings for women only were held in the rooms of the Y.W.C.A. These meetings were addressed by Mrs. Crouch, and although the attendance was not so large as could have been wished, they were attended with blessed results to many.

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME FOR GIRLS.

The annual meeting and distribution of prizes recently took place at the Home, Kingston Hill, Surrey. The report shows that the Society is deeply indebted to the generosity of a kind-hearted lady, who does not wish her name to be known in connection with the matter, for a gift of £1000, which has relieved the committee of half of the debt with which the institution was encumbered. A balance of £1000 is still due to the bankers. Owing to lack of funds the work is much restricted, as the committee are compelled to refuse cases when payment for maintenance cannot be made. Over 1600 girls have been received since the foundation of the Society in 1835, most of whom have been placed in situations as domestic servants and laundry maids.

We learn from the report that the Home will accommodate 150 girls, but the limited resources only admit at present of the reception of about eighty. No effort could be more important than the preventive and protective work carried on by this admirable Home; it ought to have the most generous support of the Christian public.

CORK AND EAST LONDON.

It has been most instructive to watch the object-lesson presented by the disturbances in Cork during the past winter. The brave attempt which has been made to preach the Gospel in the public streets of the city, has met with a determined opposition that has become outrageous. Persecution could scarcely have gone much further without terminating fatally. And all this, not because the thoroughfares have been blocked, or the laws contravened, but simply as an echo of the historic cry, "We will not have this Man to reign over us."

Mr. McCracken, the Baptist pastor at Cork, was one of those who identified themselves with the Y.M.C.A. in their brave attempt to proclaim the love of God in Christ Jesus, and he suffered accordingly. On some occasions it was scarcely possible to distinguish one member of the Mission from another, so covered were they with mud and filth. But, thank God, in spite of all, we rejoice that the Word was not bound, and we anticipate that the victory won at Arklow will be repeated throughout Ireland, and the principle of religious freedom vindicated even in the southern stronghold of Roman Catholicism.

When I was preaching in Cork during the winter, I was much interested in Mr. McCracken, and our friendship has since ripened into a fellowship of labour. He has left Ireland for the present, and identified himself with the work of our East London Institute, in connection with which he will be missionary deputation and evangelist. Gifted with a clear sympathetic voice, and a tender heart, Mr. McCracken is specially fitted for carrying the glad tidings to the people of our land, and we pray that the Lord, who has so markedly blessed him in his ministry of the past few years, may yet further own him to the conversion of multitudes in this country. During the summer months he will conduct tent missions, assisted by some of our students, and we shall be glad to enter into correspondence with any ministers or others who would value his help in the Gospel.

Many of our brethren also will be glad if doors of usefulness can be opened up to them during the months of July, August, or September, and any friends who can offer hospitality and slight remuneration will find bright devoted helpers at Harley House and Cliff. All communications on this subject may be made with Rev. J. S. Morris, Harley House, Bow.

CONVENTION AT NOTTINGHAM.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the first of a long and important series of conferences on the triple subjects of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the Coming of the Lord Jesus, was held at the Mechanics' Hall, Nottingham. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, the permanent Chairman of the Conferences, the chair was occupied by Mr. H. D. Brandreth, of Birkenhead, the convener. The speakers included Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger, London; Rev. John Sloan, Glasgow; Pastor Fuller Gooch, London; Pastor Marsh, Sunderland; Mr. W. R. Lane, London; Mr. Louis Liesching, Mr. J. J. Sims (Canada), etc. It was intended to limit the Conference to two days. The opening meetings were only moderately attended, but there was throughout a perceptible deepening of the interest, and an enlargement of the blessing, in consequence of which it was decided to carry the meetings through Thursday.

The Chairman opened the proceedings with a few solemn words of warning on the spread of agnosticism, not in the world, but in the pulpits, in many of which fundamental truths are denied or ignored. Rev. John Sloan followed with an impressive address on elementary truth concerning the Lord's coming again.

In the afternoon Mr. L. Liesching commenced a series of three remarkably lucid expository addresses on the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar and the interpretation thereof by Daniel. Pastor Marsh delivered an inspiring address on the subject of "Christ our hope," taking as a key-text 1 Tim. i. 1. In the midst of their study of prophecy, he urged them not to lose sight of Christ, who is the centre of prophecy.

There was a large attendance at the evening meeting. Dr. Bullinger delivered an address embracing and explaining the threefold object of the Conferences. Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke on "The character and the end of the age," taking as his text Matt. xiii. 37. Rev. John Sloan delivered a short address on "The practical bearing of the teaching of the Second Advent on daily life."

On Wednesday evening Mr. Liesching continued his exposition of the dream of King Nebuchadnezzar, and spoke of the failure of all man's efforts to make the world better; and Mr. J. J. Sims concluded with an address on rightly dividing the word of truth. In the afternoon Mr. Marsh specially directed his address to Israel. Pastor Fuller Gooch addressed the meeting on "What will be the immediate result and actual consequences of this dispensation coming to a close?"

At the evening meeting, which was largely attended, the chairman announced that it was the intention to hold conferences throughout the United Kingdom, and also to extend them to America, Australia, in fact into every place where the English language was spoken. Dr. Bullinger and Rev. John Sloan having spoken on various aspects of prophetical truth, Mr. W. R. Lane delivered a powerful address to the unsaved on "The great white throne and the destiny of man." Though very late when Mr. Lane rose to speak, he held every heart throughout his discourse, and much blessing was the immediate result.

On the morning of Thursday, the last day, Pastor Fuller Gooch presided in the absence of Mr. Brandreth, and Rev. John Sloan spoke on indications on the imminence of the Lord's appearing. In the afternoon Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke on the Mount of Olives and its prophetic associations; and in the evening Pastor Marsh dwelt upon "Signs that indicate Christ's near return." Mr. Sims brought the Conference to a close by explaining a large diagram which he has prepared, illustrating the course of the ages and their issue in the millennial reign.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—This is so far a religious enterprise that it is an outcome of the general work of the Christian Community. Lord Brassey presided at the annual meeting last Thursday, when the report showed that the readers during the year had been nearly 46,000, while something like 30,000 attended the Gilchrist scientific lectures in the Great Assembly Hall. Some 80,000 persons have benefited by the institution in the twelve months. Lord Brassey thought that the account of the year's work was highly encouraging, and though the committee might speak despondingly about the scheme for providing a new building, he looked upon it hopefully, because the more widely the work of the library became known the more liberally would it be supported.

THE L.C.M. AT GROSVENOR HOUSE.

The Duke of Westminster threw open his beautiful galleries on Friday to the friends of the London City Mission. Mr. G. R. Cole read a statement, from which it appeared that the Mission was founded in May, 1835, and that it started with two missionaries; at present there were 483 missionaries, whereas when the meeting was last held at Grosvenor House, three years old, the number was 504, the reduction having taken place owing to a falling off of the regular income. A hundred and sixteen missionaries were engaged in special work arising out of house-to-house visitation. An urgent appeal was made for an increase of funds, the deficit during the past year having been £1200. About £60,000 a year was required at present, but owing to the constant growth of London, additional funds were constantly needed.

The Duke of Westminster remarked on the zeal and energy with which the London City Mission carried on its work. He very heartily urged its claims for support.

Rev. E. A. Stuart spoke of the advantage which, as a clergyman, he had derived from the labours of a city missionary in his parish. In several instances the missionary had paved the way for his ministrations, and in other cases the missionary had obtained an entrance where he (Mr. Stuart) had failed.

Mr. Barnett, missionary to common lodging-houses in Westminster, gave an account of his work, and of the manner in which the inmates of the lodging-houses were aided by the Society in their troubles, and in gaining employment, as well as in moral and religious reform.

Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes bore testimony, in an eloquent address, from his experience as a minister of the Gospel for a quarter of a century in London, to the value of the City Mission, and said he thought it was nothing less than a calamity that, with London growing at an enormous rate, there were twenty fewer missionaries than there were three years ago.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer of the Mission, also spoke, appealing for funds to enable the Society, not merely to maintain, but to extend its work.

ANNUAL MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

An interesting gathering took place at Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, on Whit Monday morning under the presidency of Pastor Frank H. White. A goodly company assembled in the adjoining hall for breakfast at 9 o'clock, the public meeting being afterwards held in the larger building.

The platform was filled with honoured servants of God from the foreign field, and stirring addresses were delivered by Mr. Montagu Beauchamp (China), Mr. J. Fanstone (Brazil), Mr. R. Wright Hay (Dacca, Bengal), Mr. G. B. Osborn-Howe (Cape General Mission), Mr. T. King (China), and Pasteur Lecoat (Brittany). The weather proved favourable so that there was a good attendance, and many friends were present from a distance. The only thing to be regretted was that shortness of time necessarily curtailed the missionaries' speeches, which was full of interest and power.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The afternoon and evening conferences convened for Whit Monday, by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, were held as usual at Kilburn Hall, Kilburn Gate, and proved times of spiritual refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

A large number gathered for the afternoon meeting, the first portion of which was devoted to prayer and praise, when requests were sent in for work and workers in all parts of the world. Pastor D. M. Cameron gave an earnest address on Malachi iii., Mr. Montagu Beauchamp deeply stirred the audience with his searching words on missionary effort in China, and pleaded pathetically for more labourers, pointing out that for more than 300,000,000 Chinese there were but 1,500 missionaries in the field. A feature of this meeting was the appearance of Mr. Geris Hanna, of Nazareth, who wore his native costume, and spoke touchingly of Christian work in Palestine.

The evening meeting, presided over by Mr. C. R. Hurditch, was a crowded one, and able, eloquent addresses were delivered by Dr. J. Gritton, Dr. Neatby, and Mr. Charles Inglis.

LAW CLERKS' CHRISTIAN UNION.—The annual meeting of this Union was held in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, last Thursday. An encouraging report was presented by the secretary, and helpful addresses were given by Messrs. H. C. Nisbet (chairman), C. T. Dennes, R. F. Griffiths, and W. R. Moore.

Letters to the Editor.

"THE SONG OF THE SHOP."

Dear Sir,—I am pleased attention has been called to the necessity of providing seats for the female assistants in our shops. I desire to point out another evil existing in some of our houses of business possibly worse than the first, because enacted behind the scenes. I allude to the poor and unsuitable food which many hard-worked apprentices as well as assistants have to exist on.

A young friend of mine engaged in a shop in a small country town was recently quite "run down," as the doctor expressed it, and I believe the prime cause was bad living. She was of a delicate constitution, and before boarding at this establishment her appetite had been somewhat studied. Here her mistress, a professed Christian, could herself dine off a mutton chop, and permit her assistants at the same table to partake of a cold collation of tinned fish. Plain suet pudding, warmed and re-warmed until hard and dry, with the addition of stewed rhubarb, served as a treat. Is it any wonder that her employés say, "If Mrs. A. is a Christian, I don't want to be one"?

A medical man, to my knowledge, has had more than one case of illness aggravated by, if not attributable to, poor living, from another shop in the same town, where the proprietor and his wife are prominent members of a Christian church. An amazing feature is that these employers are themselves

Parents.

UNIVERSITY TOWNS AND SOCIAL VICE.

Sir,—I read with surprise the opening paragraph in this week's issue of your valued paper, wherein you state that "a feeling of shame and indignation" will be aroused at the action of the House of Commons towards the Cambridge Corporation Bill.

I am one of those who voted for the clause you object to, and my astonishment is that any good man could vote otherwise. Its object was to limit the exceptional powers now possessed by the University of Cambridge to expel women of ill-fame from the town, and to substitute for them powers similar to those possessed by Oxford.

The object of those powers, so far as I understand them, is to prevent the universities being overrun by the class of women who make Piccadilly and the Strand hideous at night beyond any capital in Europe. They give power to prevent such women promenading the streets in order to entice young men.

Instead of exposing the University towns to the risk of becoming like London, I should have thought you would have wished to cleanse the streets of London itself. Certain it is that wherever the moral sense of a community grows strong, steps are taken to abate this terrible evil, as has been done in Glasgow and other cities, with excellent results.

The object of this legislation is the exact opposite of the C. D. Acts, to which you liken it. The inevitable result of those Acts was to give a kind of quasi sanction to vice, but this is designed to remove incitements to vice altogether, so far as that is possible, by means of law.

I feel sure that you have misunderstood the nature of the Bill, which is promoted by the common consent of the University and the Town Council of Cambridge; otherwise you would have expressed a different opinion.—I, am yours truly, Samuel Smith.

CHILDREN IN PRISON.

Sir,—Notwithstanding the publicity kindly given by the Press from time to time with reference to this matter, and the manner in which governors of prisons are continually calling the attention of the Home Office officials to their arrival into custody, I regret to say children are still to be found in our gaols.

This should not and need not be, for we have now a law by which magistrates can send children to Institutions without first sentencing them to imprisonment. I am sure when little boys are to be seen walking about in prisons, it is only the stepping stone to something more serious later on.

In some cases it may be found that the father is the prosecutor, as the child has "robbed him." As was very wisely said by one of our magistrates recently, "Why was not the temptation put out of the child's way?" No! what they want is to get rid of their children. They do not care so much for the trifle they have lost. It is high time that our Courts of Justice should no longer be troubled with such petty cases. All children under fifteen years of age might be well dealt with by a committee formed in connection with our school boards, vested with power to make the parent pay for the maintenance of such children. Parents would then take more care and not saddle other people with their burdens. I contend that the governors and warders of prisons should no longer be made infant class teachers.

This morning I saw a child in Wandsworth prison certainly not thirteen years of age. I do not say they are not kindly dealt with, because they are, but I do say that it is unkind to manufacture criminals, and this is being done by sending such infants to prison. Having once seen the interior of a prison, its "horror" is all over, so far as they are concerned.

I trust that, by the cases being continually brought under the notice of the Press, the School Board will be made the authority to deal with all children, as it appears only common sense to act in that way.—Dear Sir, yours faithfully,

Wm. Wheatley,
Superintendent, St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE BITTER CRY OF MONMOUTHSHIRE.

It is now upwards of nine months since I called the attention of your readers to the terrible distress existing among the iron and tin-plate workers in these valleys. We were led to hope that the thousands of workless workers would be fully employed in March, but now it is beyond doubt that there will be no improvement in the conditions before the end of June.

Through the kindness of your readers and other friends, we have given up to the present 81,600 free meals to parents and children. Scores of these dear people subsist on the one meal a day received here. I am led to plead once more for further help that this relief may be continued until the works are re-started.

Thos. M. Wintle.

Pontymoile, near Pontypool, S. Wales.

ON THE TIBETAN BORDER.

Rev. John Macara, of the Scottish Universities Mission, Independent Sikkim, writes to a friend under date March 14:—

"Next week I hope to join my colleague, Mr. Sutherland, at Kalimpong, when we will make a short trip into Tibet. The prolonged diplomatic business has been at length settled by a five years' treaty, opening a place called Yatung to British subjects for trading purposes. As the treaty comes into force on the first day of May, we purpose spending the last night of April at the Jalep Pass on the Sikkim frontier, about 14,000 feet above sea level. I don't know how missionaries will fare. All the buildings, etc., are to be put up and rented out by the Chinese authorities."

Will readers pray earnestly for these two brothers who have now entered this long-closed land, that they may be guided and blessed by God in preaching the glorious Gospel, and that the "many adversaries" who are sure to arise when "a great door and effectual is opened" may be overcome in the power of Christ? J. G. L.

SPEZIA EVANGELICAL MISSION.

Everywhere we are encouraged by the spirit of inquiry. The people are anxiously searching for the light, which we are endeavouring to place before them. While English people talk of Rome rising in England, we see she is falling in Italy. A great part of the people are without any religion; while we try to touch the latter, we are relying on their children to be the future Protestant evangelists and teachers of Italy.

We have over 700 in our day schools. To these we give a thorough Biblical training, as well as an elementary education. This does not include our girls' orphanage, where twenty-three girls find a happy and useful life in homely surroundings. At present we lack funds to extend our work, having barely enough to keep going our present branches.

Fred W. Clarke.

STATE REGULATION OF VICE.—On the 11th May, Sir Henry Loch received a large deputation, organised by the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, to represent to him the injustice, immorality, and pernicious consequences of the Contagious Diseases Acts at present in force in Cape Colony, and to urge him to use his influence for their abolition. The hygienic failure of the Acts, and their violation of all principles of national righteousness and constitutional justice, were eloquently urged upon His Excellency, who in reply said he had listened with great interest to the views expressed, and would take care that they were laid before his ministers, who, he was sure, would give them careful consideration.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The annual conference of the Girls' Friendly Society was held last week, when the Dean of Windsor preached, and the Rector of Lincoln College (Dr. Merry) and Lady Vincent spoke on the work of the Society. The Oxford branch is a large and prosperous one, and is doing good social service among young servants and others.

Another Society doing admirable work is the Oxford Y.W.C.A., under the able guidance of Mrs. Palmer, wife of Archdeacon Palmer. A recent effort on behalf of the branch has realised a good sum for the maintenance of its Home for Young Women.

The "Cowley Fathers" are engaged in building a new church in Oxford, of which the foundation stone was laid last week by the Bishop of Oxford. The church will unfortunately be another handmaid of Romanism in a district already possessing too much of that error. But it is a pleasure to note that workers for truth are alive to the needs of the place.

The Bishop of Lincoln preached at St. Mary's on Sunday to an overflowing congregation, taking as his subject the Holy Spirit convincing of sin. He also spoke in the evening at a meeting in aid of Oxford work in East London, which was also addressed by Rev. A. F. W. Ingram, of the Oxford House, Bethnal Green.

Professor George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, is preaching at Mansfield for three Sundays. Last Sunday morning he preached very faithfully and ably on the world, its transitoriness, its perils, and the necessity of taking sides for and with Christ against it—a most helpful and earnest treatment of a subject of great moment, especially to Oxford men.

Rev. E. A. Knox, of Aston, Birmingham, spoke at Wycliffe Lodge last Wednesday on the needs of his great parish of 40,000 people, as to whom all the churches together do not provide church accommodation for more than one in ten. It is proposed to commence a University settlement there, worked on the lines of the London ones, but with distinct and definite emphasis laid on the spiritual and evangelistic element. One friend has started it with a gift of £1500.

One of the most helpful and valuable meetings held of late in Oxford was a "Model Lesson for Sunday-school teachers," given last week to a large audience by Rev. T. Turner, of St. Saviour's, Fitzroy-square, London. His clear and telling treatment of the subject, and his replies to questions on Sunday-school work, will not soon be forgotten by the large audience assembled.

CAMBRIDGE.

The annual meetings of the Cambridge branch of the Church Missionary Society were held in the Guildhall on Monday. Dr. Butler, the Master of Trinity, presided in the afternoon, when there were present Bishop Stuart, late of Waiapu, New Zealand (who is shortly proceeding as a missionary to Persia); Rev. Dr. Bruce, missionary in Persia; the Principal of Ridley Hall (Rev. H. C. G. Moule), Professor Kirkpatrick, Rev. C. J. Procter (Vicar of Holy Trinity), and Rev. J. T. Lang, of Corpus Christi College. The income of this branch of the C.M.S., which in the year 1892 underwent an increase of £100, last year went back to almost exactly that of the year before. At the evening meeting, the mayor of the town presided.

Dr. Sidgwick addressed the Ethical Society on Monday evening in the small room of the Guildhall on "Luxury." The lecture was judicious, moderate, and analytic.

An ordinary meeting of the Cambridge Social Union was held on Wednesday evening in the small room of the Guildhall, under the presidency of Dr. Stanton, when an address was given by Rev. Charles Gore (late of Pusey House, Oxford) on the "Obligation to Discern the Signs of the Times." The room was packed with an intensely appreciative audience. Mr. Gore certainly proved his point with great vividness and power, then proceeding to show that the best principles of Socialism are drawn from Christianity. The growing sympathy with, and interest in, the important social forces and questions of the day amongst University men is very noticeable.

Dr. Boyd-Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, has been delivering a series of six lectures on "Preaching" in the Divinity Schools. The attendances have been both overflowing and enthusiastic. The lectures, which the lecturer hopes to publish eventually, were marked by singular vigour, vividness of treatment, practicality of tone, and charm of presentation. Professor Ryle's lectures, too, have this term been as well attended as in the past. His subject is, "The History of the Jewish Church." He takes great care to preserve devoutness of treatment, while suppressing and ignoring no fact of any note whatever.

An "At Home" was held at Holy Trinity Vicarage on Friday, when members of the University interested in missionary work were invited to meet Dr. C. Harford-Battersby (C.M.S., Niger), principal of Livingstone College. The missionary guest gave an interesting address.

The Ramsden sermon was preached on Sunday in Great St. Mary's by Dr. Welldon, head master of Harrow. A warm tribute was paid to Evangelical leaders of the past, particularly to Charles Simeon.

IRISH NOTES.

Most encouraging reports have been received from China as to the success of the General Assembly's Missions in that country during the past year.

Several leading Methodist ministers, including Revs. Dr. M'Kee, of Dublin, Wm. Gorman, W. G. Price, and Geo. Alley, of Belfast, are about to retire from the active duties of the pastorate this year.

The Belfast Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor, which has been doing a most blessed and useful work, has had a prosperous year. Nine nurses are employed, and these attended 620 cases during the twelve months.

The Methodist Church returns a net increase of 230 members this year, and of nearly 2000 more members than it had eleven years ago, although in the meantime it has lost 5000 members and 10,000 additional adherents by emigration alone, and although the population of the country has been rapidly decreasing.

Some twenty years ago the Belfast Women's Temperance Association and Christian Workers' Union was formed, and although this Society has since then rendered splendid service to the temperance cause by stimulating the efforts of various Christian workers to try and rescue the victims of strong drink, and save the young from ever coming under its baneful power, it was felt for some time that an organisation, which would embrace all similar associations in Ireland, and bring them into fellowship, and stir them up to more active service, was necessary. Accordingly, last autumn the matter referred to took shape, and the Irish Women's Temperance Union was formed, which now embraces twenty-eight societies, situated in various parts of Ireland. The first conference of the Union was held in Belfast last week, and passed off very successfully.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

In speaking on the much-talked-of subject of non-churchgoing, Dr. John Duncan, of Aberdeen, said that the best way to secure a larger attendance at church was to see that the publicans got the Saturday half-holiday.

Intimation of another magnificent gift to Paisley has just been made. Mr. Peter Coats, of Garthland-place, a son of the well-known philanthropist, Sir Peter Coats, has offered to build a separate home for forty nurses in connection with the new infirmary at Egypt Park, the estimated cost of which is £10,000.

The service in connection with the departure of Mr. George Prentice for the mission field at Livingstonia, in Africa, was conducted by Rev. Professor Lindsay, Glasgow, in the Free Church, Peebles, which was crowded by those who had known the young doctor from his childhood, and who were met to wish him God-speed in his noble work.

Last week an interesting commemorative service took place in Cathcart Churchyard near the grave of three martyred Covenanters. The Venerable Dr. Smith, minister of the parish, presided, and Rev. Dr. Kerr gave a vigorous address to the large audience present, who seemed deeply moved as the contrast was drawn between Scotland in 1685 and 1894.

Rev. James Inglis, of Johnstown, died in Edinburgh last week. He had for several years retired from the active work of the ministry, but to the end retained a warm interest in all that concerned the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Principal Hutton, at the funeral, spoke thus of him: "His warm evangelical and evangelistic ministry, combined with an exact and critical expository habit, gave his pulpit work features of attraction both to plain and cultivated minds."

A series of meetings of the women of the parish of Logie Buchan has been held in connection with the setting apart of Miss Jane Paton as a deaconess of the Church of Scotland in the parish church on April 29. Miss Paton is well known in the district as an earnest Christian worker, and has recently been training for special service in the Deaconess Home, Edinburgh. It is hoped that in addition to the spiritual quickening experienced at those gatherings a more active interest will be stirred up in women's work at home and abroad.

The meetings of the United Presbyterian Church Synod, last week, in Edinburgh, brought out the cheering fact that this church is slowly, but surely, making headway. There has been an increase of nearly 1631 members during the past year, and a rise of £31,947 in the income. Kindly messages were conveyed to the Synod by delegates from the Free Church, who expressed the hope that ere long a union of the two churches would be effected. Great enthusiasm was awakened by returned missionaries at the Foreign Mission meeting held on Wednesday evening, and interesting details were given regarding evangelistic work carried on by the Church in various parts of the country, and especially in the mining districts. Attention was drawn to the alarming spread of gambling among the working classes, and special means were devised for arresting this evil, which has now got a hold upon women. Dr. Oliver, of Glasgow, acted as Moderator, and delivered the closing address.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At a recent social meeting lately held in Brighton-road, Dublin, papers were read on the "Prayer-meeting," "Social" and "Music" Committees, and "Why you should become an active member."

The first anniversary of Burnt Ash Society, Lee, was lately celebrated, when a contingent from several neighbouring societies were present. Rev. W. Pierce, of Tollington Park, gave an exposition of the value of these societies, and appealed to all for a consecrated life.

The first anniversary of the Linlithgow Evangelical Union C.E. was observed last week. Mr. Thomas S. Veitch, president of the society, occupied the chair. An interesting and profitable programme was gone through, culminating in the Chain prayer, when three young people gave their hearts to Jesus. This meeting will be memorable to all, as one in which God was manifestly present to save. On Sabbath, special services were held in the church by the society, and in the evening the pastor preached a special sermon entitled, "A Bottle of Perfume."

John R. Cameron.

At Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E., the attendance at the meetings of the C.E. society is steadily increasing. A lending library has been established, which now contains about fifty books. One of the members who had been ill has been at St. Leonards for a fortnight, the money coming partly from the Sick Benefit Fund. On a recent Thursday, Mr. Osborn-Howe, from South Africa, spoke at the prayer-meeting, telling of remarkable answers to prayer in the mission with which he is connected. He has promised to give a missionary address at the meeting on Thursday, 24th May.

THE CHURCHES AND PEACE.

The Baptist Union, on April 24, unanimously passed a resolution authorising the chairman to sign, on its behalf, a petition addressed to the several Governments of the Christian nations of the world in favour of Arbitration. The Congregational Union, on May 7, passed a similar resolution, proposed by Rev. J. P. Gledstone. In both cases this was done at the instance of the Arbitration Alliance. This Alliance, of which Dr. Darby is honorary secretary, is also entrusted with the carrying out of the resolutions passed by the conference called by the Society of Friends, on April 17, in favour of a reduction of armaments, and with that view has approached all the British Churches.

The Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, accordingly, on the motion of J. Oswald Dykes, on April 30, (i.) unanimously authorised the moderator, Rev. Dr. Muir, to sign the petition on its behalf; (ii.) adopted the resolution in favour of a reduction of armaments; and (iii.) appointed four of its members, Dr. Muir (moderator), Dr. Walter Morison (ex-moderator), Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P., and Mr. H. M. Matheson, to represent the Church in a joint deputation to Government from British Churches. The adoption of a similar course in their forthcoming annual assemblies is being urged upon the British Churches by the Alliance.

MILITIA TRAINING.—A correspondent mentions that twenty-one regiments of militia are now assembled for their annual training at various places, and urges that Christians in the neighbourhoods where these men assemble will put forth some evangelistic effort during the short period of their training. He testifies from experience how gratefully such efforts are appreciated by the men, and how blessed in many cases have been the results.

THE Y.M.C.A.

SUCCESSFUL annual meetings have been held at Brighton, Macclesfield, and Waterford.

Neath Association annual meeting passed off most successfully. Dr. Rawlings, of Swansea, and Mr. F. C. Bennett, trav. sec., were the speakers.

Hobart Association, Tasmania, had a successful annual meeting, despite the fact that, owing to commercial depression, it has had to dispense with the services of its paid secretary.

Mr. G. F. Gale, who recently left Clapham for Africa, to work among the Zulus at Lake St. Lucia, is making rapid progress with the language, and reports much blessing in open-air work in Durban.

The twenty-first quarterly conference of the Liverpool district union has been held. A good number of delegates were present, and a satisfactory statement of work was presented by the hon. sec., Mr. T. Jameson, of Liverpool.

At the request of the Australian Associations, an address has been committed to the phonograph and sent by Mr. George Williams to Sydney, N.S.W., where it will be reproduced in the accents of his own voice on Jubilee Day, June 6.

The workers in the Camden-road Association are rejoicing in the fruits of Gipsy Smith's recent mission. A very remarkable testimony was borne at the "At Home" on Sunday week by a policeman who had fallen sadly through drink but has now been saved.

The Brighton Y.M.C.A. reports the various evangelistic departments have been fruitfully active of late. The Sunday evening services have been fairly well attended, and have been of a bright and hearty character. Rev. David Davies' studies on Friday evenings for Sunday-school teachers have been full of interest.

The fifteenth annual report of the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. is described in the local press as a "model document," and as "inspiring in tone" even to people outside the circle of the Association. The Association has passed through troublous times, but its declarations are pitched in a confident and even joyous key.

The delegates to the Young Men's Christian Association Jubilee in London, June 1st to 7th (says The New York Independent), are already starting. Among them are Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, and Mr. L. P. Rowland, the first general secretary on this continent, who goes as delegate of the Boston Y.M.C.A. He hopes to do some evangelistic work in England and Scotland.

Four Biblical lectures were recently given by Mr. R. B. Cave at the Clapham Y.M.C.A. His utterances were well-chosen, simple, and inspiring. His subjects were (1) "Unanswered Prayers"; (2) "The Four Gospels: Why There are Four, and Their Distinctive Teachings;" (3) "Remarkable Names in Scripture"; (4) "The Six Great Feasts of the Jews and their Prophetic Foreshadowings."

The Calcutta Association has been lately reorganised by Mr. J. Campbell White, and promises to have a successful career. New premises have now been secured at No. 2, Chowringhee, to be converted into a reading-room, which will be well supplied with the best periodical literature of the day. A well-attended meeting is held on Monday evenings, while another pleasant gathering has been inaugurated for Sunday evenings.

Mr. Robert McCann has received a warm welcome home, in which part was taken by a deputation from Ireland. During Mr. McCann's stay an Indian National Constitution was drafted and agreed upon, a draft Association constitution was approved, auxiliaries were formed, corresponding members appointed, and a system of transfer for members adopted. The boundaries of the Bombay District Union were enlarged, the finances of the district were placed upon a better footing, one building was acquired and three building projects advanced, and a vigorous work was prosecuted amongst non-Christian native educated young men. His work has proved a most valuable stimulus to Association enterprise in India.

Y.W.C.A.

A CONFERENCE amongst the members of the Central Institute, to arouse increased interest in temperance work, was lately held, Mr. Keeble presiding.

Meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life at the Central Institute, W., conducted by Rev. J. A. Bevan, of Holy Trinity, Hampstead, have been helpful to many. Mr. Bevan is announced to give an address on "The true condition of the heart and life of a believer in relation to the Lord's second coming."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a special mission by J. Neech, at Wisbech, from Sunday, May 20.—For blessing on services in the Gospel Hall, Kingsbridge, Devon, by Mr. John Elliott.

OBITUARY.

BISHOP SMYTHIES.

DEEP regret will be felt in missionary circles throughout the country at the announcement made by the Archbishop of Canterbury at the meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Just before the meeting Bishop Festing, of St. Albans, received from Aden a brief telegram simply stating that Bishop Smythies died of fever and was buried at sea. No date or further particulars were given. It is believed that the Bishop had accompanied Mr. Travers, who had been invalided home from Zanzibar, and had died en route. Though far from well when in London last year, Dr. Smythies had recovered sufficiently to relieve his friends of any anxiety on his account.

Charles Allan Smythies was born in 1844, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. His clerical career began at Great Marlow, where he was curate from 1869 to 1872. Thence he went to Roath, where he remained, first as curate, and afterwards as vicar, until 1883. His popularity among working men was very great, and on being appointed to the bishopric of Central Africa (as head of the Universities Mission) they presented him with a specially designed portable tool-chest, which always accompanied the bishop on his travels. In 1891 the bishop penetrated Nyassaland, and laid the foundations of missionary effort there. There is in the journals of the late Bishop Hannington a striking passage, showing with what cordiality he and Bishop Smythies discussed the missionary problems of Africa before Hannington set out on his fatal journey to Uganda.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Chicago.—From Chicago come reports of deep spiritual interest throughout the whole winter in the churches of the city, and large accessions to the membership in every denomination.

Port Colborne, Ontario.—Special evangelistic services began on Sunday, March 25, conducted by Mr. John Waite. The attendance has been quite large, and it is believed souls have been saved.

Yoxford.—Mr. J. Montford, the Staffordshire evangelist, has concluded a ten days' mission. His labours have been abundantly blessed to the members of the society. All the classes have received additions.

Mr. Matthew Burnett closed an evangelistic mission on Friday last in the Wesleyan Chapel, Walthamstow. Mid-day addresses were given to navvies working on the new railway, also a special meeting for women. Much blessing attended the mission.

Ireland.—An eight days' Gospel mission has been held in Dundalk by Rev. Mr. Robinson. Similar missions have been held in Ballymena by Rev. Hay Aitkin, of the Church of England Parochial Mission, and in Clontarf Methodist Church, Dublin, by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood, Methodist Conference Evangelist.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver have held a fifteen days' mission in Perth, which has been attended with great blessing. The meetings, which were under the auspices of the Perth City Mission, were held in one of the Free Churches, during the week, and in the City Hall on Sabbath. Many have professed conversion, while backsliders have been reclaimed and believers revived.

Norfolk.—The Spirit of God has been working savingly in the United Methodist Free Church, Salthouse, Norfolk, during a Mission conducted by Mr. F. W. Walter, of the Evangelisation Society. So much blessing attended the meetings that the friends decided to prolong the Mission, and a number have confessed Christ. Many cases of great interest happened during the Mission.

Goole.—Rev. E. Davidson has held a mission here. Great blessing has attended his labours. He came to a prepared people. The preparatory prayer-meetings were seasons of earnest, united waiting upon God. Many have left the lower for the higher path of Christian walk and experience. With the unsaved Mr. Davidson dealt with equal clearness and power. Day by day the work gathered volume, and on the last night about forty penitents entered the inquiry-room. In all 175 names have been taken belonging to various churches.

New York City.—The tenth week of the revival was the last. A convention of all the outdoor workers in the movement, with delegates from all over the country, met at the Washington-square Methodist Episcopal Church to institute a great outdoor evangelistic campaign under tents and by street preaching during the summer months. The central committee is to be continued through the summer, and preparations made for an aggressive revival campaign to begin in the fall as soon as the tent and outdoor campaign ends. It is as yet difficult to estimate the results of the revival. There is scarcely a Protestant church in the city but that has increased in membership. More than a hundred different congregations have either held meetings in their own churches or united in union meetings with other congregations. It has been estimated that during the ten weeks not less than 25,000 people, many of them ordinarily not found in churches, have listened to preaching, and that there have been at least between 4000 and 5000 conversions.

PERSONALIA.

Bishop Tucker is spending a fortnight among his friends in the Lake District before sailing for Africa at the end of this month.

Dr. Griffith John wrote to Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, in reference to the proposal to elect him to the chair of the Congregational Union, "I could not accept the chairmanship, even if it were offered to me by the Union. Please accept this as final."

Rev. George Everard is stated by The Record to be suffering from an internal cancer, to the profound sorrow of his many friends. Prayer is being offered up for himself and his wife and children in this time of deep anxiety by many who only know him by name and through his writings.

Dr. Talmage celebrated last Sunday the silver jubilee of his pastorate at Brooklyn Tabernacle. The building, unhappily, was burnt down at the close of the morning service. Other buildings near by also succumbed, and the estimated damage is two million dollars. This is the third time the Tabernacle has been destroyed by fire.

Dr. Parker observed on Thursday the completion of his twenty-fifth year of ministerial work in London. An enthusiastic meeting was held in the City Temple; hearty words were spoken by many warm friends; and a testimonial, a fine portrait, and a cheque for £1000 were presented him. Amongst those who took part on the occasion were Revs. Dr. Clifford and Hugh Price Hughes.

The venerable Robert Hughes, of Gaerwen, who was privileged to hear the famous Thomas Charles of Bala (the creator of the Welsh Sunday-school movement) preach, is probably the only Welshman living whose recollections extend so far back. He sat on Charles's knee eighty years ago to "repeat the first psalm." The patriarch of preachers has been prostrated by infirmities of age, but he is now reviving.

Mr. John Cleife (late of Lisbon) has bequeathed, among other gifts, £800 to Dr. Barnardo's Homes; £2000 to form a fund to the permanent maintenance of the service at St. George's Protestant Chapel at Lisbon, £1000 to the Protestant School in connection therewith; and legacies to Portuguese charitable institutions, to the chapel erected by him and to the poor of the parish in which he resided, to be distributed by the prior thereof.

Miss Maria A. West.—The many friends of Miss West, who have with anxiety followed the accounts of her illness in Cannes, will be relieved to know that she is now convalescent. She has been an inmate of the "Asile Evangélique" for several months. In that valuable institution she successfully underwent a serious and critical operation. We trust many years may be given her to conduct the excellent works for which she is known, and particularly to enable her to carry through the press a new edition of her able and interesting book, "The Romance of Missions."

Mr. Seymour R. Delme, late of Cams Hall, Farnham, has left a large number of legacies, amongst these being £1000 each to the Royal Hants County Hospital, Winchester, and the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution; £500 to the Portsmouth Hospital; £200 each to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest (Brompton), the Cancer Hospital (Brompton), the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Society, and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; £100 each to the British Home for Incurables, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, the Hospital for Women, the City of London Truss Society, the Gentlewomen's Help Institution, and the St. Giles' Christian Mission. Various churches and parishes are also benefited.

THE BIBLE LEAGUE.—The second annual meeting was held at Mildmay Conference Hall, N., on Tuesday evening last. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, spoke in encouraging terms of the work already accomplished. Dr. F. J. Hamilton, of Homerton, delivered an earnest and practical address on the needs of the time, and gave convincing testimony as to the unity and full inspiration of the Bible. Rev. John Urquhart dealt with the Rationalism of the present day that is doing so much to undermine and destroy the Christian faith. A short business meeting was held previous to the evening gathering, when the report was presented by Mr. A. H. Carter. The main feature of the year's work was a special lecturing campaign in England and Ireland.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. Robert Jamieson, a Fellow of Balliol and a barrister, was a man of powers, with great opportunities, but he took to drink, and last week was found dead with a bottle of laudanum by his side.

The Church of England Temperance Society last year received 7876 total-abstinence pledges from sailors and fishermen. This number was but little below the average of 7947 pledges enrolled during each of the last fifteen years.

The Liverpool Wesleyan Band of Hope Union has now seventy-one affiliated societies with 13,000 members. Its annual meeting crowded St. George's Hall, and a hall twice as large might easily have been filled. A juvenile choir of 1000 voices took part in the proceedings.

The annual meeting of the Connexional Temperance Society was held in Wesley's Chapel, City-road. Mr. Thomas Cole, of Sheffield, dwelt on the great strides that temperance had made connexionally. Canon Barker believed that the total extinction of alcohol would be the only means of absolute success. Miss Barnett, of the East-end Mission, showed how great a hindrance drink is to their work. Among the other speakers were Miss Florence Balgarnie and Dr. Jenkins.

The Bishop of London, addressing lately members of the legal profession at Sion College, said: "The educated man ought to be ashamed of himself to stoop to so low a stimulant as strong drink. The poor man had not those things to fall back upon that the educated man had, and, moreover, the poor man if he gave way to drink, brought ruin upon himself, and all dependent upon him. The temptation to drink in business was immense, and all manner of transactions were closed with a drink.

Friends of temperance are earnestly invited to consider the claims of temperance in relation to the coming election of the School Board. All must admit the importance of informing the minds of the young of the evils of intemperance. To faciliate such teaching candidates should be returned who are themselves impressed with the value of such teaching. All the friends of temperance are therefore urged to be vigilant in return of such candidates as will favour sound temperance teaching in the schools. Communications on this matter should be addressed to Mr. Charles Pinhorn, organising agent, 15, Great George-street, Westminster, S.W.

REV. JAMES NEIL is meeting with much success in his endeavours to diffuse a knowledge of Eastern customs in illustration of Bible story. His diorama of Palestine life has now been shown in many places, and hearty testimony has been borne to its excellence, and the instructiveness of his lectures. Mr. Neil recently visited Croydon, where he made many friends. This week he is at Avondale Hall, Landor-road, Stockwell, and June 4 to 8 at the Morley Hall, Triangle, Hackney. Mr. Neil is an able and faithful teacher, and we trust he will meet with encouragement wherever he exhibits his diorama.

RAGGED SCHOOL, PENDLETON, MANCHESTER.—The thirty-first anniversary was recently celebrated in the John-street Hall, Pendleton, the large room being full. In the absence of the secretary (Mr. John Sugden), the report was read by his deputy. The average attendance of the children was stated to be the highest but one of the sixty schools in the Ragged School Union, having averaged per Sunday 1111, and about 300 at the every Tuesday Band of Hope. Quite 8000 children and parents had attended the eight days' Autumn Temperance Mission. Three adult Bible classes had been well supported, and Gospel service on Sunday, women's meeting Monday afternoons, and Gospel temperance Thursday night. There had been much visitation of the sick, etc. Cases of reformation from drink and conversions could be named. Full reports can be had from John Sugden, 46, Market-street, Manchester.

"ONE BY ONE" WORKING BAND.—The monthly praise meeting was held at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, a few days ago, when several members sent forward notes of thanksgiving for answered prayer in the salvation of friends. One writes:—"A dear young German lady whom I have prayed for daily since February 1 came to the Lord most definitely on Sunday evening; and now she wishes to join our band, her first thought being about her unsaved relatives." Another said:—"Two of my servants, whose names were entered in my book December 10, are now, I trust, truly converted. I feel very grateful to you for having formed the band, which has helped so many." A young lady writes rejoicing over the salvation of four friends. A minister says:—"My class has grown from fifteen to forty members as the result in great measure of 'One by One' methods of work. Some who have not before thought it possible have now to rejoice in winning souls. Full particulars of Mr. Hogben, hon. sec., Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Knight-Bruce, of Mashonaland, who is invalided home, is full of hope for the future of the mission.

Rev. M. Greenwood, who has for many years done valuable work in North China, has returned home.

Rev. E. A. Wright, a son of Rev. C. H. H. Wright, has been appointed to St. John's, Kingston-on-Hull.

Bishop Scott, of North China, who had been ill with typhus fever, having recovered, has come home for rest.

The induction of Rev. G. C. Daw to St. Mary, Spital-square, E., will take place on Monday next at 8.30 p.m.

The Ladies' Home Mission Union, an auxiliary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, had good meetings in Leeds last week.

A course of special sermons is being delivered at All Saints', Notting-hill, on "The Church of England's duty to the people."

Rev. R. W. Kennion, who has been rector of Acle for over forty years, has addressed a letter to his parishioners, announcing his intention to resign in October, feeling the need of repose.

A new mission church is being erected at Plaistow East, in connection with the work carried on by Rev. T. Given-Wilson. The foundation-stone was laid last week by the Countess of Warwick.

One day last week the Dean of Norwich addressed a large congregation of City men at the Churchyard service of St. Botolph, Aldersgate. Taking for his text Gal. v. 1, "The liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," he gave an eloquent address. The Dean's next visit on June 18 will be anticipated with interest.

The Bishop of Honduras is pleading for more men for workers in the southern part of the diocese. He is also anxious to begin at once missionary work at Orange Walk amongst the Santa Cruz Indians, Creoles and Caribs, about 120 miles north of Belize by river and 60 by road. A site has been secured for a mission church and schools. There are 900 people in the village, and in the country round many thousands of Indians.

CONGREGATIONAL.

New Sunday-schools have been erected at Brierley Hill, Linthorpe-road, Middlesbrough.

Patricroft Church reports fifty-eight admitted to church fellowship during the past two months.

Rev. J. Lawson Foster has been delivering at Harecourt Chapel a special series of addresses on "London."

Rev. W. W. Burgoyne, formerly pastor of Morecambe Church, has been recognised as pastor of Leith-street Church, Dunedin, New Zealand.

Westgate Sunday-school, Peterborough, reports 384 scholars and thirty-six teachers. Five scholars and four teachers have joined the church during the year.

Rev. W. Evans Hurndall has accepted the very hearty call to the pastorate of Westminster Chapel, and hopes to commence his ministry here in September next.

Rev. P. T. Forsyth has been bidding farewell to his people at Leicester, where his work has been greatly blessed, on the eve of opening ministry at Cambridge.

The rector of Castleford and his curates, Revs. E. G. Smith and W. James, have been taking a kindly part in raising a memorial to the first pastor of the Congregational Chapel.

Rev. L. T. Hughes, Cwmbran, Mon., who has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Cannington and Steart churches, Somersetshire, has been very successful during the past five years of his ministry at Cwmbran.

The quarterly meeting of the North-West Auxiliary of the London Union was held last week at Tottenham Court-road Chapel, Mr. E. J. Physick presiding. The subject of "How Best to Improve the Attendances at our Sunday and Week-night Services" was discussed.

Bethnal Green-road Church reports 396 Sunday scholars, of whom sixty-eight are over fifteen years of age. There are thirty-two teachers. The children's evening service has an average attendance of over 100; the International Bible Reading Association has 161 members.

Calls.—Rev. H. J. Shirley, of Warminster, to Dawes-road, Fulham; Rev. C. H. Baker, to Watton, Norfolk; Rev. H. T. Heap, of Lingdale, to Reeth-in-Swaledale; Rev. C. Poulter, of Bognor, to Shaldon; Rev. R. G. Hughes, of Widnes, to St. Paul's, Newcastle.

Resignations.—Rev. J. R. Clarke, of Old Chapel, Barnsley; Rev. E. H. Titchmarsh, of Erith.

BAPTIST.

New chapels are being built at Clacton-on-Sea, Fyfield, and New Clee.

Rev. Frank James, who is coming to Peckham from Lincoln, was formerly pastor at Kingsgate-street, Holborn.

Two Congo missionaries, Revs. G. Cameron and G. D. Brown, returned last week per s.s. Ukassa to their field of labour.

Mission services, carried on for some time in Parker-street, Sheffield, have resulted in the formation of a new church.

At Parsons Hill, Woolwich, 19 candidates were baptized on Thursday week by the pastor, Rev. J. Wilson, and on the following Sunday 46 new members were received into the church, making a total of 114 in three months.

For some time a good work has been carried on in Theydon Bois, and encouraging results have followed. The hall has for some years been totally inadequate, and it is now found impossible to continue the services in it, alterations and enlargements being absolutely necessary. These, by using old material, etc., and by careful management, will only cost about £190, of which £90 has been collected in the neighbourhood. Mr. T. L. Edwards has offered £1 for every £1 raised towards the remainder. The pastor is Rev. F. W. Boreham, Pastors' College, S.E.

Calls.—Rev. H. S. Boulton to Heaton-road, Peckham Rye; Rev. H. D. Sandell to Lillie-road, Fulham; Rev. W. S. Steedman to Tullymet, Pitlochry; Rev. F. W. Walton, of the Pastors' College, to Biddeston.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Dean, of Yarmouth (I.W.); Rev. R. W. Ayres, of Park-road, St. Helens.

METHODIST.

The United Methodists are about to build a new chapel in East Ham.

Rev. N. and Mrs. Boocock will sail very shortly for their field of labour in West Africa.

The first London District Synod had last week a long debate on the relations of the out-and-out and other mission bands.

Sisters belonging to Bowron House are doing good work in Castleford, Preston, Bristol, Manchester, Helston, Sunderland, and Leeds.

By a special effort the friends at Surrey Chapel have just raised £120 in aid of the general expenses of the trust. The various departments of work are all active.

At the third London District Synod held last week at Hastings, reference was made, in the conversation on the work of God, to the value of the Church roll. Rev. Thos. Saunderson criticised some of the methods of mission work, and the development of Methodism on modern lines.

A notable incident has just taken place in connection with the Third London District Synod which may have a bearing on the future of the Wesleyan Church. A lady has, for the first time, been admitted as a representative to the Synod, and on Thursday, by a large vote, she was elected a representative to the Conference.

Revs. Ferrier Hulme (the founder) and F. L. Wiseman took part in the anniversary of the Warford House Sisters' Mission, Yarmouth. One of the speakers claimed that the Forward Movement had really made the whole world the parish of Methodism, and the sisters' work amounted to a new book of Christian evidences.

Methodist Union will be brought before the approaching Primitive Conference on a resolution from one of the district meetings, where a motion has been passed suggesting the desirability of union between the Primitive Methodists and the Bible Christians. There is a pretty general feeling in favour of this movement, if the necessary changes in name and methods of government can be adjusted.

The district synods were in session last week, and the official figures are published in The Methodist Times thus:—Members 433,351; increases 6197; decreases in six districts only 546; a net increase of 5651. The number on trial is 33,129; new members received 47,834; ceased to be members 23,001; emigrations 475; deaths 5974; Junior Society class members 70,663—an increase of 2694; candidates for the ministry 128.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new Welsh church has been formed at Morriston.

Mr. Edward Davies, J.P., Llandinam, has subscribed £1000 to Trevecca College, and £1000 to Bala College.

Six new congregations are reported as having been added to the English Presbyterian Church during the past year.

The five evangelists appointed by the Synod for the year are Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, S. R. Macphail, James Christie, G. M. Smith, and W. F. Holt.

Rev. A. M. Philip, of Avoch, formerly of Crown-court Church, being on a short visit to London, preached on Sunday evening in his old church.

About 120 members of Synod attended a temperance breakfast which was held at Exeter Hall. Mr. H. M. Matheson presided, Rev. Dr. Horton being amongst the speakers.

The congregation at Heaton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, have resolved to erect a new church. The present building is too small for the congregation, which has grown in three years from 141 to 476 members.

The Synod has decided to meet next year in Jesmond Church, Newcastle. An unsuccessful invitation for the Synod to meet in Marylebone Church was given by Rev. Dr. Pentecost on behalf of his session.

The induction of Rev. Geo. H. C. MacGregor, M.A., of Aberdeen, to Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting-hill, will take place on May 24, at 8 p.m. On the following Lord's Day, 27th, he will enter upon the duties of his new charge.

The King of Servia has sent, through the Servian Minister, the decoration of Knight Commander of the Royal Order of St. Sava to Principal David Brown, D.D., of Aberdeen, in recognition of his Commentary on the Gospels and Acts. The translation has been done by a member of the Servian Cabinet.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

On Feb. 2, a new preaching hall was opened at Chung-King, China, capable of holding 300 people. The opening service was well attended by the Chinese, as well as by several missionaries, and was a time of gladness and hope. Much satisfaction will be felt at home with the advanced step thus taken, and the widened prospect of work.

The removal of the Flounders Institute from Ackworth to Leeds is likely to enlarge the usefulness of that educational establishment. The greater facilities afforded will doubtless promote the growth of knowledge among the students in their new sphere. It is gratifying to learn that the entries of Flounders students for next session are already quite encouraging.

At Philadelphia yearly meeting, held last month, the isolation of that body for many years from epistolary intercourse with all other bodies of Friends was discussed, and its abandonment proposed. The Conservative element was, however, preponderant, and the isolation remains. Temperance education and work among the Indians are well maintained by Friends of that yearly meeting.

London yearly meetings begin on Wednesday next, but the ministry and oversight meetings begin on Monday evening, and some of the gatherings that cluster round the yearly meeting, and add so much to its interest, begin on that day. Ireland, America, Palestine, and Syria are likely to be well represented at this as at former annual gatherings. Almost every evening there will be one or other public meeting held for the promotion of the public good at home or abroad.

Dublin yearly meeting ended last week, and seems to have been a time of interest and profit. Correspondence with American yearly meetings excited a lively discussion, and led to the appointment of a committee to meet in Dublin in autumn, and report next year. The "Forward Movement," in Western America is exercising the minds of Irish Friends, and may lead to changed relationships with them. Friends in Ireland suffer, like other churches, in the dwindling population, and again have to report a small reduction in membership.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

General Booth, who is at present in Belgium, will return in time for the May meeting at Exeter Hall on Monday next.

A native of Jerusalem, who was converted in the Bombay Social Wing, has just been sent as a cadet to the Marathi division; he speaks six languages.

The open-air marches in Waterbury, Conn., have lately been experiencing some rough treatment, the sisters frequently being pelted with stones. In spite of this, the Salvation work inside is going on apace.

Sir Tollemache Sinclair, of Ulbster, has instructed his agent to prepare a deed of gift of the Old Congregational Chapel at Thurso, with the stores attached, in favour of General Booth, for the use of the local detachment of the Salvation Army.

(For Fallen Asleep, see page 30.)

JAFFA.—The English Mission Hospital at Jaffa is no longer the "Mildmay Hospital," which has been removed to Hebron. The Jaffa Hospital is now under the guidance and superintendence of Miss Newton.

Notes and Comments.

We shall be much obliged if any of our readers can spare us copies of the following numbers of The Christian:—1201, 1202, 1205, 1210, 1212.

It is proposed that Sunday, May 27, shall be observed as a day of special intercession for the discontinuance of the opium trade between India and China. The clergy and ministers of all denominations are earnestly solicited to bring the subject to the notice of their congregations, and to arrange to have it made a special subject of prayer.

We learn with uncommon pleasure that Mr. George Williams, president of the Y.M.C. Association, has received from Her Majesty, through the Prime Minister, the offer of knighthood. If such honours are in any sense a mark of public esteem for eminent service rendered to the community, no man better deserves the distinction accorded to Mr. Williams.

Miss Ida B. Wells, the coloured lady who last year described in our columns some of the horrors of lynch law in the Southern States, is again in Great Britain. She has succeeded in enlisting widespread sympathy in the cause which she has at heart; and at large religious gatherings resolutions have been passed expressing grief and horror at the wrongs done to the negro population of America, and calling on all lovers of justice to demand for every citizen of the Republic accused of crime a proper trial in the courts of law. In an article on this subject, which is rendered specially painful owing to the fact that some of the victims are not even suspected of crime, The Daily News has reasonably said:—

> A State in which even criminals are sentenced and executed without due process of law is in a condition of anarchy; and the other States of the Union may well consider whether, should this lawlessness continue in parts of the South, it may not be the duty of the Federal Government to interfere on the ground that it is empowered by the Constitution to guarantee a Republican Government in every State.

The general question of gambling will be sure to receive more serious attention because of the revelations now being made of the prevalence of the vice among women. The majority of the replies sent to the Committee of the Northern Convocation, which inquired into gambling among women, affirm that it is increasing most of all among them. Mothers, it is said, bet away their husbands' wages, and pawn clothes and furniture to obtain money to gamble. Of the habits of many young women in factories we have recently spoken. If children are led by their mothers, the prospect is indeed serious; and the more so, as, along with the common forms of gambling, there is said to be a great deal of speculation in stocks and shares by rich women. The evil points to a duty. The pulpit must shed the light of truth upon this common sin, and the Church must uphold preachers in doing it. The only effectual way of dealing with any sin is to treat it as a sin against God. Contributions to the Anti-Gambling League may be remitted through the publishers of The Christian.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn, of Hamburg, dropped some suggestive words at the conversazione of the Evangelical Alliance, when he pointed out that, although the Russian Government would not, under pain of banishment, allow the Bible to be given away, yet it might be sold at a very low price. If a curious conservatism permits this cheap sale we can but be thankful, and hope that it may long continue, continue until it is changed for liberty. "Persecution," said Mr. Kilburn, "had sent the Stundists from Germany to Russia, and persecution was spreading them abroad there." Tyrants never know how surely their policy aids the Gospel they seek to destroy. Both at home and abroad the Russian Government will have to face Stundism, which is no enemy, but a friend.

Seldom has anything more touching been seen in these hurrying, money-making times than the departure of a hundred Russian Baptists, Stundists, from one of the Baltic ports for America. A Daily Chronicle telegram says:—

> As the ship steamed away from the quay they raised a well-known psalm tune, a great favourite among the Russian Baptists, and it is stated that the tones of the sacred melody were heard for a long time after the vessel had left the harbour, and greatly affected the crowds remaining on the quay.

Much as we deplore the loss of these saints by Russia, we cannot but rejoice in the gain of them by America, where they are sure to coalesce with everything that is purest and best, and aid that country to realise its high ideal.

What is a missionary? The reply to that question will answer others, and solve problems which are exercising some who are seriously intent upon fulfilling the Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Twice at a recent meeting of one of the great societies the subscribers were addressed as "the Society," and the missionaries were spoken of, perhaps inadvertently, as "their servants." The second time the speaker corrected himself, and substituted the word "agents." On the other hand, it is sometimes said that the missionaries themselves constitute the Society.

Neither of these is the New Testament conception of a missionary. Missionaries are not the servants or the agents of the societies, nor do they constitute a Missionary Society. What are they, then? They are Christ's witnesses; "they are the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ." They are those who willingly offer themselves to fight the Lord's battles in the high places of the field. They go forth with the commission and benediction of the Church of Christ, of which they are the messengers.

If the Gentile Churches were debtors to the poor saints at Jerusalem, much more is the Church of Christ debtor to those who have never heard the Gospel; and if those chosen by the churches to travel with and to administer the grace of temporal supplies were "the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ," much more does that designation apply to those who carry the Gospel to the heathen world.

One of the very first responsibilities of pastors and teachers is to teach the flock of God, whom He hath purchased with his own blood, the debtorship of its every member to those who have not heard the good news of John iii. 16; and to press these questions incessantly upon them: "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Nothing will tend more to bind the children of God together in love and mutual helpfulness than obedience to the trumpet call of our risen Lord to preach repentance and remission of sins to all nations in his Name.

"Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?" "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say, rejoice." A soul or a church rejoicing in the Lord cannot help but "tell it out among the nations that the Lord is King"; cannot help but "tell it out among the heathen that the Saviour reigns."

A prominent Labour leader is reported as saying, in reply to Dr. Barrett's address on the Secularisation of the Pulpit, "that preaching about souls was the laziest means of getting a living he knew, for such preachers did not have to bother with any details." We entirely agree with him, if he means that when a man takes to this work as a means of getting a living he is sure to be lazy at it. The saving of souls never was an inspiring and congenial occupation to a mercenary mind. Indeed, we do not believe that such a man ever honestly aims at saving anybody, but only at going through a set of duties.

If, however, he means that the work of saving souls, honestly undertaken and honestly followed up, is a lazy business, then he speaks wide of the mark. There is no work so exacting, so anxious, so demanding attention to every mood of the mind and every condition of the life. It means the pursuit of personal holiness, the keeping of a conscience void of offence toward God and men, the patient study of that Word by which souls are born again; it demands incessant watchfulness, stedfastness in prayer, and patience in labour; it lies on the heart as a heavy burden, for "we watch for souls as they that must give account, that we may do it with joy and not with grief." Soul-saving was never a lazy business to one who was the means of saving souls, and the worker must be judged by his work. Luther, Wesley, Whitefield, Grimshaw, Berridge, Spurgeon, and thousands more who were animated by the same spirit, were not idle.

An esteemed correspondent calls attention to the use of the name Holy Ghost as an adjective, thus, "Holy-Ghost preaching," "Holy-Ghost power," "Holy-Ghost men." He says:—

> I cannot suppose that any irreverence is intended;

but for it to be possible for a child of God thus thoughtlessly to speak of the Eternal Spirit must surely indicate a strange state of soul. Do they realise of whom they speak? Can it be that in these days of work and bustle, they are too hurried even to spare the time to write or speak the longer Scripture sentences,—"Men filled with the Holy Ghost," "The power of the Spirit," "The Word preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven"? What wonder if, with such speech regarding Him who is the Most High God, the Church mourns an absent Spirit?

The Rock asks the question, "Is Rome Gaining?" and replies that in America she has acquired almost supreme power, and has used it to fill almost every post of power with Roman Catholics. In England, too, she has obtained a preponderating influence out of all proportion to the number of her adherents. The Rock thinks it more than strange that our statesmen should be afraid to speak out boldly and deal firmly with such a party. Politically Rome is strong, and is becoming stronger.

But religiously it is otherwise. Notwithstanding the gains she makes by perverts, she is losing thousands of her children in other lands, who are not only drifting from her, but are embracing evangelical Christianity. One man, returning from New York, publicly stated that in a short space of time he had met no less than seventy-five persons who, on leaving Ireland, had renounced Romanism through the work of one Society. His experience is not unique. Thousands of Romanists in America have renounced their old beliefs; in France hundreds of the priests are ready to abandon their profession; in Italy, Spain, and Portugal hundreds have received the Word of the Gospel; in Hungary a similar movement is in progress. From all these facts, the political and the religious, it is evident that the sure way to counteract Rome and undermine her power is to continue instant in preaching Christ as the Saviour of the world. Nations won for Christ are lost to the Pope.

Mr. Montefiore continues, in The Jewish Review, his observations on the New Testament. Writing of St. Paul and his Epistles, he says that the Epistles "fill a new-comer with immense astonishment. They are so unique. They are so wholly unlike anything else he has ever read. Humanity is composed of Jews and Gentiles. It is in their relation to God that Paul's great pre-eminence, his big religious advance, his most permanent contribution to religion, consist." Mr. Montefiore thinks that in some senses Paul turned Judaism upside down. He cannot accept the view that the law was the strength of sin, and drives the sinner to spiritual despair. It might do so to Paul, but surely to him only. Now, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit there is no experience more common than this; self-despair is the point from which the sinner passes to faith in Jesus as his Saviour, and self-despair is caused by his finding that the demands of a spiritual law are more than he can meet. There is evidently a wide difference between the ordinary Jew trained in obedience to a written word, and even a nominal Christian trained to see that religion, if true at all, must be spiritual.

Nevertheless, Mr. Montefiore confesses that Paul's hatred of sin is very inspiring. Equally striking, he thinks, is "his grasp upon the essentials of morality. There is a unity in his ethics: the virtues hang together. On one or two principles, whether religious or ethical, all seem to depend. Nor can we forget that the great apostle of faith has yet placed faith below love." Such study of the New Testament is, to say the least, an effectual way of removing prejudice and misconception; it must also provoke curiosity in many Jews who read the criticisms, and it may remove the veil from their hearts. We cannot have the New Testament read by too many.

Any emphasis that can be laid on the proper function of the pulpit is welcome. All, therefore, whether preachers or hearers, who think that preaching should deal with critical and intellectual difficulties, may give heed to Dr. Martineau, who, if anything, is intellectual, and represents a highly-educated community. After speaking of hearers not keeping themselves abreast of the questions of the day, and thus causing the pulpit to be turned again and again into a mere lecture platform for critical exposition open to contentious and controversial matter of all kinds, he adds:—

Consequently, ministers lose the habit of giving their people those stimulating spiritual instructions, those appeals to the conscience and heart and affections, which constitute the true function of the pulpit. For my part, I regard it as an abuse of the pulpit when those prophetic functions do not occupy almost the whole of its attention. The souls of our preachers will never be developed to their full power till they learn the courage to effect this.

These observations ought to come with tenfold force to those who hold the evangelical faith. Truly their chief business ought to be with the heart and the conscience, and the message our Father has sent to both. "Preach the Word" is the command laid upon the preacher.

"Doing nothing by partiality." An invaluable rule for every minister of Jesus Christ to observe, if he would avoid jealousy, envy, and strife, if he would be to every soul committed to his care a true teacher and guide and under-shepherd. He can only help one as he is impartial to all. But with our natural sympathies and antipathies this is by no means easy. It is far pleasanter to have to do with persons whose tastes and views are in harmony with our own than with those who are repellent. Yet grace, not nature, is the safe guide; and we may be far more useful to the latter than to the former. Anyhow, ministers at least should be impartial, and the same grace is valuable in anyone. Were it more commonly possessed and exemplified we should be richer in good works, for some who are timid would be encouraged to take their own place in service.

BRITISH GUIANA.—The total population at the last census was 288,328, inclusive of probably 10,000 Indians. The number of East Indians was 105,463. We have fifteen stations in which the Gospel is preached in English, and two in which it is preached in Chinese. The total number of believers in fellowship is about 1138. Of these, 1091 are English-speaking and forty-seven Chinese. The two Chinese assemblies meet at Peter's Hall, and in the Camoony Creek, and there are in fellowship about forty-seven. Most of the South American Indians in fellowship are in the assemblies meeting at Matara, in the Berbice River, and at Hyde Park, in the Demerara River.

SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE CHURCH AID SOCIETY.—The Archbishop of Dublin presided, as usual, over the annual meeting of this Society in Exeter Hall. The report presented by Rev. E. C. Unmack stated that the needs of the struggling churches throughout another year had been met, although amidst some anxiety. There was cause for congratulation in the progress in Spain and Portugal. The Archbishop said he might fairly express himself most hopefully respecting the future of the reform movement, both in Spain and Portugal, and appealed for financial support. Prebendary Webb-Peploe said all must be truly thankful for what the Society had been enabled to accomplish. Canon Meyrick, Rev. Gilbert Karney, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, and Rev. Dr. H. E. Noyes also spoke.

Israel and the Gentiles.—III.

THE OLIVE AND THE WILD OLIVE.

"Lo, it is a people that dwell alone. And shall not be reckoned among the nations. Who can count the dust of Jacob, or number the fourth part of Israel?" "If the casting away of them is the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"

Surely our hearts' desire and supplication to God for them is that they may be saved. Yes, and the Remnant which will become the Nation, will be saved. For neither Gentile nor Satanic malice will eventually prosper against Israel. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel. At the due season it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, "What hath God wrought!"

The question between Jew and Gentile involves the most profound antithesis of history, both sacred and profane. We who are witnessing with prayerful and soul-stirring interest the present movements amongst God's ancient people know that it is our wisdom and comfort to keep very closely to the Word of the Living God in all our dealings with them. In love and faithfulness we implore them to search the Scriptures and to consider Him who in all their affliction was afflicted, who grew up before them as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground. We beseech them to hear God's Gospel concerning Him who was wounded for their transgressions and bruised for their iniquities; whom God raised from the dead to be a Prince and a Saviour, and through whose precious blood alone is there "forgiveness of sins."

Nor is it only Gentile Christians who are testifying. Read the following remarkable sentences from the lips of a converted Jew. Oh! may he testify faithfully.

It will be well with the Church of God if the present year brings to us a greater interest in Israel.

Rabinowitz, Warszawiak, Lichtenstein, are men only the other day, as it were, converted to Christianity. In themselves they are signs of the times.

Through the efforts of such men Israel, as a whole, appears to be waking out of the sleep of 2000 years. Thousands of Jews are honestly and diligently inquiring, searching the Scriptures, and comparing the Old Testament with the New; while everywhere fanatical Jews, as in Apostolic days, are contradicting and blaspheming.

Is blindness being gradually taken away from the eyes of Israel? And, still more solemn question for the wild olive, for Gentiles: is that gross darkness which is to come like a pall over apostate Christendom, is that judicial blindness and hardening which will end in men believing the strong delusion and the lie—is, I ask, that darkness creeping on?

If not, what means this ominous turning away from Reformation truth, this departure from the Gospel of the Grace of God, this despising of the Atonement? There are doubtless very bright places here and there. Yes, God be praised! but are not the shadows deepening, are not the contrasts of light and shade every day becoming more marked? Is not the Gospel of redeeming love very contrastedly now a savour of life unto life, or death unto death?

"Borderland," "Spiritualism," "Theosophy," "Mahatmas," and "Fallen Angels," what mean these sounds in our ears? Christian, dost thou hear them? Is the thing true, "even a great warfare"? Then up, trim your lamp, and fight the good fight of faith, knowing that yet a very little while and He that cometh will come and will not tarry.

Remember, too, the encouraging words, "Hold fast till I come" and "The just shall live by faith." C.

The Two Parts of a Whole Gospel.

John the Baptist bore a two-fold testimony to Jesus Christ: first as "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and secondly as "The Baptizer with (or in—R.V.) the Holy Ghost" (John i. 29, 33). Scripture everywhere recognises the importance of combining these two. In the types, the blood as representing the atonement, and the oil as foreshadowing the Holy Spirit, are continually connected. Isaiah not only foretold Christ as the suffering and atoning Lamb (Isa. liii.), but predicted also the outpouring of the Spirit (Isa. xliv. 3). The same connection is seen in Ezek. xxxvi. 25-27, and in the New Testament they are again combined by our Lord (Luke xxiv. 46-49), and by Peter in his reply to those who asked "Men and brethren, what must we do?" (See Acts ii. 38.)

Both these are necessary to a full Gospel. Either, without the other, is incomplete in itself, and insufficient for its purpose. To preach the atonement without the anointing, is like laying a foundation and building nothing upon it. To preach the fulness of the Spirit without the atonement, is like building without securing a good foundation. As the two oars in a boat, as the two wings of a bird, so these two things, Christ the Lamb and Christ the Baptizer in the Spirit, are necessary to a perfect Gospel.

Unfortunately the connection between these two has not always been maintained. We divide evangelical preachers into two classes: first, those who preach "Christ for us"; and next, those who preach "Christ in us." The one is the first part of John's testimony; the other is the second. Each is important, but each requires the other. The result of this imperfect testimony is an imperfect Christian life. Some are like vessels well ballasted but without sail; very steady, but very useless. Others are like vessels with full sail, but little ballast; full of go, but not reliable. To correct these two forms of failure we have meetings, on the one hand for giving emphasis to the atonement, and on the other hand for calling attention to the Baptism in the Spirit. No doubt both classes of meetings are good; but how much better would it be if we preached a whole Gospel, and so rendered such special efforts unnecessary!

It is needful to emphasise both parts of John's testimony. Sin is guilt and condemnation; hence our need of Christ as the atoning Lamb. But sin is also defilement and death, hence our need of the Spirit to quicken and empower. For both these needs John points us to Jesus. Let us renew our faith in Him in both characters.

(1) John belonged to a priestly house, and so was familiar with the Old Testament sacrifices. He knew the meaning of the Passover Lamb, was familiar with the event it recalled, and perhaps saw something of the greater event it foreshadowed. He knew that Isaiah had predicted that the Messiah should suffer, and by suffering should atone, and had said concerning Him, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter" (liii. 7). And when Jesus appears, he can point to Him as emphatically "the Lamb of God." After centuries, during which men waited for the promise of God, having only "the shadow of good things to come," now the promise is fulfilled, the shadow gives place to the substance. Isaac's significant question, "Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb?" (Gen. xxii.), is answered at last. Christ is the God-promised, the God-sent, and the God-accepted Lamb.

"Taketh away" is in the margin of R.V. "beareth." Perhaps the two words may explain John's meaning. The Lamb "takes away" sin because He "bears" it. But what is it to bear sin? Theologians may only confuse us by their differing replies. God's word will explain itself. What does "bear" mean in such words as these? "Whoso curseth his God shall bear his sin" (Lev. xxiv. 15). "Ye shall bear your iniquities even forty years" (Numb. xiv. 34). Does it not mean to bear the guilt and suffer the penalty of sin? Then see the same word applied to Christ—first in type—"the goat shall bear upon him their iniquity" (Lev. xvi. 22); then in prophecy "My righteous Servant shall justify many, for He shall bear their iniquities" (Isa. liii. 11); and then in actual statement by John the Baptist (John i. 29), by Paul (2 Cor. v. 21), and by Peter (1 Pet. ii. 24). He takes away sin because it was laid upon Him—its guilt was charged to Him—its penalty was borne by Him. The cross was the altar; the righteousness of God wielded the sacrificial knife; the cry from a heart that felt itself God-forsaken showed that all hell was concentrated into that awful hour; and the resurrection proved that the work was fully accomplished, and the claims of Divine righteousness were fully met. That was the putting away of sin:—not by the lamb-like qualities of patience and gentleness with which He endured the wrongs inflicted on Him by cruel men; but by offering Himself as a sacrifice to bear the guilt and doom of sin.

II. But that is not all. If we look to Him as the Lamb, let us also see Him as the Baptizer with the Holy Ghost. And let us wait upon Him for all He designs to give us.

(1) Cherish very high thoughts of what this means. In its fullest sense it means a change in you as great as appears in the disciples after the day of Pentecost. In the judgment of Christ, it was so great that He redeemed you at such infinite cost in order that you might receive this gift. It establishes a union between us and Christ similar to that which existed between Christ and his Father. It makes real to us the person of Christ as a constantly indwelling presence. It is the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus making us free from the law of sin and death. It is the Spirit of adoption, driving away every trace of our old bondage, and witnessing with our spirit that we are children of God. It is the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him, making us to know the things that are freely given to us of God. It is the enduement with power for every form of life and testimony. All this and more is included in what our Lord designs to give us.

(2) John saw Jesus receiving the Spirit. It will help us to see the same thing. Our Lord put Himself on our level. That He needed it, settles once for all the question as to whether we need it too. That He received it, settles the further question as to whether we may receive it too. True, the anointing came upon Him in a different form. As the Spirit brooded, dove-like, over the waters of the first creation, so as a Dove He descended on Christ, the beginning of the New Creation. It was an appropriate symbol of the Spirit upon Him who was "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." But upon us—both in the promise (Matt. iii. 11), and in the fulfilment (Acts ii. 3)—the symbol of the Spirit was fire. Purifying like that of the refiner, giving energy and zeal, and empowering weak men with irresistible might. But though under a different symbol, Jesus received the Spirit. We, therefore, need Him, and we may therefore receive Him.

(3) Remember it is Jesus who baptizes in the Spirit. Do not conclude that because you live historically in the dispensation of the Spirit, you of necessity possess all that may be yours. The meaning of the Baptism in the Spirit in your life can only be known as you are in conscious fellowship with Jesus. The fulness of the Spirit is not something you get from Him, but something you have in Him. Your attention is turned not to the baptism, but to the Baptizer; not to your own or to anyone else's experience of the Spirit's indwelling, but to Christ, in whom the fulness dwells for you. This pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeds out of the throne of God and of the Lamb (Rev. xxii. 1). Be occupied, not with the river, but with the Lamb on the throne. Learn to claim and to appropriate by faith all that He has won for you, and of which He makes you joint partaker with Him. The inhabitants of the city of Memphis, Tenn., were continually suffering from their imperfect supply of water. Epidemics were so frequent that at length it was resolved to seek for another supply. They bored to a considerable depth, and found abundance of clear pure water, that had all along been theirs if they had but known how to appropriate it. Are there no hidden treasures in Christ, for lack of which you are weak and helpless, but which only wait to be appropriated by simple, confident faith? "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive" (John vii. 38, 39). W.

THE SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

This annual Conference for the deepening of the spiritual life was held from Monday to Friday last week, and was a time of spiritual refreshment to many. The chairman was Mr. Robert Wilson, and the speakers included Rev. J. B. Figgis, Brighton; J. Gelson Gregson, Portsmouth; W. Houghton, Guildford; J. J. Luce, Gloucester; W. Fuller Gooch, London; R. Middleton, Norwich; H. Lindsay Young, Portsea; and Drs. T. H. White and Harry Guinness. Want of space precludes anything like a detailed report; but below are enumerated some of the lines of thought put forth during the week.

Mr. Houghton, speaking from Rom. v. 10, 11, showed that the office of Christ on the cross was to atone for sin, and the office of Christ on the throne is to keep from sin. Until Christians wake up to know what they have in Christ they will never be able to say, as did a French Christian recently, "I am well pleased with my Lord, and I want my Lord to be well pleased with me."

Mr. Young spoke on the fulness of the Holy Spirit, and remarked that it was possible to be historically in one dispensation and experimentally in another. If God expects his people to be endued with power, it is a crying shame that they should lack this enduement, which would make their words and work effective. The fulness of the Spirit is a promise, claim it; a gift, take it; a command, obey it; it is God's purpose concerning every Christian, let us see that it is fulfilled in our experience.

Pastor Fuller Gooch gave an impressive address on the sevenfold portraiture of a Christian worker in 2 Tim. ii. 15-21. He is a probationer, ver. 15; a workman, ver. 15; a trackcutter, ver. 15; a slave, ver. 19; a confessor of Christ—"one that nameth the name"—ver. 19; a separated one; and a vessel. Speaking on the last point he said that the Holy Spirit jealously desired them that He might fill them with Himself.

On the last evening Mr. Middleton, who proved a valuable helper throughout the week, brought the teaching of the Conference to a practical issue by an after-meeting, when many yielded themselves to the Lord for service in both the home and foreign mission fields. W. M. C.

The World in the Church.

"And others are they that are sown among the thorns; these are they that have heard the word, and the cares of the world (or age), and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." So many things, and some not in themselves evil, seek to gain possession of the heart, that the good seed can scarcely live. The mere number of things that clamour for attention makes prayer and meditation difficult; and distraction is hostile to an intense religious life. The newness of the things which attract us is a dangerous charm: the love of novelty went far to ruin Athens. It is evident that our Lord saw a peril to the soul arising from the multiplicity of objects, from the wishes and longings that are quickened by an ever changing life, from simple occupation with things seen and temporal. Innate evil in the things is not necessary; absorbing preoccupation with them is enough: for then Jesus cannot be Lord of the heart. Hence one of the great ends for which the Church as a fellowship of believers was instituted, was to keep the things of Christ always and prominently before the mind, and so to counteract the influence of the world.

How mistaken, then, for the Church to forsake this object and to bring distracting and dividing things into her very midst! The world in the Church is the danger of to-day. In every direction some secondary thing, which is not her proper work, is placed before her. Art in one form and another draws away the thought and love of some of her members. Music, as expressing the joy of the heart, and also its deepest, tenderest sorrow for sin, is too often made a minister to mere æsthetic pleasure, and diverts souls from God. If the ages of art were also ages of deep spiritual torpor, we should beware of coqueting with a pleasure which may throw us into a spiritual trance. We should be warned by the times past. Music should not be made an excuse for introducing the concert-room in one of its most objectionable forms. We know that when "penny readings" became the fashion, the hope of many that they had established an easy way by which young persons might return from the world to the Church was disappointed; for the entertainment was found to be a way by which too many left the Church for the world. The step placed between the higher and the lower life became more frequently a step to descend than to ascend by.

One of the most dangerous concessions to the world is the introduction of the drama in any form and in any degree. Religious themes are used, and a taste created for other things. We have difficulty enough to keep persons away from places which prove to be their ruin, without putting them through a preliminary training, that shall prepare them for destruction. Love of the drama is a passion of human nature which needs no encouraging, least of all should the Christian have anything to do with those sides of it which inevitably minister to sensual feeling. And how long would the drama hold its ground if that feature of it were to disappear? Judging from such external signs of what goes on inside theatres as can be seen by anyone on hoardings, we cannot but think that the most objectionable features of acting are the most popular.

Within our congregations the difficulty with regard to these clamant outside objects lies among the unspiritual, those who "walk after the manner of men." "Where is the harm?" they ask. And it is not easy to show them, because they are without the sensitiveness of soul which knows that there is harm. "It will lead some to become religious," say they; but in point of fact, it never does; compromise always sacrifices Christ, but never wins the sinner. You can only win him by insisting on his absolute submission to Christ. Our Lord and Master never yielded to any accommodation or to any minimising of his claims. We must adjust ourselves to Him, not Him to us. To obtain adherents by lowering the Divine standard would be to fill the Church with doubtful professors, who would soon destroy every particle of life she possesses. At the very threshold the question must be settled as to who is to rule—the Master or the disciple, the servant or the Lord. "Leave all and follow Me," is his unvarying demand made on every soul of man. A missionary to the Hindoos noticed that in every case where a convert returned home "to bid farewell" to father and mother before confessing Christ, he either failed to confess Him, or, having confessed Him, some time afterwards proved unfaithful. We are making the service of Christ hard by not insisting upon complete surrender to Him, for it is hard only to such as do not give Him all.

The admission of worldly ways and amusements into the Church is a grief to such as walk closely with God. A true pastor is discouraged and his work hindered; anxious inquirers, when there are any, are delayed; young disciples are dwarfed in growth and impoverished in experience. Our correspondence bears witness to the extent to which opposition may be carried by "carnal" brethren to the conscientious convictions of a "spiritual" pastor, even compelling him to resign rather than be a partaker in doubtful things. Such testimonies cannot but be useful, but they ought never to have to be borne against the very Church herself!

"AMEN."

O Christ! the great Amen,
God's "Witness, faithful, true"!
Thy works responding to the Word,
Amen! our faith renew.

All promises of God
In Him are "Yea, Amen."
His work is finished, and secures
Salvation unto men.

Amen, is Christ's response
As man, from earth to Heaven;
At once, "Amen," is God's reply:
The blessing sought is given.

At once let us accept
Our Father's call on high;
And to the message of his love
"Amen" be our reply.

"Come, wandering children, home.
Fear not, return to Me!"
Amen! I will at once arise.
Amen! I come to Thee.

"Believe in Him I send
To save from guilt and grief."
Amen! I will, I do believe;
Help Thou my unbelief.

"Forsake the world and sin;
My sons and daughters be."
Amen! this better part be mine;
My God, my Father be.

"My son, give Me thy heart!
Henceforth be wholly mine."
Amen! Lord, give Thyself to me.
Amen! Lord, I am Thine.

With all thy Church on earth,
Amen, I'll say—and then,
With countless ransomed hosts in Heaven
I'll shout, "Amen! Amen!"

THE PROPHETIC OUTLOOK.

The fact that Dr. Robert Anderson's book, The Coming Prince, the Last Great Monarch of Christendom (5s. Hodder & Stoughton), has reached a fourth edition is evidence of a keen, if not widespread, interest in prophetic studies. Like all writings regarding events foretold in Holy Scripture, this is a work of peculiar characteristics; no two writers occupy the same ground, or open up prophecy in precisely the same way. Some expositors seem to set forth future events as seen through a telescope so fixed as to leave out of view everything between the present moment and the crisis which will supervene upon the present dispensation. Others see "things to come" enveloped in a haze hardly consistent with a conception of God's purpose as revealed for the comfort and guidance of his people.

Dr. Anderson's survey is extensive; he does not overlook nearer events as lying within the scope of prophecy, neither are his eyes closed to remoter and consummating fulfilments. He is convinced that the Antichrist of Scripture is "an individual person, the incarnation and concentration of sin," and he adduces evidence from Old and New Testament Scripture. "The Prince who is coming," of whom mention is made in Daniel's fourth and final vision, will not only be a false Messiah, but a veritable vessel of Satan, claiming to be a manifestation of God. The delineation of this personage in this volume is conducted in a manner which at various points meets prophetical students of every school. In an explanatory note Dr. Anderson well says: "Each of the recognised schools of interpretation has truth which the rival schools deny. A new era would begin if Christians would turn from all these schools—preterist, historical, and futurist—and learn to read the prophecies as they read the other Scriptures: as being the words of Him who is, and was, and is to come, our Jehovah-God, with whom present, past, and future are but one 'eternal now.'"

In "A Retrospect and a Reply," given as an additional chapter in this edition, vigorous comment is passed upon the position of those who would write "Fulfilled" across the prophetic page because of apparent correspondence with events already described in the book of history. The Retrospect takes account of some of the signs of our times; noting, on the one hand, a spread of infidelity and demon-worship, preparing the way for the great infidel and devil-inspired apostasy of the last days; and, on the other hand, spiritual and national movements among the Jews, wholly without precedent during all the eighteen centuries which have elapsed since their dispersion.

"Finally," continues Dr. Anderson, "the Cabinets of Europe are watching anxiously for the beginning of a struggle such as prophecy warns us will ultimately herald the rise of the last great monarch of Christendom. Is all this to be ignored? Is there not here enough on which to base, I will not say the belief, but an earnest hope, that the end may be drawing near?" After the last great monarch of Christendom comes the Victorious Lord, and the age of glory follows apace. Dr. Anderson's work is rich in suggestion for all students of prophecy.

THE MADAGASCAR BIBLE SOCIETY.—Mr. H. E. Clark of Antananarivo, writes to The Friend: "The Bible Society in London allows us to sell Bibles here at a shilling each, and Testaments at sixpence. Our small Society buys these at the depôt in Antananarivo, and not only sells them at half price in distant places, but pays the carriage also. In this way we circulated 1802 Testaments during last year, and not quite a hundred Bibles.

INTRA EVANGELICAL ORPHANAGE.—Rev. G. S. Bonifazi, who has succeeded Signor Bossi as the director of this work, says in the new report: "The number of orphans, boys and girls, housed in the institution at the present time is thirty-eight. Two of the orphans are apprentices in laboratories in Intra; two frequent the technical schools of the town; and one has employment in a shop. All the others are being educated in the elementary schools annexed to the Orphanage, with the exception of two young girls, who, having finished the Government course, are employed in the Home itself in sewing, mending, and other kinds of needlework." Regarding the day school, Signor Bonifazi says: "It numbers at present sixty-four scholars, of whom thirty-one are children from the Orphanage, and thirty-three day scholars from the town. A majority of the latter belong to Roman Catholic families. The teachers are all Church members, and duly certificated."

PAUL'S SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

By Richard Francis Weymouth, D.Lit., M.A., Fellow of Univ. Coll. Lond., Editor of the Resultant Greek Testament.

Ἡ ἱκανότης ἡμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.—2 Cor. iii. 5.

[The object aimed at, however imperfectly attained, is to express as exactly as possible in the English of the nineteenth century the true sense of the Apostle's words as given in the best editions of the original Greek.]

12. 7 Wherefore lest I should be over-elated there has been sent to me—like the agony of impalement—Satan's angel dealing blow after 8 blow, lest I should be over-elated. As to this, three times have I besought the Lord to 9 rid me of him; but His reply has been, "My grace suffices for thee, for power matures in weakness." Most gladly therefore will I rather boast of my infirmities, that Christ's power may take up its abode in me.
10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in affronts endured, in distress, in persecutions, in helplessness, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 It is foolish to write all this, but you have compelled me. Why, you ought to have been my vindicators; for in no respect have I been inferior to these superlatively great apostles,
12 even if I am nothing. The signs that characterize the true Apostle have been exhibited among you in unwearied endurance, by tokens and prodigies and displays of power.
13 In what respect, however, have you been worse dealt with than other Churches, except that I myself never hung as a dead weight upon you? Pardon me this injustice!

14 See, I am now for the third time prepared to visit you, but I will be no dead weight. I desire not your wealth, but yourselves; for children ought not to hoard for their parents,
15 but parents for their children. And as to me, most gladly will I spend and be utterly spent for your souls' sake. If I love you more
16 intensely, am I the less to be loved? Be that as it may: I was no burden to you. But, "being by no means scrupulous, I entrapped you!"

17 Is there any one of the messengers I have sent to you by whom I have gained any 18 advantage over you? I begged Titus to visit you, and sent the other brother with him. Did Titus gain any advantage over you? Were we not guided by the same Spirit, and in the same steps?

19 You are imagining all this while that we are making our defence at your bar. It is as in God's presence and in communion with Christ that we speak; but, dearly beloved, it is all for 20 your edification. For I am afraid that perhaps when I come I may not find you such as I desire, and you may find me such as you do not desire; that perhaps there may be contention, jealousy, bitter feeling, party spirit, detraction, backbiting, undue eulogy, unrest;
21 that, when revisiting you, I may be humbled when with you by my God, and may have to mourn over many whose hearts still cling to their ancient sins, and who have not repented of the impurity, fornication, gross sensuality of which they have been guilty.

9 Power: both A.V. and R.V. insert my. I venture to think so important a word could hardly have been omitted, in the Greek, if such were the true meaning of the sentence. Compare A.V. with R.V., John iii. 34.—Take up its abode in: lit., spread its tent over.

13, 14 A dead weight: more accurately, a stupefying weight. So in xi. 9: the word is found in N.T. in these three passages only.

15 If I love, etc.: some authorities prefer another reading which is followed by A.V.

16 Being, etc.: "My opponents say that my very privation and poverty were means to some unworthy by-ends." The Apostle disdains to give any other answer than that already given in ch. v. 11.

19 That we speak; but, etc.: some read, that we say all this dearly beloved, for your edification.

21 Whose hearts still cling, etc.: the renderings both of A.V. and R.V. fail to give the force of the Greek perfect, which (much more than the English perfect) always implies a still abiding result. Compare xi, 25 and note.

THE OPIUM COMMISSION.

From the beginning to the end of this commission it was very evident to all those who watched the proceedings with a critical eye, that the tendency of both the majority of the commissioners and of the witnesses that were summoned to appear before them was in favour of opium; or, at least, that there was no hearty desire to abolish the traffic, except in the case of a small minority.

As the question was one which specially concerned China, it seems very strange that our traffic in the deleterious drug with that country was almost entirely left out in the course of the opium inquiry made in India. Mr. Alexander's evidence was about the only exception, and, even in his case, China was brought in, not so much by the desire of the commissioners as by Mr. Alexander's determination to force that aspect of the question into the front position which it deserved, but from which it seems to have been the studious desire of the commissioners to exclude it.

When we bear in mind that the great outcry of philanthropists in England has ever been not so much the consumption of opium in India as the glaring iniquity of forcing the fatal drug on the people of China for revenue purposes, and as the Indian consumption is only about one-sixteenth part of the quantity exported to China, it seems exceedingly strange that, while the use of opium in India was so minutely gone into, little or no reference was made to the injury which the drug produces among the millions of China.

I consider this one of the chief defects of the investigation, and one is driven to the conviction that such a glaring omission could not have been a simple oversight, but the result of a deliberate premeditation. Leaving China out of the rôle of inquiry was simply passing over the most damaging indictment against the traffic in opium by the Indian Government. It was a repetition of what the Scripture strikingly represents as the farce of "straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel."

Again, to enter upon the investigation of an article of trade which is a large source of revenue to the Indian Government, in the midst of a strong and an overwhelming official influence, was hardly the way to arrive at a fair, just, and impartial conclusion on the subject. Only those who have lived in India for many years and who have had special opportunities of coming into contact with the force of the official domination and supremacy of our despotic Government, can possibly conceive of the almost irresistible difficulty of inaugurating any measure of reform that may in any way interfere with the revenue of the State.

In any case the bureaucratic character of our Indian Government is sweeping and supreme in all its official concerns, but when it comes to be a question of revenue the zeal of our rulers runs up to high-water mark, and the force of the official flood is well nigh overwhelming. The full power of this tremendous influence was brought to bear upon the procedure of the Opium Commission.

As to all those who are the servants of the State, their vote in favour of the opium was a matter of course; for to act contrary, from any private conviction, they dare not do with impunity. Then there are so many who are held down by the fear of official displeasure, by various social and fiscal considerations; while men of wealth and position would not dare do anything that might hinder their aspirations to gain the much-coveted distinctions or titles they hope some day to receive as a reward for their loyalty to Government.

In the face of all this we need not wonder at the preponderance of evidence given in favour of opium. But there is another aspect of this question which is a very sad one, and that is the deplorable manner in which a number of so-called English Christians have allowed the dread of official displeasure to tempt them to do violence to the dictates of conscience and to the claims of truth.

Hitherto the integrity of English witnesses in India has held a high place in the estimation of the natives of the country, who themselves may be too ready to sacrifice truth to personal interest. At the same time, they did not fail to admire and respect the sterling veracity of the English. But, alas! this high esteem for British courage to "speak the truth and shame the devil" has now been sadly clouded over through the more than doubtful evidence given before the Opium Commission. This I consider to be a far greater loss to our moral prestige in India than any fiscal loss that may accrue through the abolition of the opium traffic. The English character for integrity in India has gone down to a low level before the intelligent people of the land, who do not hesitate to ask us, with a smirk of triumph, "What of your boasted love of truth now? Who will trust English witnesses any longer, when so many of them have caved in from a cowardly fear of official displeasure, and have not hesitated to speak in praise of a drug which they know to be most injurious to the social, physical, and moral well-being of the people of India?" This is a stunning blow to the status of our moral power for good in the land, and the demoralising effects produced by it on the native mind will not wear away for many years to come.

To my mind, one of the most sad aspects of the whole question is the deplorable fact that though the opium revenue is bad money, money clotted with human blood, so blinded are our rulers to the criminality of the whole thing, that they seem to be utterly unconscious of the need of any reform. No doubt the desire for the much-needed revenue swallows up all considerations of the evil wrought by the iniquitous traffic.

And here I would note that the tap root of all the favour shown to the liquor, hemp drug, and opium concerns in India is the financial pressure caused by unnecessary and extravagant expenditure of a reckless Government. The present fiscal strain has already plunged the Indian Exchequer into troubled waters, and unless a speedy and a radical reduction is made the rocks of bankruptcy will soon be reached.

I have much to say on this subject, but for the present will only add that a force of 73,000 British troops, with nearly 200,000 native soldiers, and a double army of civil and military police, is a burden far too heavy for the poor Indian tax-payer to bear; nor is there the slightest necessity for such a display of military power. The stability of our reign in India does not depend so much on the number of British bayonets and native swords as it does upon a contented and prosperous population; and if that can only be secured by a kind, just, and righteous Government, we need not fear the result of disturbance from within or invasion from without. What we want now beyond all is a strong independent royal commission to look into and to retrench with radical severity the ruinous extravagance of our Indian Government. Thomas Evans.

P.S.—We have now the ne plus ultra of the opium iniquity set forth in the prosecution and imprisonment of one of the best men in India by a Bombay magistrate, for the crime of pointing out the opium smoking dens in that city, against which the Government itself had issued a strict order. The wicked indictment of being guilty of defaming the man who keeps the den is the plausible plea for prosecuting those who should rather be thanked for their benevolent service.

Surely the "cup" is now fast filling up, and the day of vengeance must be at hand. T. E.

IMPERIAL HALL, HANLEY.—On Sunday week, a service in memory of four friends connected with the Mission who had died during the past eighteen days was conducted by Mr. Middleton. The service was largely attended, and it is hoped much good will result. By the kindness of Captain Smith, of the Evangelisation Society, a Gospel Tent will be worked by the Mission in and around the Potteries throughout the summer months.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE is disseminated with much encouragement by the agents of the Société Evangélique de France. There are twenty-one evangelistic stations and seventy out-stations, while during last year some three hundred places were visited by the workers. M. Mouron, secretary of the society, relates an incident showing the sad ignorance of the French people regarding the Scriptures. A friend of his, zealous in Christian work, sent a copy of John's Gospel to a gentleman of position. What was his astonishment a few days afterwards, to receive the book back with a note in these terms:—"I congratulate you on the authorship of such a work. In case you publish anything further of the same kind, I hope you will not forget me."

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster.

I.—"THE WORD OF THE LORD CAME UNTO ME."

(Jeremiah i. 4, 11, 13.)

"We know—things that we cannot say;
We soar—where we could never map our flight;
We see—flashes and colourings too quick and bright
For any hand to paint. We hear—
Strange far-off mental music, all too sweet,
Too great for any earthly instrument;
Gone, if we strive to bring it near."

F. R. HAVERGAL.

In the days of David and Solomon may be compared to spring and summer in the history of the Kingdom of Israel, it was late autumn when our story opens. The influence of the spiritual revival under Hezekiah and Isaiah, which had for a brief interval arrested the process of decline, had spent itself; and not even the reforms of the good King Josiah, which affected rather the surface than the heart of the people, would avail to avert inevitable judgment.

The northern tribes were captive on the plains of Mesopotamia, whence, in the dawn of history, their race had sprung. And Judah, unwarned by the fate of her sister Israel, was rapidly pursuing the same path, to be presently involved in a similar catastrophe. King and Court, princes and people, prophets and priests, were infected with the abominable vices, for committing which the Canaanites had been expelled from the Promised Land centuries before.

Every high hill had its thick grove of green trees, within whose shadow the idolatrous rites and abominable license of nature worship were freely practised. The face of the country was thickly covered with temples erected for the worship of Baal and Astarte, and all the host of heaven, and with lewd idols. In the cities, the black-robed chemarim, the priests of these unhallowed practices, flitted to and fro in strange contrast to the white-stoled priests of Jehovah. The people were taught to consider vice as part of their religion, and to frequent houses dedicated to impurity. All kinds of evil throve unchecked. The poor were plundered, the innocent falsely accused, wicked men lay in wait to catch men; theft and murder, adultery and idolatry, like spores of corruption, filled the fœtid air and flourished on the tainted soil (ii. 20, 27, 34; v. 7, 8, 26; ix. 2).

But it was in Jerusalem that these evils came to a head. In the streets of the holy city, the children were taught to gather wood, whilst the fathers kindled the fire, and the women kneaded dough to make cakes for Astarte, "the queen of heaven," and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods. The Temple, with so many sacred associations, was the headquarters of Baal worship; its courts were desecrated by monstrous images and symbols, and its precincts were the abode of infamous men and women. It seemed as though the King of Sodom had dispossessed Melchizedek in his ancient home. Below the Temple battlements, deep down in the valley of Hinnom, scenes were constantly witnessed that recalled the darkest cruelties of heathendom. There was the high place of Tophet, which derived its name from the clamour of the drums that drowned the cries of the babes flung into the fires. It was an awful combination. "The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord!" was the cry of the heartless formalist; whilst below the sacred shrine such scenes of devilry were rife. Ah me! would that it had been the last time in the world's history when the profession of true religion had been accompanied by the license of vice and the service of the devil!

In such a Sodom God's voice must be heard. The Judge of all the earth must warn the ungodly of a certain retribution, only to be averted by swift repentance. The Good Shepherd must seek his wayward sheep. Better believe that there is no God than think that He could be speechless in the presence of sins that frustrated his election and long education of Israel, and threatened to terminate its very existence as a people.

Yet if God speak, it must be through the yielded lips of man. For if his voice struck the ear of sinful man directly, it would either paralyse him with dread, or seem indistinct, like the mutterings of thunder. So in every age the Divine Spirit has gone through the world seeking for the prepared lip of elect souls through which to utter Himself. He seeks such to-day. Men are still the vehicles of his communications to men. To us, as to Ezekiel, the Divine Spirit says, "Son of man, thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from Me."

In the call of Jeremiah we may discover the sort of man whom God chooses as the medium for his speech. And our discovery will greatly startle us. We shall find the heavenly treasure in a simple earthen vessel. Not in the metropolis, but in the poor village of Anathoth, three miles to the north; not in an elder, but in a youth; not among the high and noble, but in the family of an undistinguished priest; not in a man mighty as Elijah, eloquent as Isaiah, or seraphic as Ezekiel; but one who was timid and shrinking, conscious of his helplessness, yearning for sympathy and love that he was never to know. Such was the chosen organ through which the Word of the Lord came to that corrupt and degenerate age.

It is not to be expected that a superficial gaze will discern the special qualifications that attracted the Divine choice to Jeremiah. But that is no wonder. The instruments of the Divine purpose in all ages have not been such as man would have selected. God has always chosen "the foolish things of the world, that He might put to shame them that are wise; and the weak things of the world, that He might put to shame the things that are strong; and the base things of the world, and the things that are despised, yea, and the things that are not, that He might bring to nought the things that are; that no flesh should glory before God." Your family may be poor in Manasseh, and yourself the least in your father's house—nothing more than a cake of barley bread; yet if God lay hold of you, He will work a wonderful deliverance. But there were several reasons why

JEREMIAH MIGHT HAVE BEEN PASSED OVER.

He was young. How young we do not know; but young enough for him to start back at the Divine proposal, with the cry, "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child." Without doubt, as a boy he had enjoyed peculiar advantages. He came of a priestly family; his father, Hilkiah, may have been the high-priest who, in the discharge of his sacred office in the Temple, discovered the manuscript roll, which proved to be a copy of the Book of the Law, and led to the reformation under Josiah. His uncle, Shallum, was the husband of Huldah, the prophetess, in whom the fire of the old Hebrew faith was burning brightly, even in those days of almost universal degeneracy. Shaphan, Baruch, and Hanameel were probably the companions of his youth, and together formed a little band, who nourished the noblest traditions of the national life. Still, Jeremiah was but as a child.

God has often selected the young for posts of eminent service. Samuel and Timothy; St. Francis of Assisi, who renounced the world at the age of twenty-four; and St. Francis de Sales, who took up his life-work at twenty-six; Calvin, who wrote his Institutes before he was twenty-four; and Wesley, who was only twenty-five when he inaugurated the great system of Methodism. In every age of the Church young eyes have eagerly scanned this paragraph; and have dared to cherish the hope that since youth did not disqualify Jeremiah, so it would not render them unfit for the special service of God. The only thing to be sure of is that God has really called you; and this can only be ascertained after very careful consideration. There is, first, the consciousness of a strong inward impulse, which is most present in the holiest hours, but which is never far away, and often surges up pure and strong in the soul. There, is next, a certain concurrence of Providence, by which other doors seem closed, and that opened which conducts to the desired goal. Besides these, there is a natural adaptation, a consensus of opinion amongst friends and advisers, and the constant voice of the Spirit through the Word.

He was naturally timid and sensitive. By nature he seemed cast in too delicate a mould to be able to combat the dangers and difficulties of his time. He reminds us of a denizen of the sea, accustomed to live within its shell, but suddenly deprived of its strong encasement, and thrown without covering on the sharp edges of the rocks. The bitter complaint of his after life was that his mother had brought him into a world of strife and contention. And it was in allusion to the natural shrinking of his disposition that Jehovah promised to make him a "defenced city, an iron pillar, and a brazen wall against the whole land."

Many are moulded upon this type. They have the sensitiveness of a girl, and the nervous organism of a gazelle. They love the shallows, with their carpet of silver sand, rather than the strong billows that test a man's endurance. For them, it is enough to run with footmen; they have no desire to contend with horses. They love the land of peace in which they are secure, and have no heart for the swelling of Jordan. Yet such, like Jeremiah, may play an heroic part on the world's stage, if only they will let God lay down the iron of his might along the lines of their natural weakness. His strength is only made perfect in weakness. It is to those who have no might that He increaseth strength. Happy is the soul that can look up from its utter helplessness and say with Jeremiah, "O Lord, my strength in the day of affliction"; or with Micah, in yet earlier times, "Truly I am full of power, by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin."

He specially shrank from the burden he was summoned to bear. His chosen theme would have been God's mercy—the boundlessness of his compassion, the tenderness of his pity. In the earlier chapters, when pleading with the people to return to God, there is a tenderness in his voice, and pathos in his speech, which prove how thoroughly his heart was in this part of his work. Some of his choicest allusions to natural scenes are intended to set forth the love of God to backsliding and penitent souls. God's mercy is like "a fountain of living waters," as contrasted to the brackish contents of the rock-hewn cisterns; or like the ocean waves lapping on the bank of soft sand they may not pass; or like a husband's great love, which cannot forget the day of espousals amid the unfaithfulness which has ruined the peace of his home.

But to be charged with a message of judgment; to announce the woeful day; to oppose every suggestion of heroic resistance; to charge home on the prophetic and the priestly orders, to each of which he belonged, and the anger of each he incurred, the crimes by which they were disgraced—this was the commission that was furthest from his choice. "As for me," he cried, "I have not hastened from being a shepherd after Thee; neither have I desired the woeful day; Thou knowest" (xvii. 16).

He was conscious of his deficiency in speech. Like Moses, he could say, "O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since Thou hast spoken unto thy servant: but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." Like Isaiah, he might cry, "Woe is me! for I am undone: because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of hosts." Like the Apostle Paul, he would affirm, "My speech and my preaching were not in persuasive words of wisdom." "Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak, for I am a child."

The best speakers for God are frequently they who are least gifted with human eloquence; for if that be richly present—the mighty power of moving men—there is an imminent peril of relying on it, and attributing the results to its magnetic spell. God cannot give his glory to another. He may not share his praise with man. He dare not expose his servants to the temptation of sacrificing to their own net or trusting their own ability. And so He often chooses uneloquent lips, and touches them with his finger, and leaves his words trembling there, the meet vehicles of his thoughts that burn on the altar of the soul. Of Him, and through Him, and to Him must be all things, that the glory may be his for ever.

Do not then despair because of these apparent disqualifications. None of them will shut out from thee the accents of the voice of God. Notwithstanding all, the Word of the Lord shall come to thee; not for thy sake alone, but for those to whom thou shalt be sent. The one thing that God demands of thee is absolute consecration to his purpose, and willingness to go on any errand on which He may send thee. If these are thine, all else will be given thee. He will hush thine alarm—"Be not afraid!" He will assure thee of his presence—"I am with thee, to deliver thee." He will equip thee—"Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth; and the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth." How the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah we cannot tell; whether audibly as to Samuel, or in the deep chambers of his soul. But when it came, he knew it. And we shall know it. Oh, for the circumcised ear, and the loyal, obedient heart!

AN IDEAL HOLIDAY FOR £2 10s.

A most delightful programme lies before me of the Grindelwald Conference of 1894. It is entitled "An Ideal Swiss Holiday for ten guineas." Not only are we promised the exquisite scenery of the Alps, but a mental feast in addition. In early July the programme is devotional and expository; later on in the month social problems claim attention; whereas in August scientific and literary tastes can be gratified. This is a very delightful hearing, and all for ten guineas.

But some who cannot afford even this modest sum need not despair, for we have a Switzerland at home, not only in the romantic district of the Lakes, but also in the hills and dales of Derbyshire. There, at our Cliff College, when the ordinary session of work has closed, we intend to open on Saturday, July 7, a fortnight's "Summer School" somewhat on the same lines as Mr. Moody's Northfield Convention.

Like our friends at Grindelwald we intend to combine a charming holiday with mental refreshment and invigoration, and expect that when publicity is given to our interesting programme we shall find a large number of Ministers, Bible Class Leaders, Local Preachers, and intending Missionaries who will be delighted to avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded.

In the morning we shall have a series of lectures by some of the ablest exponents of the Word of God. It is needless to speak about the pleasures in store to any who are acquainted with the friends who have promised their help. Suffice it to mention that Rev. Charles Inwood, whose cheery voice has been so often heard on the Keswick platform, is going to deliver four addresses on the subject of the Holy Spirit. Mr. David Baron, whose name is beloved by many for Israel's sake, is to give a series of expositions of the Old Testament, and those of us who had the privilege of hearing his lecture on Haggai at the Manchester Convention will readily understand what an inspiration he is to Christian workers. Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, has kindly consented to give four addresses on the Tabernacle and the offerings. None but those who have carefully studied these wonderful types can adequately appreciate the importance of their bearing on the preaching of the Gospel. Rev. R. Wright Hay, of the Baptist Missionary Society, who has recently returned from India, undertakes a series of lectures on the Principles of Missions, and a rich treat is expected in this course, based, as it will be, on the Scriptures. Dr. Grattan Guinness will not only give Astronomic talks in the Observatory, but will also deliver two lectures on the relation of Prophecy to Missionary and Gospel work. We are hoping also to hear his voice frequently at morning worship.

A series of practical evangelistic talks will be delivered by Mr. W. R. Lane, and the well-known missionary friends will introduce us to foreign fields with which they have been specially identified.

After an early dinner each day, the afternoon will be devoted to rambles through the lovely country, to bathing, cricket, pic-nics to any of the points of interest that abound in the Peak district by which we are surrounded. A visit to Chatsworth and Haddon Hall, the Blue John Mines at Castleton, or the famous Peak Cavern; to the Preaching Stone in the historic village of Eyam, or the Druidical remains of the neighbourhood, are all easily possible. But we must not enlarge or we shall have too many applicants for our limited accommodation.

We are purposely keeping the charge very low, so as to put this delightful holiday and summer school within the range of many an earnest worker who cannot afford a visit to the Continent. The modest sum of £2 10s. covers all the main expenditure during the holiday. This surely will exclude none, and if more apply for rooms than can be received within the College walls, we must see what can be done to quarter the students in the villages that surround us.

An illustrated programme is being prepared, which can be obtained on application, enclosing 1½d. in stamps, to Harley House, Bow, London, E.

YOUR GREAT PROBLEM is how to maintain your soul's child-heart while he is feeding through the mouth, the ear, and the eye.

A HOLIDAY CAMP MEETING.

Shawford Downs, three miles from Winchester, bathed in the glow and light of sunshine, are a picture in themselves not easily forgotten. But when, as on Monday last week, a crowd of not less than 2000 persons sit and stand gazing up into the earnest faces of God's ministering servants as they tell of the Light of Life and of the Sun of Righteousness, these downs are certainly transcendently beautiful. Though personally too unwell to take any part in those glorious Whit-Monday services on the downs, we yet caught one brief glimpse, from the huge farm waggon which served as platform, of the whole scene. The rising downs; their green slopes; their picturesque ridges; the hawthorn trees and hedges white with May blossom; the form of a picturesque old shepherd silhouetted against the sky as he stood upon the highest point of the downs to the west; his dog a restless black spot at his side; his charge a flock of splendid sheep feeding a few ridges below; the music of the sheep bells rising above the hum of the voices of the gathered flock of human sheep on the lower level, all this combined to make a deep impression upon the eye and mind.

The occasion of this vast gathering had been advertised as "a monster camp meeting" by the workers at the head of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. In the waggon the speakers for the day found ample and comfortable room. Among these we noticed Mr. and Mrs. Bland G. Sinclair, of London; Pastor T. L. Johnson, the African evangelist; G. Pullinger, late of the Queen's Guards; Mr. C. Edwards, Miss L. Perks, Mr. Holloway, Mrs. Sydney Watson, and Rev. W. Wardle (Wesleyan). Mr. C. Edwards opened the meeting with a few words of explanation and exhortation; then from an extemporised platform in front of the waggon, upon which a harmonium, played by Miss E. Perks, and two or three cornets were stationed, there rose the keynotes of the first song of praise. How those 2000 people sang! Crowds of utterly careless holiday-makers showed how firm a grip the songs of Zion had got upon their memories, if they had not yet won all their hearts. There was some encouragement to dispirited Sunday-school teachers in this evident fact, that the songs of the class-days lived yet in the minds of their lapsed scholars.

Earnest addresses were delivered by the various speakers during the four and a-half hours between 3 and 7.30 p.m., and more than one person has since remarked that the Soldiers' Home were singularly fortunate in securing so many persons as speakers who proved themselves capable of securing and retaining the attention of such a vast and, at the same time, a holiday crowd. This is true, but it is only part of the truth. The chief part is that which the outsiders failed to grasp—the divine part. The day's proceedings had been steeped for weeks beforehand in prayer—God was acknowledged. The programme from beginning to end was a spiritual one—God was consulted. The only message, the only attraction for the day was the Gospel, the three R's, the finished work—Christ was lifted up.

From four o'clock until 6.30 relays of people—about 140 at a time—were tea'd in the hall of the Soldiers' Home Mission at Shawford. At 7.30 a closing meeting, conducted by Mr. C. Edwards, was held in the hall, when the place was packed to the doors. Again Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Pullinger, and Mr. Johnson addressed the people, and there were not wanting signs of distinct blessing. As the loaded trains bore away the crowds from the little station, and as the weary workers bade each other good night, we thought of Longfellow's lines—

> Something attempted, something done,
> Has earned a night's repose.

Then we remembered how wonderfully God has, through all the months of this year of '94, given the spirit of hearing to the people of Hampshire, and thought of the forty converts in this place, forty-five in that place, fifteen in another place, and so on, and found ourselves murmuring—

> Lo! the promise of a shower
> Drops already from above;
> But the Lord will shortly pour
> All the Spirit of his love!

Surely many more such gatherings might be wisely arranged for our public holidays.

Sydney Watson.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS are being held in Berkhamsted Park for the Militia now in training there.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

The monthly Workers' Meeting at the Bethnal Green Beehive of consecrated service was held on Wednesday week. Quite a large party of sweet-faced little ones, shortly to leave for Canada, were present, singing various simple pieces and proving their knowledge of Scripture by answering questions thereupon.

Mr. T. B. Miller, who gave the address of the evening, gleaned various lessons from the story of Gideon. The angel of the Lord (Judg. vi. 12) salutes him as "Thou mighty man of valour." Why? Because the Lord is with him. Observe Gideon's modesty. He does not, in his reply, mention himself at all. He is full of the sorrow of his people. Such modesty is one of the rarest gifts among the servants of Christ to-day; yet self-esteem must hinder greatly the power of God. Thus from verses 12 to 24 (Judg. vi.) we have what might be called Gideon's preparation for service: the dealing of God with his soul. But at verse 25 we find him called to active service, and observe it is hard and difficult service—to throw down his father's altar. So the Lord often demands of us something we would fain shrink from. Then in verse 34 we find the Spirit of God came upon—"put on," as the word is in the original—Gideon. It is not Gideon striving after the Holy Spirit, but the Holy Spirit entering into him, filling him, using him as an instrument for the accomplishment of his purposes. It is not that the old flesh is dead—we see later on in the story that it is not—but simply that it is crushed down, mortified, kept in subjection by the constant, daily, hourly presence of the Holy Spirit.

IN RUSSIAN PRISONS.

Dr. Baedeker brought the assembled workers greetings from dear people persecuted for the Lord's sake, suffering in prison and in exile, shining in dark places for Jesus. Even in the great prisons many such are witnessing for Christ; if they can do nothing else they can speak of Him to their fellow prisoners. All manner of expedients are tried to reduce them to silence; in one sad case a devoted man is linked with a raving madman in order to distract him, but all the time this tried brother keeps reading his Bible, and so is stayed in peace.

I am full of hope for these dark places of the earth. I feel sure it is the darkness before the day. I have great faith for Russia, although at present it looks darker than ever, and more people are being sent to prison. God will not forsake his suffering ones. Remember the liberty we enjoy in this land was purchased by much suffering; so it may be in Russia, where many are hungering for the Gospel.

It has been my joy to be allowed once more to go into these prisons and preach Jesus to those doubly bound—fettered in iron and fettered by ignorance and sin. It is wonderful how these great prisons have been kept open to the Gospel. It is the Lord's doing; and marvellous in our eyes. I do not see why there should not be similar liberty in England. If our Gospel be a Gospel of salvation ought we not to see it has free access to those who need it most? Will you pray the Lord that He may keep the doors open in the prisons of Russia? I hope ere long to make another journey in that empire. Will you pray for me and for our suffering brethren?

Miss Macpherson asked prayer for the work of the Home of Industry, and for East-end labourers generally; everywhere is felt the need of more spiritual power—the reviving breath of the Holy Spirit of God.

POOR JEWS IN LEEDS.—Mr. Isidor Gelbflaum (9, Amberley Grove, Leeds) writes: "The Jewish slipper makers are on strike, seeking better treatment on the part of their Jewish employers. The women and children are without food, and I desire to help them. This is a deserving case, as the workers are temperate and honest."

PETTICOAT LANE.—Noticing Mr. Charles Cook's recent article on this "Plague Spot of London," Mr. C. Geary writes from Spitalfields: "I must demur to the inference that there is no visitation. As the chief agent of the Sunday Rest Association, which for more than fifty years has been engaged in the suppression of Sunday trading, it has been my duty, in company with Christian helpers, to spend a very large proportion of my time on Sunday morning in this locality, endeavouring to stem the tide of iniquity. I could add much to what Mr. Cook has said, but the evil has assumed such enormous proportions that it is perfectly hopeless to expect much from voluntary effort. The strong arm of the law is needed to stop the grosser evils."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MAY 27.—JEREMIAH XXIII.

Denunciation of the King and his Subordinates (1-8).—The kings mentioned in the previous chapter are here compared to shepherds appointed to care for God's flock. When man fails to do his duty, God undertakes it, so that the poor and sorrowful are not utterly neglected. (3) This was fulfilled in the restoration under Ezra. It is yet to be fulfilled in the return of Israel to the true Shepherd and Bishop of souls. It is being fulfilled in the return of every prodigal. (5) The unrighteous governors are contrasted with the true Prince, described as a shoot from the decayed stock of David. "Prosper," i.e., deal wisely (Isa. lii. 13, marg.; liii. 10). He is not merely righteous Himself, but our righteousness (1 Cor. i. 30, 6-8; chap. xxxiii. 16). Surely this waits for fulfilment. The marvels of the future shall surpass those of the Exodus.

Denunciation of the False Prophets (9-40).—In the first paragraph, 9-14, we have a description of their sins; in the second, 15-40, of their inevitable punishment. (9) When we preach on God's judgments, there should be grief in our heart, and a tremor in our voice. (10) This may refer to spiritual unfaithfulness, but it was probably literally true, and the curse of God (R.V. marg.) rested heavily upon the land. (12) When a man has definitely chosen some evil course, he is driven on, though it be slippery and dark, to find therein his doom. (13) As God saw folly (lit. unsavouriness, the want of saltness in salt) in the prophets of Samaria, so now He saw a horrible thing amongst those of Jerusalem. (16) We must take great care lest we speak the visions of our own heart. The only means of having authority over men is to obtain it straight from God. (17) It is an awful thing to speak peace to those who despise God. The blood of souls is on the head of the man who encourages the sinner in his evil way by assurances that no evil shall come unto him. (18-22) Do not run unless you are sent, or prophesy till you have been spoken to, and be sure that if you are on God's lines, and speak his word, you shall turn men from their evil way. (23) God cannot be deceived by specious religious appearances. (28) It can be easily discovered when a man is speaking his own words or God's, as chaff from wheat. Alas! how much of the former there is in all our messages. (29) Oh for the power of the fire and the hammer when we speak for God! (30) The prophets had three species of deception. Sometimes they borrowed from the true prophets. (31) Or they uttered their own words as if God-given. (32) Or they invented dreams. (33) Apparently in allusion to the mocking inquiry of the Jews, as to what might be Jeremiah's burden from the Lord. An end would come to such profanity, because God would make those scoffs and taunts come back as a heavy weight upon such as had uttered them. City and land would be utterly forsaken.

MONDAY, MAY 28.—JEREMIAH XXIV.

This chapter should be read in connection with chap. xxvii.; 2 Kings xxiv. 12-20.

The Baskets of Figs (1-3).—They had probably been brought into the Temple as first-fruit offerings. The one represented those who had been taken away by Nebuchadnezzar; the other, those who remaining in their own land were plotting to throw off his yoke. We are told that a thousand artisans were carried to Babylon to work for the king there, and to deprive Jerusalem of their services. (2) Naughty, i.e., bad. The early figs were usually the best.

The Application of the Parable (4-10).—They were sent into the land of the Chaldeans for their good, and God would graciously interpose on their behalf, in promoting it. In addition to the temporal blessings that He pledged himself to bestow, He engaged to give them a heart that knew and loved Him. Such a heart is his gift. Ask for it. And that you should be his own, and He yours. When you give your whole heart to Him, He gives his whole self to you. His eye is not that of the prison warder, but of the mother watching her child. His eyes are on us for good. (8) It would appear as though many Jews had fled for refuge to Egypt, but no flight can take us outside God's cognisance. (9) See R.V. Tossed to and fro. Such has been the fate of the chosen people. (10) Pursued by sword, famine, and pestilence, such have been the sleuth hounds that have followed on their track throughout the ages. It is a perilous and a bitter thing to depart from God.

TUESDAY, MAY 29.—JEREMIAH XXV.

The Duration of the Captivity (1-11).—This was the year in which Nebuchadnezzar, fresh from victory over the Egyptians at Carchemish, came to Jerusalem, and imposed a tribute on Jehoiakim. It was probably the fourth year of the latter's reign. (3) For twenty-three years Jeremiah had fulfilled his ministry in vain, and he was but one of many servants. (4) The great Husbandman rises early to till his fields. Our failure to bear good fruit must not be laid at his door. (7) That which angers God hurts us. (9) The heathen monarch was God's agent. He was more a servant of God than the Jews themselves. (10) The hand-mill, consisting of two circular stones for grinding corn, is a familiar household article in an Eastern home. Seventy years is the number of Sabbath days in 490 years, the period from Saul to the Babylonian captivity. We must date this period from the fourth year of Jehoiakim to the first year of Cyrus.

Judgment of Babylon and Surrounding Nations (12-29).—(13) It is suggested that Jeremiah's prophecies against the nations (xlvi.-li.) had probably been already written, and are referred to here. (14) Shall serve, i.e., enslave. The Chaldees who had enslaved the nations should be enslaved. (17) The wine-cup is often used by the prophets to denote punishment, before which its recipients would reel (Isa. li. 17; Rev. xvi. 19). It is probable that this is a vision. (19, &c.) The nations are grouped according to their proximity to the land of Canaan. From the south, by way of the east to the north, and then a yet further circuit. (23) Dedan, Tema, and Buz are in Arabia. And "all that have the corners of their hair cut," a heathenish custom (see R.V.) (25) For Zimri, see Gen. xxv. 2. Elam is Persia. (26) Sheshach is Babylon. (28) We may dislike the penalty of our sin, but we cannot evade it.

The Divine Voice (30-38).—It is the roar of the lion against the flock in the pasture. (31) Under figure of a battle Jehovah goes forth against the nations of the world. Prediction fulfilled in the awful carnage by which those world-empires were built. (34) Shepherds and rams suffer the same fate. Their ruin is irretrievable, like that of a beautiful vase. (37) The whole land is given up to silence, where once there had been the cry of children and the homes of men.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 30.—JEREMIAH XXVI.

The Destruction of the Temple (1-7).—Every spot may become a pulpit to the man of God. Jeremiah took up his place in the court of the temple, as the crowds went to and fro. (2) We are sorely tempted to keep back God's threatening words. (5) Shiloh had long before become a waste (chap. vii. 12-14). The world is full of red lights warning us from the crags of danger.

Tumult and Threatening (8-16).—What a fine contrast between what God commanded the prophet to speak, and the treatment he received for speaking it. They charged him with speaking lies in Jehovah's name. Note the alliance of the three parties, who forgot their usual strife, and made common cause against him. Pilate and Herod make friends when Christ is to be slain. (10) The princes came up from the palace which stood below the temple site. They sat as judges within the gate which had been recently built by Jotham (2 Kings xv. 25), and tried the case against Jeremiah. We are strangely reminded of Acts vi. 11, 12. Amid the fracas, Jeremiah preserves his undaunted bearing. His heart seems to be at leisure from itself, that it may be the vehicle of the Divine pleadings against his people's sin. (16) The fickle people who had sided before with his accusers, now side with the princes who pleaded his cause.

The Sentence of the Elders (17-24).—These probably were some of the princes. They quoted the story of Micah, to show that Jeremiah had not been the first to threaten city and temple, and that in that case death had not been pronounced against him by Hezekiah, but that, on the contrary, his words had led to a revolution for God and purity. (20) This historical precedent may have been answered by the quotation on the part of the enemies of Jeremiah, of another on the other side, or it may be a statement added by another hand when the book was compiled, to show how imminent the danger was that threatened the prophet. If Jehoiakim had pursued Urijah to Egypt, surely Jeremiah's life was in the utmost peril. (24) But God fulfilled the promise which He had repeatedly bound Himself, to protect his servant from his foes.

THURSDAY, MAY 31.—JEREMIAH XXVII.

Submission to Nebuchadnezzar (1-11). — In the fourth year of Zedekiah, the Jews and other nations determined to revolt against Babylon. Jeremiah was therefore bidden to send them yokes, the symbol of submission, and to command them to return to their vassalage. (5) The earth is God's; it is for Him to give it to whomsoever He will. (6) The very beasts were also comprised in this donation, perhaps to carry his soldiers, and draw his provisions. (9) Many voices assured the success of the confederacy. Only one voice denounced it. Truth does not lie with majorities. (11) It is the greatest proof of strength when we can suffer for the will of God. Not in the active but in the passive, do we evince the most evident proof of faith, patience, and heroism.

Pleadings (12-15).—Turning from the nations to his own countrymen, the prophet pleaded with Zedekiah to submit. If he would serve the king of Babylon, he would live, otherwise death stared him in the face. (13) Why will ye die? The voice of God is ever asking the question of the sons of men. But we listen to syren voices, and ignore the still small whisper.

The Sacred Vessels (16-22).—In the two preceding reigns the vessels had been carried into Babylon (2 Chron. xxxvi. 5; 2 Kings xxiv. 13). And the prophets, not content with denying Jeremiah's words, predicted their speedy return. The prophet answered them by predicting that those commoner vessels which still remained in the temple should be involved in the same fate. (22) This restoration came at the hand of Cyrus (Ezra i. 7; vii. 19). It is thus that as we strive against God we entangle ourselves more deeply in the meshes of judgment. Every downward step precipitates our fall into a more unutterable fate.

FRIDAY JUNE 1.—JEREMIAH XXVIII.

Hananiah's Prophecy (1-4).—It took place in the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign. Hananiah may have been related to the three godly youths who braved the fire in Babylon. His wish was father to his prophecy. He ran without being sent. He uttered words of his own heart.

Jeremiah's Answer (5-9).—Amen meant that Jeremiah would gladly have witnessed the deliverance of his people. He would have been more glad for this than for his own credit as a true prophet. "Would that it might be as you say." But he appealed to the witness of the future, alleging that the event would alone show which of them was true. It is thus that in every age Jeremiah and Hananiah stand face to face, claiming our suffrages.

The Symbols of the Yokes (10-14).—God had put that yoke on his servant (xxvii. 2), only He could remove it. Beware of ridding yourself of the servitude to which God has called you. Try the prophets by the word and by the event. If we get quit of the Divinely-imposed yoke by unlawful means we shall have to endure iron yokes of pain and sorrow. Submit to what humbles you, and escape from what will destroy you. Above all, take the yoke of Christ. It is easy and light compared with the iron yoke of bondage (Gal. v. 1).

Hananiah's Death (15-17).—Within two months of these words he was a corpse, a startling comment on his prophecy, a warning to his confederates, a trumpet call to the people he had misled.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2.—JEREMIAH XXIX.

Jeremiah wrote to the captives already in Babylon, to warn them against being deluded by the false prophets, who urged them not to settle in the land of their exile because they would so soon return.

Settle Peaceably (1-7).—We are constantly being carried captive into strange cities. We go against our will, and fret against our incarceration, filling the air with murmur. How much wiser to remember that God has caused us to be carried thither, and to seek the peace and blessing of those amongst whom our lot is cast. Let us pray for those around us in the commercial room, or the school, or the foreign land.

Beware of Delusive Hopes (8-9).—Men cause dreams by their own desires and expectations. The prophets suited themselves to the appetite of the people. Our eye must be single, or our body will be full of darkness, in which phantoms breed.

Yet Seventy Years (10-14).—God's thoughts are always of peace and goodwill, never of evil, and He is always working up to a happy issue, such an end as we might wish for and expect. (12) Happy is he who launches the craft of prayer upon the current of the Divine will. (13) When all the heart is engaged in seeking God, God has been already found. (14) The scenes which have witnessed our humiliation shall ring with the notes of our triumph.

Woe to the Residue (15—19). So far from the exiles returning to Jerusalem, the remnant who were still there would soon go into exile. Note that figure of the nauseous fig. Those whom God rejects are distasteful even to man.

Ahab and Zedekiah (20—23). Three crimes were imputed to these men, (23) which God had witnessed. How often He can say both of our sins and tears, "I know, and am a witness." There is little doubt that this horrible fate was inflicted, for it was a common punishment in Babylon (Dan. iii. 20).

Shemaiah (24—32). This was a second letter sent by Jeremiah to Babylon, in reply to a letter brought in answer to his first communication to the false prophet, Shemaiah, condemning him. Nehelamite may refer either to his family or native place. Zephaniah was the second priest; he appears to have been promoted through this letter to the office of high priest, since Jehoiada was a captive. This letter from Babylon was read in the presence of priests and people. Jeremiah answered it by declaring that the writer should forfeit his share in the good that God would do to his people. Let us beware of forfeiting any good thing which pertains to our heritage in Jesus Christ.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 3.

THE PASSOVER INSTITUTED.—Exod. xii. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—1 Cor. v. 7

PHARAOH presents an awful example of the wickedness and folly of resisting God. The only sense in which God hardened Pharaoh's heart was by continuing the use of such means as were calculated in themselves to produce a directly opposite result. By resisting Divine impressions men become callous. The Gospel only tends to harden those who persistently reject it.

The Passover feast commemorates the last, and the most terrible, of the ten plagues, and the remarkable deliverance God wrought for the Israelites; while it also points forward to the greater deliverance revealed in the Gospel. Like the Israelites we are exposed to judgment, and in helpless bondage. See in their deliverance a type of ours.

This event would be to them the beginning of a new life (1, 2). The civil year would still begin with Tisri, about our October; but the religious year was henceforth to commence with the month Abib, or Nisan, in which this deliverance took place. In the truest sense, life only begins for any man when he is converted. He who has not been born twice abides still in death. The unbeliever cannot see life (Jno. iii. 3, 36).

The method by which God delivered them was, in every detail of it, not only a test of their faith and obedience, but a foreshadowing of the Gospel. God could distinguish Israelites from Egyptians without any such conditions as He demanded, but He could not, by any other method, set forth so perfectly what Christ should be and do. Why a lamb (3)? This was the character in which God had seen Him from the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii. 8). See also Isa. liii. 7, and Jno. i. 29. Would any lamb do? No. It must be one without any defect (5), in order to set forth the absolute sinlessness of Jesus, and must be a male of the first year, because it was the type of one who offered Himself to God in the prime and vigour of his perfect manhood. Nothing that was suggestive of weakness or decrepitude would have served such a purpose.

God even fixes the time for choosing (3) and for slaying (6) the lamb. From the tenth day to the fourteenth, according to some authorities, it was subjected to careful investigation, lest any blemish should be upon it. Is it not very significant that about the tenth day of the same month our Lord entered Jerusalem, and was subjected to keenest scrutiny (Matt. xxi. xxii.); and that on the fourteenth day He delivered Himself up into the hands of his foes?

The lamb, though innocent and harmless, and absolutely free from blemish, could not save them except by dying (6). "Without shedding of blood is no remission" (Heb. ix. 22). The death of Christ fulfilled the type because it involved bloodshedding, and yet not a bone of Him was broken (46 with Jno. xix. 32-36).

The blood of the lamb could deliver only as it was applied (7). The hyssop branch, dipped in the blood, was used for striking the two side-posts and the upper door-post. How forcibly we are reminded that the blood of Christ shed for us cannot save us, unless it be personally appropriated by each one! The blood of the lamb was in place of the blood of the firstborn, as the death of Christ is instead of your death. Have you appropriated that? Whatever else God sees, if He does not see the blood accepted as your shelter, He will not pass over you (13).

They feasted upon the lamb itself (8). They had a long and toilsome journey before them, and it was needful that they should be strengthened for it. The Golden Text reminds us that our life is a continual paschal feast, and that we are to partake of it, as those who are pilgrims and strangers (11), and with an entire absence of leaven, which is always the type of evil, and with the bitter herbs of true repentance and sorrow for sin (8).

Recall the event of that night when God passed through the land in judgment (12). The Israelites are in their homes, secure under the shelter of the blood, and confidently partaking of their feast in readiness for their departure. Then the awful cry (30) rang from house to house in Egypt, for upon every house unsprinkled by the blood the judgment had fallen. When the worse judgment shall come will it find us prepared to meet it? A legend tells of a Jewish maiden, the firstborn of the family, who was troubled on that night, and could not sleep. "Are you sure, father," she asked, "that the blood is on the doorposts?" He replied that he had ordered it to be done. She was not content until she was taken to look for herself; and lo! the blood was not there. Suppose we should make such a discovery when too late to remedy it?

For the Young.

IN THE SPRINGTIME.

My dear Young Friends,—How beautiful is everything now in Nature! How the words occur to us, "He hath given us all things richly to enjoy" and "He hath made everything beautiful in his time." As we look, in these sunny spring days, upon sky and trees, and flowers and grass, and hear the songs of the birds and the gentle splash and patter of the fertilising showers of rain, our hearts break forth into singing, our lips are filled with praise to the Giver of all.

> The golden sunshine, vernal air,
> Sweet flowers and fruits Thy love declare;
> Where harvests ripen Thou art there—
> Giver of all!

Someone was speaking of these things the other day, and then he said, "I always want a holiday when I see the sunshine." Turning to a little girl in the room he asked her, "What do you want when you see the sun?" "I want very much to be good," was her quiet reply. I am sure you will agree with her. You long to be good, do you not? I know you do, and yet you often fail and get angry with yourself, and tell yourself that it is no use trying. You have tried so often you are ashamed to try again. Is it not so?

Do not you think Jesus knows? Do not you believe that He is more sorry than you are when you stumble, or fall, or fail in any way? He loves you so; He is so tender; He longs that you should turn to Him to help you over the rough places, out of the difficult turnings, into the light and sunshine and "vernal air" of his highway.

"But," you say, "I cannot see Him! It would be so easy to turn to Him for help if He stood near, and I could hear Him speak, and see and feel his presence!"

How shall I, who know He is near, because He has told me so, and because I feel his nearness, answer you in this? When father was in India, and wrote you that beautiful letter in which he asked you to be a comfort to mother in his absence; or when mother wrote to you at school, telling you her hopes for you, encouraging you with loving words, you did not feel or find it difficult to obey in either case, did you? You often got out the precious letters and read them, and they helped you more, perhaps, than if you had heard the voice of father or mother speaking to you. For, I think, when our parents are with us we do not always obey or please them as we should; but in their absence we are often more careful to carry out their wishes, feeling in honour bound to do so, apart from that sense of loss whose intensity compels us to summon, by acts of love and obedience, the loved one to our side.

Therefore, if Christ be your friend, your Saviour, you will, by seeking to do his will, realise his presence, and grow as familiar with Him as you are with your chosen, loved, and best companion of everyday life.

With Christ for your friend, you will be kept from forming those hasty, ill-advised connections in early life, which are at the time, for want of a proper name, called friendships. A girl in your form takes a violent fancy to you, and you—flattered by her choice—yield to persuasions that often end in idleness, loss of self-respect, and the bringing out in your character of weak spots, which under the teaching and love of Christ, had been blotted out altogether. This kind of "friendship," too, generally makes you less amiable at home. Make Christ your Friend, and you will escape one of the commonest dangers of youth—that of making a friend of one whose influence fetters you, and whose power over you lowers instead of lifting you; clouding, and sometimes blighting the whole life.

"I cannot go through life without friends," you say. Certainly not. What would life be without beautiful friendships and helpful loves? But, be sure that you get the right kind of friend; take him or her to God, and if, in the light of his countenance, your friend gains in lustre and grows in beauty, part with him or her only with life. Make friends slowly—a hasty friendship will soon run itself out of breath. A great writer has said, "All my friends have come to me unsought; the good God sent them." This means real friendship.

Boys are not so quick as girls to make friends—they get "chums," but these are often as powerful, for good or evil as friends. See to it, lads, that you choose your chum, not so much for any special attribute, as for his upright, consistent, earnest character.

I know it is difficult, but Christ—Himself a model friend when He was on earth—will help you.

Does this sound unpractical? Are you asking yourself the question,—"How will He help me? How shall I know?" Carry your friend or chum to Him, and if you can tell Him everything that has passed between you, with the hopes and wishes of your intimacy, you will have the consciousness given you of his tender approval. Try it. Do you think you may tell Him of your lessons, your difficulties, your needs, and not tell Him of your joys, your aspirations, your thoughts, your friend? And keep your friendships clean and in good repair. A plasterer was one day employed to thin-whiten the ceiling of a gentleman's study. Thin-whitening scarcely shows until it is dry, and therefore the gentleman was greatly surprised, on entering his room the day after it had been whitened, to find inside his desk a number of white finger-marks. In a drawer in the desk he found the same kind of marks on his cheque-book, pocket-book, and on the contents of a bag. This was proof that the workman had, with his wet hand, opened the drawer, ransacked it, and left it, without a thought that his act would be discovered, and that everything he had touched would bear the impress of his guilty fingers.

Sin is often like this thin whitening; it does not show at first. But evil thoughts, words, and deeds all leave their convicting finger-marks, and one day they will be revealed in their treachery and deceit.

Beware of them. Though invisible at first to others, they are all seen of God, they defile and corrupt the soul, and deform and ultimately destroy the character.

God guard you, dear child! God Himself encompass you as you pray the prayer:—

> Search me, O God, and know my heart;
> Try me, and know my thoughts;
> And see if there be any wicked way in me,
> And lead me in the way everlasting.
> —(Psa. cxxxix. 23, 24.)

"COME UNTO ME."

HAST thou a sorrow thou hast never told,
Some pain that gnaws in secret at thy heart,
So cruel that sudden tears, unbidden, start,
And earthly comfort seems but strange and cold?

Art thou aweary? Ah, the way is hard,
And footsteps falter o'er the broken steep,
And eyes grow heavy, for there is no sleep
Where thorns and shattered rocks the path retard.

And art thou fearful? Strong men in their prime
Have bowed before the silent hand of Death,
And children met, with incense of sweet breath,
The mowers mowing on the hills of time.

Christ has known sorrow deeper than thine own;
He has borne burdens that none else could bear;
He has felt weariness thou couldst not share;
He entered death, but rolled away the stone.

Christ will grant joy for all thy lonely sorrow;
Still He bears burdens, gives the weary rest;
Dying in Him, no terror can molest,
And He will meet thee on the dawning morrow.

TRAIN YOUR CHILDREN WELL.—In what other direction can so large a percentage of good be realised, for the means invested, as in this? It is a work that touches the most tender chords of our nature, and it is stamped, with the highest approval of God.

A REUNION was last week effected between the Reformed Episcopal Church and the Reformed Church of England. The resolutions submitted to both Churches were unanimously agreed to in separate synods, and a united synod was afterwards held under the presidency of Bishop Eldridge, who was elected presiding bishop of the United Church.

Revival Reminiscences.

THE EARLY DAYS.

The first volume of The Revival lies open before us. Surely it is the most modest little journal that ever showed itself among the great host of papers that compete for popular favour. But it did not come to compete; it came to tell week by week the "events connected with the present revival of religion," and because the Revival lived its recorder lived also. It was small as a grain of mustard seed, but God has granted it to grow and thrive. To turn over its pages is like turning over withered rose leaves in a bowl; how sweet is the fragrance of grace! Here we come upon the names of saints who long ago entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God; busy then, resting now, joyful then with the joy of the new wine of this wonderful work of grace, more joyful now as they trace with clearer eye than ours all that God hath so far wrought. Here is mention of nameless men and women, youths and children, who were converted in '59, and we try to imagine how it has gone with them since. Crowds of them are now before the throne, and of that we are sure; many are near the end of the journey; many "remain unto this day," and are yet among our wisest counsellors, bravest fighters, and most zealous workers. In all the churches they are to be found, and the gracious Revival still pours its healing waters through their life and labours. To sit with this volume is like seeing all these hosts of the glorified and of the living, and yet—and yet—another thought will also come; some fell back and walked no more with Jesus, a few—but only a few, we believe—and some, still living, may have declined from their first love, and can only go back in memory to '59 as a time when it was "well with their soul." May the memory which brings reproach bring hope and faith and love also, for God is not changed; "His mercy endureth for ever."

One testimony seems very common about the places which God so wonderfully visited—they were dead, very dead. "Long had there been an absence of conversion in the place; there was deadness as to religion and profligacy in the world around." Such was a small town in Ireland. In New York, where the movement first began (in 1857), the state of things spiritually must have been the same; as to temporal matters, they seem to have been much like what we are passing through now—hard and depressing—perhaps a good sign for us now. J. C. Lanphier, a good, loving, earnest, prayerful man, was appointed lay missionary in the city of New York, on July 1, 1857. He yearned for the salvation of souls; almost daily, in the lecture-room of the old Dutch Church, did he, quite alone, struggle in prayer. His cry was, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The Lord showed him what He would have him to do. The work was simple—to ask others to unite in prayer with him. This, at least, was the idea suggested to his mind, and on the suggestion he immediately acted. A noonday prayer-meeting was announced to be held weekly, from twelve till one o'clock. On September 23, 1857, at twelve o'clock, was the door of the lecture-room thrown open for the first noonday prayer-meeting. At half-past twelve the solitary supplicant heard the step of one person coming to join him; soon after another, and another, and another; so that the now far-famed Fulton-street prayer-meeting consisted, during the first half-hour of its existence, of one person, and at the close of the first hour of six persons. The numbers gradually increased, many became interested; from being a weekly it became a daily prayer-meeting; others were established, they soon pervaded the Union.

Here let us note a few things. (1) Great deadness prevailed everywhere; we can hardly be more hopeless to-day. God quickeneth the dead, even the dead in trespasses and sins. (2) One man began; there could not be fewer. (3) He called persons to prayer. We want no talents or training for prayer. He called a mid-day meeting, which was no doubt a good time, then and there. There is no virtue in the hour. The Holy Spirit will give the best suggestion as to the time and everything else.

At the very time that this was going on in America, four young men began at Connor, co. Antrim, to meet together for special prayer. Others joined them; their prayer was first for their own congregation, and then for all round about; for some time no answer came, then conversions were granted. This same autumn God began to move on Scotland, but this was by means of persons in the higher ranks of society. Therefore we see that youth and inexperience need not hinder the young, nor poverty the poor, nor wealth the rich; and further, that we shall do well to pray first for our own Zion, the deader it is, the more it needs prayer.

BOYHOOD RECOLLECTIONS.

If not too late, I should like to add my reminiscences of the Great Revival, wherein God so wondrously rent the heavens and came down in grace to save. I was but a boy in years, only fourteen, when the news of the gracious movement in Ireland reached me, in the autumn of 1859. How the spare form of the late Mr. Peter Drummond, of Stirling, rises up before me now, as he narrated in the Free Church of Alloa, N.B., the sights in Ulster, of which he had just been an eye-witness! It needed no eloquence on the speaker's part, for he had none, to move and thrill my heart. The simple facts were wonderful to me as romance, and imagination readily turned into graphic picture a story so laden with sensation. How awed I felt at "the strikings down" and the other notable signs following preaching and testimony in that region.

But in a short time I became conscious of some kind of mysterious change in the religious community surrounding me. The minister became more excitable and demonstrative, and went in largely for what he called experience and testimony. Ere I could tell how it all came about, there was quite a shaking and much more of sensation than I cared to have about me. What scandalised me most at the time was that quite a number of boys, smaller and in some cases younger than myself, dared to tell out in public assembly what the Lord had done for their souls. Their exhorting and praying were more than I could stand, and I made myself as scarce as possible. But though I thus steeled my heart, I could not resist the solemnity that fell upon my spirit. I shrunk from hysterical calls, as I deemed them, and too close personal dealing; but, all the same, the imperative of conscience was there, and the sense of responsibility and of danger, like a thread in the sky at first, grew daily broader and blacker. Coincident with this, Mr. S——, my Sunday-school teacher, powerfully attracted me. He was no boy; there was nothing of partial frenzy or effervescence in his talk. All the same, he was in dead earnest, a speaker to the conscience, who, when he had finished the lesson, let the boys leave without saying a word. The Word of the Lord through him broke down the ungodliness of my will, and brought me to my knees.

Though I cannot view myself as one brought in by the Revival in the crowd, I was certainly brought in by it in the secret place of finding. Mr. S—— was an out-and-out Revivalist who could speak with the accent of an entire conviction, and with the still small voice that the conscience hears and cannot forget. How long my struggle lasted, how severe it was, how nigh to breaking point and despair I came God only knew; but the issue was fulness of joy. God who at the first commanded the light to shine out of darkness shone into my heart, and shone with such effulgence, that to my senses it seemed that had He not in answer to prayer stayed the incoming splendour I should have died.

Two things mark the Great Revival as it rises up before me after the lapse of years. The first is the depth of the Spirit's convicting work, and the second, the clear and definite knowledge of personal salvation. I had occasion to note these features on every hand. The ploughshare went uncommonly deep in those days. Repentance was no slight concern; no mere intellectual act of definite "turning to the Lord"; no result of persuasion or allurement; in a word, no cold-blooded act. The conscience was all on fire, and, therefore, repentance was a necessity of the soul according to the law of an urgency that brooked of no delay and must find voice, somehow and somewhere, in impassioned and importunate appeal. I am sure that thousands who were drawn into, and blessed by that movement, would bear me out in this statement.

So, too, as regards the full consciousness of personal salvation, the knowledge of forgiveness, and the demonstrative evidence of the Spirit respecting change of heart and change of state. It would be impossible for language to place in too strong a light the fulness of Gospel blessing that instantaneously came and flooded the whole soul. Often during the blessed months of 1860 the rapture of my joy in the Lord rose to ecstasy; time and space were obliterated, while God Himself was all in all. Certainly the Gospel came in those days, "not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much full assurance." It was no uncommon thing then for souls to pray the Lord to stay his hand, adding, "for I am sick of love." Indeed, the Apostle's prayer in Ephes. iii. 15-19 answered to a felt reality in those wondrous times.

The Great Revival was of an intensely robust order. There was but little coaxing or humouring of sinners; but there was plenty of solemn warning and plain-spoken exhortation. And sinners were laid hold of, old men by the score and young men by the hundred. Case after case of the most inveterate type came under my notice and became, through the abounding grace of Christ, the marvel of all beholders; or would have been, had not the frequency of the recurrence blunted one's impressions.

LOVE TOWARD ONE ANOTHER.

Most affecting in the memory of it now was the deep love in the Spirit binding the converts. Among the number in my circle was N. M——, a highland youth. In his unconverted state he had scared me by his terrible oaths, but what a pleasure it was to know him when changed by grace! How filled was he with the love of Christ, and all unconscious, like Moses, that his face shone. And he was only one of many brought by grace into the brotherhood.

As in all cases of genuine revival, it was found impracticable to "put the new wine into old bottles." Profession had become largely formal and antiquated, and with this the new life of the Spirit could not coalesce. In Scotland the Revival was much deadened and hindered by the formalism which clung to the places of trust and leadership. The old whine was too often maintained, that "we are all miserable sinners," when the hearts of many whom the Lord had called were so glad that they were dancing for joy all the time. But the new life of the Spirit was too potent to be put in leading strings altogether, and reduced to a nullity. Deep concern for the unsaved compelled to action. In the workshop and at the mill, among kinsfolk and acquaintance, the glad tidings were published. Cottage meetings sprang up, and had their regular staff; while the more emboldened among the converts took their stand in the public squares, and set before their fellow-townsmen life and death.

In those days, so mighty and widespread was the religious stirring, that I have known in the small town of C—— all-day meetings maintained for a week or fortnight at a time, in the public park, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Not only was the whole town moved, but the whole district. In the winter months it was often difficult to break up the meetings or to find a building large enough to contain the crowds. The feature that most struck me was impressiveness. The hush at times was painful, suggesting the fear of the disciples as they entered into the cloud.

Altogether the great Revival of 1859-1860 was a powerful visitation of the Spirit of God. It did not stand in the wisdom of man, nor did it make prominent any particular form of method or agency. Human distinctions were wonderfully lost sight of while that remarkable wave of the Spirit's power was in course. The Holy Spirit seemed to use each man after his kind, irrespective of his place in the Church or in the world, his culture or his lack of it; and all stood together as moved by a common impulse. Who can doubt that we need a similar visitation to-day? Could machinery, and institutions, and novel modes suffice, our age would be of all ages the happiest; but what are these without the momentum of the Spirit of God?

HARLEY COLLEGE, BOW, E.—Tracts in English, Hebrew, German, and other languages, are urgently needed by the students for distribution in the docks, and from house to house. Any number of suitable papers and tracts can be scattered throughout the East End. Address, Rev. J. S. Morris, Harley College, Bow, E.

THE FREE CHURCH CONGRESS, which is to meet next year in Birmingham, will assemble under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Charles Berry, of Wolverhampton. It was felt at the recent session in Leeds to be inconvenient to have a different chairman for each sitting of the Congress. In view of the Congress assembling in Birmingham, the presidency was offered to Dr. R. W. Dale, but the state of his health does not permit him to accept it.

The Late DR. MICHAEL LASERON,

OF TOTTENHAM.

IN the world of theology we have received from Germany some doubtful boons; but in the region of Christian philanthropy that land has furnished the world with many a rich object lesson, and many a consecrated worker. Of the latter, the esteemed brother whose beneficent career we describe to-day was an eminent example. A month ago he was gathered to his fathers, but his memory will long be fragrant in the annals of Christian work for the neglected children and the suffering poor.

Michael Maximilian Augustus Henry Laseron was born on May 11, 1819, at Königsberg, in Prussia. He was of Jewish descent, and his father being a rabbi, he was early instructed in the Jewish religion. At the age of seven he lost both parents by cholera, and was brought up by an uncle, who treated the orphan boy somewhat unkindly. He was brought to the knowledge of the Gospel when about seventeen years old, professed himself to be on the Lord's side, and anxious for baptism. His Jewish relatives persecuted him, so that he fled from the house, and found his way on foot to Frankfort-on-the-Main, sleeping in the open air, and begging food by the way. Police were sent to bring him back, and one night he was caught sleeping in a corn field, but the Lord softened the heart of the officer on hearing his sad story, and he was allowed to pursue his journey unmolested.

At Frankfort he met with Christian friends and was baptized. Thence he travelled to Schaffhausen and Basle. In the latter city he became very ill, having suffered terribly from want and exposure. An old Christian lady nursed him through this illness, and on his recovery he came to England to the British Society's Jewish Mission College, Blackfriars, where he remained some years. Later he returned to Germany to pursue his studies, and there he took up the study of homœopathy, which he afterwards practised in London with success. Some time after he took his M.D. degree at Leipzig, and recommenced practice in London. There he married Clara, widow of Pastor Rolle, née von Poschwitz.

In 1854 he removed to the suburb of Edmonton, and carried on his practice there. The following year, having lost a young child, the sorrowing parents were drawn out in sympathy towards the ragged children of the streets. Out of this bereavement, that wounded so deeply the tender heart of the mother, there grew up and developed a cluster of those noble Christian institutions for the poor, the sick, and the suffering, that are the glory of our land and our time. The story was told with fulness of detail, but in very modest terms, by Dr. Laseron himself, in a narrative published twenty years ago, but now we presume out of print. Here we can only repeat it in brief outline.

Mrs. Laseron sought to fill the void in her life caused through the death of her child, by gathering some of the ragged, neglected urchins of Edmonton into a little school for instruction. The parents laid the matter before God in prayer; clear guidance was received in the sympathetic help of friends. A cottage was hired and opened in January, 1856, with sixteen ragged children. The premises were soon found to be far too small for the purpose, and before the close of the same year the school was removed to Church-street, Edmonton, to a dilapidated old chapel. In this place, poor and insufficient as it was, day-school, night-school, Sunday-school, and mothers' meeting were carried on with the greatest success, until at last the building was condemned as being in a dangerous condition, and it became necessary to look out for another spot. This was soon found in Union-row, Lower Tottenham, where a piece of land was given for building by a kind friend, and a simple structure was erected. This building comprised not only a free school for day scholars, but a home for little orphan girls, to which, later, another block was added, capable of receiving in all 120 girls.

(From Photograph by Mr. Martin Fries, 26, Norfolk Street, Sunderland.)

These successive growths of the good work covered a period of nearly ten years, during which time Dr. Laseron carried on his private practice, besides superintending the institutions with the help of his devoted wife. The narrative to which we have referred teems with delightful instances of answered prayer, in raising the large sums necessary for the buildings, and in providing for the daily needs of the orphaned children. We are familiar with the many direct interpositions of Divine supply in the hour of need in the history of such institutions as those managed by Mr. Müller, of Bristol, Mr. Toye, of Blackheath, and others. Dr. Laseron had many similar experiences in those early days. We give two of the incidents recorded, which show that God's ear is not heavy when the cry of his needy servants goes up to Him:—

At a certain period, when meat was very expensive, and the outgoings were very large, the question was raised whether it would not be advisable to alter the meat diet from daily to four times a week, and it was decided that a week of private prayer should be set apart in order to ascertain the mind of God. Towards the latter end of that week, on a Friday, at eleven o'clock at night, a single knock came to the door of Dr. Laseron's house. He, being at the time still actively engaged in the labours of the medical profession, thought that a poor patient was seeking his assistance. Having already retired for the night, he got up and went to the door, making inquiry before opening it, "Who is there?" The reply was given by a man saying, "A porter from the railway." On opening the door, a large sack fell inside the house, to the alarm of Dr. Laseron, who asked the porter "What is this?" He replied, "I think it is meat." To which Dr. Laseron responded, "What? I am not a butcher!" "Whether you be a butcher or not, sir, I don't know," replied the man; "but if your name is Dr. Laseron, this is for you." In vain Dr. Laseron tried to find out where the gift came from. The porter thought it came from Norfolk, but no further clue could be obtained. Thus the difficulty as regards the orphans' supply of meat for that week was at once overcome.

When the next week had nearly drawn to a close, on the Friday night at the same hour the same circumstance occurred again. But still there was no clue to the sender. The second week was thus bridged over, and we felt encouraged to go on with earnest prayer. The third week had again almost come to a termination, and for the third time the same thing occurred at the same day and hour. Dr. L. was still without any clue as to the donor, when on the following Saturday a letter was received to the following purport:—

"I am desired by my mother to inform you that she read your report, and, being sheep farmers, she thought that as meat is very dear, she would kill a sheep each week for the benefit of the Institution until the price of meat should be somewhat reduced. And therefore she says that as the price of meat will be cheaper in the ensuing week, she will discontinue to send it."

In the same year during the month of August, the funds of the Institution became very low. The amount of money in the treasury was reduced to only one halfpenny, when a letter arrived one Monday morning from a noble friend who was travelling with his family in Wales, and enjoying there the beauties of nature. Learning from his daughter the smallness of our funds, he wrote and said, that as a proof of his gratitude to God for his kindness to him and family, he felt it the greatest privilege to help one of God's servants who was surrounded by so many dear orphans, and enclosed a cheque for £100.

After a time it was found that frequent applications were made for elder girls to go out and nurse poor sick people. This demand, which could not well be met by young girls utterly untrained in nursing, gave the Director the impulse to establish a Deaconesses' Institution and Hospital. Funds again came in, and in March, 1867, the Institution was begun on quite a small scale in a villa at Snell's Park, Edmonton. Six of the elder girls, who loved the Lord and desired to serve Him as freewill workers in nursing his poor and sick, entered as the first probation sisters, and were trained under a competent sister from a German institution. Within two months of its beginning, the little hospital of twelve beds proved to be utterly insufficient for the wants of the neighbourhood, and it became an earnest matter of prayer how to extend the work. Then Mr. and Mrs. John Morley, of Upper Clapton, nobly promised the large sum of £6,000, and later on £2,000 more, to carry on the work on a larger scale. Other friends contributed about £4,000 besides, the property on which the present building stands was purchased, and a hospital built for fifty patients. The work developed rapidly, and the need for increased accommodation both for patients (especially children) and sisters was keenly felt. Again Mr. J. Morley and his brother, Mr. Samuel Morley, came to the rescue, and the amount sent in by them and other friends was no less a sum than £20,000. In May, 1883, the foundation-stone of the present magnificent building was laid by Mr. S. Morley. The deficit on the total expenses of the building, £4,500, was paid off by two of his sons, Mr. Howard Morley and Mr. Charles Morley. The last section of the new house, which brings up the total number of patients' beds to 103, was opened in May, 1887, by the Princess of Wales.

The work of the Deaconesses' Institution has grown and greatly prospered. To-day there is a flourishing band of seventy-four sisters engaged in the parent house, and at thirteen out-stations in nursing, district visiting, caring for the aged in unions, and little children in homes. All this is done with a direct view to the evangelisation and spiritual growth of those under the care of the Sisters.

Mrs. Laseron, who had been in a sense the real founder of the work, and whose sympathetic aid had been invaluable, died on May 7, 1890. Dr. Laseron had been in very poor health for several years past. A sharp attack of eczema in 1889 caused him much irritation and loss of sleep. In January, 1891, having suffered with jaundice as well as eczema, by medical advice he accompanied his daughter and her husband to their new home in Sydney, N.S.W., where Mr. Schleicher is now principal of Moore College. In England prayer was made for the recovery of his health. On May 19, a meeting was held at the Deaconesses' Institution for this object, and for the liquidation of the debt then accumulated on the work. All unconscious of this, on May 20, Dr. Laseron took a Turkish bath, where he was thoroughly shampooed by a black attendant, who, having found a hard lump in the doctor's side, so pressed and worked it that it yielded to his hand, and crushed into a soft mass, and passed away in fragments. The doctor felt new life come into him. What his skilled physicians could not do was effected by God through a black man at the bath. On his return to England Dr. Laseron speedily collected sufficient money to cover the debt, thus prayer was doubly answered.

On April 10 of this year Dr. Laseron returned from Nordhausen in a very exhausted condition. He had been there six months, and his letters were full of gratitude that the Lord had led him there to be a strengthener of the faith of many, and to lead precious souls to their Saviour. Many used to visit him who really hungered and thirsted for the truth, and to whom he read and expounded the Word of God. For the first day or two after his return he enjoyed telling out the Lord's goodness to him in this way. After that he daily grew weaker and less able to speak: though by the hearty and happy response he always gave to any portion of God's Word, or a verse of a hymn, it was clearly seen that his mind was kept in perfect peace, even in the midst of great suffering.

Restlessness of body increased till within a very short time of his release, but the end was perfectly quiet, and one scarcely knew when the last breath was taken. He died on April 28, and was interred at Abney Park, in the presence of an immense concourse of sympathising friends, on Friday, May 4. A service was held at Clapton Hall by Mr. McVicker, followed by an earnest Gospel appeal at the grave by Mr. Russell Hurditch.

Will all the friends of this blessed work pray that it may be carried on to the glory of God on the same lines as in the past?

THE EPSOM CAMPAIGN.

Dear Sir,—I am intensely anxious to secure the sympathy and prayers of your many readers on behalf of our forthcoming efforts at the Epsom Races. In co-operation with the London City Mission, whose splendid male choir always helps us on these occasions, we expect to number about sixty men of God. Some will preach and sing on the racecourse and in the town; others are posted with Gospel tracts and books at the railway stations and at many different points leading to the course, or give them to the occupants of the carriages which line it. The gipsies who encamp on the Downs are also visited and evangelised.

Let me summarise our needs, and beg your readers' help thus:—(1) Let earnest, ceaseless, and believing supplication be offered to God that many "brands" may be plucked from the burning. (2) Let loving gifts be sent from sympathising hearts. At least £100 is needed, and help will be gladly received, either by Miss Alexander, 2, Waterloo-road, Epsom (to whom we are indebted for hospitality and all local arrangements), or by myself. (3) Illustrated booklets, cards and attractive leaflets, all containing clear Gospel statements, may be sent to me, care of Town Mission Room, Epsom. More than 100,000 are required.

Let me add that no one should come to us at Epsom, with a view of assisting in the work, without first communicating with me; and in any case only qualified and experienced evangelists are asked to volunteer. The races are from June 5 to 8.—Yours affectionately,

Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

The Evangelist.

MAY I COME IN? *

By Rev. THOMAS CHAMPNESS.

"I stand at the door and knock" (Rev. iii. 20). How many ways Christ has of making Himself heard! How many ways He has of appealing to the human heart! He knocks, and some of you have heard Him as you stood by the grave and heard the gravel rattle on the coffin-lid—that was a knock. You heard it then. I well remember, as a child, when my little sister died; it was the first great grief that came to me. It is many years ago, but it was summer-time, and I remember all about it. I remember my father sitting by the bedside, and when she was gone I can hear his voice saying, "Children, this is the first time death has come, but it is not the last time death will come." Oh, what a knock that was at my heart! It would have been a glorious thing for me if I had listened and taken Christ to my soul then.

And later on, when I was thirteen years of age, one summer's Sunday evening, I remember a preacher, who was a stranger. I can see him now. He walked slowly and painfully up the pulpit stairs. He was a tall, gaunt man, with a hollow voice, and looked as though he had just come from the grave, and would go back to it as soon as he had delivered his message. He preached from "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Although it was years ago, yet I can remember it now. I could preach a great deal of that sermon. I felt that the man took hold of me. It was the knock of Jesus Christ! I felt, "Oh, I wish I could be a Christian!" But there was my companion up in the gallery. I was bound to him—we were inseparable. I allowed him to think for me; I allowed him to act for me. He had a powerful mind, though a boy, and he grasped me. I thought, "Oh, if he would but yield, I would, gladly!" But he did not, and so it passed away; and it was seven long years before the knock came again as loudly as it did that time. I believe that if I had given my heart to God at thirteen I should have been a preacher while only a boy; but seven years had gone out of my life,

NEVER, EVEN IN HEAVEN, TO BE WON BACK AGAIN.

"I stand at the door." He wants to be heard. He has wonderful ways of appealing to the human soul. You hear Him; it is that voice which will one day wake the dead. The voice that now says, "Come unto Me," will some day say, "Ye dead, to judgment come!" Let us listen to the voice of Jesus the Saviour, and then we shall not be afraid of the voice of Jesus the Judge. He who stands at the door and knocks has a claim upon your affection, and He wants you to love Him. "If any man will"—God has created us with a will. We are kings and queens in our own right. Talk of empire, talk of possessions! Queen Victoria, it is said, reigns over an empire upon which the sun never sets. In every part of this world, wherever the sun shines, something of her influence is felt, and some of her power is known; but the empire of the human soul stretches out into eternity. "If any man will open the door"—He doesn't want to have us go to heaven like so many machines. Love is something you can't control by machinery. Brother, the responsibility is with you. Jesus Christ will not force Himself upon us.

Our present action with regard to Christ is a prophecy. "If any man will hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me." That is to say, if we allow Jesus Christ to come in, and give Him what we have—spread before Him what we possess—offer to Him our affections, our powers, He will make that a prophecy, and what we have done to Him He will do to us. Talk of investments! Can you invest anything like that? Don't make shipwreck of your future by keeping Christ outside the door. Don't throw away the glorious possibilities within your reach by treating Him as though He were not your Friend. He will not stay for ever. It is with Him as it has been with you sometimes—you have knocked, and knocked, and knocked again at the door of your friend's house, and you have said, "If there is no answer I will turn away"; and you have knocked for the last time, and listened for the footstep, and when there has been none you have turned away. Shall Jesus Christ turn away? Shall He knock for the last time and not be admitted? I wait for an answer. We said that this was a prophecy.

WE ARE NOW SETTLING OUR FUTURE.

We are determining what shall be our employment in the great hereafter. God will take us upon our own ground, and say, "I will do for thee just as thou dost for Me. If thou wilt take Me to thine heart, if thou wilt allow Me to possess thy life, if thou wilt let Me come in and live with thee, then thou shalt some day come in and live with Me in glory. But if thou dost keep Me standing until I am wearied, and have to turn away and give it up, and say, 'It is no use,' some day thou wilt be found among those who knock at my door in vain."

MESSRS. WILKINSON AND ADLER.

The two distinguished friends of Israel, Rev. John Wilkinson, head of the Mildmay Mission for the Jews, and Rev. James Adler, a Hebrew-Christian, his "chief helper on the staff," are affording much pleasure and profit to the workers in the same cause in Boston and New England.

During recent years several invitations have been given to Mr. Wilkinson to visit America, to encourage workers for the Jews, and to awaken the attention of Christians more fully to Israel's welfare. The favourable juncture came, and American missionaries very gladly welcomed their London friends on their arrival in New York, April 12, on board the Majestic. They have already had several conferences with an influential committee, of which Dr. E. S. Niles, of Boston, is chairman.

In these conferences, Mr. Wilkinson has impressed upon American friends his own profound reliance upon God in work for the redemption of his ancient people, and has given most valuable suggestions, gathered in his prolonged, intimate, and successful dealing with the people of Israel to bring them back to the Messiah. Mr. Adler has approved himself as an ardent lover of his people, and wise and prudent in method.

Mr. Wilkinson's time has been employed in important meetings, and conversations with callers at his residence; and in preaching, on the Lord's day, in churches in Boston, Providence, and Worcester. Monday, noon, April 30, at Bromfield-street Church, he gave before a crowded audience a weighty address, which was listened to with great attention, on "Israel's Election, Rejection, Restoration, and Mission." He has also addressed Dr. Gordon's students, and the Christian workers among the Jews. He took prominent part in the Passover Memorial services, April 20 and 21. Mr. Adler's work may be seen, in part, from his programme: Saturdays and Sundays at 3 p.m., at the Hanover-street Bethel; every Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at 7.30 p.m., Mr. Adler is present every day from 10 to 12 o'clock, to meet inquirers. He expresses himself as gratified by the attendance, and by the reception of his message.

A two days' conference of all Christian workers for the Jews in the United States and Canada is projected for May 22 in Boston, at which Messrs. Wilkinson and Adler will be present. The programme will take up very important matters, and the meeting is expected to be the most important ever held on this continent towards evangelising the 800,000 Jews of America. In conclusion, it may be said that it is well understood that such a visit as this is not to be estimated by its immediate effect in conversions, or even the sensation it produces, but in the profound impression it makes on thoughtful men. That impression, we believe, will be made. The missioners are to spend two weeks at Mr. Gaebelein's Mission in New York.

Will. C. Wood, Secretary,
Boston, May 2. Boston Evangelical Alliance.

ITALY.—An undenominational church has been opened in the very heart of the beautiful town of Pegli, near Genoa. All the Italian ministers of Genoa were present and took part in the opening. The church was crowded, and there were many more could not get in for want of room. Every evening services are held—oftentimes two, one immediately after the other. All the ministers go willingly by turns to preach Jesus and his Gospel. The work is a sign of true Protestant unity. A Sunday-school has also been opened.

The May Meetings.

The Evangelical Alliance.

The annual conversazione of the Alliance was held on Thursday at Regent's Park College, which the new principal, Dr. Roberts, places at the disposal of the Council, just as Dr. Angus did for so many past years. Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh presided, and after prayer and praise called on the secretary, Mr. A. J. Arnold, who gave a brief outline of the report. 300 new members have been added during the year, and several new branches have been formed. The Council again thankfully record the ever-extending interest taken in the Universal Week of Prayer. The observance in our own country is well sustained. Turning to foreign lands, we find, perhaps, even greater evidence of the interest taken in this world-wide season of prayer. From almost every country reports are now received from year to year, showing how greatly the Universal Week of Prayer is appreciated.

Concerning the question of religious liberty, the report said that there has scarcely been a year in the past history of the Alliance without its influence having been sought on behalf of persecuted Christians in some part of the world, and the year under review has been unusually full of work in this cause. Care is taken to verify the facts, to see how far efforts through the ordinary channels might be effective in obtaining redress, and to avoid irritating the authorities in any country by a public exposure till all other means have failed. Thus it often happens that much of the work of the Alliance on behalf of persecuted Christians is unknown even to members and friends. But all may rest assured that whenever a case of real religious persecution is brought before the Council, they most earnestly seek to obtain redress.

As to finances, the general fund showed a diminution of £160, but the year had closed with a balance on the right side. A special fund, however, had been raised of £900 for the persecuted Stundists. This fund had been distributed by trustworthy agents. There are two hundred and sixty thousand Stundists found in sixteen provinces mainly in the South of Russia. They are thoroughly Evangelical in doctrine and about one-third were Baptists. As to form of government, it is more like Presbyterianism than anything else in this country. About 3250 are in imprisonment or exile. No other sect is persecuted in Russia as they are, and they are put on a level with certain immoral sects. Details were also given of persecution in Turkey, Asia Minor, Persia, Spain, Bohemia, and elsewhere, with some account of the measures adopted by the Evangelical Alliance in these cases.

A WITNESS FROM CHINA.

Rev. Thomas Bryson, of Tientsin, China, spoke of twenty-seven years' experiences in South and North China. As a missionary of the London Missionary Society, he expressed his hearty sympathy with the Evangelical Alliance, and recognised the value of its work at home and abroad. Missionaries suffered from divisions abroad as they did at home. Still, those divisions were not accentuated, and they did not form a stumbling-block to the heathen in the acceptance of Christianity. He proceeded to give instances of the union existing among the missionaries. Toward the conclusion of his address he said they were passing through a grave crisis in China. If the common people were but let alone, they would not fall foul of the missionaries; but they were instigated by the literati. If the catastrophe were not averted, he feared there was impending another outbreak against the foreigner. He wished Christian people to realise the position—not that he wanted "gunboats" to be sent out—not at all; but that genuine sympathy might be aroused and prayer made. It was the policy of the Chinese to worry and harrass the missionaries, and he urged the Council to bring influence to bear on the officials to see that justice was done. The danger to China of permitting the cold-blooded murder of missionaries should be made clear to the Chinese authorities.

RUSSIA AND THE STUNDISTS.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker, whose address at the Home of Industry on the previous evening we summarise on another page, pointed out that the work of the Alliance is to awaken Christians of different countries to realise the fact that they are one with the persecuted Stundists. The Greek Church is as intolerant as the Roman Catholic, and will not recognise the Evangelical Alliance or the Protestants. Stundists are not a sect, but simply people reading and living by the Word of God. Beginning in a small way the movement has spread largely. The Greek Church in Russia is a church of priests and sacraments in the highest degree, and also a religion of pictures; Dr. Baedeker gave instances of the persecution to which it subjects those who do not agree with it. The Church and State are one in Russia. But there is a redeeming feature—they do allow the Bible to be read by the people, and the colporteurs of the Bible Society are allowed free course. Passing on, Dr. Baedeker spoke of prison experiences and the marvellous way God has opened the door for the declaration of the Gospel in the great prisons of Russia and Siberia.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn spoke of Russia, where he had spent nine years, as a country of contradictions. The people are punished remorselessly for following the Bible, yet the Government gives the Bible free course; the Emperor helps to establish a Bible Society, and the Empress becomes its patroness. The speaker believed that great things are in store for Russia; that the light of life will yet penetrate it from end to end; and that even the present persecution will in God's providence subserve in bringing about this glorious result.

Christian Instruction Society.

This Society, which co-operates to good purpose with the free churches in poorer London, providing evangelists and deaconesses, held its annual meeting last week in Abney Chapel. Sir G. Williams presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. T. D. Rutherford, J. L. Forster, and several of the deaconesses.

The report shows that the agents have been going from house to house seeking those who from various causes never attend a religious meeting, and speaking to them personally about their everlasting welfare. While making the salvation of souls the paramount end of their efforts, they have at the same time endeavoured, not without gratifying success, to relieve bodily necessities, regarding acts of benevolence as a duty incumbent on them and a means of affecting hearts towards spiritual interests. The deaconesses have proved of immense value; these devoted women have nursed the sick, watched by the dying, clothed the naked, given food to the starving, fuel for the fireless grate, cheered the despairing, procured surgical appliances for the crippled, and won hearts for the Saviour. Details of work are given in many parts of London, and an earnest appeal is made for liberal aid.

The Prison Mission.

Mrs. Meredith's friends rallied round her last week at the annual meeting of this valuable mission.

Lord Leigh, who presided, said that his experience of forty-five years as visiting magistrate in Warwick naturally led him to take a great interest in prison reform. He brought in a bill that no child under fifteen should be sent to prison, but this was altered in committee to make it permissive. There had been a change since 1849, but a great deal remained to be done. He should like to see instruction given to prisoners. Now, a prisoner was not allowed to be instructed for four months, and then he must have obtained a certain number of marks. With reference to women none was given unless there was a certain number of prisoners, and the prisons in his county had no female instructor for years. Then he was in favour of religious instruction being given. He would also like to see remunerative employment provided for prisoners. This used to be the case in former days, but the objection raised was that it was an injury to outside work, which he thought did not count for much, while on the other hand, the advantage to the prisoner would be very great. As to women prisoners, he would like to see a visiting committee of ladies attached to every prison in England. He felt very strongly on the subject of prisons, and was in deep sympathy with the work of this mission.

Mrs. Meredith said she commenced the work in the year 1865, when the state of the prisons was notorious. In all the branches the results have proved satisfactory. The Princess Mary Village Home supports 200 little girls, children of prisoners, and with hardly any exception the girls sent out into life have done well. The mission workers have entrance into fifty-five English and twelve foreign prisons, there are 304 voluntary lady workers and seventy paid. The average number of women and children reached annually is 3034, or since the commencement of the Mission 64,970, and the chief interest is in women sentenced to penal servitude. The great question is the duty of finding some means of providing for the poor discharged prisoners.

Lord Rookwood having reviewed the state of the funds, Dr. Baedeker spoke on prisons in Russia and Siberia, and Miss Hanbury on prisons in Morocco.

Young Men and Foreign Missions.

The Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, connected with the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., held its annual meeting last Friday evening; there was a very full attendance. Sir George Williams, who presided, expressed very hearty sympathy with the efforts of the Society. The energetic secretary, Mr. Barr, in submitting his report, told of an interesting array of weekly meetings, with speakers selected in the most catholic fashion from various Missionary Societies, and from almost every part of the globe. The report also spoke of young men in training, and some who had lately gone forth to Malaysia and elsewhere. Mr. Oram, of the Congo Mission, who recently died, was one of the Society's recruits.

An interesting address was given by Rev. A. T. Teichmann, of Sunderabad (B.M.S.), who told of the ingenious methods of catching fish employed by the Mohammedans near the mouth of the Ganges, and applied these by way of illustration to the carrying on of Gospel work among the heathen. In the absence of Dr. Grattan Guinness, an efficient substitute was found in the person of Mr. P. Whytock, who told a very interesting story of pioneer mission work in the Congo region among the Mongo tribe. Another speaker, Dr. Grenfell, of the M.D.S.F., was also unavoidably absent, but his place was well filled by Rev. W. Carey (B.M.S.), who chanced to be in the meeting as a listener. In a few burning words he pointed out to those present that this question of foreign missions is now being taken up with more business thoroughness than hitherto. He spoke some solemn words as to what must be the thought of the Lord Jesus concerning the past unfaithfulness of his Church, in leaving so many millions of heathen without a knowledge of his Gospel.

C.M.S. Medical Missions.

On Friday afternoon, at Exeter Hall, a meeting was held in support of the medical work of the Church Missionary Society.

Dr. Herbert Lankester presented a report, in which it was stated that the first medical missionary of the Society was William Welton, a Suffolk surgeon, who was ordained forty-five years ago, and went to Foochow. Until 1870, however, they had only two unordained medical missionaries. Now they have twenty-five, besides one who was ordained, and one lady. These all had British qualifications, some being of the highest order. There were also medical men with native qualifications working in Palestine and the Punjaub. Until 1891 the Society only granted £100 for each missionary, who had to collect what more was needed. In that year an auxiliary society was formed to raise money here, the medical missionaries still raising what they could locally, and £2500 a year being voted from the general fund. Last January the medical auxiliary society was able to say that it only needed £1500 of that grant, and next year it was hoped that the general fund would have to give nothing at all. Regular subscribers were now needed for this branch of the work.

Rev. F. E. Wigram, who occupied the chair, said that opportunities of evangelising the people were obtained by medical missions which could be got in no other way. Rev. Dr. Elliott said that he had spent six and a-half years at Gaza, a most fanatical Moslem town, where other Christian work was forbidden, and he had been freely allowed to preach Christianity to his patients, whose numbers sometimes reached 180 a day. When he went to Gaza there was not another medical man, with either British or Turkish qualifications, in a population of 28,000. There were only quacks, who beat girls black and blue for hysteria, and gave as a panacea for serious fevers the water with which the name of Allah was washed off a dish on which it had been written. Scientific treatment came as a revelation to the people of all classes, and had a wonderful effect in breaking down prejudice. It was a remarkable fact that the Jews in Jerusalem braved the excommunication of their rabbis and went to the Christian doctors of the London Jews' Society, rather than to the hospitals amply equipped and freely opened by European Hebrews, such as the Rothschilds. Dr. Eustace, of Quetta, said that the work of medical missionaries suffered much from insufficient equipment. Dr. Ernest Neve, from Kashmir, also addressed the meeting.

Friendless and Fallen.

The thirty-seventh anniversary of the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge so closely associated with the late Mr. E. W. Thomas was held in Morley Halls, W., on Monday evening.

Mr. W. J. Taylor, the secretary, read an abstract of the report, showing that 967 new cases have been dealt with, in addition to 461 readmissions, consisting of young women temporarily lodged while changing situations, &c., making a total of 1428 in all during the year. Preventive cases show the same steady increase which has been observed during recent years—a branch of benevolent work carried on by the institution which is full of promise for the future, as well as beneficial in its effect for the present, in the lives of the young girls who are thus preserved from a career of shame and suffering. In this department alone during the twelvemonth no less than 551 may be numbered—an increase on any previons year!

The finances show a very decided improvement as compared with last year. The income (including sale of £1000 stock) has been £9387, while the expenditure has been £9271. Several matters are, however, demanding immediate attention, and certain necessary work cannot much longer be deferred. Hence a very earnest appeal is made for liberal help.

Mr. Sydney Gedge, who presided, dealt, in the course of his opening remarks, with some of the dangers incident to domestic service, urging that mistresses generally must wake up to the responsibility resting upon them in regard to the young persons in their household. As to the work of these institutions, he was thankful to find that while great importance is attached to the spiritual part, earnest attention is also given to the training of the inmates in practical work.

Canon Acheson had been studying somewhat closely the report, and had been led to the conclusion that this is a living and growing work. Begun in a very small way indeed, it has developed into seven Homes and an open-all-night Refuge, providing shelter for 240 girls. The preventive side of the work must commend itself to all who know anything of the peculiar and difficult circumstances in which young and friendless girls sometimes find themselves. The speaker touched on various aspects of the work, and closed with a touching plea in the name of Him who came to seek and save the lost. We who profess to be his followers must surely recognise that amongst those fallen and friendless sisters we find a field of service specially dear to his heart.

Rev. John Gritton, D.D., felt that he could not honestly say he was surprised at the fall of so many girls when he knew the class of literature they read so eagerly, and the suggestive pictures allowed to be publicly displayed. Recent experiences in the East-end had revealed to him dangers and perils previously undreamt of. After dealing with this branch of the subject, deploring the vile class of pictures and publications permitted to be exposed and sold, the speaker passed on to call for increased devotion and effort in winning, from the mire and mud of sin, jewels to shine in our Master's crown.

Rev. Thomas Turner felt that this work must be supported because it is home work, and because, alas! it is terribly needed. Of this need he was an eye-witness; for he could nightly see from his vicarage door sad processions of sin and sorrow. Moreover, it is not only home work, it is also preventive work, and it is truly better to prevent than to rescue. Lastly it is Christ-like work; and in doing it we are following his loving example.

Mr. Stephen Bourne gave a variety of experiences in this class of work, proving that it was possible to save even the most fallen; and above all that it was well worth trying to shield endangered young girls. Prevention is the great thing we must attend to, and we can best do this by putting some effective check on polluting literature.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

The Lord Mayor presided, on Monday evening, at the annual meeting of this Society at the Mansion House. The attendance was very large. The report presented by Mr. J. E. Hazelton showed that there are now 1272 pensioners on the books, the pension expenditure being £8100, the largest outlay yet reported. Of these, 779 receive five-guinea, 331 seven-guinea, and 162 ten-guinea pensions. All approved candidates are placed at once on a five-guinea pension, and the other pensions are bestowed as funds permit, and according to a modified form of the voting system. Any Christian of the age of sixty and upwards, and not possessing an income of more than seven shillings weekly, or ten shillings if married, is eligible. Members of almost every section of the Christian Church are on the pension lists. In addition, the Society has four homes, where 180 of the pensioners reside.

The Lord Mayor expressed his pleasure at granting the use of the hall for such a good cause. The Dean of Norwich said the society was doing a glorious work on behalf of the aged, and he feared that in the future there would be greater need for its operations. Sir Henry Peek, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Rev. G. Hazlerigg, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Mr. W. H. Collingridge, and others spoke.

The Salvation Army.

The annual May meeting of the Salvation Army was held on Monday night at Exeter Hall, General Booth presiding. The great Hall was packed with members and friends of the Army, and the proceedings were most enthusiastic.

General Booth said the year had been one of losses and crosses, but they were still marching on. In foreign countries the Army had 2000 corps, being an increase of 119 over the year, and 6443 officers, or an increase of 114. The number of officers abroad exceeded the total number in the British Isles by about 500, but quite 1000 of the officers abroad had gone from England. They had altogether 3124 corps, 10,791 officers, and some 12,000 bandsmen, who played not for fee or reward, but for the love of God and the love of souls. Thirty-eight countries outside the British Isles were occupied by the Army. In France, where the struggle had been very severe, they had forty-six corps and 211 officers; and in Switzerland, where they had had bloody persecutions and slaughters beyond conception, they had sixty-seven corps and 199 officers. In Holland, where religion was, he would not say dead, but very drowsy, they had been very successful. The Queen and other members of the Royal Family were subscribers to their funds, as all queens and all governments ought to be. In Germany they had had to contend with difficulties greater than imprisonment, rough treatment, and half murder, for they had had to face the quiet determination of the police not to allow them to approach anything like enthusiasm. The moment an atheist or a drunkard started quarrelling, the police, instead of dealing with the disturber, shut up the doors of their hall and forbade any more meetings being held in it for that week. Still they were persevering with the fight, and they would win. At the present time they had twenty-four corps and eighty-one officers in the Fatherland. In Denmark, Sweden, and Norway they had 300 corps and over 1000 officers. In the United States their experience was that the American set himself up as not needing to be missioned by heaven or earth, and least of all by Britishers. If anything was to be done for America, the American could do it himself.

General Booth went on to speak of the progress of the work among the natives of Africa, and said they proposed now to extend their operations to Matabeleland, to Jerusalem, to Java, to Japan, and to Port Said. The Navy branch of their work was going on well, but they wanted more vessels. There were associated with the Army 183 institutions, apart from sixty-nine slum posts, worked by 1020 officers. In the past nine years 20,000 fallen women had passed through their rescue homes, of whom 14,000 had turned out satisfactorily; and 12,000 criminals had passed through the criminal homes, 7000 of which had proved satisfactory cases. He wished to thank the Australian Governments for the subsidies they had granted to the Army, and he was glad to see on the platform the Hon. Mr. Playford, the acting Agent-General for South Australia. Every Government and municipality ought to assist them for taking away their criminals. In conclusion, he said their work had been a great stimulus to other organisations for religious and social work, and it had done much to teach the Churches their duty. He made an earnest appeal for funds, and that really was his speech, all the rest having been merely introductory.

Addresses were also given by Commissioners Booth-Tucker and Howard, and by Mrs. General Keer.

The R.T.S. Breakfast.

Annually it is the custom of those interested in the foreign missionary work of the Religious Tract Society to hold a breakfast meeting, when representatives from various parts of the world tell of the operations in their respective fields. This gathering was held on Tuesday morning in the Cannon-street Hotel, and was largely attended.

Mr. John Marnham, who presided, briefly introduced the proceedings, and called on Rev. R. Bruce, D.D., who spoke of "Bible Work in Bible Lands," dealing specially with the Arabic work of the American missionaries at Bagdad, and the labours of the C.M.S. missionaries in Persia.

Rev. S. H. Anderson spoke of the co-operation of the R.T.S. with the various evangelistic agencies in France. Tracts and Gospel papers are largely in use, and are willingly accepted by all classes. Several instances were given showing how God has been pleased to bless these printed messengers.

China was represented by Rev. W. Owen (L.M.S.), and Rev. Yung-King Yen, who spoke of the operations of the Central China Tract Society, and of the way in which the Gospel is carried by means of its publications into remote villages and unevangelised corners of the Empire. Cheering details were also given of the work among the literati coming up to the great cities for examination.

Rev. R. Wright Hay followed with similar details of tract work in India, and among the young educated natives. He read brief extracts from two letters (penned by natives) showing how Gospel papers had been blessed to them.

Rev. J. Jukes gave the result of thirty-eight years' experiences in Madagascar, showing the value of literature, and urging the great need for Gospel books and pictures, especially among the far-off and half-civilised tribes in the forests and mountains of the island.

Lastly, Rev. Henry Lansdell, D.D., rose to remind his hearers that while they had heard something of what had been done, much, very much, remained to be done. He had returned from a tour in which he touched nearly every country of Asia; and he had been saddened to find how many peoples are wholly unevangelised. For example, he had lately visited the Usbeg tribes of Central Asia, had passed through Chinese Turkestan, Nepaul, Bhootan, French-Indo China and Cambodia, Annam, Corea, the Philippines, Borneo, etc., great regions of which are wholly without witnesses for Christ, or even the Word of God in their own tongue. Therefore while much had been done, there is still much land to be possessed.

ORPHAN HOME, HAMPTON.

The annual meeting of the Female Orphan Home, Tangley Park, Hampton, was held on Saturday last. The Home now contains something under the number of seventy. Yet it remains a home in reality. The children evidently know it as such, and the large party of subscribers and friends felt and expressed their conviction of it in the heartiest manner.

As at all annual meetings, reports were read and speeches made, but by no means the least important features were the performances of the children in their songs and musical drill, fire-escape practice, needlework and knitting specimens, and the bakery, forming a part of the excellent domestic arrangements.

The Home is situate in an open and healthy spot in the neighbourhood of the famous river resort, and enjoys the confidence of many kind friends in the locality, while supported by subscribers in London and throughout the country. According to the committee's report the chief care of the managers is to make full use of the premises, admitting the most needy cases and keeping the Home full. Contributions will be gladly received, and reports and all information supplied by the secretary, Mr. J. D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

ADVENT CONVENTION AT YORK.

The second of a series of conferences for the prayerful consideration of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus, was held at York on Thursday and Friday last week. The morning and afternoon meetings were held in the Soldiers' Institute, but the attendances in the evenings necessitated a move into the larger Corn Exchange, where two excellent gatherings took place. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of London.

Canon Fausset opened the Conference with a most earnest address, which struck a high key-note for the succeeding speakers, Hebrew ix. 24, 26, and 28. He did not know anything that would lift them high above self-seeking, ambition-seeking, mammon-seeking, except to be always looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

At the afternoon meeting, Dr. Bullinger spoke on several prophecies which had been literally fulfilled, which was a complete argument that the Lord would as faithfully and as literally fulfil those prophecies yet unfulfilled. Mr. H. D. Brandreth commenced a trio of addresses on the four judgments.

The evening meeting was made memorable by two earnest addresses, full of deep spiritual meaning, by Canon Fausset and Pastor John Robertson, of Glasgow. The latter gave some very interesting details of the way in which he was led to accept the truth regarding Christ's return. The Canon based his address on Genesis iii. 15, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." There was only one remedy for the existing confusion in the family, in the Church, and in the world, and that was the Lord who at his coming will sweep away tares from the field which belongs to Him. Mr. Liesching followed with an instructive address on the Jews.

On Friday, Dr. Bullinger and Pastor Robertson delivered impressive addresses at the morning meeting. In the afternoon Pastor Marsh described the signs which told of the near return of the Lord. Mr. Brandreth continued his discourse on the four judgments, and Dr. Bullinger again spoke briefly on the negative aspects of the Lord's return.

In the evening Mr. Mathieson said he was hopeful that some day the Lord would redress the great curse of Babel, and would restore to the earth a pure language. Pastor Marsh again spoke, and Mr. Liesching and Mr. Brandreth delivered fervid addresses on the evils of Theosophy, Spiritualism, and kindred matters, and strongly warned Christians to keep their hands clear of them.

DAUGHTERS OF MISSIONARIES.

The Institution for the Education of Daughters of Missionaries, Walthamstow Hall, Sevenoaks, held their annual meeting on Thursday last. The treasurer, Mr. Septimus Scott, read the financial report stating that the Institution is open to all denominations. Eighty-six children now fill the house, and many have to be refused through lack of funds. Funds are urgently required for a sanatorium, which would make room for six more. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, referred to the great boon to missionaries that such a home was, knowing as they did that they were leaving their dear ones in such good, loving, motherly hands as Miss Unwin's. He also asked that friends would in the holidays remember the children, and invite one or two of them to stay with them for a time; they would thus do good, both to the children and their parents, and be serving Christ.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, dwelt on the great comfort the institution was to missionaries going out, and he felt sure that if friends all over the kingdom knew this and thought about it, they would do more for the Institution. Revs. Edwin Lewis (of Bellary, India), G. M. Bulloch (of Almora, India), and F. E. Lawes (of the Savage Islands), also addresses the meeting.

BISHOP THOBURN is stated to have purchased an abandoned tea plantation in the Himalaya region, covering 1000 acres, for 4000 dols., and plans to make of it "a vast industrial establishment," where men and women, boys and girls, shall be taught divers useful occupations.

THE OPIUM SCOURGE.—In a letter from Hankow, Rev. J. S. Adams, of the American Mission, refers to the all-prevalent opium scourge, and quotes a statement from The North China Daily News as to the utter ruin of a prosperous Chinese family through indulgence in the fatal habit.

GLASGOW EVANGELISM.

The report for the past year of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association makes an extremely attractive pamphlet. By the aid of photography the pages are plentifully brightened with speaking illustrations of the many-sided operations of the Mission; and the picture presented deserves the very best setting, for it is a truly noble work for the good of sinful and sorrowing humanity. Planted as an outcome of the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Glasgow, the Association is now a widespreading and fruitful tree.

First of all, as the title indicates, there is direct Gospel work for the conversion of the teeming masses in Glasgow. This is carried on from different centres, and continuous blessing is manifest. The Mizpah Band is one of the most interesting outcomes of the evangelistic work among drinking men, and it is, in its turn, a very effective helper in weaning from his evil ways the slave of the intoxicating cup. The reformed men go out in companies and seek to save their brothers who are still in bondage. The Bible Institute is a comparatively recent addition to the machinery of the Association, but it has more than justified itself, and, when adequate premises are secured and the work consolidated, it will undoubtedly do splendid service in training and fitting workers alike for the home and foreign fields.

The work among the little ones is now an extensive one, and carries light and happiness into many a poor home in the city. The agencies comprise Sabbath dinners for poor children, day refuges, a fresh-air fortnight scheme, a home for girls, a Band of Hope, and a lantern mission. All these endeavours are carried on with much spirit and enthusiasm; it would be impossible to record the happy and holy influences thus exerted on thousands of youthful lives. It is in truth a most practical and convincing form of applied Christianity among the poor. The pages of the report that deal with this department of the work are specially pleasing, and the narrative ought to evoke a large measure of sympathetic help. The Homes at Saltcoats for Destitute Children are also rendering capital service among the specially needy, and prove their usefulness increasingly year by year.

To those who wish to see what one earnest community of Christians of different denominations is doing for the salvation of those about them, we warmly commend this report for perusal. The Secretary, Mr. J. R. Miller, Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow, will furnish copies.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

A large proportion of the May Night and Day is devoted to illustrations from photographs of cases of rescue through the agency of the Homes. Some twenty-four engravings of boys and girls, admitted apparently from all over the kingdom, show conclusively how wide is the range of effort which the Institutions undertake, and also how necessary these efforts are. Cruelty, destitution, homelessness, and child-suffering appear to demand now as much as ever unceasing care and attention. It is no wonder that the Homes have, as is abundantly evidenced in this issue of Night and Day, friends and supporters from all over the world. Some of these gifts are of the most remarkable character, and the paragraphs relating to them constitute a real revelation as to the benevolent sympathy which is felt towards the Institutions, not only by the wealthy, but by an enormous number among the middle and lower middle classes.

Dr. Barnardo states, in recording the departure of his first emigration party for the current year of 234 trained lads, that he has now sent to Canada and the Colonies no fewer than 6805 boys and girls, of whom 98 per cent. have acquitted themselves satisfactorily. It is hoped that several additional hundreds from amongst the nearly 5000 children in the Homes will be sent to Canada during the summer.

It is announced that a Self-Denial Week for the benefit of the Homes will be observed from the 4th to the 12th of August next. The Annual Meeting, one of the most attractive engagements of the year in London, has been fixed to take place in the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, June 23, when Lord Brassey will preside.

EGYPT.—The American Mission in Egypt is opening a station at Daron, a point forty miles south of Assouan, and of some importance since certain rich Moslem refugees from the Soudan came there to live. Only five or six Coptic families reside in the place.

IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

Mrs. Aitchison writes that though unable to have their usual breaking-up at Christmas, owing to sickness, they reopened school with a grand gathering and thanksgiving day. Many were the earnest prayers and stirring speeches; voluntary offerings were an outward token of thankfulness and gratitude that not one of their number was missing, after such a time of anxiety. A native woman who had been ill gave an ox for the feast. This was a remarkable event, and must have stirred the hearts of many to see such gratitude.

Mr. Aitchison had been busy constructing a water-mill for the grinding of corn, which had caused much labour and thought; it had been very successfully carried out, and is looked upon as an important event in the history of Ikwezi.

Petras and Faniswas' nice brick cottage was finished, and is a silent witness of what Christianity can do. It is the only native brick house far or near; they celebrated the opening with prayer and thanksgiving, and invited many to the feast. Mrs. Aitchison says: "It did one's eyes and heart good to see the deep pleasure of the worthy couple in being able to entertain us under such pleasing circumstances. May it not be long before we see more of these cottages erected; but the making of the brick is a long and tedious process. General routine of the work is being followed up faithfully by our helpers; we are a happy band of workers together. We are looking forward to the help and good influence of Joseph Isidoi, who comes back to us in June, after three years' study and good character at Lovedale.

"We have recently formed a branch Sabbath-school in a small hamlet of Grignas, the grandfather of the clan, a good Christian, taking charge. I rejoice to say there are several inquirers shortly to be added to our number. Pondoland now belongs to the Cape, and we hope for peace, and the opening up of the country, witchcraft put down, and missionaries coming in. It was a grand thing that the paramount chief gave up his country so peacefully and willingly."

Mr. Edwin A. Page, Y.M.C.A., Birmingham, is the representative of the Mission in this country.

SEAMEN IN INDIAN PORTS.

For the past twenty years the divine blessing has abundantly rested upon the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church on behalf of seamen visiting the great ports of the Indian empire. The Seamen's Rests at Calcutta, Rangoon, Karachi, and Bombay, established at intervals since 1870, have been eminently useful in reaching our disadvantaged brethren of the sea with the Gospel, and also largely and gratifyingly instrumental in furthering total abstinence and social purity among them. Their temporal and spiritual welfare has been earnestly sought through all these years with the happiest results.

We are glad and thankful to believe that hundreds of seamen of many nationalities, and a large number of captains, officers, and engineers have been savingly "found" by the Good Shepherd, and soundly converted to God in connection with the work of our Seamen's Rests in the cities named; while an equally large number of God's children have been helped, strengthened and confirmed in their Christian faith. It is an unspeakable joy to us to know that there are to-day faithful and efficient missionaries of Christ preaching salvation to the people of India, who were rescued from miserably sinful lives and from the destructive power of the devil through the instrumentality of these institutions.

The Bombay "Rest" continues to prosper, and now that the large debt necessarily incurred in the erection of the fine building specially designed for this work is steadily being reduced, and will soon be wiped out altogether, we are planning for more aggressive work than has hitherto been possible.

To this end the energetic and efficient superintendent of the "Rest," Mr. R. H. Madden, well known as a successful social purity worker also, earnestly invites those who are interested in the work among seamen to assist him in purchasing a steam launch, which we are fully assured will be a great help to him in reaching the seamen, bringing them ashore to the services, and returning them to their ships in due season and in good condition.

This enterprise has the fullest sympathy of captains who are acquainted with the facts of the case, and it will have their practical assistance. But assistance must be furnished on a wider scale than anything that is possible locally, before the enterprise can be successful.

An every way suitable launch is offered to us for Rs.6000, a large reduction from the original cost, and from the present value, in the best judgment of experts who have been consulted. Our plan contemplates making it self-supporting from the very outset, by systematic work in the harbour at convenient hours, while at the same time doing all the needed work of the "Rest."

Hon. Sec. and Treasurer, Seamen's Rest.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

A large number of friends met Miss Taylor and party on their arrival at Darjeeling, and a pleasant hour was spent at the manse by invitation of Rev. H. Rylands Brown. All the members of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission were present, and also Rev. F. Franson, Director of the Scandinavian Alliance Mission, and the nine workers connected with it, who have been in the neighbourhood for upwards of two years, preparing for work in Tibet. The company also included a number of missionaries from different parts of India, Assam, and Burmah, representing various branches of the Church of Christ. Addresses of welcome having been delivered by Mr. Brown and Rev. A. Turnbull, of the Church of Scotland Mission, Miss Taylor gave some account of the way in which she had been led to devote her life to Tibet.

In a letter to us, dated April 30, Miss Taylor says: "We are comfortably settled down to study the language, and some of the brethren are able to speak a few words, and to sing 'Jesus loves me' and other hymns. The Tibetans gave me a hearty welcome when I arrived at the station, especially at Jorebungalow. The teacher of Mrs. McKenzie and myself comes from Mongolia. He lived in Tibet a number of years, and there learned the language, which he speaks very clearly. He seems much interested in the Scriptures, as also is another of the teachers.

"We have a Tibetan service every Sabbath evening from four to five o'clock, and our time on week-days is fully occupied. Will you pray that the Lord will prepare each one of us for his work in Tibet, filling us with his love, so that we may be willing to suffer for his sake and the Tibetans be won for Him? Pray also that we may see his guiding hand leading us forward, so that no mistake may be made. We thank the Lord for supplying all our needs. At first we were a little taken aback in finding that we had customs dues to pay; although we did not reckon on this, the Lord did. We praise Him for keeping us in health and strength. Even the little baby (McKenzie) is getting quite fat and rosy."

Mr. McKenzie writes: "We are not a bit shaken in our confidence by the attempt made by Government to stop us. Our Master has all power! He is King of kings and Lord of lords. Miss Taylor has arranged that instead of receiving callers, and wasting a lot of precious time, we have a prayer meeting every Saturday evening, to see friends then. There are a number of fine Christian soldiers here, who come to the meetings; they are very earnest fellows, and are seeking to win their comrades to Jesus.

"Miss Taylor has a very interesting meeting every Sunday afternoon for Tibetans. The attendance is not large as yet, but we feel sure it will increase. It is amusing to be with Miss Taylor going along the streets. If any Tibetans meet her they always salute her, and pass some remarks, while the children cry, 'Annie la, Annie la.'"

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS is pronouncing bravely for temperance. At the recent Philadelphia yearly meeting the clerk officially said: "This yearly meeting takes the ground that total abstinence is the only safe course."

IT IS NOTEWORTHY that while three of the most progressive of the Canadian provinces have given decisive votes for compulsory prohibition of all intoxicating liquors as beverages, Canada's drink bill continues to increase. The revenue from excise was last year, according to the report of the Department of Inland Revenue at Ottawa, 8,444,502 dols., or nearly half a million dollars in excess of the revenue of 1892.—Daily Chronicle.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

Dear Sir,—Some of your readers used to take a great interest in my late husband's work amongst the aborigines of this land, and I would like them to know that the Mission is still carried on; my eldest son (who is nobly following in his father's footsteps) and myself, with a Christian Kanaka, are at present the whole of the workers. We need further helpers, but the funds will not permit. At present we are only able to have school in the afternoon, as there is so much outside work to see to.

The field is a large one. We have a spacious piece of land which, if it were stocked with cattle, would yield an income sufficient to support the station, and from this centre the Barron River tribe, the Fommill tribe, the blacks at Maruba and Port Douglas could be reached. But the mission is £400 in debt. Yet the work has been started for very little. My husband erected the mission-house, and my son built the school. No carpenter has been employed; in fact, I often look at the house and think what it has cost us, for my husband should never have worked as he did, but his love for the perishing aborigines was great, and they have few friends.

Our house is in need of many things. We need a stove, and our principal cooking and boiling the clothes is done in a kerosene tin. The rainy season is now on, and although we often get the malarial fever, and have to dose ourselves with quinine, yet I am happy to say the fever is not so bad as it was last year.—Sincerely yours, Mary A. Gribble.

A LETTER FROM DEACON ABRAHAM.

God's mercies to me and mine have been wonderful in many ways; and to the Christians in England I am very grateful for the help rendered to me and to my work. Two years now have almost passed since my dear wife Esther left us for England. When she left to plead in England for the needs of the Orphanage, she was not so strong as we would fain have seen her, and we trusted that in the change she would be strengthened and have the benefit of the advice of English doctors. Through God's goodness she has received much help. God has been her guide and good physician.

In our village and country influenza has spread much of late, and diphtheria and smallpox have killed many children under sixteen years of age. In our circle there have been two cases; one, in the goodness of God, is recovered, and the other, a girl of fifteen, died last week. She had been with us about three years. When the Lord directed her to us she was in a sad state. Who brought her from Kurdistan we do not know, but she was left in the village street.

Many are our needs, but one specially presses, for we have sorely felt the want of it in this time of sickness unto death. We need a separate room to be kept like a little hospital, where we can isolate the cases of illness from the other children. The dear girl we have just mourned died of smallpox, surrounded by the other orphan girls, sleeping in the same room. We cannot get doctors, but we can do a good deal with nursing. If the English Christians can help us to get such a place we shall be very very thankful. Hitherto I have not been able to get an hospital, though it has been in my heart, and I believe much good would come of it.

I am glad and thankful to know that Esther's health is so much better. By the great kindness of some friends at Edinburgh, her way has been opened to go to the Simpson Memorial Hospital for three months, so that she may get some knowledge of nursing, which will be of the greatest use here.

Oroomiah. Abraham, Deacon.

NEW HEBRIDES.—Rev. J. Annand, of the Canadian Presbyterian Church, who is labouring on the cannibal island of Santo, after five years of foundation work is glad to report the baptism of the first convert in that backward part of the New Hebrides mission field. He says: "This is the first fruits of what we hope will be an abundant harvest. Peter had been with us nearly three years. For a few Sabbaths after I baptized him, many of the people kept away from the church. Some were angry about his joining us, others were kept away by a murder at the village. One man poisoned his brother, which caused some bad talk. Nothing was done to the murderer. The man who was poisoned was the father of one of the young men now living with us. It is very hard to understand the extreme depth of the degradation here. Nothing appears to be too wicked for them to accomplish."

20TH KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 23 TO 28.

BELOVED FRIENDS AND SERVANTS OF JESUS CHRIST,—Though deeply conscious of the solemn responsibility which attaches to the calling together again of those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, of whatever name or nation, yet still with thankful joy we invite you to a convention to be held, God willing, at Keswick, for the deepening of spiritual life, from July 23 to 28, 1894.

We live in times in which it behoves all who name the name of Jesus, to hold fast the truths of God's Holy Word, and the Divine teaching of his Holy Spirit, to enable us to understand it, that its truths as applied by Him may regulate our daily life. The words of our Lord are as solemn as they are true, whether we heed them or not:—"The words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day" (see John xii. 48-50). We may all confess that in ourselves we have no strength, but the mighty power of God is at the back of every humble, God-directed, and Spirit-filled worker in his vineyard, and the Master's "Lo, I am with you alway," is a resting-place for every weak one in his service.

May we, in thus assembling together, be taught our true position in God's holy sight, and be deeply humbled, and every high thing laid low before Him. May every soul be afresh cleansed in the atoning blood, emptied of self, filled with the Holy Spirit, and our cleansed hearts, indwelt by the Holy One, "an habitation of God through the Spirit"—perfect through his comeliness put upon us—and enabled to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." Such humbled, cleansed, and indwelt souls, He seeks for his service, going forth in nothingness of self, his mighty power magnified, even in the little ones of his family. All praise to Him who reveals Himself to babes. We commend our dear brethren and sisters, who come to proclaim his truth amongst us, to the prayers of God's children, that He may speak through them, by his Holy Spirit, and open up the Word.

We praise our loving Father for many years of blessing, and commit this Twentieth Keswick Convention solely to the guidance of our living and life-giving Lord; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, and "a people prepared for the Lord" made ready.

Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,
For the Trustees of the Keswick Convention,
ROBERT WILSON.

Broughton Grange, Cockermouth.

Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, will again kindly act as hon. secretary, to whom applications for information respecting lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired. Anyone taking rooms for longer than one week will find it easier to obtain accommodation early.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

AT our annual meeting, among other pressing needs, special attention was called to the importance of our Medical Missionary Training fund, and to the new work among lepers in Dutch Guiana, hitherto in the hands of the Roman Catholics. For the former it is sought to raise an endowment fund of at least £15,000. The latter, involving the building of a house and church near the Leper Hospital, and the supply of a missionary and staff of nurses, calls for prompt and generous aid.

A gentleman present, who wishes to be nameless, authorises me to say that he will give £100 towards the needed increase of the general mission funds if nine other of the Lord's stewards will do likewise. I shall be most grateful if you will allow this brief statement to appear in your paper, where I gladly leave it to speak for itself.

W. WETTON COX, Clerical Secretary.
London Association in Aid of the Moravian Missions.
2, Furnival's Inn, E.C.

THE WINGS OF RICHES.—Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, says: "I have been twenty-five years, nearly, pastor of one church, in a position where I had an opportunity to see; and I have observed that where men have waited, and laid by, and grasped, and accumulated a great fortune, to pile upon the heads of their children, those children have, with one or two exceptions, gone wrong and been ruined."

THE GUARDS' MISSION.—Sergeant George Pullingar has issued a modest report of this useful mission, showing that God has graciously blessed the work. Four weekly meetings have been sustained during the year, but the chief part of the work is the visitation of the barrack-rooms and personal dealing amongst the men. The Gospel Hall carried on in Battersea Park-road also goes on well. The year closes with a balance on the wrong side of £26.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of the subscribers to this charity took place on Thursday last at the office, 52, Finsbury-pavement. Mr. W. C. Collins, who presided, stated that the committee had thought it advisable to postpone the usual public meeting of the Society till later on in the year. The report states the aim of the Society to be the visitation of the sick poor of the metropolis at their own homes, giving help whether in the shape of work, sympathy, clothes or food. There is a staff of nearly two hundred Christian men and women, visitors and almoners, whose services are entirely gratuitous. Many of them have for years been engaged in investigating the cases brought to the notice of the Society, so that attempted imposition is quickly discovered, whilst help is speedily rendered.

Besides relieving from its own funds it undertakes for subscribers (who are willing to personally provide the means to assist any really deserving case) to investigate all appeals made to them personally for help. Many of the public who are known for their benevolence, and therefore often inundated with begging letters, gladly avail themselves of this service. Like other charities the income of this has suffered from the general trade depression, and its banking account has been overdrawn by £250. The treasurer is Mr. Ald. and Sheriff Dimsdale, 50, Cornhill, E.C. We have often used the Society to investigate cases of distress, and we are, therefore, able to speak of the efficient and speedy manner in which the work is done.

UNION HALL MISSION.

A SPECIAL eight days' mission has been concluded at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, Mr. J. J. Sims and Mr. W. P. Crombie each night giving addresses. Much interest has been created by the stirring addresses of Mr. Sims, who preached the Gospel from a large chart. We had also the presence and help, both in the open air and in the hall, of Mr. Richard Cory, J.P., and Colonel Forster.

At the closing meeting on Sunday evening the words of both Mr. Sims and Mr. Cory were in the power of the Holy Spirit; souls were blessed and Christians revived. This may be said of the services all through the week. A good number of poor people came up each night, while the open-air services were largely attended. ROBERT BILKE.

BLANKENBURG ALLIANCE HOUSE.

WE have to look back upon the past winter gratefully, as one rich in spiritual blessings, although in other respects it has been a time of peculiar trial. English Christians interested in evangelistic work in Luther's land are cordially invited to visit us. The work carried on here is in all its branches—Gospel meetings, Sunday-school, work among navvies, editing of religious papers, etc., entirely undenominational.

Our yearly conference for the deepening of spiritual life will (D.V.) take place in the end of August. It is conducted by the leading members of the Evangelical Alliance in Germany. Boarders are received all the year round at moderate terms. Daily Bible readings are held in the house, which is situated in one of the most lovely and salubrious spots in Germany. ANNA VON WELING.

Thuringia.

CENTRAL MOROCCO.

DR. ROBERT KERR, who, with Mrs. Kerr, has laboured for several years amid much opposition in Rabat and Sallee, once the pirate ports of Morocco, is now in this country, endeavouring to secure workers and support for a special effort to reach the untouched Berber tribes of Central Morocco, with whom his medical work has brought him much into contact. There is not a finer race in Africa than these Berbers, who still maintain a semi-independence, and speak their own language, therefore needing specially trained missionaries.

Dr. Kerr's work is carried on on undenominational lines, in hearty sympathy with the Southern Morocco Mission on the one side, and the North Africa Mission on the other. Both he and Mrs. Kerr are prepared to address meetings, etc., during the summer, and may be addressed at 4, Ailsa-terrace, Winscombe-street, Hillhead, Glasgow. J. E. B. M.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL of the United States has announced his purpose not to appoint as postmasters any who are engaged in the liquor traffic. He says he does this because the public service will be better secured by having post-offices conducted by men who are not keepers of saloons.

TRACTS FOR MEXICO.

FOR thirteen years I have been engaged in mission work in this republic. The Lord has been gracious to me. I have often been in imminent danger, but He has always delivered me. I have established a college for the education of young ladies which has been very successful. The Madeiro Institute is largely self-supporting. Forty-six of the young ladies who have been trained are now engaged in teaching. They have often opened the way for the missionary and the establishment of a church. We usually have from fifty and sixty boarders. I have aided in the organisation of some thirty-four churches. Six of these have been organised since last June. Last Lord's day I baptized twelve believers, making 104 baptized by me in the past ten months.

Mexico is ripe for the Gospel. The people were never so anxious for the Bible and the religious tract as to-day. Recently I was given a few tracts by one of your readers from the British and Foreign Evangelical Tract Society. I found them so helpful that I wish to appeal to such of your readers as would like to aid the evangelisation of this priest-ridden land to send me by post an ample supply of these Gospel tracts. I find thousands of eager and interested readers. I also crave the prayers of God's people that the Holy Spirit may ever accompany me and my fellow-workers. W. D. POWELL.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

GOD teaches us to pray and praise
By childhood's winsome wiles and ways.
And by the clasp of childhood's hand,
Our father's love we understand.
—Clara Thwaites.

Among all the sources from which flow the world's vast stream of criminals, none is so prolific as neglected childhood.

The lips of parents are often sealed by a false idea that they ought not to speak to their children about the privilege of church membership.

So soon as your baby feels that it has been left by some one's caprice or indolence to that which causes it uneasiness or pain, it is infected with self-will, the first and ugliest of faults.

There are more ways than one in addressing children, and the mother who speaks to her little son in the same tones as she would use to a disobedient dog, can hardly expect to receive a patient reply.

Let us not consider ourselves the owners of the children, but the servants of someone, who, being their owner, has the direction of their circumstances more absolutely and continuously than we ourselves.

"Father," said a child once, "when shall I be old enough to leave off saying my prayers?" What a terrible question! The father leaves God out of his life; can you be surprised if the child thinks he will one day be old enough to do the same?

What a temptation to the parent or teacher of a clever nervous child to inspire it with his or her own personality, and spur it on to work beyond its real powers; and how extremely dangerous to health, sanity, and true development is such a course.

You would all choose that your boys should become bold-hearted, noble, and worthy men, real in principle. Then let them frame their lives by your own. Live out the higher life, win your boy's confidence, and so use it that he learns from you not only how to die but how to live.

Do not suffer criticism or disparagement of the minister or the sermon where little listeners can drink in either. Let it be understood that you love the minister and revere his office, and always speak of him to the children and their little friends as God's servant and your most honoured acquaintance.

As I feel how, if a child of mine were to wander into the grossest form of evil, and at last to come back with no other language than a dumb creature, pointing to his rags and haggard face, I think the chief concern to me would be, not the reason for his return, the way of his coming, but that he had come at all.

TWO BEAUTIFUL MODELS which have received much attention from the clergy and others interested in Scriptural lore were placed on view at a conversazione, on Saturday last, at Messrs. Streeter and Co.'s, 18, New Bond-street, when a large and distinguished audience assembled to hear a short lecture delivered by the Rev. Canon Benham. One is a model, in real gold and jewels, of the Holy City, or New Jerusalem as described in Rev. xxi. The second represents the breastplate of the High Priest, twelve precious stones standing for the tribes of Israel. The lecturer described the precious stones, to each of which an allegorical meaning was probably attached.

Letters to the Editor.

INDIAN MISSIONARIES AND DRINK.

Dear Sir,—In a letter headed "Indian Missionaries and Drink," which appeared in your columns over the signature of "Joseph G. Alexander," there occur these words: "Would to God that every missionary in India might see it his duty to make a similar declaration as regards strong drink. . . . In my journey through Northern India it has been my privilege to meet with many missionaries and other workers of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. . . . From their noble-hearted bishop down to the humblest worker, they are all free from participation in these habits which are causing so many weak brethren in India to stumble. . . . I believe that the other American missionary organisations working in India—certainly the American Baptists, the Canadian Baptists, and the International Missionary Alliance—are similarly free from all connection with strong drink, and that they are peculiarly successful in aggressive work. It is a pity that some of our British societies are in this respect lagging behind. The three Scottish Presbyterian bodies, the Irish Presbyterians, the Wesleyan and London Missionary Societies, are none of them, I fear, quite clean-handed in the matter."

In the letter, from which the above are running extracts, there is not a word about opium, though the writer of it is the well-known secretary of the Anti-opium Society, beyond his classification of men in general into "pro-opiumists" and "anti-opiumists." Now, it has so happened that the American Methodist Episcopal Church, from its bishop downwards, and American Baptists in Burmah and elsewhere, have all supported Mr. Alexander and his Anti-opium Society, and that the Scotch Presbyterians and some others were rather conspicuous by their non-appearance among Mr. Alexander's followers. Hence, it is feared, Mr. Alexander's undue praise of the former and his most unjustifiable slander of the other in the matter of drink.

We missionaries in Northern India know of no such distinction as Mr. Alexander makes. The Scotch Presbyterian missionaries of Northern India are not lagging behind in this respect. In stating that they are, as Mr. Alexander does, he says what is not true. The Scotch missionaries in the Himalayas have for years taken the lead in this respect in the lands occupied by them and their Presbyterian brethren; in Calcutta (the only place named by Mr. Alexander in his letter), Santhalisthan, and Rajshahi (where Dr. Morison is the Scotch Presbyterian missionary), the Scotch Presbyterian missionaries are, to a man, total abstainers from alcoholic drinks, and have kept abreast of their American brethren in the Temperance movement for the last thirty years. The writer of this is classed by Mr. Alexander as a "pro-opiumist." That the Calcutta Missionary Conference does not so regard him will be seen from the fact that at their very next meeting after his evidence before the Royal Commission had been published, they unanimously elected him as the convener of their Standing Committee on Drink and Opium, in succession to Rev. W. B. Philips, who has gone to England.

I may be allowed further to add that while many missionaries have warmly thanked your correspondent for his evidence before the Commission, the last being Rev. Dr. Dyer, medical missionary at Pachamba, not one missionary has expressed his disapprobation to me of what I then said. We are to a man against opium and drink; but we recognise the fact that there are evils and evils, and various ways of dealing with them, and that opium is not the greatest evil, nor drink, nor uncharitableness, nor falsely accusing the brethren, the least. Some of us think that British Christians might do worse than take to heart the words of our Lord—"He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." And if stones must be cast, let one be quite sure that they be cast at the guilty, not at the innocent.

In writing as I have, in the defence of the falsely accused Scotch Presbyterian missionaries, it is not because I am not equally convinced of the falsity of the accusation as against the London missionaries, of which Mr. Philips is one, or the Wesleyans, all of whom Mr. Alexander has slandered by name; but because I know the Presbyterians better, and I happen to be one of them, and can write with greater authority concerning them.—Yours, etc.,

Calcutta, April 25. K. S. Macdonald.

Sir,—As a missionary in South India not belonging to any of the societies mentioned by Mr. Alexander in his letter from Baroda, February 18, I write with the hope of correcting a serious error in that letter. The error lies in the statement, "Until within the last few decades indulgence in these liquors was practically unknown, except among the aboriginal tribes." If the statement had been worded, "indulgence in these liquors was practically unknown among the higher castes, and only allowed among the lower castes and aboriginal tribes," it would have been accurate. It is a well-known fact that from time immemorial the lower castes have freely indulged in intoxicating liquors.

That among the educated class the use of foreign intoxicating liquors is increasing is a fact which all missionaries deplore, and I am not wrong in saying that 95 per cent. of the missionaries in South India are total abstainers, and, therefore, doing their best to stem the torrent, but the greater number of slaves to drink are to be found in the lower and lowest castes, where drinking has been common from time immemorial. All honour is due to all those who are helping forward the cause of Temperance in this land, but we must be accurate in our statements and not lay any blame where it is not deserved. Only a short time ago I read in a missionary report some paragraphs strongly condemning the Government management of a semi-independent State, and asserting that drinking had increased in consequence of the State coming under direct British management. This was a most unjust statement made by a comparative stranger, as the hill tribes in that State manufacture their own liquors, and have always spent days in drunken debauchery after their crops have all been gathered in. Officials naturally resent such untrue statements, and become prejudiced against the work of those who make them.—Yours faithfully,

An Abstaining Missionary.

SOMETHING TO UNLEARN.

Sir,—In a recent issue you say: "What is needed for the spread of the Gospel is not men highly educated in science, literature, or theology, but men taught and experienced in the school of God. Moses the son of Pharaoh's daughter had, during forty years of country life, to unlearn the wisdom of the Egyptians in order to become Moses the man of God, the evangelist to the Israelitish labourers in Egypt."

It is long since I read such weighty words as these. This was indeed what Moses had to do—to unlearn. Would God that not only all our ministers of all churches could unlearn what they have been taught in our colleges, but that all our rulers in civil matters and others in our upper classes could do the same. Who can conceive the evil resulting from the blood-poisoning that all our educated men undergo in our heathen institutions?

When the blessed Reformation spread through the land, there were endless discussions about such tremendous points as whether ministers should have a chairman among them, as usual in worldly matters, or whether they should use the rite of baptism in formally presenting their children to Christ; when, where, or how they should perform that ceremony, etc. They could come to no decision in such things, and had, therefore, no alternative but to divide; and no wonder, when not one word of command or even of example is found in the Word of God about such matters, so little were they esteemed in God's view of them. We should think that all would heartily allow the absolute necessity of preparing men for the terrible work of preaching the Gospel and commending to men a meek and gentle Saviour, and would be anxious that, while being thus prepared, preachers should not be immersed in the very depths of heathenism from morning to night—in the inconceivable blasphemies, ignorance and savagism of men who were without the Word of God, and therefore in whom was no wisdom.

On this point there was, of course, no room or occasion for discussion. All the churches (I believe the Moravians were the one exception) were entirely agreed. If even after this all graduates had been obliged to keep sheep for five years, that they might in measure unlearn the wisdom of the colleges, as Moses was, it would have been something, but even this counteraction was not thought of; and who can wonder that the consequence is that we are taught in Church and State the principles of the poor ignorant heathen leaders of Greece and Rome?

By God's grace this dreadful evil is in a great measure met by God's raising up multitudes of men from the lower classes, who come to the work of evangelisation without the taint of heathenism. Can men touch pitch and not be defiled? God says, "Go from the presence of an evil man when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge." Those vile books ought to be at once closed when the young man perceives in them the abominations of heathen ignorance.

In coming from the City I meet a duke with a fine boy, and I ask him what is taking His Grace so far to the eastward, and he replies, "Her Majesty has honoured me by appointing my son here one of her pages, and he is to begin his duties at Windsor next week, so I am taking him to the City to immerse him in one of the sewers for a week, to fit him to introduce the guests into the Royal presence!"

GROCERS' SPIRIT LICENCES.

Dear Sir,—This iniquitous law, professedly to benefit society, has destroyed the health, peace, and prosperity of tens of thousands of English homes in all classes of society, but especially of the middle class, upper and lower. The denial of this can only proceed from ignorance in those who have not suffered, and from selfishness in those who wish its continuance from some unworthy motive.

It is impossible to get near to the full dimensions of this infamous law. It originated in the then Chancellor of Exchequer's professed aim to put within convenient reach of the people common light foreign wines at easy prices. It was very soon found to be of very small gain to the grocer. He wanted, that is to say, his customers wanted, spirits. Then, to meet that, it was made legal to sell spirits at a very low strength, so that the consumer could "drink them without water," and could buy at a very low price. This was at once a success. A grocer said to the writer: "Wine is of no use to me; it is spirits I want. I sell a dozen bottles of spirits to one of wine." A worthy tradesman said: "That grocer's licence to sell spirits ruined my home." Again, at a tradesman's house in a country town where I lodged, the wife was in a deplorable state of health—untidy, dirty, half demented. What was the cause? The contents of bottles found concealed in the drawers! Again, a friend who gave his wife a weekly cheque to pay for provisions was appealed to by a tradesman, as he was hastening to the station, to pay his account—unpaid for two years. Where had the money gone? His wife was a hopeless sot, and he knew it not.—I am, dear Sir, your obedient servant,

A Freeman and Liveryman of the City of London.

MADRAS TAMIL MISSION.

The work of this rescue agency is being carried on faithfully among the pariah and orphan children of Madras. Since my return from England, all our twelve schools have been thoroughly re-organised, and newly furnished, and strengthened. Three libraries, with 200 books in each, have also been formed for the use of the children. Since last October, five new schools have been opened, the most important of which are industrial schools. Embroidery, both in gold and silk in all its branches, is taught to nearly 100 children, and practical cooking to fifty girls. The pupils have made great progress and the girls are to be examined in May in these industrial subjects, by Her Majesty's Inspectors of Girls' Schools, Madras.

Our newly opened Orphan Home now contains thirty inmates (nineteen boys and eleven girls), twenty-five of whom are orphans, and the rest pauper children. They came from all sections of society and all churches. The power of prayer and the importance of Scripture study are carefully instilled into the minds of the children, and it is pleasing to hear mere babes recite Scripture with accuracy, and to see children leading prayer meetings of their own. Besides their religious education, secular and industrial training are given. To sustain the work of this mission in all its branches, and to launch other useful schemes that we have on hand, we are urgently in need of additional funds. Mr. James Carter, Eldon House, St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, Lancashire, will gladly furnish further information.

Gnanamutthu Joseph Israel.

A FLORENCE ORPHANAGE FOR GIRLS.

An excellent work for poor children is done in connection with the Protestant Orphanage for Girls. We regret to learn the position of Italy during the last few months, and the closing, in consequence of the panic, of many of the local banks, has very seriously affected the Institution. The utmost economy has been maintained, and the number of the children reduced from forty-eight to forty-two. It is with aching hearts the committee refuse the admission of new children (there are twelve now waiting to come in): but what they especially dread is having to send away before the time some of the elder children who are just beginning to profit by the training they have received.

Friends can have copies of the little report of the Orphanage from Mrs. E. C. Graham, Dundurn, Trinity-road, Leith.

PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.—The eleventh annual prophetic convention at Clapham-road Conference Hall, S.W., is fixed for June 12-14. The conveners, in a letter of invitation, press upon Christians generally a deeper and more constant study of the Scriptures relating to the appearing of our Lord and Saviour. The list of topics to be considered comprises many important aspects of Second Advent truth.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Brixton Y.M.C.A. is removing to fresh premises, and reviving its work.

An excellent summer programme has been issued by the Sheffield Association. Visits have been promised by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Mr. Henry Varley.

Mr. William McCulloch, who for nine years has done good work in Toronto, has felt it necessary to resign the secretaryship of the Association in that city.

An effort is being made, in commemoration of the jubilee, to pay off the mortgage on the Eastbourne Y.M.C.A. Of £800 required, a little over £200 has been obtained.

Mr. Herbert J. Fairfax, formerly secretary of the Brisbane (Queensland) Y.M.C.A., now secretary of the Hobart Association, has lately been making an evangelistic tour in Tasmania with encouraging success.

Mr. George Hughes, for nine years secretary of the Cardiff Association, having resigned his appointment for another one in the South Wales district, may now be addressed 5, Partridge-road, Roath, Cardiff.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy has returned from his tour in the East, and will take part in the jubilee conference. Among the delegates will be M. A. André, a leading representative of French Protestantism; also M. Jules Siegfried, member of the Chamber of Deputies, and late Minister of Commerce in the French Government.

Association News says:—In no former session have the Bible lectures by F. B. Meyer taken such a hold on the young men of London as during the term just closing. The average attendance on Saturday afternoon throughout the autumn, winter, and spring, has been fully 300. Even during the lovely weather we have been recently enjoying, 250 young men have been pleased to attend. The Association is deeply indebted to Mr. Meyer for this invaluable service.

The Totterdown Y.M.C.A., which has only been in existence a couple of years, having outgrown its early home, has moved into larger premises. In celebration of the opening a public meeting was held in the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Hall. There was a very full attendance. Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, who has given £250 towards the extension fund, presided. Special efforts are being made to raise £3500 to provide a suitable building in this growing neighbourhood.

Y.W.C.A.

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHOIR.

By invitation of Lord and Lady Kinnaird, an interesting garden-party was held at Plaistow Lodge, Bromley, on Saturday afternoon. The occasion was the gathering of the large Y.W.C.A. choir, numbering about 300, which sang at the recent annual meeting, and which was organised by Mr. S. Millar. Tea was partaken of on the lawn. The company then assembled under the house for an open-air meeting. Mr. T. A. Denny offered prayer, and Lord Kinnaird introduced Lady Hope, who drew lessons from the dew, the lily, and the cedar in a deeply spiritual address on the words, "I will be as the dew unto Israel." Lord Kinnaird hoped that the choir so efficiently organised by Mr. Millar would take some permanent form with a view to future usefulness in evangelistic effort. Mr. Millar explained proposals which were under consideration for the formation of a "Young Women's Own Choir," and asked any Y.W.C.A. members with good voices to give in their names to their secretaries as willing to join. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird gave a closing address.

BRIEF NOTES.

The new and more commodious Holiday Home of the Clevedon Branch is now open. Applications can be sent to the secretary, Mr. Fenton, Rutland Lodge.

At a meeting of the Deal branch, held at the Blackburn Institute, Miss Ardill gave an interesting account of Y.W.C.A. work at home and abroad. Rev. Dr. Payne, vicar of St. George's, and others took part.

In connection with several Y.W.C.A.'s, "Praying-away Bands," of ten each, have been formed, the members of which pray "the Lord of the harvest" to thrust forth one, at least, of their number into his harvest field.

The Upper Clapton and Stoke Newington branch has recently celebrated its first annual meeting. There was a good attendance. Dr. Miller presided, and an encouraging report of the year's work was given by Mrs. Bradshaw.

The report of the Belfast branch shows that the work in Donegall-square goes on well, 125 new members having joined last year. "Four members are now in the foreign field, representing us in China, India, and Africa; four engaged in home mission work; five in training; and two in treaty for service."

A very pleasant evening was spent at St. Aubyn's Hall, Upper Norwood, on May 8, when the Upper Norwood and East Dulwich branch held their annual meeting. A short missionary talk was given by Miss Johnston. Rev. George Martin, who presided, spoke words of encouragement to the young. Miss Rickett, from China, earnestly urged all to decide for Christ—and "say 'yes' to Jesus."

The monthly conference of Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers was held last week at the Morley Halls when a good number were present. Miss Longhurst, of Madras, dwelt upon the need and the openings there for Y.W.C.A. work amongst Europeans and Eurasians. Miss Nugent gave an address full of suggestion and spiritual power on "The Word of God our Chart: How to Use it for Ourselves." The next meeting will be held on the third Thursday in June.

Some time ugo the Y.W.C.A. work in Swanage was reorganised at Ridley House; and on Wednesday (16th) the first annual meeting of this revived work was held in the Town Hall, which was packed, two-thirds at least of those who were present being young women. The meeting was addressed by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird and the Rev. S. A. Selwyn. The Rector of Swanage occupied the chair. The work of the year has been steadily progressing; sixty-five new members have joined, the branch now numbering eighty members and associates. The junior branch has twenty-seven members. 121 visitors have used the home during the year, many of whom have gone back to their work strengthened and refreshed in soul as well as body.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The temperance cause in Greenock has lost an active worker by the death of Mr. Robert Millar, who was much respected by the whole community.

An institute for furthering recreation, social intercourse, and mental improvement, has been presented to Pitlochry by Mrs. Barbour of Bonskeid.

At the annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society of Scotland, which was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, Dr. Stalker highly commended the circulation of religious literature by colporteurs.

Dr. Wells, of Pollokshields, has sailed for America, where he is to take part in jubilee celebrations at Montreal, and attend the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada as a delegate of the Free Church of Scotland.

Under the auspices of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, Miss Julia Sutter delivered on Tuesday week a very able and earnest address on "The Social Need and Its Cure," in the Christian Institute, Glasgow.

One of the most prosperous temperance societies in Scotland is the U.P. Church Total Abstinence Union, which now includes 230 societies with a membership of 32,275, being an increase during the year of fifty societies and 4700 members.

IRISH NOTES.

A Home of Rest for working girls, which has cost £1000, has been opened at Bangor, co. Down, and promises to be a great boon to many of the weary toilers in the adjacent mills and factories.

The site has now been purchased for a new central hall for the Belfast City Mission, to seat about 2500 persons, and the erection will be proceeded with immediately. The cost will be about £8000.

Rev. Jos. Ferguson Peacocke, D.D., rector of Monkstown, Dublin, has been elected to the bishopric of Meath, vacant by the death of Dr. Reichel. Dr. Peacocke is an earnest Evangelical preacher.

Many tokens of kindness have been received from the inhabitants of Belfast by Rev. A. J. Pyke, who is going out as a missionary to Uganda with Bishop Tucker. Amongst others he has got a beautiful case of compressed medicines in tabloid form suitable for Africa.

A resolution has been adopted by the Cork Corporation condemning the conduct of the mob towards the street preachers on Sundays, and appealing to the citizens to exercise their influence to prevent the people from assembling on the streets on these occasions.

A sum of £1000 has been given anonymously to Presbyterian missions to be expended as may be deemed best, £1000 has also been given in aid of the parish of Carrickfergus, and £11,000 has been left to Belfast Charities, by Mr. A. T. Macaulay, senior director of the Belfast Bank, who died last week.

According to the twenty-second annual report of the Grampian Training Ship and Fox Lodge Industrial School, Belfast, there was a total of 336 boys in both institutions last year. Taking the past three years as a criterion, eighty per cent. of all the boys that have passed through the institutions are doing well

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

Rev. Professor Adam Smith, of Glasgow, is at Mansfield for three Sundays, and has been preaching with great acceptance to large congregations. Dr. Fairburn arranges from time to time for the presence of prominent ministers for short periods of residence for pastoral work in the college.

The news of the sudden death of Bishop Linton, of Riverina, New South Wales, came with a great shock to his many friends in Oxford, where he formerly laboured, and where also his and his wife's relatives have resided for many years.

The distribution of Gospel books to the visitors who attend the summer boatraces in such large numbers has been continued by the Rev. C. J Casher, who was formerly a pupil of the revered Henry Bazely, by whom this work was commenced. Mr. Talbot Rice assisted Mr. Casher this year.

Mr. Rice gave a special address on Sunday evening to a number of undergraduates from the Vision of Isaiah, and spoke very ably on the necessity of our seeing God in order to real preparation for life and service.

The anniversary of the London Jews' Society was held on Sunday and Monday, when Rev. J. C. S. Krœnig, of Hull, and Rev. J. E. Brenan, of Clifton, attended as a deputation. The sermons and addresses were of a particularly interesting and earnest character, and cannot fail to stir up Oxford workers to fresh effort on behalf of God's ancient people.

CAMBRIDGE.

Last Thursday evening a public meeting was held in the Guildhall for the purpose of hearing addresses on the Opium question by Rev. Yung-king Yen, Shanghai, and also by Dr. James Maxwell. Principal Moule presided. There was a large audience, and much enthusiasm was shown.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday in Great St. Mary's, by the Bishop of Meath.

The new vicar of Holy Trinity, Rev. C. J. Proctor, is gradually gaining influence and regard amongst members of the University. Principal Moule continues to occupy his pulpit upon Sunday evenings during term, with much acceptance. On Sunday evening his subject was, "The Lamb in the Midst of the Throne."

Members of the University hold open-air services on Sunday evenings near the Roman Catholic chapel. Stirring addresses are given, and considerable interest is aroused. Apparently much blessing results.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The Hereford C.E. Union has held its third anniversary meetings. Six societies took part in the consecration meeting.

The Christchurch (Hants) Society has now 118 active members at the present time, as compared with seventy-six in May, 1893, and sixty-eight associate members against ninety-nine a year ago.

Some of the C.E. Societies of Montreal are endeavouring to carry on temperance work by securing pledges against the patronage of licensed groceries, and in favour of the patronage of those who do not sell liquors.

At Woodbridge, the first anniversary of the "Quay C.E. Mission Homely Talks to the People" has been held. The secretary stated that twenty-one open-air meetings were held during last summer, and during the autumn and winter months the services were held at the Quay Church every Sunday afternoon, the attendances having been very encouraging, and also at the branch mission at Bromswell.

A very successful C.E. missionary meeting was held the other evening by Upper Holloway (Baptist) Society. The chairman, Mr. Robert Kerr, spoke of the good work being accomplished by the Y.P.S.C.E. Rev. Thomas L. Johnson gave an account of his life as a slave. His address brimmed with Gospel truth, and it is hoped that the earnest words he spoke will result in the decision of many for Christ.

On Whit-Monday a gathering was held in the Iron Mission Room, Plaistow, Bromley, conducted by the South London Mission Y.P.S.C.E. and friends. The programme included prayer chain, responsive reading, round of texts, roll call with musical responses, and so on. Brief addresses were given by Messrs. J. Miller and Parsons. The hall was well filled, and several were deeply impressed. A similar meeting was held at the Working Men's Mission, Bermondsey, New-road, on Friday, when a new branch of Y.P.S.C.E. was formed. The South London Mission Christian Endeavour will gladly hold meetings free of expense at any place within reasonable distance. Particulars can be obtained from the general secretary, 33, Ralph-street, Falmouth-road, New Kent-road, S.E.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The annual Showmen's tea, given by the Preston B.W.T.A., was held in the Temperance Hall on Whit Sunday. Over 300 travellers attended. Miss Millington, Revs. A. J. Hogg and George Byron gave addresses.

The fourteenth annual report of the South Tranmere Gospel Total Abstinence Mission states that during the past year the society held fifty-three meetings, two conferences, and two special missions, and took 835 pledges.

The South London Temperance Society has recently been resuscitated, and has recommenced its pleasant Saturday evenings for the people in Surrey Chapel Lecture Hall. The fifty-seventh anniversary has been celebrated by a large and enthusiastic meeting.

The Dublin meeting have taken an advanced step. "The General Adviser" in the Book of Discipline enjoins Friends to "avoid the unnecessary use of intoxicating liquors." They have struck out the word "unnecessary," and have substituted the words, "to discountenance the use and sale of intoxicating drinks."

Dr. Stanley Haynes, in a weighty paper read before the last meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, on "The Etiology, Prevention, and Prophylaxis of Intemperance," shows forcibly the terrible effects of this vice on the offspring of drunkards. He urged very earnestly the imperative need for Homes for Inebriates (compulsory).

The thirty-ninth annual session of the Sons of Temperance was held in Newcastle. The chairman said that in 1867 (when the meetings were last held in that city) the Order was in its early and comparatively inexperienced days. The total number of members, as reported at that session, was 6521, the figures to-day are 42,631. The development of the Order has been consistently progressive, and the result has been magnificent.

An important temperance meeting is to be held under the auspices of the Metropolitan Women's Total Abstinence Union, in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on the evening of June 8. Its object is to call attention to the evils which our national drink policy is producing in all lands. These evils will be testified to by speakers from different countries. A novel feature of the meeting will be that many of the speakers and others will appear in the native costume of the countries which they represent. It will no doubt be an occasion of special interest.

Some of the saddest results of drunken parentage are seen in the morally insane—persons whose intellects may be developed at the expense of their moral faculties. We hear of persons having been imprisoned or fined scores or even hundreds of times for drunkenness; many of these have congenitally deficient will-power, and cannot refrain from the temptation to drink just as often as they get a chance; they should be regarded as mentally deficient, and placed in Retreats for Inebriates, not as criminals to be punished in prisons.—S. Haynes.

It will be gratifying to friends of the legal suppression of the liquor traffic to know that the cause makes constant progress in Mississippi. Of the seventy-five counties in the State, intoxicating liquors are sold in only ten, and the indications are that in the next few months the number will be reduced to five. The large county of Hinds, with the State capital and twelve towns, has only three saloons, and they are in the city of Jackson. The villages and country places are now entirely rid of these centres of crime and vice.—Bishop Galloway.

The last for the season of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes' Sunday Afternoon Conferences at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W., will be held next Sunday, May 27th, from 3.30 to 4.30. It is to take the form of a demonstration of the National British Women's Temperance Association, and the floor will be reserved till 3.15 for the members of the Association and their friends. A very large gathering is expected. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes will give an address, and it is hoped Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard will be able to be present and take part.

A Dalziel telegram to The Times says: "The Umtala Herald gives full details of the meeting between Mr. Rhodes and the Pondo Chief N'quiliso which took place on Sunday, April 8. The meeting was held for the purpose of settling terms on which N'quiliso would submit to the rule of the Cape Government. The following was one of the conditions which the chief suggested: That the sale of intoxicating liquors should be strictly prohibited. Mr. Rhodes, in replying, said: 'This is a very good condition, and I will promise that there shall be no sale of liquor to natives.' In the course of further conversation, Mr. Rhodes said he thought N'quiliso made a mistake in allowing traders to bring liquor into the country. To this N'quiliso replied; 'I liked liquor myself at that time, and that is the reason I allowed them to bring it in.'"

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Monro Collings is free for the remainder of this month and part of next for Lord's day or week-day services. His address is South View Cottage, Stoke-road, Gosport.

Rev. Thomas Cook has opened his evangelistic service in the Antipodes with a most successful mission at Albany, Perth, Western Australia. More than a hundred professed conversion the first week, and the number was doubled before the mission closed.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held at Hilden, co. Down, during the past fortnight by Mr. J. Anderson, of Glasgow. Similar meetings have been held in Sandy-row and Donegall-square Methodist Churches, Belfast, by Rev. W. G. Taylor, of Sydney.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Birmingham, recently visited the village of Baddesley, preaching the school sermons and conducting a short mission in the Congregational Church with gratifying results. Besides holding services in the chapel, he gave open-air addresses.

Mr. Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission in Windsor. Great interest was awakened, and many look back upon it as a time of blessing in their lives. The Mayor of Windsor kindly lent the Town Hall for the Sunday evening services, and on each of the three occasions the people listened with rapt attention. At all the meetings a large number of the members of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. helped as workers.

Mr. D. L. Moody received a most enthusiastic welcome in the Music Hall, Boston, April30. He expressed the belief that there is nothing in the world which draws people like the old Book. "They have been telling us," he added, "that it has been going out of date, but it seems to me that we have just begun to become interested in it. I believe there is more study of the Bible now than ever, and I believe there are more Bibles in use to-day than ever. Instead of the old Book going out of date it is coming into date." Mr. Moody has been enabled under God to aid in making the Bible a real and blessed Book to tens of thousands of souls.

Cambridge.—A very interesting series of services have been held in connection with the Barnwell Mission in the Old Theatre, conducted by Mr. Arthur Hart, of Corpus Christi College, who each Sunday evening has given addresses upon the Prodigal Son. The genial manner of the speaker and his earnest and impressive discourses have drawn large and increasing audiences. The committee are glad to have secured this able and earnest speaker again for the October term. The afternoon meetings have also been much better attended. Next Sunday Mr. F. C. Smith, of Corpus (formerly of Uganda), has promised to conduct the services.

W. K. Vawser (Hon. Supt.).

OBITUARY.

REV. E. C. D'AUQUIER.

Many will hear with regret of the passing away of him who, as Principal of the Evangelical and Protestant College at Ramsgate, did so much to secure it success. Himself the son of a converted Roman Catholic, he was a devoted and loyal teacher of the Scriptural faith. Ill-health compelled his retirement in 1889, but in 1891 he accepted the head mastership of Stone, another Evangelical school, where also he did good service.

REV. D. M. STUART, D.D., DUNEDIN.

A telegram has been received announcing the death, on Saturday, 12th inst., of this devoted minister, who for thirty years had done a remarkable work in Knox Church, Dunedin, N.Z. A native of Perthshire, he began his ministry at Falstone, Northumberland, where he laboured ten years. In 1859 he went to New Zealand, where his labours were marvellously prospered. He made his power felt in Dunedin. In his pastoral visitations, his genial manner won all hearts. He moved about unweariedly from one deed of mercy to another, and in their emergency and embarrassment, his Christian counsel was sought by churches and individuals alike. He had suffered for some years from weakness of the heart. A little more than a year ago he had a severe illness, from which he was not expected to recover; and since then he has had several relapses. No persuasion could induce him to rest; he desired to "die in harness," and his wish has been granted.

"I THANK GOD that my mother told me what other women have been taught by the world," said a gentlewoman to me not long ago. This, my friend, is the tribute which your daughter and mine should be able to pay to our memories long after we are gone.

PERSONALIA.

Dr. Howard Taylor, son of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, was married to Miss Geraldine Guinness at Shanghai on April 24.

Rev. James Chalmers, the well-known New Guinea missionary, is, we are sorry to learn, seriously ill, and has been ordered to Sydney for rest and change.

Mr. T. Lewes Sayer has returned to England from South Africa in restored health. He will not, however, at present be available for any services or meetings.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, formerly pastor of the Hebrew Christian Church in St. Mark's-place, this city, has accepted a call to the North Park Presbyterian Church in Newark, N.J.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, known and loved by thousands for his valuable ministry in the word, has, it is stated, accepted to become the pastor of Salem-street Congregational Church, Worcester, Massachusetts.

Sir George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, is to be presented with the Freedom of the City of London at the approaching jubilee of the Y.M.C.A., in recognition of his life-long services in the cause of Christian philanthropy.

Rev. J. D. Bate, who has done such valuable work at Allahabad, has arrived in this country after fourteen years' absence. His health has for some time has been very indifferent. For several years he has been largely engaged in translation work.

Mr. Arthur Percy Fitt married, on the 16th inst., the only daughter of Mr. D. L. Moody. Mr. Fitt is a Dublin University man. He became greatly interested in the evangelist's work in Ireland, and went over to America a little over a year ago as Mr. Moody's private secretary.

Miss Laura Rose, who, having spent some years in Bayonne, is familiar with its needs, leaves this week to open a Sailors' Rest in that southern port. She has been for a time in Miss Child's Welcome Home, gaining experience among seamen. Miss Rose will be thankful for fellowship in prayer. Any friends interested may address her, The Sailors' Rest, Bayonne, Basses Pyrenées.

Mr. Walter Douglas, in a letter from Manse Stawell, Victoria, dated April 7, reports the great and continued weakness of his wife, who, he says, is so weak as to be unable to do anything. Our brother is a sufferer himself, and had not been able to leave the house for a year at the time of writing. Mr. Douglas also sends the Christian greetings of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Ord, who have shown him and his great kindness in the time of their trial.

Rev. Robert Laws, M.D., the pioneer of the Livingstone Mission, who has been at home for some time on furlough, starts on Saturday for his loved field of labour. Speaking on Monday at the Central Noon meeting, he thrilled every heart with his story of the darkness of the people, and of the work of the mission, while his graphic recital of the way in which a new language is acquired, and reduced to writing, must have stirred every hearer. Many prayers will follow him to the shores of Lake Nyasa.

BIELEFELD.—There are at present 1400 epileptics in the homes of Pastor Bodelschwingh. The Deaconesses' Home, which was established twenty-five years ago, has a roll of 700 sisters who are labouring in divers places.

THE GOSNER MISSION has a leper asylum with 243 inmates, of whom all but fifteen newcomers have been baptized. On a single Sunday of last year sixty-six received baptism; and the bulk of the evangelising is performed by the poor creatures who themselves have tasted the joy of forgiveness.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION. — The third anniversary of this Union was celebrated this week by a series of meetings which commenced on Monday evening at Exeter Hall. The organisation is stated to be to unite women in maintaining and defending Christian Protestantism by individual and combined prayer and effort, and in resisting the encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism which are undermining the spiritual, moral, and social liberties of the country. The membership is now over 5400. The opening meeting commenced with a conversazione, after which Sir Robert Lighton presided. He considered that too many people to-day were weary, forgetful, or quite ignorant of the Reformation, and he proceeded to enlarge on that historic event, and on the teaching of the Ritualist to-day. Pastor Fanstone, of Brazil, and Miss Larritt and Miss Wilson, from Haute Savoie, spoke. Mrs. Arbuthnot, president and hon. secretary, gave some particulars of the rise and great progress of the Society, and also of the unity existing among their members, and of their harmonious working with the kindred Protestant societies. Junior sections had been started of the Girls' and Young Women's Protestant Unions.

ROMANISM IN EAST LONDON.

TEN years since we commenced a mission at Bow Common by taking a large three-storeyed warehouse on lease, and adapting as required each floor to the increasing needs of the mission work. By the Divine blessing we have now reached a position of extended usefulness. The premises are known locally as "Somerset Hall." The ground-floor contains a hall seating 250, with soup kitchen, etc., in rear. The upper floors are fitted up as Sunday-school and institute, and living rooms for the resident workers.

The Gospel meetings Sunday and week-nights are particularly well attended, even crowded at times. Many of the saddest characters have been saved; a mothers' meeting of over 120 poor women is gathered every week, and a Sunday-school of more than 400 children, many of whom come with neither shoes or stockings; also a match factory girls' institute gathers good numbers of these sorrowful characters three nights a week from the worst associations. These poor girls are taught sewing, reading, writing, etc., and there is thrown around them a sympathy and interest to win them for Christ.

About three years since a Roman Catholic Mission was started a few doors from us, in the Devons-road, Bow Common-lane, E., whose priests and nuns have maintained an active propaganda, and many of our children have from time to time been enticed to its schools and services, while the nuns have followed our visitors to our sick poor, and endeavoured to make perverts.

We have, however, really lost but few scholars permanently, through instant and constant watchfulness. But now, we regret to say, the Romanists are building an immense block of premises, costing many thousand pounds, including large schools and convent, and a large mission church, from which a still more effective propaganda will be made.

While thus circumstanced, we found a few weeks ago our premises were sold with other property close by at the Auction Mart. But we are thankful to say that we found the buyer ready to let us have the contract to purchase the premises for a small honorarium. Hence we have now the opportunity of acquiring the freehold of these very eligible premises for the small sum of £580.

To think of suspending our testimony in the presence of the prevailing darkness, coupled with the rapid spread of Romanism, is a matter we cannot contemplate but with grief. Great would be our joy to receive the practical sympathy of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, either towards the purchase of the freehold or for the general expenses of this most needful work.—Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM CHORLEY, Director.

RED, WHITE, AND BLUE LADS' INSTITUTE.

THE annual meeting, held a few days ago, proved full of interest, the report being of an encouraging nature. The friends are at present endeavouring to secure a House of Rest. The idea is to take a small house at Boscombe or Bournemouth, furnish it inexpensively, use it in August for the boys' "Holiday Trip"; in September for any tired mothers, ailing lads, or sick girls; then let it, if possible, for five or six months, so as to reduce expenses. The hon. sec. is Miss E. W. Dresser, Collier-street, Pentonville, N.

DR. J. G. PATON.

ON Saturday afternoon a crowded meeting was held in the small Exeter Hall to bid farewell to Dr. John Paton, the veteran missionary, before leaving for Scotland. Mr. GEO. WILLIAMS occupied the chair. Dr. Paton gave a most graphic and interesting account of his labours and adventures among the cannibals of the South Seas for a period of twenty-seven years.

Canon Fleming gave a short earnest address. At the close of the meeting many pressed forward to shake hands with Dr. Paton and wish him God speed.

BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR'S monthly paper, The African News, has undergone a change of title and a modification in its character. It is now called Illustrated Africa, and its contents are more general, and so calculated to interest a larger class of readers. The offices of the paper are 150, Fifth-avenue, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY has now a total of 464 pensioners drawing grants of 5s., 10s., and £1 per month. Of this number, fifty-eight are new cases added during the past year, and twelve are old pensioners who have had their pensions doubled, thereby increasing the expenditure £250 beyond the previous year, and making a total of nearly £1900 paid away in relief direct to the blind.

The Book World.

JONAH: THE TRUANT PROPHET.—This suggestive little book, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, has been re-issued by the Baptist Tract and Book Society, 22A, Furnival-street, E.C.

THE MIDSUMMER VOLUMES OF HOME WORDS, THE DAY OF DAYS, and HAND AND HEART provide a large amount of good and cheerful reading. These magazines deserve a large circulation in monthly as well as bound-up forms. (6d. each. "Home Words" Office.)

OUR OPIUM TRADE IN INDIA AND CHINA, by William Charles Maughan, hon. sec. of the Glasgow branch of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, is an historical sketch which deserves many readers. It presents a large amount of information with succinctness and clearness. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier. 6d.)

A HELP FOR COMMON DAYS, being papers on practical religion, is a bright little volume by J. R. Miller, D.D. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) Twenty-six in number, the chapters present the author's own experience, and are designed to serve as a guide to the perplexed, and as an incentive to earnestness of life at any cost.

THE SAYINGS OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, as recorded by the Four Evangelists, collected and arranged by J. W. Mackail, is not a satisfactory work. It excludes the sayings of the Ascended Lord, and seems to owe its origin to a desire to present Christ as a Great Teacher, and no more. (Reeves & Turner, 5, Wellington-street, Strand.)

A sixpenny edition of the PRIMER OF CHURCH FELLOWSHIP, by Rev. W. Pierce and Rev. C. Sylvester Horne, is issued by Mr. H. R. Allenson, Paternoster Row. It is a truly admirable handbook for the young Christian; it sets forth the true inward nature of Church relations and obligations, with their spiritual significance, in a very scriptural and helpful way.

THE MISSIONARY PSALM (PS. LXVII.), by Rev. P. Barclay, M.A., is a stimulating little book, giving many missionary facts, and reasons for Christian interest in world-wide evangelisation. We heartily commend it to the friends of missions, and such as desire a useful explanation of one of the gems of the Psalter. (1s. Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, Edinburgh.)

ROYAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By T. T. Maclagan. 2s. 6d. Nelson & Sons. For a handy treasury of words, this is an altogether admirable collection. The meanings are simple and full enough for general use. The lists of similar words are a welcome feature, and the appendices containing common foreign phrases, abbreviations, etc., are most valuable. The work is beautifully printed, and the low price ought to give it wide popularity.

THE PATH TO FREEDOM: Five Sermons on the Epistle to the Galatians, by Edward R. Bernard, M.A., Canon of Salisbury. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) The aim of this little work is to exhibit in a systematic form the way of salvation, as set forth by Paul in a single epistle. The chapter-headings—"Justification," "Law," "The Cross," "Faith," and "Freedom"—indicate the scope of the book, which is sound in substance and compact in treatment.

OTHER LANDS, AND PEOPLE WHO LIVE IN THEM. By Minna C. de la Plante. (1s. Church Missionary House.) The C.M.S. has done well to reissue these admirable chapters, which are calculated to quicken missionary interest. The book is intended for circulation among cottagers and artisans, and its lucid sketches of other lands and their inhabitants ought to find a way into the hands of many who know but little of the teeming millions of heathendom.

EASTERN CUSTOMS IN BIBLE LANDS, Canon Tristram's new work, is replete with facts and incidents illustrative of Holy Writ, gathered during frequent visits to the lands of the Bible. The results of close observation and large erudition are condensed into twelve very readable chapters, students of which cannot but acknowledge the truth of the Canon's terse remark, that the Holy Land, its features and customs, are to the Bible what the frame is to the picture. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE STORY OF THE YEAR, 1893-4, by Sarah Geraldina Stock, is a well-conceived and admirably-executed attempt to provide an annual report of the Church Missionary Society for popular reading. In place of statistical tables there are pictures which serve to brighten very readable accounts of work for God in many lands. We should be glad to see all missionary societies following this excellent example, and so stimulating interest in world-wide evangelisation. (1s. Church Missionary House, Salisbury-sq., E.C.)

CHEAP EDITIONS.—Messrs. Partridge have added to their Penny Popular Editions THE KNIGHT OF LINDBURG, by W. H. G. Kingston; SWEET NANCY, by L. T. Meade; and HAROLD, OR TWO DIED FOR ME, by Laurie A. Barter. Three more of Pansy's books have been issued in a cheap form: CHRISTIE'S CHRISTMAS, CUNNING WORKMEN, and WISE TO WIN. (4d. each.) THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, by John Bunyan, has been issued by the same house, in an attractive and cheap edition, with many illustrations, and an introductory notice of the author by Rev. Dr. Landels. (2s.)

JAMES INWICK, PLOUGHMAN AND ELDER. By P. Hay Hunter. 3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier. These sketches of Scottish country folk and their conversations form a genuine treat to all who are familiar with the broad expressive dialect. The author, though he foresees disestablishment, evidently holds a brief for the State Church in Scotland, and seems unduly biassed in his references to other communions; apart from that, he has given us a most vivid and realistic representation of rural sayings and doings in Central Scotland. In this respect he is a worthy rival of Barrie and Crockett.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG MEN. By Dr. Lyman B. Sperry. 3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier. The fact that this work has been warmly commended in a prefatory note by a Christian physician of the high standing and experience of Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, will be to many an ample guarantee as to its value. To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and a knowledge of the elemental facts of physical life, coming to young men in the guise of well-expressed counsel from a Christian doctor, will have an elevating and protecting influence, while the same information derived through poisoned and degraded channels would be full of danger. If read prayerfully, and with a desire to profit, these pages must prove invaluable to the rising manhood of any country.

LOMBARD STREET IN LENT.—Elliot Stock. The remarkable series of sermons on social subjects delivered recently in a City church is brought together in one well-printed volume, with an appreciative preface by the Bishop of Durham. The utterances here recorded are perhaps the most outspoken and trenchant that have ever gone forth from the Christian pulpit on every-day themes, and they are a gratifying recognition of the claims that Christianity must make on all departments of our social life, if it is to come near the ideal of its Great Founder. The reader may meet occasionally with theories and propositions to which he cannot fully subscribe, but on the whole these earnest sermons must commend themselves to the true-hearted and loyal disciple of Jesus Christ, as worthy and weighty contributions to the pressing problems of our modern life.

CHILDREN'S PRAYERS, a booklet by a "Congregational Minister," will prove of service to some parents and teachers. (4d. Elliot Stock.)

THE WRECK OF THE VICTORIA, AND OTHER POEMS, by Rev. J. Cole (1s. Partridge & Co.), is a collection of fugitive pieces, marked by some imaginative power and skill in versification.

A MONTH OF THOUGHTS FOR INVALIDS, by Ann F. Fowler, is a choice pamphlet, giving short meditations on great themes for every day in the month. (2d. Orphans' Printing Press, Broad-street, Leominster.)

THE SOUL'S QUEST AND REST, by Alexander Smellie, M.A., presents important lessons from the story of Augustine. It is specially addressed to young people, and is well worth attentive study. (Cowan & Co., Printers, Perth.)

THE SECRET WORK OF THE RITUALISTS. By Walter Walsh. (2d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) A scathing exposure of the aims and actions of the ultra-Ritualists, as disclosed by their own documents, which deserves careful and candid study.

A SIXTY-THREE YEARS' RETROSPECT: 1831-1894. This booklet, issued from the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine-place, Cambridge Heath, E., gives much interesting information on the work of the London Jews' Society.

CAUSES OF VOICE-FAILURE. By Mrs. Emil Behnke. (6d. J. Curwen & Sons.) A brochure by an expert which may well be closely studied by all who seek to use their voices for God. Many such will find here good hints as to how to avoid a breakdown.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued Parts 1 and 2 of their ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES (1s. each). The reproductions by the photo-engraving process are highly effective, and equal to anything of the kind we have seen. The work will be complete in five parts.

A PLEA FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF POLICE MATRONS, by Florence Balgarnie, superintendent of the political department of the B.W.T.A., deals with a subject of great importance, and should have an influential circulation. (3d. "White Ribbon" Co., 24, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.)

THE WORK AND THE REPROACH OF THE CHURCH, by Rev. Dr. Walter Smith, is a sermon preached in the Free High Church, Edinburgh, on May 6, and printed at the request of members of the session and others. It is a call to home mission effort, characterised by deep sympathy and earnestness. (Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh.)

Zenana Missions.—The Duchess of Teck has promised to be present at a fancy sale, in aid of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, to be held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing-cross, on June 4 and 5. The sale will be opened at two p.m. There are to be numerous attractions, including the representation of a village street with shops, court of Hindu gentleman's house with Zenana, etc. The Duchess of Westminster will open the second day's proceedings at noon. The Society being in urgent need of increased funds to extend its work, it is hoped that the sale will be well patronised.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For ten days' mission by Mr. Henry Varley in Corn Exchange, Coventry, commencing June 10.

THE GOSPEL IN ALGERIA.

Writing from Mostoganem, Prov. d'Oran, Algeria, on May 9, Mr. A. V. Liley says:—

"The riots which have taken place in Valencia on the departure of the pilgrims for Rome are significant of the spirit prevalent, not only in Spain but in many parts of North Africa, where Spaniards are found in great numbers. We are much encouraged by the earnest desire manifested by the Spaniards in this town to know the truth; this is the outcome of house-to-house visitation and distribution of Scriptures.

"One family has lent a room, in order that they and their neighbours may gather to hear the Gospel explained. The numbers have so increased, that, in spite of close packing, the place will no longer hold the people who come together. These are all Roman Catholics, who now see how they have been deceived by the priests.

"A Sunday-school for the children has also been started numbering about forty; the hymns, so new to them, are highly appreciated. A magic lantern with Scripture slides would be a great help. As it seems a direct call from God we are giving all the time that can be spared from the Arab work to the Spanish, but perhaps there are some of your readers with private means and acquainted with the language who may be led to come and help to evangelize these interesting people."

A MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

We trust God has laid it on our hearts to open our house as an Unsectarian Missionary College to board, train, and send out young men, "out-and-out" Christians, non-smokers, and total abstainers, willing to give themselves wholly to God for home and foreign missions and temperance work. We should impart, besides the training required for mission-fields, all the branches of a technical education. A few, as temperance lecturers, would be taught the scientific aspect of the question, including chemistry, physiology, etc.

The founding of this institution has been undertaken with earnest prayer, and in faith we humbly expect God's blessing to crown the topmost stone with victory. There are now some young men waiting for admission, but the necessary funds are not yet forthcoming. Will any of the rich stewards of God supply us with them? or will any Christian, or number of Christians, or church adopt one to support while training? About £150 are needed immediately, so that those waiting for admission may be received. Charles Fisher.

Grafton House College, Acton, London, W.

A SPANISH WORKER.

Mr. F. C. Brading, writing from 2, Rue du Croissant, Algiers, tells of Mr. Gomez, an aged Spanish brother, who is working at Relizane, holding four meetings, and sometimes more, weekly, besides visiting the shops, houses, etc., of the Spanish residents:—"He was formerly a fairly well-to-do tradesman, but has been ruined by giving credit to the poor colonists during times of dearth, and they have never been able to pay him. He looks to the Lord for the needs of his work, which are not very great, as the Reformed Church is lent to him gratuitously, and his children, all of whom are converted from Roman Catholicism, help him all they can. Still this does not meet all his needs, so I thought if some of the Christians in England knew about it they might be inclined to help. I shall be pleased to send on anything sent to my care."

REST IN GOD'S PRESENCE.

Exodus xxxiii. 14.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."

Blest message of assurance, it calms my troubled breast,
A Father's hand to hold me along life's changeful way,
An eye of love to guide me, lest into sin I stray.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
The message brings me gladness when weary and opprest;
It drives away my sorrow, and banishes my fear;
No evil thing can touch me, while Thou, my God, art near.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
Though hosts of hell assail me, and Satan me molest,
Fearless I'll face the tempter, for God is on my side,
I shall be more than conqueror while I in Him abide.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
Then hushed be every murmur, for what He wills is best;
Though storms may sometimes gather, and time's dark surges swell,
He orders all my goings, and doeth all things well.

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
I'll take the wondrous message to weary hearts opprest;
I'll tell them of the gladness his presence brings to me,
And say, "His loving kindness is waiting now for thee."

"My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest."
Then, when life's latest sunset is fading in the west,
His arm shall bear me safely, all sin and care above,
Into his glorious presence, the fulness of his love.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The foundation-stone of a new church was laid last week at Skelmanthorpe.

Owing to the rapid growth of Birmingham, several new churches are proposed in and around the city.

Bishop Hodges, of Travancore and Cochin, has arrived in England, and the Bishop of Sydney is expected shortly.

The Bishop of Riverina (N.S.W.), Dr. Sydney Linton, is dead. He was the first holder of the see, and had been nearly ten years in office.

The Bishop of Liverpool has just entered on his seventy-ninth year. He returned from Norwich on Wednesday, after being absent from the diocese for three weeks.

On Tuesday week Mr. Job Williams, of the Protestant Alliance, lectured at the Argent Hall, Old Ford, E., on "Romanism Critically and Carefully Examined." There was a crowded attendance, large numbers being refused admission through want of room.

The National Protestant Church Union will hold its annual meeting on the 31st inst., at 7.30 p.m. An admirable array of speakers have promised their assistance. Archdeacon Farrar, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, Revs. H. C. G. Moule, and H. E. Fox are looked for.

At the Temple Church last week Rev. S. A. Alexander dealt with the modern demand for a new social gospel. The religious development of the world, he said, could only be a return to Christ. Mankind advances through "the remembrance" of things once taught by Christ, but never rightly acted upon, or perfectly understood.

Sunday, June 17, has been chosen as "Kindness to Animals Sunday." Bishop Mitchinson will preach the annual sermon of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals in York Minster on that day, and a considerable number of clergy have promised to make known from the pulpit, at the same time, the objects of the Society.

Lord Northbourne presided in the Church House, on Thursday afternoon, at the annual meeting of the Mashonaland Mission, and there was a very large attendance. According to the report, the amount of help sent to the mission had almost doubled that of last year, the income being £4696. The Bishop and others addressed the meeting on the work, and made an earnest appeal for support.

A large congregation assembled last week in the Church of St. Katherine Cree, Leadenhall-street, for the annual Whitsun Tuesday Flower Service and sermon. In the course of his sermon, the rector (Rev. W. M. Whittemore) referred to the fact that flower services were now common. At the close of the service the bouquets, brought by the young people, were conveyed to an East-end hospital.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Considerable activity has lately been manifested in the work at Holloway, N.

Rev. W. Pierce, of New Court, held the anniversary services last week at Dowlais.

Rev. S. J. Whitmee, F.R.G.S., late of Samoa, has arrived in Liverpool from New York per Lucania.

Great interest was aroused last week at Peppard, near Reading, in the centenary services of the chapel.

A fire broke out last week at the Medland Hall Refuge, but it was extinguished ere serious damage was done.

A portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. A. J. Waldron appear in the first number of The Camberwell Search Light.

The Congregationalists at Preston are very active in extension operations, several new chapels being about to be built in the vicinity.

Principal T. C. Edwards, of Bala, writes to the Welsh press saying that he fears that the contemplated biography of his father will not be published for some time, if ever.

Caledonian-road Church reports that during the first six months of the present pastorate thirty have been received into membership, and the congregations are steadily increasing.

Rev. W. C. Williams, who, during his pastorate at Tabernacle Church, Llanrwst, has done such good work, is suffering from an affection of the eyes, and has to undergo an operation.

Calls.—Rev. Alexander Cowe, to Stannary, Halifax; Rev. W. Miles, to Launceston; Rev. W. Butterworth, to Tutbury, Staffs; Rev. L. T. Hughes, to Cannington; Rev. W. Muir, to Tillicoultry.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Heather, of Caterham; Rev. W. Pearson, of Copeland-street, Stoke-on-Trent; Rev. J. R. Clarke, of Old Chapel, Barnsley.

BAPTIST.

Special services have been held at Aberdare with much interest.

At Mowbray, Cape Colony, Rev. G. Eales has entered on the pastorate.

New chapels are being erected at New Dock, Llanelly, and Morriston.

Rev. E. G. Lovell has entered on his new charge at Blockley, Worcester.

Rev. John Thomas, after a protracted illness, has resumed his ministry at Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool.

An iron mission-room, to hold 150 persons, has been opened at Great Burton, in connection with Garland-street Church, Bury St. Edmunds.

Brown-street Church, Salisbury (Rev. G. Short), reports 271 members and 52 communicants. The Sunday-school has 322 scholars and 31 teachers.

Rev. B. W. Osler has been recognised at North Curry Chapel; Rev. C. Deal, at Middleton; Rev. A. Morgan, at Princes-street, Northampton; Rev. H. Jenner, at Waterbeach; Rev. H. S. Boulton, at Heaton-road, Peckham Rye.

The Northern Association has adopted resolutions favouring the formation of a sustentation fund for the poorer districts, expressing satisfaction at the efforts made for extension in the larger towns, pleading for an increase of income for the Missionary Society.

Rev. J. Lawson Forfeitt, who returned from the Congo about a month ago, has been married to Miss Bomford, eldest daughter of the late Mr. J. H. Bomford, of Cowsden Hall, near Worcester. It is expected Mr. and Mrs. Forfeitt will proceed to their station, Underhill, Congo River, early next month.

The first anniversary of the Chobham-road Church, South Croydon, the new work organised under the care of Mr. W. S. Godfrey, was held on Thursday. The report showed considerable progress and encouragement during the first year. Amongst those who took part were Revs. E. G. Gange, James Stephens, and W. Williams.

The annual Assembly of the Yorkshire Association of Baptist Churches was held last week at Milnsbridge, Huddersfield. The President, Rev. F. J. Benskin, gave the presidential address. Mr. Alfred Barran, J.P., said the Association stood in a better position than it had done for ten years. In the evening the annual meeting of the Home Missionary Society was held.

On the 16th inst., at East-hill Baptist Chapel, Wandsworth, in connection with China and the opium traffic, personal testimony of a most interesting character was given by Rev. Yung-King Yen, who appeared in native costume, and Dr. Jas. L. Maxwell. On Sunday, the 20th, the Sunday-school anniversary services were held, the pastor, Rev. J. W. Ewing, preaching morning and evening. Mr. Mayers conducted the children's service in the afternoon.

Calls.—Rev. Evan Williams, of Holyhead, to Salem, Amlwch; Rev. C. Roberts, to Cottenham-street, Liverpool; Rev. J. Davies, Tarporley, to Neath.

Resignations.—Rev. J. L. Wilson, of Ulverston.

METHODIST.

A new chapel and Sunday-school are being erected at High Oak, Pensnett.

A special mission at Tinney, Launceston, has resulted in over thirty accessions to the church.

As the result of recent special services at Thorncliffe, Sheffield, nearly 300 have been admitted to the church.

New chapels have been opened at Kirkhamgate (Alverthorpe), Piddletrenthide, Ingbirchworth, Outlane (Lindley).

Rev. G. E. Butt, who has for the last seven years done so much to extend and strengthen the mission at Aliwal North, has arrived in England.

It is reported that the Primitive Methodist missionaries have at length, after long waiting, reached the Mashukulumbwe tribe, to the north of the Zambesi River, a savage and unevangelised people.

Rev. S. F. Collier, reporting on the Manchester and Salford Mission, says:—"Rapid progress and expansion in the rescue, preventive and relief work, increased evangelistic effort, an unusually large addition to membership, all the varied activities of the church in full vigour, and a better hold on the non-worshipping crowds, especially in the neediest districts, are the facts that stand out in a review of the past year's work. Services are held every Sunday at nine centres in the neediest districts, with manifold agencies adapted to the special needs."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Charles Moinet, of St. John's, Kensington, W., has returned from his tour in Palestine.

The anniversary services at Erskine, Newcastle-on-Tyne, have been productive of much encouragement.

It is proposed ere long to hold a Ministers' Devotional Conference at Reading similar to the gathering felt so helpful the last two years.

The Sunday-school at Marylebone Church having outgrown its present quarters, it is proposed to utilise an adjoining house, the upper rooms of which would be furnished and let to young men, members of the congregation, desiring lodgings.

Mr. H. M. Matheson, convener of Foreign Missions, states in a paper just circulated that Medical Missions have been adopted by the English Presbyterians to a greater extent than by any other mission, and that the standard of Christian giving among the converted heathen has risen to about two dollars per communicant per annum.

The Presbyterian Church of Canada gave 129,654dols. for missions last year, and received 7500dols. from the field. The ordained missionaries number 33; the unordained, 11; the wives, 37; the unmarried women, 32; a total of 113. To these are to be added 4 ordained natives and 244 other native helpers. To the communicants, numbering 3044, 240 were added in 1893. The 105 mission schools have 5905 pupils.

Calls.—Rev. A. S. Sutherland, of Aberdeen, to Guthrie Memorial, Edinburgh; Rev. R. Cougar, of Forfar, to Macduff; Rev. J. B. MacKenzie to Polmont; Rev. D. Ferrier to Bothwell; Rev. W. M. Williams, of Penmaenmawr, to Birkenhead.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Next Monday and Tuesday evenings the foreign and home mission meetings will be held in Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, and are open to everybody.

A new meeting-house at Henley-on-Thames that will cost £1300, is in course of erection, and a mission-room in Bletchingly, Surrey, is also in hand. The latter will not cost so much, but is greatly needed, and will be exceedingly useful.

At the monthly meeting of Hereford and Radnor, held at Almeley on the 10th inst., Charles B. Cox, of Hereford, was recorded a minister of the Gospel, and on the 17th inst., at Westminster, William Charles Braithwaite, of London, was recorded a minister of the Gospel. Both of these Friends are devoted labourers in the great harvest field of the world for Christ.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The "Week of Reconciliation," in connection with the General's jubilee, is finally fixed for Saturday, June 2, to Sunday, 10th.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth is suffering from over-taxation of her voice, and has been warned that she may have to abandon public speaking for some time. She hopes, however, to finish her course of holiness meetings at Exeter Hall.

At the Indian meeting at Clapton, held on the 7th inst., some soul-stirring accounts of the work carried on in that country were given by Miss Lucy Booth. She records wonderful progress during the past twelve months, all the converts (with very few exceptions) still standing firm. Many natives have become officers, and are giving up their lives for the salvation of their country.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At 26, Hurstbourne-road, Forest Hill, on 16th inst., Mrs. Glover, aged ninety, a devoted follower of Jesus.—At Claremont-crescent, Edinburgh, on 13th inst., Mr. James Chisholm, aged fifty-one, well known as a helper of the Lord's work.—At 59, Finsbury Park-road, N., on 9th inst., Rev. John Dixon, aged ninety, formerly Congregational minister at Horbury.—At Lee, Kent, on 13th inst., Mrs. W. Willis, aged fifty-two, a true helper of many.—At Stanningley, Mr. Abraham Tetley, aged eighty-six, a devoted leader among the Baptists.—At Colne, Mr. Holmes Wiggan, a prominent Wesleyan.—At Bishop's Hall, Taunton, Mrs. Stephen Packer, aged eighty-six, for many years an earnest worker.—At Brierley Hill, on 15th inst., Mr. William Wood, a leader in Christian work in the Black Country.—At Nottingham, on 12th inst., Mr. G. A. Sharp, aged sixty-seven, in his day very useful in the Church.—At Nottingham, on 14th inst., Mr. William Roe, aged fifty-two, an earnest worker among the young.—At Colchester, Miss Mary Ann Rogers, aged eighty-one, sister of the late Henry Rogers, author of "The Superhuman Origin of the Bible," and very generous supporter of the Lord's work.—At Malton, Mr. Henry Pickering, suddenly, a humble follower and devoted labourer.—At Loughgall, co. Armagh, Dr. Leeper, J.P., an elder in the Presbyterian Church, aged seventy-three years.—At Belfast, Mr. Hugh Rankin, manager and secretary for about a dozen years of the Presbyterian Sabbath School Society, and an earnest evangelist and Christian worker.—At Dundrum, co. Dublin, Rev. Robt. Hanny, D.D., for several years vicar of Belfast, and also for a considerable period secretary of the Down and Connor branch of the Protestant Orphan Society.

Notes and Comments.

WILL donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated.

In the summer season, when many are moving to and fro, special opportunities are presented for the wide distribution of tracts by the seaside, in holiday resorts, at races, fairs, and all manner of gatherings. Many local friends are anxious to make the most of these opportunities; but inasmuch as some who are most willing to work are by no means wealthy, they need help in the way of supplies of tracts; and consequently many earnest appeals reach us for parcels. We feel sure that many, understanding the state of the case, will gladly help these earnest workers by replenishing THE CHRISTIAN "Tract Fund."

We have very sad news from America. On Thursday, May 10, Mr. Charles Whittle, son of our dear friend Major Whittle, was riding his bicycle by the side of the railway when the bar of a passing engine struck him, and he was killed instantly. Further details are given in our obituary column. On the 14th, the day of his funeral, five of the lady teachers at Northfield were driving down a hill when the harness broke, the horses took fright, all were thrown out, one was killed on the spot, and three of them were seriously injured. Miss Moody was married on the 16th, a very quiet wedding under the heavy cloud of these painful occurrences. We are sure our readers will bear up in prayer Mr. and Mrs. Moody, and Major and Mrs. Whittle, as well as all the teachers, especially the bereaved families of those who have been thus suddenly removed.

There is a rendering of the first verse of Jude in the R.V. which is full of precious and helpful meaning. "Kept for Jesus Christ." If kept, there is someone to keep us; and if kept for Jesus Christ, the Keeper will have the strongest of reasons for keeping us. It is not for our sakes, but for Christ's sake, to glorify and please Him. To think of being kept for Him, for his uses, for his joy and satisfaction! As one keeps a treasure for his dear ones at home, and tries by every means to make it as desirable as possible.

"A. B. C." contributes to The Independent a searching little article on "How do you like our Minister?" in which he affirms that "timidity on the part of the pulpit has made the pew over-bold, and now we have the sin of 'liking' and 'disliking' rampant in the land. Is the corresponding sin of man-pleasing in the pulpit responsible for all this?" He does not know. He names one amiable brother who is much liked, but who is sick at heart because the people will insist on liking him rather than believe and act on his message. Too strong a disposition, we think, exists everywhere to look to men, now in the way of magnifying and now in the way of disparaging them. Were the will of Christ more constantly consulted, and the glory of Christ more constantly sought, there would be an immense improvement in the relation between many ministers and their congregations. Christ is the true Harmoniser.

Ministers of the Gospel often have occasion to notice that the most fastidious of their hearers are not the most intellectual or the most highly trained, but the sciolists, the readers of popular novels, the shallow thinkers. The truly able and trained know too well all the difficulties of the preacher's position and work to complain readily of his shortcomings; and they can most thoroughly appreciate a simplicity which aims at making the Gospel clear to the humblest mind. They know how much that simplicity costs, how much it often means of deep experience, and how valuable it is for the highest ends of the ministry of the Word. Professor Huxley, a master of scientific exposition, confesses that he has found the task of putting scientific truths in popular language one that taxes his scientific and literary faculty to the uttermost. This is the corrective, he says, of the tendency to scholastic pedantry which besets men absorbed in any pursuit. It surely has its analogy in the experience of Christian teachers; for contact with the crowd compels them to be natural.

The Church Times is of opinion that if the duty of thanksgiving for harvest bounties has been learnt (though it fears that decorative and musical display enter too largely into the motives which draw crowds together), there has yet to be learnt the necessity of acknowledging our dependence on God in the seedtime and the ripening of the fruits of the earth. This same thought has often been present to our own minds. The sense of dependence on Him at every stage of development, in the gradual unfolding of the seasons, should continually be with us. Is not the diminished harvest sometimes a reminder from God of how we have failed to call upon Him for the sunshine and the shower? Is not the full harvest as often a reproach to our negligence? He has remembered us while we have forgotten Him.

The Bishop of Peterborough, in his fifth volume of the "History of the Papacy during the Reformation," has some interesting passages on Luther's monastic life, his liberation from a sense of guilt, and his conception of the Christian life. Luther's deliverance from bondage to the Church is thus described:—

> He did not begin from the Church at large, but from the individual Christian. If a man believed in Christ, he was justified before God by the act of faith; the important thing in God's eyes was the disposition of mind shown by faith in the Redeemer. This in itself made the Christian precious unto God; and his sanctification followed according to the fulness of grace vouchsafed to him. The Church was the collection of believing Christians, and its influence on the world depended on the fervour of the faith which it testified. When Luther had made this clear to himself, he was free from all respect to the existing system of the Church, its sacraments, and its ordinances. He did not stop to ask how they had grown up, or what effects they had produced; all that he would consider was their Scriptural warrant, and their usefulness to produce or cherish a justifying faith.

It is always interesting and not seldom instructive to hear an opinion from the other side. Mr. Gandhi, a native of India, expresses the opinion in The Forum that missions have been a failure in India, and for this he gives two reasons. The first is that Hinduism is superior to Christianity, a view which is, of course, taken by every Hindoo; the second reason is, because conversion to Christianity is usually the mark of a surrender to the baser appetites. "There is," he says, "a prevalent opinion in India that a person becomes a Christian simply to gratify his appetite, to eat prohibited food, and to drink intoxicating liquor. When a Hindu is seen going into a church his co-religionists say nothing; but if he is seen going into a grog-shop his friends say, 'He has turned a Christian.'" So much the more do we regret the degradation of the Gospel by its nominal professors. But then it should never be forgotten that, as at the beginning the liberty of the Gospel caused our Master to be called a wine-bibber, and the priests who now become Protestants and marry to be called carnal, so now in India to renounce asceticism is to follow the baser appetites. "Wisdom is justified of her children."

In Philadelphia an association has been formed which aims to be an improvement on the old-time Foundling Hospital. A directory of women, chosen not only for their tenderness, but also for their experience and wisdom, found no new institution, but aim to establish relations with all existing institutions interested in poor or deserted children, and to supply them with means for a further extension of their work. They propose to board all infants in the country when practicable, or, at any rate, in private families, keeping a systematic oversight of their treatment. They seek to win the confidence of each mother, and persuade her to keep her child; they find employment for her where she will be allowed to have her child with her; or, if this be impossible, they keep her secret, befriend her, and keep an eye on the child, so that she may ultimately be able to claim it. One reason on which they partly base their action is this, that whenever very young creatures, whether lambs, calves, or babies, are herded together, they pine and die; even in places where cleanliness and care are observed this is the case with babies. So closely has the Maker of us all knit us all to each other.

The letters which have appeared in The Daily Chronicle on the subject of "Human Vivisection," together with remarks which friends of the poor too often hear as to the treatment they receive from some hospital doctors, create a feeling of unrest in one's mind. "Where there is smoke, there must be fire," at least the thought will suggest itself. "A Hospital Physician," who writes in defence of the hospitals, says:—

> Even your correspondent says that "the temptations to operate upon women are great and peculiar," but, I repeat, I am not concerned to deny that such evils exist. If they do exist, as I believe they do, and can be successfully exposed and scotched, the medical profession will thank your correspondent for his contribution to this object.

When a defender so speaks, the case is serious enough. For the sake of all concerned, and for the sake of humanity, we trust the evil, so far as it exists, will at once cease.

It has recently been asserted that Lord Rosebery, the Prime Minister, has a large monetary stake in a brewery establishment in Edinburgh. If that be true, his lordship is to be congratulated on the courageous way in which he advocates a greater legal control of the traffic. In a recent speech at Birmingham, referring to the subject, he said :—

No one can deny that there is a great deal too much drinking in this country, and that much of the crime and much of the pauperism and almost all the degradation prevalent in this country, is attributable to the curse of drink. Another point on which I regard it as a danger is this—that it is becoming too great a power in the State. I go so far as to say this—that if the State does not soon control the liquor traffic, the liquor traffic will control the State.

We do not think his Lordship's words are at all an exaggeration of the facts. We deeply regret that temperance reform, so greatly needed as it is throughout the country, should be made a party question in Parliament. Surely there is enough patriotism among our legislators to make them support a bill introducing the principle of local veto irrespective of party.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson has written to the press to expose the boycotting which the liquor trade is now perpetrating upon members of Parliament who have voted for the imposition of increased duties upon beer and spirits. Of course they can only punish men who have trade connections with them, though not themselves in the liquor trade, such, e.g., as those who print for them. Such action may do good by showing that those who would keep an independent position and a pure conscience must avoid doing business with brewers and publicans. In these ramifications of trade lie some of the worst snares for Christians. To be "unspotted from the world," how necessary, but how difficult!

In commenting on a libel case which has lately occupied much of the time of one of the Irish Courts, The Christian Advocate says :—

It is pitiable to find able-bodied men who ought to be engaged in some industrious pursuit which would help to enrich their country frittering away their time, their energies, and their money in the silly business of card-playing, and employing the shelter of a club bearing an honourable name to enable them to do so. It is no wonder that the gambling spirit is on the increase amongst us, and that the South of Ireland is in poverty. We feel indignant at such displays of "gentlemanly conduct," and are satisfied that this case shows that we need an Act of Parliament to compel all men in health to engage in some employment by which to earn at least their own support.

We join our contemporary in deprecating the waste of God's gift of time, by indulgence in such frivolities as those of the card-table.

The best proof that the aggressive action of the Anti-Gambling League is likely to be effective may be found in the outcry of some of the sporting tipsters. The gentleman who acts in that capacity for the Daily Telegraph declares that if the League carry their point "a deadly blow would be directed against our national sport." That is a candid confession. The League does not direct its efforts against racing per se, but against the attendant gambling. If racing cannot exist without gambling, then the sooner it is dealt a deadly blow the better. The League have secured a summons against the lessee of the Nottingham Racecourse, and the matter will be carried to the highest Court if necessary. But the League must be well supported by the Christian public if it can hope to fight on equal terms with so many moneyed interests.

A good deal has during recent years been written on Tibet. We welcome with peculiar pleasure the addition to this literature which has now been made by Miss Annie W. Marston, entitled "The Great Closed Land." (1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Partridge.) We hope next week to say more about the book, in writing which the author has had the collaboration of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Polhill-Turner, of China, who have lived and worked among Tibetans for many months.

An important convention of the Bible League is to be held in the Victoria Hall, Weston-super-Mare, on June 18 to 22, many well-known teachers in the Word being announced to take part. A leading feature will be the afternoon lectures on Biblical and archæological subjects by Mr. T. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, and others.

We have frequently called attention to Rev. James Neil's instructive lectures on Palestine life and Bible story. These are accompanied by a beautiful diorama, consisting of fine oil paintings, shown under a powerful search-light. It is a pleasure to report that this very important work is now being organised on a mission basis, calculated to prove of great service to churches throughout the land. Mr. Neil is prepared to consider invitations to lecture in churches, chapels, or schools, on guarantee of the cost of transit of his valuable diorama and raised map of Palestine, and nominal incidental expenses. Mr. Neil's time this side of July is fully occupied, but for appointments in the autumn and beyond communications should be addressed to him at Hamilton House, Acton, W.

"The Ascent of Man."

Last week was issued Professor Henry Drummond's Lowell Lectures, entitled, "The Ascent of Man," from one-celled protoplasm, through all the stages of insect and fish, quadruped and biped, to his present perfected form. We are told that it is—not a poem, a romance, a novel, but—"a history." One Christian reviewer accepts it eagerly as such, eulogises it without qualification, and asserts, what the book does not assert, the facts of the Fall and the Atonement. In The British Weekly, however, Dr. Iverach, while acknowledging the beauty and fascination of the book, writes with more discrimination, questions its claim to be history, points out the vacant spaces of missing links, and asks again the unanswered question, why we have still the same forms of life, from the lowest to the highest, with no apparent tendency to advance.

All the elaborate machinery of Darwin, Spencer, Weissmann, and others seems to fail us where we most need help. For the struggle for life, the survival of the fittest, the slight advantage which enables the fittest to survive, and any other device of biologists known to me, do not in the slightest degree enable me to understand the transition from unicellular to multicellular life. I could understand it, if unicellular life had vanished. But it has not. It is here still, and the puzzle is to understand the persistence of the lower forms alongside of the higher forms. From Professor Drummond's statement of the case one might be apt to imagine that all life had moved on to higher forms. Can the same causes explain why some life has marched on and some has stopped short? Can this be done on the supposition that the universe is a self-acting machine?

The volume before us is only the first of the "history." An uncompleted history or argument cannot be finally criticised, but its tendency may be perceived. And the first question of one who believes the Bible must be, Does this new theory of creation travel on the same lines as the Holy Scriptures given by inspiration of God? An exhaustive reply cannot be given, because the new theory is incomplete. But so far as the present instalment goes, it appears at least to differ vitally and fatally from Bible history. Supposing it should be proved that the Scriptural six days of creation are a condensed history of ages upon ages of development, the difference between the old story and the new is this, that the former tells of a Fall and the latter of an Ascent; the former of a Redeemer whom, so far as yet appears, the latter does not need. What the Bible calls sin the new theory appears to account for by the Struggle for Life. The Bible describes sin as growing and multiplying, the only escape from it being by belief in God, who makes all things new in Christ. "The Ascent of Man" appears to make what stands for sin a vanishing quantity; it came by the Selfishness produced by the Struggle for Life, it is supplanted by the Self-sacrifice necessary to the Struggle for the Life of Others.

The Bible narrative is authenticated and vindicated by six thousand years of human experience. Professor Drummond, we doubt not, believes the Bible; but his theory, which claims to be a history, must, so far as yet stated, appear to most minds to be inconsistent and incompatible with Scripture. And even supposing that in the result the new theory should be found reconcilable with Scripture, is it reverent toward God, is it fair to men, especially is it considerate to the young, to propound the theory without showing, step by step, if it can be shown, its harmony with the revealed truth of God?

It is a very fascinating book. It takes you up, as in a balloon, out of sight and hearing of the real and actual, to which, however, you must come down again. For the Ascent is only in a balloon within the limits of the earthly atmosphere. It does not come through being crucified and buried with Christ, and consequently raised and seated together in the heavenlies in Him.

A RUSSIAN EXILE.

The many sympathisers with the suffering Stundists will be interested to know that an Armenian brother who has been very helpful in forwarding supplies to those brethren who are banished to the borders of Persia has narrowly escaped being taken prisoner, and that he has preferred a voluntary banishment from his country, where he left wife and three children, to being imprisoned and banished, perhaps to Siberia. The police found in his house papers and letters which showed that he had been not only a preacher of the Gospel amongst Armenians and Russians, but also one through whose hands the supplies for the needy Stundists were sent. Our brother has safely landed in England. He is greatly struck with the liberty which Christians in England enjoy in contrast to those who are under the dominion of the Czar. The beloved brethren called Stundists are, in the estimation of the Russian authorities, a sect which is a danger to the Church and State, and our Armenian brother would probably have been charged with the crime of propagating the teaching which produces Stundists, that is, the plain Gospel of God, and with supporting those who are under punishment for holding Gospel truth.

Our brother may probably make his way to Roumania or Bulgaria, where he may be very useful to the many Russians who have, like himself, placed the Russian frontier behind their backs. It would seem incredible that a Church system backed up by the Government should persist in persecuting and banishing those who, for conscience' sake, and on the ground of the teaching of God's Word, cannot assent to the practices of that system. How long will the Russian Government be the servants of a Church which gives evidence of her own weakness by persecuting those who differ from her? What ground can there be for such action against good loyal subjects, except it be selfishness in its grossest form? If Truth were the foundation of the Greek Church, she would be strong enough in herself to rectify any dissent or error, but evidently it is the system which is to be upheld at all costs, and a priesthood which claims to be infallible apart from the Word of God.

Any practical expression of sympathy with our fugitive brother to comfort and sustain him on his future course will be gladly received by the office of The Christian. B.

The Soul-Winner.

By Rev. JOHN R. BRUCE, Kelvinside.

On passing the church in Glasgow that was built for Dr. A. Bonar, and where he was for many years the minister, my attention was drawn to three Hebrew words carved in the stone above the central door of the building. As I had never seen Hebrew writing above a church door before, save on a Jewish synagogue, I stood and tried to make out its meaning. The words, translated into English, are "He that is wise winneth souls." These words seemed to me to give importance to the value of the mainspring, that lies coiled up within all the complicated machinery of the Church—the realised value of the human soul. I was so struck with the words that I went home and examined the whole verse (Prov. xi. 30) from which they had been taken. "The fruit of righteousness is as a tree of life, and he that is wise winneth souls."

The fruit of the righteous is here not the good which his conduct brings to him, as when it is said in Isaiah iii. 10, "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him," but his activity itself proceeding from an inward impulse. This fruit is a tree of life. The meaning of the proverb is that the fruit of the righteous—i.e., his external influence, is a tree of life for others, since his words and actions exert a quickening, refreshing influence upon them. By this means righteousness and wisdom come together, because a winner of souls gains them not only for himself, but also for the service of wisdom and righteousness. And to win souls seems to be the chief fruit which the trees of righteousness bear in time. It is sweet and precious. It is pleasing to God, and profitable to men. It is an everlasting memorial. In monuments of marble we commemorate for a few years the deeds of the great; but a soul won through our means will itself be a monument of the fact for ever.

And the reason why Dr. Bonar is held in such loving remembrance by so many grateful hearts is that he was so eminently honoured by God in winning souls to Christ. In his biography, we are told that it was the idea of the value of the soul that led him at first to become a minister, and there is evidence that every sermon he preached was more or less consciously shaped by its presence, as the whole round world, and every atom in it, are shaped and held in shape by the same laws. Indeed, without this power, preaching is almost sure to become either a struggle of ambition or a burden of routine; but with it, preaching is an ever-fresh delight. The power is the value of the human soul, felt by the preacher, and inspiring all his work.

I am not sure that we sufficiently realise the fact that the soul is lost already, and if it is not won for Christ it must perish. We need to realise this, and we need also a glowing vision of how great and beautiful the soul of man might be, of what great things it might do, if it were thoroughly purified and possessed by the love of God, and so opened free channels to his power. Indeed, it is very difficult for anyone to picture what a lost soul is till he thinks of it in the view of death. When the spirit dwells in its material abode where all is so familiar, when it is surrounded by friends and all the attractions of the world, its condition without God is disguised and hidden. Who feels as he ought that the surroundings of life contribute nothing to the riches of the soul, and that a soul without the abiding thought and fellowship of God is poor and miserable? But think of a disembodied spirit without God. God is the only food and rest and joy of the soul, but He has been rejected all through the man's existence on earth, and now that earth and the things of earth are left behind, what remains? You have often seen forlorn creatures creeping along the streets dirty and ragged. May it not be that they were a picture of the inner self of the unregenerated man? a representation of what he will be found to be when the body drops off? an image of what he is now if his true self were disclosed?

It is by working for the soul that we learn best what the soul is worth. Go and try to win a soul, and you will see how well it is worth saving, how capable it is of the most complete salvation. Not by pondering upon it, nor by talking about it, but by winning it, can you learn its preciousness. So the father learns the value of his child, and the teacher of his scholar, and the patriot of his native land. And so the Christian, living and dying for his brethren's souls, learns the value of those souls for which Christ lived and died. The souls of men will always be more precious to us as we come nearer to Christ and see things as He does; and the more precious that we feel the soul to be, the more earnestly will we seek to win it for Christ. In this work there are needed two great qualities—love and wisdom. Neither will suffice alone. Love in its earnestness is often too narrow, and wisdom in its breadth may be too cold. Someone has said, all true love possesses a microscope and a key. The microscope brings out with a Divine delicacy the finest lines of duty; the key opens the stiffest heart by its magic touch.

The secret of Dr. Bonar's success in the ministry seems to be, that the motto of his life was found in the Hebrew words over his church door, "He that is wise winneth souls." And this has been and is the secret of the success of every servant of God. The noblest lives that the world has seen, have been those who have sought most earnestly and lovingly to win souls to Christ. In lone spots of the earth, solitary among strangers, and strangers at home, humble and self-forgetful, they have been treading in Christ's steps, to seek the lost sheep and wretched prodigal, with often no reward but the throb of joy which fills their heart and heaven's home when the wanderer returns. And the day is coming when the great promise shall be made sufficiently clear: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

FROM DR. PARKER'S LAST BOOK.

The following extracts are from Volume 22 (Acts i.—xvi.) of Dr. Parker's People's Bible. It is enough to say that the bulk answers to the sample.

"The fussy church must be doing something, if it is only mischief; the mechanical church cannot stand still; church-mongers are infinitely too busy; they lack repose; they consider that if they are walking up and down very much, they are doing something; they consider that if they be sitting quietly still, looking with wonder-filled eyes to the great silent heavens in expectancy and eager love, they are doing nothing."

"No man can expel you from the Church. Every expelled man expels himself. You can be put away from a visible community. You cannot be put away from Christ's bosom, Christ's family, Christ's Church, but by your own hand. It is this terrific power of suicide with which God has entrusted rational life."

"This is the mischief against which we have to guard:—that you can buy ministers with money, that you can qualify apostles by salary, that if you offer higher prices you would get higher services! It is a LIE. This genius is not in the market, it is not a commodity that can be exchanged and bartered, it has no equivalent in kind: it is a fire that only one hand can light and that no storm can put out."

From Mr. R. C. Chapman,

TO MR. M'VICKER, IN RESPONSE TO INVITATION TO CLAPTON CONFERENCE.

Were it as easy to leave the great city as to enter it, I should be much inclined to accept your kind invitation. Although in my ninety-second year, I am, by the goodness of God, equal to any demand for service that I see myself bound to allow and answer. These are by far my best days—intercession, my chief business, keeps me much in this place and in my closet.

In regard to caring for lands that have not the Gospel, as this island of Great Britain has it, I am ever thinking that the Church of God—the body of Christ—is everywhere needing conversion. We turn things upside down, making the rescue of the creature from destruction the chief work; pleasing God we put second. Was not this the fault of Elijah at Mount Carmel? Otherwise of a surety he had never fled from Jezebel nor heard the rebuke: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" and "Come and stand before Me."

To be justified in Christ, the Lord our Righteousness, to be made the righteousness of God in Christ, is by many so far apprehended as to bring deliverance to the conscience from the spirit of bondage; but not by many so as to apprehend in living power of the Spirit, that, while of necessity for ever creatures, we do not stand in creatureship before God our Father. Our oneness with Christ (oneness we know is more than union) makes us worthy of God our Father's love. Were this believed, we should then know how to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, to be imitators of Christ, therefore original, each one true to himself, knowing and feeling his own place into which the Spirit baptised him in the body of Christ. The Voice would then be heard, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" The answer would be by the Spirit, "Send me."

The whole earth is our field, in fellowship with the Lord Jesus, and from one corner of the field to another, from one country to another, none would go forth self-sent, east or west, north or south, or go single-handed, or go without the loving fellowship of those left behind.

The difficulties of a language (is it not our shame that we have no gift of tongues?) are the least of our difficulties. The Spirit dwelling, ungrieved, in two or three, serving together, would preach Christ as soon as those of his servants had set foot on a strange land.

Such will love, even when not loved by children of God who walk not with them, but in ways not warranted by the Scriptures. The fountain of love, the love of God the Father in Christ Jesus, faileth not; in that love, if walking in the Spirit, the servant of Christ abides, and cannot but be diligent to overcome evil with good, whether in the children of God or in the enemies of God.

I shall be with you by the throne of grace at the purposed Conference.

The God of love and peace be with you.—Affectionately yours in Christ Jesus our Life and Hope, (Signed) Robert C. Chapman.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—Since my short article in your paper of May 10, expressing the need for a small country home in connection with the work under my care, the way has been opened, and Springfield, Epping New-road, Buckhurst Hill, has been taken. A meeting for prayer and dedication will be held Saturday, June 2, three p.m. Any friends able to be present will be gladly welcomed.

By Richard Francis Weymouth, D.Lit., M.A.,
Fellow of Univ. Coll. Lond., Editor of the Resultant Greek Testament.

'Η ἱκανότης ἡμῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ.—2 Cor. iii. 5.

[The object aimed at, however imperfectly attained, is to express as exactly as possible in the English of the nineteenth century the true sense of the Apostle's words as given in the best editions of the original Greek.]

13. This is my third visit to you that I am now contemplating. "On the evidence of two or three witnesses shall every charge be sus-
2 tained." Those who cling to their old sins and all the rest of you I have forewarned and still forewarn—as I did on my second visit when present, so I do now though absent,—when I
3 come again I will not spare; since you want a practical proof of Christ's speaking in me, He who is not feeble towards you, but
4 powerful among you. For though indeed He was crucified through weakness, yet He lives through the power of God. Why, we too are weak, sharing His weakness, but with Him we shall be alive to deal with you through the power of God.

5 Try your own selves whether you are true believers: put your own selves under examination. Or do you not know that within your own selves Jesus Christ dwells, if indeed you
6 are genuine men? But I trust you will
7 know that we are genuine. And our prayer before God is that you may do nothing wrong; not in order that our genuineness may be demonstrated, but that you may do what is right, even though our genuine-
8 ness may seem to be doubtful. For we have no power against the truth, but only for 9 the furtherance of the truth; and it is a joy to us when we are powerless, but you are strong. This we also pray for, your complete
10 equipment. For this cause I thus write while absent, that when present I may not have to act severely according to the authority which the Lord has given me for building up, not for pulling down.

11 Finally, brethren, be joyful, get yourselves fully equipped, take comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; so will the God of love and peace be with you.

12 Salute one another with a holy kiss. All the holy ones send greetings to you.

13 May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, God's love, and participation in the Holy Spirit, be bestowed upon you all.

2 On the . . . sustained: quoted almost verbatim from Deut. xix. 15, LXX.
4 Sharing His weakness: or, in communion with Him, lit., in Him, or, as some authorities read, with Him.
7 That you may do what is right, etc.: that is, if your Christian character is unmistakable, it matters little about our reputation—which in reality will thus be amply vindicated.
8 For we have, etc.: that is, if you are living consistently with the truth concerning Christ, you have nothing to fear from our disciplinary power.
11 Be joyful: or, farewell.

MIXED MARRIAGES IN RUSSIA.—At Dorpat (Yuryeff) some few years ago a Russian Orthodox subject married a Lutheran. Three children were born, and baptized according to the Lutheran ritual. Last year the local authorities instituted a prosecution against the parents, with the result that they were both sentenced to three months' imprisonment. The children were declared illegitimate, taken from their parents, re-baptized in the Orthodox Church, and placed in a Russian orphanage. In compliance with an urgent appeal, the Czar has ordered that the judgment of the Dorpat tribunal be at once and entirely annulled, and the children restored to their natural guardians.

SIR WM. DAWSON ON THE BIBLE.

ADDRESS TO GRADUATES AT MONTREAL.

I limit myself to one thought—the importance of basing everything in the Word of God, and of constantly growing in knowledge and spiritual comprehension of the Holy Scriptures, as a living force within us and going forth from us. For you and for all, the Word of God, which is the Sword of the Spirit, is the first and only weapon; and your motto should be, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible."

In that library of inspired books the main subject is Christ. He is the Alpha and Omega. To Him it bears witness from its first page to its last, and the whole constitutes the development, from the beginning to the end of time, of the Divine programme of the salvation for man. I cannot regard you as having yet entire mastery of this weapon. The student has his time much occupied with the surroundings and accessories of the Bible, and it is not until the soldier of the Cross has proved its temper and his own coolness and skill in many a hard-fought field, that he can be considered a full expert in the use of the Sword of the Spirit. It requires much study, much experience, and much living on the Bible and by the Bible, to be "mighty in the Scriptures."

You must not suppose that you are set for the defence of the Bible, but to use it rightly for your own defence, and with it to overcome the world. Perhaps, if such things had existed in his time, the Apostle might have compared it to

A BATTERY OF ARTILLERY.

The guns are to be cared for and their range and power thoroughly to be understood. If the enemy is found, as at the present time, massing his forces against this battery, we may be sure that he recognises it as the key of the position, and it is not so much our business to save our guns as to use them in such a way as to drive him off with loss. But this modern figure is after all an imperfect one, for the Bible, like the old Roman sword, is a weapon of attack more than of defence, and is potent to conquer the world for Christ.

So we must be deeply read in the Bible, taught of the Bible, living by the Bible, lighting our path with the Bible, if we are to do much for the salvation of men. The truth of God is one. The errors of men are infinite. Therefore, it is more profitable to urge the one truth than to struggle against the endless mistakes of men of unstable mind. Controversy for us should be only to prevent the weak from being the dupes of error.

I have read recently, I confess with feelings of contempt, discussions respecting the supposed limitations of the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Did He know the data of our modern criticism? Was he acquainted with the discoveries of modern science? The fly that alights on my hand might as well attempt to understand the thoughts passing through my mind, as criticism to gauge in this way the mind of Christ. To me, as a student for fifty years—of nature, of man, and of the Bible—such discussions seem most frivolous, since as we have it in his own reported discourses, is altogether above and beyond our science and philosophy; transcending them as much as the vision of an astronomer, armed with one of the great telescopes of our time, transcends the unaided vision of a gnat. Christ views things from a standpoint of his own, and through a different medium from the atmosphere of this world. His difficulty appears to be to convey heavenly thoughts to us through the imperfect language in which we speak of earthly thoughts.

I am indebted to a great English preacher for an illustration upon this point, from Christ's teaching as to "life." How that little word Zôē, animal life, about the very existence of which, as an energy in nature, superficial thinkers are wrangling in our time, grows before us in his teaching, and becomes a great and heavenly power! To Him, it is not merely animated existence, but conscious happy existence. It is not a series of functions terminated by death, but an eternal power. He tells us that to know God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent, is eternal life; that his words are spirit and life; that it is life to eat his flesh and to drink his blood; that He is the resurrection and the life, that whosoever believeth in Him shall never die; that He can lay down his life and take it again; that the bread of life and the water of life come down from heaven.

He evidently thought of life, not merely from the side of earth, but from that of heaven and immortality, and his thought cannot be measured by our ideas. It depends on facts hidden from us who are of the earth earthy, but plain to Him, and intelligible to us only when our minds are opened to comprehend it, though in many respects it passeth knowledge. To Him the mere accessories of life, all of it that unenlightened mortal eyes see, are temporary incidents, and the thing itself is greater than all that we can have without it, or lose in obtaining it. To Him, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were living in the time of Moses, still live, and will ever live—for all live unto God. To Him, his friend Lazarus, laid in the tomb, only "sleepeth." It is the unbelieving crowd who stand around his grave that are really dead. In making this fully known to us Jesus gives us that which has animated saints and martyrs, that which ever grows on the thought and feeling of the greatest and wisest, and which shines into the minds of the humblest and most ignorant; that which, while it throws a new lustre on the lowest duties and interests, raises us far above the highest ambitions and worldly vanities.

So Christ deals with everything, from the flowers of the field or the sparrows on the housetop, to the Old Testament prophets, the angels of heaven, the plans of Satan and the counsels of God. All the things darkest to our philosophy are plain to Him, and He lifts us at once into a sphere altogether above our ordinary inquiries and imaginings. If it were not for this, how could we receive Him as the heaven-descended Christ, the Son of the living God? The more your knowledge grows, the more will the wisdom of the Saviour commend itself to you; and, instead of making feeble comparisons between his infinite knowledge and our partial results, you will be ready heartily to join in the exclamation of Paul: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God"; and what I have said here of Christ's personal teaching, applies to the whole Bible, of which He is at once the Author and the Subject.

HOME OF PEACE FOR THE DYING.

The new report of "Friedenheim," the Home of Peace for the Dying, unfolds a story of deep interest and tender pathos. Miss Davidson, the hon. superintendent, mentions with joy that the needs of the new Home—Sunnyside, Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W.—were all supplied during last year. As is fairly well known, the Home is intended for persons in advanced stages of illness, without homes or friends able to maintain them, and who are of a class superior to the usual inmates of the workhouse infirmary. It is not meant for ordinary cases of chronic disease, nor for the aged and infirm whose friends find a difficulty in providing for them. Rather, it aims at alleviating the last sufferings of hopeless disease, and raising the hearts of the dying to the hopes which Christianity reveals of a blessed life beyond.

Miss Davidson writes:—"Though there have been many difficulties and changes, it is with great thankfulness I can state that the staff of nurses and servants is all but complete. We are working together most harmoniously and happily, and are now ready to receive the full number of patients (forty), which, up to the end of 1893, we were unable to do. The Helena Wards, containing six beds, are specially reserved for paying patients, and already they have had a few occupants. They are intended for those who have been in good positions in life, but, through sickness and adversity, are now lonely and poor—such as governesses, clerks, etc. The charge is very moderate, and arranged according to circumstances."

The booklet contains a sketch by "Pearl Fisher," of "What I saw of the Home of Peace." Dr. Lush, the medical officer, reports:—"During the year, 112 patients have been admitted (including two who went out and were re-admitted later). Of this number sixty-eight have died; twenty-one have been discharged, generally by their own wish: some because their condition was very much improved, and they were therefore no longer suitable patients for the Home, and twenty-three remained in the Home on December 31, 1893."

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster.

II.—"I FORMED THEE."

(Jer. i. 5.)

"I was not born
Informed and fearless from the first, but shrank
From aught which marked me out apart from men:
I would have lived their life, and died their death,
Lost in their ranks, eluding destiny."—Browning.

God has a plan for each of his children. From the foot of the cross, where we are cradled in our second birth, to the brink of the river, where we lay down our armour, there is a path which He has prepared for us to walk in. Its roughness and steeps, its velvet grass and quiet glades, its climb up the mountain side and descent into the valley of dark shadow—have all been planned and laid out by his matchless wisdom, his unerring love. The path has been prepared, it is for us to walk in it.

On the other hand, God prepares us for the path He has chosen. We are his workmanship, created unto the good works which He has before prepared. There is no emergency in the path for which there has not been provision made in our nature; and there is no faculty stored in our nature which, sooner or later, shall not have its proper exercise and use. From the earliest inception of being, God had a plan for Jeremiah's career, for which He prepared him. Before the dawn of consciousness, in the very origin of his being, the hands of the great Master Workman reached down out of heaven to shape the plastic clay for the high purpose which He had in view. Note the conjunction of those two expressions: "I appointed and sanctified thee a prophet to the nations"; . . and again, "I formed thee." God always forms those whom He has appointed and sanctified for any great work.

Ask what thy work in the world is—that for which thou wast born, to which thou wast appointed, on account of which thou wast conceived in the creative thought of God. That there is a Divine purpose in thy being is indubitable. Seek that thou mayest be permitted to realise it. And never doubt that thou hast been endowed with all the special aptitudes which that purpose may demand. God has formed thee for it, storing thy mind with all that He knew to be requisite for thy life-work. It is thy part to elaborate and improve to the utmost the two talents which thou hast. Do not envy another his five. Those three additional ones were not needed for the special purpose that thou wast designed to fulfil. And it is enough to answer the Divine intention in thy creation, redemption, or call to service, whatever it may have been. Do not be jealous or covetous; it is enough for thee to be what God made thee to be, and to be always at thy best.

I. The Divine Purpose.

"I knew thee . . I sanctified thee. . . I have appointed thee a prophet." In that degenerate age the great Lover of souls needed a spokesman; and the Divine decree determined the conditions of Jeremiah's birth, and character, and life. How this could be consistent with the exercise of personal volition and choice on the part of the youthful prophet, we cannot say. We can only see the two piers of the mighty arch, but not the arch itself, since the mists of time veil it, and we are dim of sight. Some try to explain it by introducing the thought of foreknowledge; they quote the words, "Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate." But, after all, this only carries the difficulty one step further back into mystery.

It is wise to ascertain, if possible, while life is yet young, the direction of the Divine purpose. There are four considerations that will help us. First, the indication of our natural aptitudes; for these, when touched by the Divine Spirit, become talents or gifts. Second, the inward impulse or energy of the Divine Spirit, working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Third, the teaching of the Word of God. Fourth, the evidence of the circumstances and demands of life. When these concur, and focus in one point, there need be no doubt as to the Divine purpose and plan. It was thus that God disclosed to Samuel, and Jeremiah, and Saul of Tarsus the future for which they were destined. And it is extremely delightful when, from the first bud of youth to the flower and fruit of mature life, the heavenly vision has moulded the entire tenor and development of the life.

But in cases where the Divine purpose is not so clearly disclosed, in which life is necessarily lived piecemeal, and the bits of marble for the tesselated floor are heaped together with no apparent plan, we must dare to believe that God has an intention for each of us; and that if we are true to our noblest ideals, we shall certainly work out the Divine pattern, and shall be permitted some day to see it in its unveiled symmetry and beauty. Perhaps the noblest aim for any of us is to realise that word which, according to the margin of the R.V., was addressed by God to Jeremiah, when He said to him, "On whatsoever errand I shall send thee, thou shalt go; and whatsoever I shall command thee, thou shalt speak."

To run errands for God! To be like the angels that excel in strength, and do his commandment, hearkening to the voice of his word! To resemble the boy messengers in some of our large cities, that wait in readiness to discharge any commission that may be entrusted to them! To know that your message is as certainly given you as the letter which is placed under the wing of the carrier pigeon! To go on occupying the position in which we have been placed by the providence of God, but to hold it for God till He bids us do something else. Such are golden secrets of blessedness and usefulness.

II. Formative Influences.

It is very interesting to study the formative influences that were brought to bear on the character of Jeremiah. There were the character and disposition of his mother, and the priestly office of his father. There was the picturesque beauty of his birthplace, the village of Anathoth, lying on the high road three miles north of Jerusalem, encircled by the famous hills of Benjamin, and looking down the ravine on the blue waters of the Dead Sea, gleaming at the foot of the purple hills of Moab. There was the near proximity of the Holy City, rendering it possible for the boy to be present at all the holy festivals, and to receive such instruction as the best seminaries of instruction could provide. There was the companionship and association of godly families, which still preserved the religion of their forefathers, and treasured as sacred relics the literature, psalms, and history, of purer and better days. There were also the prophets Nahum and Zephaniah, who were burning as bright constellations in that dark sky, to be soon joined by himself.

His mind was evidently very sensitive to all the influences of his early life. His speech is saturated with references to natural emblems and national customs, to the life of men, and the older literature of the Bible. Take, for instance, his earliest sermon, in which he refers to the story of the Exodus, of the pleadings of Deuteronomy; to the roar of the young lion, and the habits of the wild ass; to the young camel traversing her ways, and the Arabian of the wilderness; to the murmur of the brook, and the hewing of the cistern. His quick and sensitive soul eagerly incorporated the influences of the varied life around him, and reproduced them. Many fabrics were woven into the texture of his mind. Many flowers mingled their perfume in the enclosure of his heart. Many chords made up the music of his speech.

It is thus that God is ever at work, forming and moulding us. Whenever you are called to pass through an experience which is unusually trying and difficult, comfort yourself by the thought that you are being fitted for some high purpose that has not yet been made known, but which will lay its demand on that very experience which has been permitted for that end. And as you look back on your life, you will see how all has been ordered to fit you to fulfil a ministry to others that would have been less worthily fulfilled had you been excused from the tears, the hardships, the privations of a single day. The plan of God threads the maze of life. The purpose of God gives meaning to many of the strange experiences of life. Be brave and trustful! If He serves Himself of thee, He will recompense thee. He is not unfaithful to forget.

There is a striking illustration of this in one of the closing scenes of Joseph's life. Speaking to his brethren, of the pit and the afflictions to which it led, he said, "Ye meant it for evil; but God meant it for good" (Gen. l. 20). Standing on the eminence of the years, he was able to read God's meaning in many a dark and mysterious providence. And if he had been asked to state his view of the Divine reason in the trials and hardships of those early days, fast fading behind the mist of years, he would have probably answered, "God was forming me for my future; preparing me for what He had prepared for me; disciplining and equipping me for the position that awaited me; and there is no single incident in all those weary years through which I passed, that I could have dispensed with, except at a serious disadvantage to my present standing."

III. There was also a Special Preparation and Assurance for his Life-work.

"The Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth." In a similar manner had the seraph touched the lips of Isaiah years before. And we are reminded, that the Lord Jesus promised that the Spirit of the Father should put appropriate words into the lips of his disciples, when summoned before the tribunals of their foes. Words are the special gift of God. They were the endowment of the Church at Pentecost. And it is always an evidence of a Spirit-filled man, when he begins to speak as the Spirit gives him utterance.

God never asks us to go on his errands (i. 7) without telling us what to say. If we are living in fellowship with Him, He will impress his messages on our minds, and enrich our life with the appropriate utterances by which those messages shall be conveyed to our fellows. Do any read these words, who, like Moses, lack this royal endowment?—their words fall pointless and dead. Let them offer their lips to speak, not with the wisdom of human words, or with the grace of human eloquence, but with the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost; and their appeal will not be denied. If only God's glory be our object, God's hand will be put forth to touch our mouth, and He will leave his words there.

Two other assurances were also given. (1) "Thou shalt go to whomsoever I shall send thee." This gave a definiteness and directness to the prophet's speech. (2) "Be not afraid because of them, for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord." An assurance which was remarkably fulfilled, as we shall see, in the unfolding of this narrative.

These are marvellous words, spoken to us all, as God sends us on a mission, or errand, into the world. It may be of greater or less consequence—to rule an empire or to nurse a single babe; to be an apostle or to care for a few sheep in the wilderness. But we are no less sent than Jesus was from the bosom of the Father—sent to learn, sent to suffer, sent to achieve. Sent on an errand, as Joseph was from the patriarchal tent.

And, just as long as we are on the prepared path, performing the appointed mission, He is with us. We may defy death. We bear a charmed life. We are more than conquerors. The music of his voice sounds in our heart, though defaming and terror are on every side (xx. 10). Men may fight against us, but they cannot prevail; for the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge (i. 19).

IV. Lastly, God Vouchsafed a Twofold Vision to his Child.

On the one hand, the swift-blossoming almond-tree assured him that God would watch over him, and see to the swift performance of his predictions; on the other, the seething cauldron, turned towards the south, indicated the breaking out of evil. So the pendulum of life swings to and fro, now to light and then to dark. But happy is the man whose heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. He is hidden in the secret of God's pavilion from the strife of tongues; and abides in the secret place of the tabernacle of the Most High. Men may fight against him, but shall not prevail against him; for he is encircled in the environing care of Jehovah. As He spake to Jeremiah, so He addresses us: "They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee" (i. 19). "Man is immortal till his work is done."

There was a period in Jeremiah's life when he seems to have swerved from the pathway of complete obedience (xv. 19), and to have gone back from following the God-given plan. Surrounded by contention and strife, cursed as though he were a usurer, reproached and threatened with death, he lost heart and fainted in the precipitous path. And immediately he had good reason to fear that the Divine protection had been withdrawn. We are only safe when we are on God's plan. But as he returned again to his allegiance, these precious promises again sounded in his ears: "I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee to save thee and to deliver thee, saith the Lord. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible."

A CITY OF DESERTED SOULS.

We have come again to this singularly neglected place with its 80,000 inhabitants, on the north-western coast of North Africa and 600 miles across the Mediterranean. Oran was for nearly three centuries in the possession of Spain, wrested from the Moors by Ferdinand the Catholic and Cardinal Ximenes. It has still much that is Spanish about it, for it contains more Spaniards than French, and there is a house here formerly serving as the Inquisition.

It presents a striking and picturesque aspect as you approach it from the sea, on the slopes of the bold and rocky mountain of Murdjadjo. With its fine climate, which I am told by its residents is superior both in winter and summer to Algiers, to our astonishment we only found about eight or ten English residents, and those connected with mercantile pursuits, though a few English and American families, birds of passage, pass the season here. And yet it has many and great attractions, with its large markets, cheap living, suites of apartments at a moderate price, cheap voitures, and possesses an exceedingly fine shaded promenade, rising on the cliffs above the harbour in several tiers adorned with every variety of lovely flowers, and again leading to another charming shaded walk beside the Ravin d'ain Rouina. From the promenade this week we saw below us, in and outside the harbour, the French squadron, accompanied with its many torpedo boats, and its manly sailors, apparently capable of any daring.

This city is wonderfully central, and to an enterprising spirit the railway speedily carries one to many romantic, celebrated spots, as the Theatre of Almoahadic and other native rulers, and not least those of the Romans, who have left their traces in abundant ruins on the spots of their former domination. Then, again, there are steamers giving access to Nemours, Malaga, Gibraltar, the Djebel (or mountain of the warlike Arab Tar-ik), and Tangier, thus giving a change to French, Spanish, English, and Moroccan scenes.

But my chief object in drawing attention to Oran is to speak of it, and these western regions, in their missionary aspect. There are persons possessing moderate means, say a gentleman and his wife or two ladies, who do not see their way to go to India or China, but, actuated by a missionary spirit, wish to spend their days in the Lord's service, and are not unwilling to escape from foggy London and that beloved land where the sun does not often shine, but where Christians and Christian privileges abound, to sunny regions where there are none. Such would find here a loud call for the glorious light of salvation, where poor souls are perishing for lack of that light which they may bring. The summers here, doubtless, are hot, but we have passed six summers in Algiers without inconvenience, of course, not needlessly exposing ourselves to the mid-day sun.

One cannot help contrasting the Riviera with its many Christian visitors and residents, with deserted Oran. There are five or six of its large districts, like little towns, accessible to evangelisation, and whilst Marseilles, for instance, has its well-managed McAll meetings in all directions, here there is nothing of the kind. There is the Temple with its two pastors, seventy perhaps attending out of a Protestant population of 1700, but no aggressive work among the people. A Spanish service in the Temple on Sunday afternoons, with a good many attendants, but its 25,000 Spaniards otherwise well nigh untouched. Its 15,000 Jews are building a grand synagogue; an aged and infirm brother is working among them in connection with the Paris Society for the Evangelisation of Israel. There is a nucleus to form an English church, when a suitable clergyman can be found; in the meantime a service might be improvised in the Temple by a layman, who would be welcomed.

And all these dark and benighted people are left to die in their sins; nevertheless they are most accessible, whether in the streets or in their houses; and most receive with gratitude advances made towards them, such as cobblers and tailors in their shops, servants in hotels, crossing-sweepers, poor women at their doors, old men on forms, gardeners, road-scrapers, sailors on the quay, soldiers, groups of Jews on Sabbath, Spaniards, Arabs, Berbers, and Riffs, etc., etc. Oh, the sad faces betraying aching unsatisfied hearts! My pen carries me along better than my aged legs, and my dear wife has seen many years of service, and is worn in physical strength, but still at work. What is wanted here is younger labourers, and we have our work elsewhere.

This modern invasion by the Spaniards is not with the sword, but the shovel. Labouring men come in flocks, driven away by the want of employment in Spain; they are industrious, hard-working men, honest and serious-minded, and free from the influence of the priests here. We saw a group of them working at the Carrière Fouque, old and young, and even a woman, for thirty or forty sous a day. They are easily recognised with their white sandals, flap hat, short jacket, red waistband, in shirt-sleeves, tight trews, and, whilst travelling, with the invariable shawl across the shoulder, they flock down to the alfa fields. They are, of all people, the most accessible to the Gospel.

But the negro village is worth visiting, perched on a breezy height, S.W. of the city, with its 8000 residents of negroes descendants of slaves and others. It is a weird sight altogether. Here are found the poorer gipsy Spaniards, Jews and Berbers, occupying little huts, gourbis, tiny tents, rough caravanserais. It has its irregular Arab market, and, happily, its schools. Groups are seen arrayed in all sorts of costumes surrounding Arab musicians with tambourine, or a tub of wood covered with a skin, on which they rapped at intervals in their recitations. How a magic lantern with Scripture scenes, a concertina, and a few songs, would outrival this, but it would need the utmost caution to accomplish the innovation.—Yours ever truly,

Oran, May, 1894. George Pearse.

POOR MOTHERS AND THEIR BABIES.

"He is a nice little baby, isn't he, Miss?" and the widowed mother looked across with pride from her bed to the little bundle of mothers' meeting flannel and calico that lay on our knee. Within its borrowed wrappings there slept the three-days'-old baby, pink and sweet as a royal heir, and even so early budding with the promise of the same beauty, that its three fatherless brothers and little sister in no small measure possessed.

"It's a dear baby, but you could have done without it very well, couldn't you, Mrs. Harris?" "Yes, indeed, Miss; before it came I did wish I might never hear it cry, but it's brought the love with it, and I don't want to lose it now. I wish its father could see it. It was born just six months and a fortnight to the day he died."

"He was very fond of the children, wasn't he, Mrs. Harris?" "Oh, yes, Miss, he was a good husband and father. We were very happy, though the last two years we had a hard struggle, being as he was out of regular work. I shan't ever forget how he looked round at us when he was taken for death, and said, 'Oh my poor little children!' Four of 'em, you know, Miss, and the baby only ten months old, and this one on its way!"

"But you've been wonderfully helped ever since, haven't you?" "Why, yes, indeed; as I say, the Lord's been so good to me these last six months that I know He'll never forsake me, though I can't see what I'm to do with two babies on my hands, and to leave 'em as often as I can get a day's work. I used to leave the other baby with Jackie, and though he's only seven, he took good care of him, and kept him from crawling into mischief, but I couldn't leave this mite with him, and, besides, the School Board's down on you for keeping the children at home."

"You will have to leave them with some neighbour." "Yes, I suppose I shall, but no one will take them for less than sixpence each and their food, and then I work in fear all day, wondering how they'll be treated. Only the other week I was at the 'orspital with Willie, and a baby was brought in dying. It's mother was out at work, and she had left it in charge of a neighbour, who let it get up to some carbolic acid; and ever since then my heart's been in my mouth to think of leaving my children." "Dear Mrs. Harris, God loves these little ones better than you do, and if you have to go out to work you must trust them to his keeping."

We left the mother comforted very soon. Ah, how easy it is to comfort the poor! They are so ready to accept sympathy, to hope for the best, to commence over and over again with patience and courage the weary round of toil for themselves and their little ones. Give them but a crumb of consolation and cheer, and straightway it is transformed into the widow's barrel of meal in the strength of which they go many days. But we turned from the humble abode, saddened and perplexed by the problems it started into fresh life. Here was a bright, loving mother, comparatively young, into whose hands had beeen suddenly thrust, in addition to the cares and pains of motherhood, the task of filling the little mouths with daily bread. Bread that must be earned by arduous toil, which, joined to the work of the house, performed in early morning and late evening hours, must speedily drain the strength and health of the mother and leave her a physical wreck ere long. Oh, we knew the old pitiful story too well, but our heart was even more than usually sad to think of this lately bereaved widow, who had so bravely accepted the double responsibility involved in the death of the father and breadwinner. Yet she was only one out of numbers of toiling widows in that crowded, poor district, who lived with their families in one room, and eked out a bare existence by means of the parish dole and the occasional day's charing they were able to secure.

One sentence rang in our ears and stirred us with longing to help these toiling mothers in a more substantial manner, than by the occasional gift of garments and money entrusted to us for such cases. "You see, Miss, there's no crêche (creech it was pronounced) nearer than ——, or I could leave my babies quite easy," Mrs. Harris had said while talking over her difficulty. A "creech," yes, that was it, but how preposterous the mere thought of such an undertaking for a humble unknown worker! Banish such presumption, and let us be content to do what is in our power for our poor sisters, easing their burdens by such help as we can afford, and at least offering to them the sympathy of hearts and lives consecrated to Him.

Who in the days of feeble flesh
Poured out his cries and tears;
And though exalted, feels afresh
What every member bears.

ECHOES FROM AN OLD PSALM.

"The heavens declare Thy glory,"
But who regards their voice?
Each planet tells its story
To bid our hearts rejoice.
For He who spreads their beauty
To light the darkest skies,
Will make the path of duty
The path where blessing lies.

The trees Thy mercy utter
In springtime, fresh and fair,
When young leaves spread and flutter
Like children's lips in prayer,
Reminding us that sorrow
Is but as winter's snow,
From which Thy servants borrow
Fresh food and strength to grow.

The moonbeams speak Thy praises
With cherubim of heaven,
Whose glorious choir raises
The song of sins forgiven.
Ah, wherefore not more often
Is vision raised above,
Beholding storm-clouds soften
In rainbows of thy love?

We cling to earth so nearly,
As though this life would last!
We prize our trifles dearly,
Until their joys are past.
Nor see in birds and flowers,
The Father's loving hand,
Which plead in twilight hours,
"When will ye understand?"

Look up! look onward ever!
Through moonbeams, stars, and sky;
For wealth, exhausted never,
Awaits the seeing eye.
Let not thy thoughts be bounded
By dusty lane and street,
When life is all surrounded
With mysteries so sweet!

C. Maud P. Battersby.

MR. SEALE-HAYNE, M.P., speaking at Newton Abbot, and referring to the Budget, said the profits of brewers in 1884 were assessed at £6,316,000, and in 1893 at £10,177,000, no less than 40 per cent. of an increase in ten years.

A CONFERENCE ON MISSIONS.

Large and deeply-interested audiences have assembled in Clapton Hall during the past week for two days' Conference on "The World-wide Diffusion of the Gospel in Obedience to the Command of God." The afternoon meetings were devoted to accounts of the Lord's work abroad, while the morning and evening meetings were given to ministry of the Word of God on various topics bearing on Missions. On the first morning consideration was given to such fundamental points as "The Gospel to be Preached" and "The Authority and the Power for Preaching it."

RUSSIA AND CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dr. Baedeker, in the afternoon, thrilled every heart by his touching recital of the sufferings of the Stundists, their simple faith, and willingness to go anywhere and do anything if so be that God may be glorified. A poor Russian peasant who hears and accepts the Gospel in this way may know little of God, may be very ignorant of the doctrines of grace and the principles of the Word; but he knows that he has found a Saviour, and he must needs tell the good news to others, even though that involves for himself persecution and exile; for in the eye of the Russian police it is a very heinous crime to "make propaganda." The speaker added a few details as to his labours in the Russian and Siberian prisons, asking earnest prayer that the way might be kept open, that entrance might still be found to minister the Gospel to these unhappy prisoners.

Mr. F. S. Arnot told once more the story of Garenganze, how the Lord laid that region on his heart, how the way was opened before him as he went forward in faith, how after long journeyings and perils many, he reached Msidi's country, and how, after some years of isolation, reinforcements reached him. He went on to describe many features of the work, telling how God is giving blessing among these poor heathen. Mr. Arnot closed by intimating that a great African company had resolved to open a trade route from the East Coast, viâ the Lakes, to the Garenganze country; this, when carried out, will afford an easier route, fresh facilities, and large openings among hitherto unevangelised tribes.

Mr. Grant, who laboured thirty years in the Straits Settlements, urged very solemnly the heavy responsibility resting on the Church at home in view of the unnumbered millions perishing without the knowledge of Christ, without God, and without hope.

ITINERATION IN KIANG-SI.

Mr. E. J. Blandford spoke of the Lord's work in the Kiang-si province of China. He and his wife had learned to believe heartily in itineration, whereby the good tidings of grace are carried into remote parts, and reach the ears of those who would never hear unless the wandering evangelist came thus to them. We are not responsible for the conversion of China, but we are responsible for its evangelisation; and only by going from place to place, as did the Apostles, can this be in any measure accomplished. Realising this, he had sought to give much of his time to penetrating different parts of the province; and God had been pleased to give many tokens of his approval and blessing. There are many difficulties; the opposition is great, and the barriers are strong, but God's work is going forward in China. In an out-of-the-way place a Chinaman was asked by another Chinaman, "Why do these foreigners come here with the doctrine?" The reply was, "The time has arrived for them to come." So we believe; God's time is ripe, his time to bless China has arrived, and we want to be used as his instruments in blessing the heathen.

With regard specially to the work in Wu ch'en, where he and his wife had been labouring, Mr. Blandford spoke with deep thankfulness to God: souls have been saved, men and women have been brought out of darkness, and not a few of these are being used to spread the Gospel. Mr. R. E. Jones is alone at Wu ch'en at present, and earnest prayer should be made on his behalf.

WITNESS-BEARING AND PLAN OF ACTION.

In the evening practical and stimulating addresses were delivered. The first was by Dr. Neatby, who spoke of witness-bearing, taking for his text Luke xxiv. 48, "Ye are witnesses of these things"—words that were addressed, not to the Apostles only, but to the company of believers spoken of elsewhere as 120 in number. Witness of what things? First of all, of the person of Christ; then for the volume of the Book in which it is written of Him, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God"; then regarding the death of Christ and his resurrection. By the power of the Holy Ghost this testimony was borne on the Day of Pentecost; and those who would witness to-day should seek to be filled with the same Spirit. A prerequisite for this is that we should be emptied of everything else, and in order to this, we may have to endure a broken-down body, loss of wealth, and other adverse experiences. Dr. Neatby referred to the many instances of testimony as to Christ recorded in the Acts of the Apostles.

Mr. Daniel Wood, after describing the second missionary journey of the Apostle Paul, maintained that the Divine plan for carrying the Gospel round the world was not simply preaching, but the establishment of a line of men, an unbroken band of witnesses, who shall connect distant and dark places with the starting point of Gospel light. This thought suggested pastoral oversight at home, regarding which the speaker asked whether there is in believers' gatherings sufficient pastoral work and teaching? In Rom. xv. 19—28, the Apostle tells of having preached from Jerusalem in a circle to Illyricum, and proposes to visit Rome in order to be brought on his way to Spain. Thus, there are three places: the place where we are, the brethren whom we go to visit by the way, and the "regions beyond," which the missionary has in view. Every believer should be in one of these places, and sustaining a definite relation to the furtherance of the Gospel. Workers away from home are not to go out independently, but to seek the fellowship of brethren who may help them. "I will go by you into Spain"—by you to Central Africa, by you to such a neglected town or hamlet. Faithful disciples of Christ have ever been a circulating medium through which the Gospel has gone forth into "the regions beyond."

Mr. Bergin spoke on the preparation, call, and maintenance of missionaries. Truly saved men and women, well instructed in the Scriptures, should find good preparation in Sunday-school work. As to the "call," sometimes the Holy Spirit singles out, as in Acts xiii. 2; at other times the fact of being chosen as a companion by a God-owned worker imposes a real obligation upon a suitable person. Three necessary constituents of a Divine call are: A personal conviction that God is calling one to serve Him in a particular place; the fellowship of brethren among whom one has lived; and the opening up of circumstances, even although this may cause delay. As to maintenance, the worker must look straight and alone to God; the Church must do its duty, and have fellowship with such as go to the front of the battle.

SECOND DAY'S MEETINGS.

Pastor James Stephens, the first speaker on Wednesday morning, had for his special theme, "The First (Apostolic) Missions," showing from Acts xi. 19, how persecution was used by God to scatter the disciples far and near, and how in going they "spoke" the word and many believed. But in Acts xiii. 2 we have a further development. We have seen the rank and file, so to speak, scattering the Word; now God the Holy Ghost makes definite choice of two men, designates them, and instructs the Church to separate them, set them apart to the work to which He has called them. This being done according to command, these two arose, went promptly, and began work straight away. Of course they had power to work miracles, which may partly account for their speedy success, but the real secret of this success was their faith in God and the fulness, directness, and persuasiveness with which they set forth the Gospel. In this way the speaker brought forth from the story of the first missionaries many lessons bearing closely on spiritual and apostolic evangelisation.

VERY PRACTICAL POINTS.

Mr. J. W. Jordan dealt with such questions as the call, preparation, and maintenance of missionaries. The call must come from God alone, who sanctifies (or sets apart) and consecrates (or fills) for some special service. The preparation is two-fold—God prepares his chosen servants, but on the other hand these must seek to prepare themselves in things likely to be of utility in the mission-field. Next comes the question of recognition. The elders and leaders in the Church are responsible to watch for and encourage those who give token of fitness for service. Then, when a labourer goes forth from any church or congregation, he or she must be followed by earnest prayer and loving gifts. The question of maintenance would soon be settled if every church realised the joy of supporting those who have gone forth from its midst to witness among the heathen.

Pastor W. Fuller Gooch spoke on the "Influence of the Hope of our Lord's Coming on Missionary Work." An intelligent acquaintance with the glorious hope gives definiteness of aim and directness of teaching; leads to holiness of life—which abroad as well as at home is, after all, the most potent testimony—and produces intensity of service, limiting as it does the time and space in which the work has to be done. Moreover, it keeps the labourer sitting loosely and lightly to the things of time, keeping his mind fixed on the Coming One; it quickens prayer and every Christian grace; and affords a definite and distinct motive to animate the native converts. In these and many similar ways the intelligent looking for the return of Christ influences and inspires missionary service.

Mr. T. B. Miller, in a few closing sentences, sought to bring the testimony of the morning to a practical and personal issue, in the question: What will the outcome be?

JEWS AND AFRICANS.

The afternoon was devoted to accounts of the Lord's work rendered by various brethren. Mr. I. I. Aschkenasi spoke of journeys to the Russian frontiers, and labours among the Jewish refugees at various points, and more lately at Jassy, in Roumania. He hopes shortly to return thither for further service. Meanwhile the Lord's work in his hands in Spitalfields is being used in opening many blind eyes and winning his brethren to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Peter Whytock told something of what God is doing on the lower Congo. At Lakunga, for example, Mr. Hoste had in 1889 seven converts, now there are 800 native members on the roll of the central church and its out-stations. Further up, among the Balolo, the work is yet to some extent of a pioneering character, but not without many tokens of the power of grace. Among other things shown by the speaker were two necklaces of human teeth which he had brought from a cannibal region. He closed by asking earnest prayer for the thirteen missionaries at present among the Balolo.

THE EAST AND WEST INDIES

were represented by a number of brethren. Messrs. Sparrow and Mitchell told of service in hot, unhealthy British Guiana and the Windward Isles specially among South American Indians (a dying race), African, Indian, and Chinese coolies and labourers. The condition spiritually and morally of these people is deplorable, but God has given wonderful blessing, and raised true and devoted men from among them. Some of these, as George Murrain and O'John, are now labouring usefully in Central Africa.

Messrs. Hill and Eagger spoke of somewhat similar service in the Straits Settlements, the Malay Peninsula and the East Indies, amongst Chinese tin miners, Indian coolies, Siamese, Burmese, and natives of the countries around. Here again it became evident that, notwithstanding many difficulties and much opposition, God is blessing his Word and calling out redeemed souls to Himself.

CLOSING TESTIMONY.

The last evening was devoted to addresses on "The Influence of the Hope of the Lord's Coming," "The Present Opportunity and Need throughout the World," and "The Cross: the Constraining Power for Missionary Work."

Mr. Henry Dyer unfolded some of the deep things of God as he read and expounded portions of the Word concerning God's Gospellers and the glory of the Gospel. The Gospel of the glory is ever, he showed, linked closely with the Gospel of the grace.

An earnest exhortation followed by Mr. Blair Neatby on the needs of the heathen world, which demand increased effort. He called for volunteers, for more hearty giving, and more earnest prayer.

Dr. Stewart closed the Conference by an address in which he set forth the constraining power of the Cross of Christ:—"I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." Expounding the distinction between power and authority, the speaker brought out many practical lessons for labourers in the great harvest field.

With these final words in their ears many must have felt, as they left the Conference, that truly the Lord had been in the place, calling his people to more single-hearted and whole-hearted service in his name.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 3.—JEREMIAH XXX.

This chapter and the next were not originally spoken, but written, the object being to calm the fears of the people amid the hardships of captivity, and to assure them of their return.

Scattered but Saved (1-11).—(3) Note the word Israel, showing that the ten tribes were to share in these blessings. Remember all Israel of Rom. xi. 26. (5, 6). The anguish of travail is followed by the great joy of which our Saviour speaks; so should the anguish of the captivity lead up to the glad triumph of deliverance. (7) There have been many such days in the history of God's chosen people, but in all the hand of the Saviour restrains the flood of destruction, and makes a way through the Red Sea. (8) Ask that the yoke and bands of sin should be broken from off thy neck, that thou mayest be free to serve, as those alive from the dead. (9) This can only refer to Christ, the Son of David. Mark his association with Jehovah as receiving equal honour. (10, 11) Repeatedly the words ring out, "I will save." Yet there is necessary correction. God cannot leave his people without chastisement. There is this difference, however, that He ends his foes, but mends his people.

Wounded but Healed (12-22).—The incurable are curable when God undertakes their case. Grievous though our wound, God has healing medicines. Though no one else will plead our cause, we have an Advocate with the Father. (14, 15) How many sorrows in our lives are directly attributable to our own mistakes and misdoings! But through all, the purpose of God for our redemption has been fulfilled, and He has been able to say, "I have done these things unto thee." (16) God uses men for the accomplishment of his purposes against his erring children, but He punishes them for the crimes they commit whilst serving his purpose. (17) An answer to the question in chap. viii. 22. (18-22) An exquisite picture of the restored city. Its literal and spiritual counterparts wait fulfilment, but let suffering, sorrowing hearts look through the gloomy valley to the vision that closes the vista, when they shall forget their sorrow in the thanksgiving, and their declensions in the boldness of access. God will cause us to draw near.

MONDAY, JUNE 4.—JEREMIAH XXXI.

Everlasting Love (1-9).—When God delivers, his love includes all wanderers. Every family in heaven and earth is named after the God of love. (2) In the old Exodus march the remnant found grace and were brought into the Canaan of rest; thus from the Captivity some would return. God is always seeking rest for us. (3) This is the voice of Israel. There is no date to the love of God, it is an eternal circle. Some think that the expression refers to the drawing out continually of his loving kindness (see Psa. xxxvi. 10). That love cannot be turned away by our sins. (4, etc.) Take these promises to heart, O stricken backslider. Again thou shalt be built, and go forth in the dance, and drink the fruit of the vine, the cup of the communion of the blood of Christ. Lame and blind as thou art, thou shalt come again to walk by the rivers, and worship in the temple of God. (9) There are never such tears as those we shed when God has restored us, but we need to be caused to walk.

Gathered and Kept (10-14).—The prophet turns to the nations and isles afar. He who scatters knows where to find. He who gathers can keep. Let God keep thee. The sheep does not keep the Shepherd, but the Shepherd the sheep. (11) Emmanuel is stronger than the prince of hell. (12) The words have an inimitable sweetness. Let us seek these blessings. Oh, for the watered garden of the soul! Oh, for the sorrowless life! Oh, that our mourning may be the fabric out of which joy is made as dark clouds into pillars of light! Oh, to be satisfied with his goodness.

Hope for the Latter End (15-22).—Rachel died near Ramah, and her spirit is represented as haunting the spot, weeping as her children are gathered there, previous to their removal to Babylon (chap. xl. 1). It also received a fulfilment (Matt. ii. 17, 18). (16) As Christ was brought again from Egypt, so Israel should come again from the land of the enemy. (18) Ephraim, i.e., the ten tribes. Contrition for sin precedes restoration. We all resent the yoke and need the goad. Oh, what a prayer is this, "Turn me and I shall be turned." When we are turned we are filled with penitence for the past. (21) The pillars mark the way back from exile. (22) Christian commentators refer this to the miraculous conception of our Lord.

TUESDAY, JUNE 5.—JEREMIAH XXXII.

The Purchase of the Field (1-15).—The siege of Jerusalem began in the tenth month of the ninth year of Zedekiah. Jeremiah had been cast into the dungeon whence he had been removed (ch. xxxviii.). (3) King Zedekiah here recites Jeremiah's prophecies, and one can easily see how such words paralysed the operations of defence. (6, 7) A similar instance is recorded in Roman history when that city was besieged by Hannibal. The ground on which he was encamped was purchased. (8) It is very sweet when circumstances confirm the Word of the Lord. (9) About £2. (10) Two copies of the deed of purchase were made, containing the conditions and time of redemption; these were buried, and when opened at the end of the seventy years' captivity must have been very confirmatory to the faith of the restored people.

The Prophet's Prayer (16-25).—Oppressed with the perplexity of God's ways, the believer must turn to Him, sure that there is nothing too hard, and that his heart is full of mercy. We remind Him of the past, the wonders of redemption. We confess our sins, and the rightness of our sufferings. We lay out before Him the imminence of our danger, and talk to Him of the mystery of his commands and dealings.

The Divine Reply (26-35).—God takes up the prophet's words, "there is nothing too hard," and proceeds to enumerate his complaint against the chosen people. How true these words are of ourselves. We have only done what was evil. From the dawn of our consciousness we have provoked Him to anger, we have not hearkened to his voice.

Light after Darkness (36-44).—For his covenant's sake God would gather again his people, and convert their soul, and build again the city. We may turn these promises into prayers. (38) Cause us to dwell safely, and take us to be thy people. (39) Unite us to Thyself and Thine elect in the unity of thy Spirit. (40) Put thy fear in our hearts. (41) Rejoice over us with singing. (42) Make us glad according to the days wherein Thou hast afflicted us, and bring us good.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6.—JEREMIAH XXXIII.

Health and Cure (1-9).—The Word of God has often come through prison bars. (2) When God does, none can undo. (3) Great things and difficult will be shown those who call upon Him; "mighty" fenced in (R.V. marg). Inaccessible and hidden things open at the call of the living Christ. (5) It was useless for the Jews to fight with the Chaldeans; they would only increase the carnage, and the houses would become the graves of the defenders. (6) Healing cannot be procured by our effort, but it comes to the yielded soul. (8) It includes cleansing as well as pardon. (9) Joy and praise, as well as fear and trembling, on the part of our foes.

The Voice of Praise (10-13).—The old hymns that could not be sung by the waters of Babylon would break out again over the wastes and desolations of the beloved city. The restored backslider brings his sacrifice of praise to the house of the Lord when his captivity is turned. (13) The shepherd in bringing his flock into the fold counts the sheep by striking each, as it passes, with a rod. The picture is one of pastoral peace.

The Branch (14-18).—Only the Saviour can be referred to. He is the branch from the decayed stock of Israel (chap. xxiii. 5). He alone is righteous. But see, He makes a righteous nation! (17-18) The office of king and priest shall be perpetual. Royalty and worship perpetuated in the priests and kings of the heavenly city. There is no such burntoffering as that of a consecrated life; or sacrifice like that of praise. Oh soul! wrap yourself about in the righteousness of Jehovah Tsidkenu.

The Inviolable Covenant (19-26).—The covenant referred to is the new one of Heb. viii. God will never change in his attitude towards us. What He is, He will be, when day and night have ceased. (24) The two families may be either Israel and Judah, or the royal and priestly families of David and Levi. But in spite of all the predictions of incredulity, and though his people may appear to have forfeited the mercy of God, yet they shall be established before Him in a position near to his throne, and endowed with blessed opportunities of vision and ministry.

THURSDAY, JUNE 7.—JEREMIAH XXXIV.

The Fate of Zedekiah (1-7). Jeremiah must have keenly felt the hardship of damping the preparations of his people to resist Nebuchadnezzar. It would have been easier to prophesy smooth things. What madness to reject such admonitions as the Spirit of God forced from his reluctant lips. (5) Though he died in Babylon, he was buried with honour. Such as was denied to Jehoiakim (xxii. 18). Josephus says, Nebuchadnezzar honoured his remains with a magnificent funeral.

The Fate of the City (8-22).—Exodus (xxi. 2) lays down the Divine requirement that the bond-servant should go out free in the seventh year. This had fallen into disuse, but had been revived by the king, perhaps to secure the loyalty of the emancipated serfs in the siege. (11) The siege of Jerusalem was raised by Pharaoh, and in this interval of respite, the Jews again enslaved their bond-servants. (13) God is always on the side of the oppressed. (15) We aggravate our position when we return to the sins we had condemned and forsaken. (17) The last year of Zedekiah's reign was the Sabbatical year. God the set his people free from their happy service to Hi to a liberty of suffering which was bondage indee (18) These words were uttered as the Jews we rejoicing over their fancied deliverance. Th pronounced the return of the Chaldeans to the sieg and the hapless fate of those who had broken the covenant. Contrast man's violation of his covena with God's unchangeable stedfastness to his, and re O heir of promise, on a covenant ordered in all thin and sure.

FRIDAY, JUNE 8.—JEREMIAH XXXV.

The Rechabites (1-11).—They belonged to t family of Jethro (Ex. xviii. 9, Num. x. 29, 32). Th were a nomad tribe, and had probably been driv within the precincts of Jerusalem by the unsettl state of the country (11). Jonadab was associat by Jehu with himself in the slaughter of the wo shippers of Baal, and he was zealous for God (2 Kin x. 15). (4) There were evidently several men of G amid the godless majority of priests. This was or The keeper of the door was probably the priest wh kept the capitation money paid by each male. Literal and particular obedience had been given to injunction uttered 300 years before by their fo father and director. They abstained from wine, a lived a pilgrim life. They had very little to fe when invasion swept over the land. The bird ca not though the bough sways, since it has wings; a the lighter our hold on this world, the less shall be perturbed by the changes and chances of th mortal life. Let us look for the city that ha foundations, and we shall hold lightly by the prese fleeting world. The pilgrim spiritis possible to all, as it was to Joseph in Egypt, not less tha literally to the patriarchs in Canaan.

The Contrast presented by Israel (12-19).—Jonadab commands were largely arbitrary, whilst Jehovah were based on moral considerations. Jonadab's we uttered once, Jehovah's repeatedly, and with perp tual earnestness and insistence. If Jonadab's we so universally and scrupulously kept by his childre how culpable were the Hebrew people in their dis gard and disobedience of the word spoken throu the prophets. (17) But, though the people we thus fickle and changeful, God could not be. As could not do them good, He must needs inflict t evil which He had foretold. How careful we shou be as to God's least commands, and especially abstain from fleshly lusts, and live the pilgr life; so will God bring on us all the good He h promised. (18) To stand before God may simp mean existence, or it may refer to the ministry the Temple. It is said that the descendants Jonadab are still in existence, as a distinct tribe.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9.—JEREMIAH XXXVI.

The Reading of the Roll (1-19).—Nebuchadneza was at this time likely to besiege Jerusalem; but t incident took place some time before the last f chapters, and in one of the earlier sieges. (3) T purpose of denunciation and threatening is alwa redemptive. (4) Compare v. 18. Notice that th were words which the Lord put into the prophe mouth. (9) The fast was selected because a grea concourse of people would be gathered, and th hearts would be softened. This was an extraordina fast, intended to avert the threatened siege. appears to have been instituted at the wish of t people. The ungodly king had no share in it. It would appear that Baruch read it from the balco of the chamber to the people gathered in the co below. (12) The princes were assembled in coun in an apartment of the palace, occupied by t secretary of state, Elnathan (xxvi. 22), Hanani (xxviii. 10-17). (16) The matter seemed of su moment, that the princes felt impelled to communic with the King.

The Mutilation of the Roll (20, 26).—The nin month was our December. The chamber was warm by a brazen vessel containing burning charcoal. Jehudi read, the King cut out the portions and c signed them to the fire. Men still ignore those pa of the Bible that condemn them. The Church Rome has always burnt the book which exposes h manifold abominations. Let us have the whole bo in its integrity, allowing it to search our hea throughout. We cannot escape our deserts destroying the record of the laws which we hs transgressed. A sailor cannot avoid shipwreck destroying the chart which shows the rocks on whi he is drifting. You cannot escape the thief by sho ing the baying hound.

The Re-writing of the Roll (27, 32).—God's wo cannot fail. The volumes that contain them peri but they are eternal. (30) His successors were n his posterity. Zedekiah was his uncle. His s Jeconiah only sat on the throne for three mont and thus is not counted. We gain nothing reiterated and redoubled curses when we reject Go word. But the Lord hides his obedient servants the secret of his presence from the pride of man.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 10.

PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.—Exod. xiv. 19-29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Heb. xi. 29.

AFTER the destruction of Egypt's firstborn, the Israelites were practically sent out of the land (xii. 31-33). The word "borrowed" (xii. 35, 36) should be "asked for," as in R.V. What the Israelites received was not a loan, but a portion of the wages due for their long and arduous toil. The number who left Egypt was 600,000 men (xii. 37, 38), besides children and "a mixed multitude." The total could hardly have been less than two millions. Their course thus far can be traced. They journeyed first from Rameses to Succoth (xii. 37). Both these are districts rather than towns. Rameses is identical with a portion of Goshen; and Succoth lay at the eastern end of the Wady Tumilât, along the line of the lakes. Etham, their next stopping place—the Egyptian Khetam—was a district lying "on the edge of the wilderness" (xiii. 20). Their next command was a trial of their faith, for it led them back again to the Egyptian side of the lakes (xiv. 1, 2). It was "by faith" that Moses obeyed.

It is not possible, nor is it necessary, to determine at what exact point the Israelites crossed the Red Sea. The common view is that "they entered the sea near the town of Suez, and crossed in the direction of Ayun Musa (the wells of Moses). The distance is about three miles at high tide."

THE DIFFICULTY OF THE ISRAELITES.—Pi-hahiroth was a small village or station west of the Red Sea. Migdol was not a town, but, as the name intimates, a watchtower on some neighbouring hill. Baal-Zephon was probably a temple, or some sacred place dedicated to Baal, the Phœnician sun god, and to Zephon or Typhon, the Egyptian god of darkness or evil. With impassable mountains on their west and south, the Egyptians pursuing them from the north, and the Red Sea on the east, they appeared to be caught in a trap. But their difficulty was not one of their own choosing. God had led them into it (1, 2). They were in the path of obedience. Learn the lesson that God may lead his people into difficulty and danger. Do not conclude that you have missed your way because you are finding difficulties in your Christian life.

THE MIRACULOUS DELIVERANCE.—God may lead his people into difficulty, but He will not leave them there. His first miracle was one of protection (19, 20). God put Himself between his people and their enemies. The pillar was light to direct or darkness to confound, according to the attitude men maintained towards God. It was not the first time that God had made a distinction between Israelites and Egyptians. He does it still between believers and unbelievers (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16). The very Gospel that saves some condemns others. God is against those who are against Him. What harm can the Egyptians do to the Israelites while God defends them? The same defence is yours.

The second miracle was (1) a miracle of power. "God has not tied Himself by nature's laws, but when He pleases, He dispenses with them, and then fire does not burn nor water flow" (Matt. Henry.) The fact that God made use of the sign of the stretching out of Moses's rod, and called the east wind to his aid, does not make the event less miraculous. It was such a display of power that it was frequently celebrated in the songs of the Israelites (Psa. cvi. 9; cxxxvi. 13, 14), and struck terror into the hearts of the people of Canaan (Josh. ii. 9, 10).

(2) A miracle of grace. If God had been as easily offended as we are, and as ready to give up an undertaking at the first sign of ingratitude on the part of the people, He would not have wrought this miracle. See the spirit in which they met the difficulty (10-12). Could anything be more foolish or more ungrateful? Yet God replies to their murmuring by this great miracle. "If we believe not He abides faithful."

(3) A miracle of judgment (23-28). The Egyptians are presumptuous enough to attempt to follow where the Israelites led. After the lessons God has been teaching them through the plagues they are without excuse. They have chosen a course of direct opposition to God, and are being hurried along that course to their own ruin. Soon they are in perplexity. The morning watch (24) at that time was from two a.m. to sunrise, which in April would take place between five and six. The "look" of God probably describes a sudden flashing of dazzling light from the dark cloud. God checked the Egyptians, and made them as eager to flee from the Israelites as they had been to pursue them. Their conviction comes too late to help them. The waters that had been a wall of protection to Israel became a means of death to their enemies. Pharaoh was not among the victims; but the discomfiture of his armies was complete.

For the Young.

"WHAT IS THE SEA LIKE?"

"I WISH I could get my Georgie away to the seaside for a week or two," said a poor widowed mother, whose little boy was a scholar in our ragged school. "He has been poorly for such a long time, and I am afraid he will go into consumption. The doctor says he needs a change now, but I can't afford to send him away."

Our school is situated in the far East of London, and is connected with the Ragged School Union. So I resolved to send the boy to one of the many Homes of this Institution, which are kept for the very purpose of affording poor children a change of air, such as could not possibly be otherwise obtained. Now, I had visited the "Rob Roy" Home at Ramsgate (which is situated in the Margate-road, on the right as you drive into Margate), and knowing its delightful surroundings and internal accommodation, I wrote to the secretary on behalf of poor drooping little Georgie.

I have the most happy recollections of my visit to the "Rob Roy" Home early last summer. The house stands in its own grounds, with a lawn and extensive gardens, which are stocked with fruit trees; whilst the sands on the beach at either Ramsgate or Broadstairs afford endless amusement, and the wagonette drives into the country add immensely to the delight of the poor and ill-clad children, who are sent thither from time to time. Within the building everything is sweet and clean; the children's tattered clothes are often exchanged for sound garments; the bedrooms are well ventilated during the day; the dining-room and other apartments are all comfortable and airy, and everything conducive to healthfulness and happiness is carefully studied by the matron and her helpers. And whilst the children are well fed with good and wholesome food, their spiritual needs are by no means forgotten. In fact, the little folks seem to enter into the devotional engagements as heartily as they do in the building of castles on the sand.

Well, to this Home little Georgie was sent for a fortnight. And how much—or rather, how little—do you think this fortnight's holiday cost us? Only six shillings! Railway fare from London to Ramsgate and back, and board and lodging for a fortnight—all for six shillings! Of course, if there were no such institution as the Ragged School Union, this could not have been done at the price; for the outlay is considerably more than this per head. I need not say that Georgie thoroughly enjoyed himself, and came back looking quite brown and healthy, and is quite strong again. Why, I am sure there are many of the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN who would each have volunteered to pay the expenses of Georgie's holiday had they seen the marvellous difference in his appearance.

But I want to tell you now about this little fellow's sister, Alice. She is about sixteen years of age. She told me in the school, the day after her brother's return, how he had enjoyed himself, and how much better he was. Some other girls joined us, and each remarked upon the improvement in Georgie, and how pleasant a visit to the seaside had been to those in the company who had been away, when Alice surprised me by saying:

"WHAT IS THE SEA LIKE?"

I cannot describe my feelings when this question was put. A tear came into my eye and a lump into my throat as I thought of the numberless children who, like Alice, had never seen the sea, and whose sad circumstances prevent the possibility of a holiday at the seaside; and I resolved to ask the youthful readers of THE CHRISTIAN to lend a helping hand in sending away to the seaside for a fortnight some of the drooping boys and girls of East London.

I have visited other Homes of the Ragged School Union, and can testify to the care bestowed upon the children by those in charge, and to the kindness of visitors who drop in, and sometimes provide a special treat for the children. One afternoon last summer I called at the Folkestone Home, and a young lady had on that day given the seventy girl-residents a birthday treat—I think it was her ninth birthday; and how it was appreciated! It did one good to see the merry sparkle in the eyes of the children.

While I was there on that occasion the postman came, and several letters were handed round. I was both amused and interested to see the joy depicted upon the faces of the recipients; but one of the girls was reading her letter—which had come from her mother—to a companion by her side, and I could not help hearing some of the sentences from the epistle. The mother, amongst other things, said, "But we do miss you so; it seems so long since I saw you." The child raised her eyes from the letter, and turning to her companion said, "Ain't that nice?" My heart was touched at this simple but pathetic incident, and, turning away, I thought of the immense advantage to spirit, soul, and body, which the Holiday Homes of the Ragged School Union afford these waifs and strays.

I feel quite sure that you would like to answer Alice's question, "What is the sea like?" by enabling some of the poor children who are situated like Alice, to go and see it for themselves. And I do not know a better way of doing so than by helping the R.S.U. to send away to their seaside Homes as many children during this summer as can possibly be accommodated. Contributions may be forwarded to the office of THE CHRISTIAN; or sent direct, marked "Holiday Homes," to Mr. John Kirk, Secretary, R.S.U., 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

A MISSIONARY CIRCLE.

AT this time, when so many missionary societies are suffering from lack of funds, I thought it would not be inappropriate for me to tell how £33 was collected last year in a new effort for foreign missions, trusting that the idea may be a suggestion to many others.

About two years ago a few of us met together to talk over "old days" and renew the friendships formed some seven years previously at a boarding-school in the north of London. Many were unable to meet with us, among them two sisters, who were shortly going out as doctor and nurse to the Women's Hospital, Hankow, China. We suggested making them a parting present. There were varied opinions as to what would be the most acceptable gift. Finally, this was the form we decided it should take—we should support every year one bed in their hospital, thus keeping an interest in them continually, and sharing in Christ's work done by them. We wrote to all their school contemporaries, telling them of the undertaking, and inviting them to join us. We received most hearty responses, and were thus enabled, before our friends left for China, to promise them yearly the support of two beds.

We then remembered, that there were other old girl missionaries already in the field unaided at all by the sympathy of their old schoolfellows, and we longed to do something for them. Girls from the same school, only of an earlier period than ourselves, heard of our effort and wished to join us, and do something for their contemporaries in heathen lands. Those still studying at the school wanted a share in the joy also, and so we started the W.C.H. Missionary Circle, our motto being—

We have a fellowship of hearts,
To keep and cultivate,
And a work of lowly love to do
For Him on whom we wait.

The lady-principal is our president. One of the old girls has proved a splendid and indefatigable hon. secretary, a committee has been formed, and a sewing branch.

On Friday week we met in the dear old school grounds for our second annual meeting. We had with us one of the old girl missionaries, who is home from China on furlough, and received several letters from other parts of the world, where we are sending little gifts for Christ's sake, and "Auld lang Syne." If any wish for further particulars, with a view of starting a similar circle, I should be pleased to communicate with them.

CENTENARY OF BILLY BRAY.

To-morrow will be the centenary of the birth of the famous Cornish preacher, Billy Bray, who was born at the little village of Twelve Heads, near Truro, on June 1, 1794. In his lifetime no evangelist was more popular throughout the counties of Devon and Cornwall, and since his death his published biography, from the pen of Rev. F. W. Bourne, has made countless thousands familiar with the fame of one of the quaintest and withal one of the most devoted preachers of the Gospel ever given by God to the villages of England. It is not fitting that the occasion of the centenary of his birth should be allowed to pass by without some reference to his work and tribute to his memory.

He belonged to an order of men to whom England owes more than historians of the old school whose interest was absorbed in courts and dynasty, in wars and intrigues, have ever recognised. The rural districts of England have been saved from vice and heathenism largely through the self-denying labours of simple-minded men of lowly rank, who though without culture and refinement, without Episcopal ordination or canonical approval, have gone forth preaching Christ in homely language understood of the common people. Billy Dawson, the Yorkshire farmer, Sammy Hicks, the village blacksmith, Little Abe, of Berry Brow, and Billy Bray, the Cornish miner, are noble examples of such men whose genius and eccentricities were used of God for great and glorious ends.

Billy Bray's work was accomplished in connection with one of the lesser known of the Methodist bodies, the Bible Christians, or, as they were at first called, "the Bryanites," whose stronghold is in the western counties of England. Their founder was a William O'Bryan, whose zeal led him to unconventional methods of Christian effort. Expelled from the Methodist Church on this account, it would seem that he formed in the North of Devon the nucleus of a Society, whence grew this denomination. It was chiefly in their little chapels among the villages of Devon and Cornwall that Billy Bray preached with quaint humour and burning zeal the sermons which led to the awakening of many souls.

No sooner was the drunken miner converted than he began earnestly to seek the salvation of his neighbours and friends, his wife being the first-fruits of his efforts. Billy's experience of the great change wrought in him by the grace of God was characterised by great joy, and he had remarkable methods of expressing the gladness of his heart.

In passing over the hill on which now stand the church and vicarage of Baldhu, some five or six miles distant from Truro, Billy said the Lord had given him a message, "I will give thee all that dwell on this mountain." He there and then knelt down and prayed for the inhabitants of the three houses then standing on the hillside. They were converted through his prayers and efforts. By-and-by a church was built on the spot, but to Billy's dismay the clergyman was of Puseyite proclivities. Unbounded was his joy, however, when, at a later date, he learned that in the vicarage on the hill there was at last a converted parson who preached the simple Gospel of Christ. Oh, for more of the earnest prayer and unwavering childlike faith of Billy Bray!

Quaint indeed were some of his sayings. Talking of trials and blessings in a love feast, he put it thus: "Well, friend, I have been talking vinegar and honey, but praise the Lord, I've had the vinegar with a spoon and the honey with a ladle." There is true wisdom in this: "I would rather walk to heaven over the roughest road with bleeding feet than ride to hell even in a fine carriage." True faith rings out in such words as these: "If Billy gets work he praises the Lord; when he gets none he sings all the same. Do'e think that he'll starve Billy? No, no, there's sure to be a bit of flour in the bottom of the barrel for Billy. I can trust in Jesus, and while I trust 'im, He'd as soon starve Michael the Archangel as he'd starve Billy!"

Once asked what was the secret of his continual joy, Billy's reply was that we must become fools for Christ's sake; men like the good vicar were placed at a disadvantage, since they had so much to unlearn. "For some of us, you know," added Billy with dry humour, "are fools to begin with."

There are still many living who heard Billy Bray preach, and doubtless many still survive who were led to Christ through the efforts of this eccentric preacher of the truth. Billy also had a passion for chapel building, and several plain, unpretentious buildings within a few miles of the spot where he lived and died remain as the monuments of his zeal for the extension of the cause of God. Many a curious story is told of the unconventional methods by which he secured the funds for the building of these village chapels. They have no architectural beauty, but surely a halo of consecration lingers about these humble Bethels, which have been to many a Cornish miner the very gate of Heaven and the house of God.

One of the chapels thus built, owing to the closing of the mines, is now disused, and superseded by a neat and comfortable building erected in the vicinity, and known as the "Billy Bray Memorial Chapel." This chapel at Carharrack, a little village not far from Redruth, the centre of the once-thriving mining industries of Cornwall, is to be the scene of gatherings of great interest to-day, to commemorate the centenary of the birth of this remarkable man. Representatives of the several branches of the Methodist Church combined to bear their testimony to the life and labours of Billy Bray. It will be a dark day for England when the line of preachers of whom this Cornish miner was such a conspicuous example, becomes extinct. God grant that the rural districts of our land may never lack men of homely language, native wit, and consecrated genius, who shall proclaim to their neighbours and fellow-toilers the unsearchable riches of Christ. There is a place for the rough stones of unpolished granite in the glorious building of the Church.

BLACKTHORN STREET CHAPEL,

BOW COMMON, E.

This Christian church (pastor, Rev. T. J. Hazzard, 52, Addington-road, Bow, E.) is situated in the heart of a district where poverty and sin are rife, and where "Satan has his seat." Here, without any social advantages, struggling day by day with difficulty, with a congregation made up of the "common people" who still hear gladly the tender message of Jesus, the Lord has graciously owned the efforts of his people, and used their testimony to the ingathering of many precious souls, and the building up of believers.

The work amongst the young, which, in view of the serious growth of sacerdotalism, is of such vital importance in these evil days, and the many other agencies in operation, have so increased that, unless additional accommodation is provided, much of the work must be dropped.

This being so, many friends of the work, far and near, were asked to meet together last Thursday for a day of prayer, that, on the spot and unitedly, they might lay before the Lord the sad condition of the neighbourhood, especially in regard to the alarming spread of Popery, Ritualism, and irreligion, and to plead with God that He would lay it upon the hearts of the stewards of his wealth to provide the remaining third of the means necessary for the erection of a suitable hall for Gospel work, so as to free the present premises for Sunday-school, drift children, and general mission work.

Many friends assembled, morning, afternoon, and evening, and others who could not be present in person united at set times during the day in earnest and believing prayer. Helpful and timely words were spoken by various friends at the different gatherings. But the one business of the day was prayer, and hearts were poured out in adoring praise and fervent petition for the spiritual blessing of the neighbourhood, and the material supplies so urgently needed. It was felt all through the day that only as God interposed could the work be done, the need on the one hand being so great and the weakness and poverty of the people being so apparent on the other. But the keynote of the day was that of Jehoshaphat, "Our eyes are upon Thee," and ere the day closed there came clear indications of coming help in answer to faith and prayer.

I had the pleasure of spending an hour at that day of prayer, and heartily endorse what has been said above. A Roman Catholic building is in progress near by.

ASCOT RACES.—Mr. A. E. Sidford, of Bracknell, Berks, is very anxious that a greater amount of Gospel testimony should be given to the fashionable throng that attend the races at Ascot. Any friends who can help either by speech or playing on musical instruments should put themselves in communication with Mr. Sidford.

Revival Reminiscences.

In Wales the Revival began in September, 1858, through a minister who had been to America and seen the work of God there. He laid his impressions as to the unsatisfactory state of things in the Church before another minister, who had the same feeling. The second minister could get no rest till he called meetings for prayer; then the holy flame was kindled and spread far and wide. Here we cannot help noticing how God works on men who are living far apart when He wishes to bring to pass his great purposes of love, and how strangely He can bring the like-minded together.

At various times and in various places the movement was breaking forth in England; it was sporadic, and each place seemed quite independent of every other. It was felt among the Staffordshire colliers; also in Cornwall, in Dorset, and in Wiltshire villages. It did not begin in London till the autumn of 1859, when meetings for prayer were called, mostly in the East-end, and then, a little later, in the City. But it was prayer everywhere. Then with prayer came conversions, excitement, interest, great congregations, crowded chapels and churches, vast social changes. The very news of what God was doing in one place would fall on another place like a spark on dry grass; immediately the work began there also. Small places were not seldom the first to obtain the blessing, and from them it passed on, carried by the winds of God to larger populations.

PORT GLASGOW.

The spread of the Revival to this place was owing to certain families in Coleraine, Ireland, having many relations in it, for whom they prayed earnestly and believingly. There was also direct effort. A gentleman who had two sons in Port Glasgow felt moved to go over from Coleraine, to tell them what great things had been done there, and urge them to flee from the wrath to come. He had a meeting in his son's kitchen, which was well attended. A girl convert was its first result; then one of his sons, then a young man; then the excitement caught the whole place. The provost opened his store for meetings, and at one of the earliest there were many conversions; "during the singing numbers were carried out in great distress of mind; the people were much agitated, and some even ran out of the meeting in fear." Of an evening meeting in the store, where 2030 persons were present, a minister writes: "One person cried out, and then another, and another, and some of the cries were as piercing as anything I ever heard in Ireland. . . . Some of these girls who cried for mercy were the worst characters in the town. After the meeting had been desired to separate, a great many remained behind, most anxious to hear the Word." They even lingered in the streets, still ready to hear. Port Glasgow was the portal through which the Revival entered Glasgow.

J. G. P.

Sir,—May I add a word of testimony to the many which have been recorded in reference to the great Revival of 1859? Though I was then (like others of your correspondents) only a youth, yet I have never forgotten how the events of that time seemed to give force and clearness to the deeper truths one was learning from God's Word written. And throughout a ministry of twenty-seven years it has been deeply impressed on my mind how much of what is best and brightest in Christian life and teaching had its origin in that period of gracious visitation. It appears to me to be the source from which multiplied agencies and influences have come down, watering Christ's Church at home and abroad with streams of blessing. The faith of God's people and all Gospel ministries seem to me to have been quickened by the wondrous work God wrought in 1859 in the North of Ireland and elsewhere, more than by any one thing beside.—Yours faithfully,

Geo. Alex. Allan.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—The monthly prayer meeting was held on Thursday last in the committee-room, 20, Berners-street. Prayer was offered for the society's missionaries and the two probationers at Liverpool, also for those who have recently come out from the Church of Rome. Rev. W. R. Mowll brought the meeting to a close by reading and commenting on several passages.

Dependence and Confidence.

These have been well said to be the elements of prayer. It may be better urged that they comprise the whole of spiritual life; and, perhaps still better, that the more they are examined the more clearly they are found to be the two foundations upon which the whole superstructure of Divine life in man is based.

Satan knew that, and planned his destruction of man accordingly. Look at his subtlety, when, by obtaining Eve's attention to questioning God's restriction about eating of the fruit of the trees in Eden, he deftly implies a mere modicum of undue restraint; then, having succeeded in effecting any breach in her confidence, and thus turning the balance of her heart, he instantly flashes before her imagination the glitter of independence. "Ye shall be as gods...." and his work was done!

On no account would he have ventured hope of success by suggesting independence, before he had first impaired (in fact destroyed) confidence—for, confidence is as an arc, which can sustain no breach; it must be perfect, or it falls. Thus, whilst the act of disobedience was the external which invoked penalty, it was at once the exponent of a root principle of evil in man, and all comprised in broken confidence and desire for independence: independence, imagined or desired, forthwith becomes the soil in which all the enmity of Satan against God could live and thrive in man.

The act of disobedience was not in itself the sin, but inasmuch as every principle is incomplete without an exponent, the evil which had been injected needed some act to manifest it. All sin is the outcome of the two factors, broken confidence and imagined or desired independence.

The grace of God was immediately exercised for, upon, and in behalf of man, the object of God's love; and henceforth promise became the new ground in which confidence was possible to be restored. The fact of dependence, meanwhile, never having been disturbed, further than in the transient imagination, was left to be realised by man in his tearful career, until, in due time, the God-promised Seed appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

How beautifully He came, manifesting to the full dependence and confidence in such manner before men as to constitute Himself the grand primal exemplar of those principles, walking day by day and hour by hour truly as the Second Man in all man's tearful path, with the Sin-bearer's load added.

Make a practice of tracing every known evil in yourself to those two principles of evil, want of confidence in Him and consequent degrees of imagined or desired independence. The grace of God is the only remedy and restorative. He never will fail us in our dependence upon Him; and our confidence not only pleases and honours Him, but it reunites man to Him in Christ.

The outward act of disobedience thus being the expression of the principles of mistrust and denial of dependence—or, in other words, the manifest act of the creature in disobedience to the Creator's expressed will—thus became the exponent of a principle within him; whilst the act is not the sin itself, but the sin lies deeper than the act, even in the principle contrary to God, which Satan had implanted.

We are dependent and we may be confident. To his grace be all the praise.

TRAINING INSTITUTE, COLWYN BAY.

The African climate having proved so deadly to missionaries and explorers, the inspired idea occurred to one who nearly lost his life there to bring over suitable and promising converts; and train them in Britain as missionaries to their own people. The gentleman who gave birth to this idea is Rev. W. Hughes, founder and principal of the Congo Training College, Colwyn Bay, the "Naples of North Wales," as it is frequently called.

The suggestion was at first regarded as Utopian, but Mr. Hughes persevered through difficulties, obstructions, and even unpleasant oppositions. He has now the support of many friends of position and influence as his committee, the King of the Belgians and Mr. H. M. Stanley, the well known explorer, being the first patrons of the Institute.

On leaving Africa, Mr. Hughes brought with him an emancipated slave. This boy and another, who had shown a great affection for him, were his devoted nurses while near to death with African fever during the voyage home; and with this small nucleus he started the present handsome college in Colwyn Bay. There are fifteen students there at present, and the principal is preparing to receive fifty; an additional wing is now built. The training of African females is also included in the scheme. There is no knowing where the movement will end in this Welsh-African colony. Some of the students have returned, and are doing good work. One has turned out a good preacher, and addresses hundreds in all the villages and towns he passes through with marked effect and success.

REV. W. HUGHES.
(From photograph by Mr. J. W. Thomas, Colwyn Bay.)

Each of the students is taught a trade or profession, and will be able to teach people of their own colour and language how to read and write, build houses, make clothes, cure diseases, engage in honest barter, avoid the savagery of heathen life, and teach the poor dark worshipper of the fetish to look away from the dumb helpless idol to the living God.

The executive committee having decided on enlarging their field of operations, Mr. Hughes was commissioned to arrange for doing so, and established last summer in Africa three new institutions, which, with two others, will send the most promising of their students to receive a further training at Colwyn Bay. An earnest appeal is made by the committee to all Christian friends, so that the work may be developed both at home and in Africa.

Those students who have returned, and who are now teachers and preachers, costing nothing, are doing splendid work; they write, being so imbued with love for their work, that "they are willing to die for God if necessary."

TORQUAY.—Mr. Hunkin, of Truro, has been conducting Gospel services at the Chelston Mission Hall, and taking part in the open-air services, conducted by the resident missioner, Mr. Levi Powell. The work of this Mission is being greatly blessed. The services are largely attended. Several young people have publicly confessed Christ, and are taking part in the services, both in and out of doors. The Sharon Home of Rest, which is near to the Mission Hall, and is under the management of the missioner's wife, is prospering, and is being blest to the spiritual good of many.

RABINOWITZ ON ZECH. XII. 10.

Dr. Gordon, of Boston, has lately published in The Missionary Review of the World a very interesting account of conversations he had last year at Chicago with Joseph Rabinowitz, the well-known leader of the Israelites of the New Covenant. In one of these Rabinowitz said to him: "Do you know what questioning and controversies the Jews have kept up over Zech. xii. 10: 'They shall look upon Me whom they pierced'? They will not admit that it is Jehovah whom they pierced. Hence the dispute about the 'whom.'"

Here it may be well to remark that the word "whom" in the Hebrew of this passage is preceded by a particle, eth, usually considered the sign of the accusative case, and as such giving a definiteness to the relative which we might express by "the one whom." This particle consists of two letters, Aleph and Tau, the first and last of the Hebrew alphabet.

"Do you wonder then (proceeded Rabinowitz) that I was filled with awe and astonishment when I opened Rev. i. 7, 8, and read these words of Zechariah, now quoted by John: 'Behold He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him and they also that pierced Him,' and then heard the glorified Lord saying, 'I am the Alpha and the Omega.' Jesus seemed to say to me, 'Do you doubt who it is whom you pierced? I am the Aleph-Tau, the Alpha-Omega, Jehovah the Almighty.'"

This may at first sight seem fanciful to us dull matter-of-fact Anglo-Saxons, unfitted mentally as we are to appreciate the vein of mystic truth so often to be found in Scripture, and so dear to the Oriental and specially to the Jewish mind. But we must remember that the Scriptures were written by Jews, and, in the first instance, for Jews; so that the effect of a discovery such as this upon a Jewish mind is worthy of attention, and deserves our careful consideration. If we look at any of the translations of the New Testament into Hebrew, we find that they render, "I am Alpha and Omega" by "I am Aleph and Tau." This somewhat confirms the thought expressed by Rabinowitz. Furthermore, on looking at Hengstenberg on Rev. i. 8, I find that he points out that in three places in the book of Revelation where "I am Alpha and Omega" occurs (i. 8, xxi. 6, xxii. 13), they are followed by the words "the beginning and the end," which words, he thinks, "are to be regarded as an accompaniment of Alpha and Omega, and are appropriated to this purpose because they begin with the first and the last letters of the Hebrew alphabet."

That is to say, the Greek words archee (beginning) and telos (end) respectively begin with a—the equivalent of aleph—and t—the equivalent of tau, the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet.

May not this throw light on Heb. xii. 2, where Jesus is called "the author (archeegos) and finisher (teleiotees) of our faith"? To Jews—and the Epistle was written to such—the words would suggest the aleph and tau of their alphabet, and would add to the significance of the words themselves, the thought that Jesus was faith's alpha and omega, beginning and end, or, as we sometimes express it, the "all in all" of faith.

This, at least, may be a possible confirmation of this interesting view of Zech. xii. 10, which seems to have made so deep an impression upon the Jewish mind of that eminent servant of God, Joseph Rabinowitz. H. E. B.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN AT LIVERPOOL.—A few days ago a sad case of cruelty to children was disclosed in the Liverpool Police Court. Four little orphans, three of them girls, on the death of their father a year ago, went to live with an aunt, who seems to have treated them in a very heartless manner; she not only beat them herself, but urged their elder brother to thrash them with a strap. The eldest girl, aged fourteen, had for some time been working for a policeman's wife, who on seeing her pitiable condition, covered with bruises and marked with blood, ascertained the facts, with the result that proceedings were instituted. The woman was fined £5 and costs, in default two months' imprisonment; and a warrant was issued against her nephew, who had more than once obeyed her unkind orders to ill-treat one of his sisters. The sequel is of more practical interest: The four orphans, ranging in age from seven to fourteen, were last week admitted into Mr. Müller's Orphan Houses, Bristol, where they are sure to be well cared for, and where it is hoped they will, in the language of an esteemed correspondent, "find the mercy of the Lord unto eternal life.'

The Evangelist.

"SAY IT LIKE JESUS DID."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

A solemn hush was over the house. In the room upstairs the light was shaded, and all was very still. Little Jetta, the dark-eyed "fairy queen" of the house, had ceased to laugh and play, and was lying quietly there, with spirit hovering between two worlds. The faithful nurse had turned to prepare yet one more remedy, and the anxious father watched his sleeping child.

He was a prosperous man of business; but what just then was wealth or fame to him compared with the life of that treasure on which he doted? A few strokes of his pen could command large sums of money, but no prescription, however carefully written, could secure what was of vaster worth to him, the health and life of his beautiful child.

Since his wife's death, three years before, all his devotion had been lavished on Jetta, the companion of his lonely hours. No thought of personal religion ever passed through his mind; he was intent on selfish and worldly interests. But he could not say he had not heard the Gospel; for, nestling in her father's arms, that merry girl would prattle on and tell him sweet and touching tales she heard in the Sunday class, and how Mr. Weston said it all, and he would not check her pretty talk. The teacher was a friend who lived near, and had begged that Jetta might join his infant class, and every week her young heart gathered in some new and precious thought, like seedlings into the good ground.

"Father, dear," said the waking child, "can you say it just like teacher does?" "Yes, darling, anything you like; what is it?"

"You find it, then; my mark is in the place." Love claims swift obedience, and quickly taking up her book, he read: "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

"No, not like that," she said, half fretfully; "he doesn't say it that way." "You are too ill to listen, dear, wait a little, and Mr. Weston will come and see you, and he shall say it."

True to his promise, the teacher was soon there, and sitting with the little hand in his, he asked if he should sing to her. "Please say those words again, and say them like Jesus did," she said. He remembered how interested she had been in the verse, and what he said about it, and with a momentary prayer that he might catch an echo of Christ's tone, he repeated it through slowly. A look of gladness spread over the countenance as he paused.

"Now the last part again; it sounds so beautiful;" and he said, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." "Does it make you happy to hear that, Jetta, dear?" "Oh, yes, because you say it like Jesus did; and I know He means it all for me."

It was mysteriously solemn that night, as the rich man sat alone with his sad thoughts. He would not leave the room, though there was nothing he could do, while the nurse kept silent watch; but when the massive clock in the hall chimed three, the child awoke, and asked, "Where's father?" Instantly bending over her, she said: "Do try and say it like Jesus did; I must hear it again."

He felt then he would have given anything to have learned the secret of that tone, to be able to gratify the wish of one so precious; but unused as he was to that book, he opened the Bible, and read the verse, going over the last clause at her request. A faint smile, and she said: "That's just a little like it; you will say it like Jesus soon, father dear," and the fragile arms were clasped round his neck. "I will try, darling," he said, smoothing her soft black hair.

"I'm tired now. Ask teacher how; he knows; and kiss Jetta good night." Scarce able to control the passionate grief, he gazed helplessly on the pure white face, and the nurse softly said the favourite verse, that she might hear it once more, and the dry lips with effort whispered, "Yes, the Kingdom of Heaven," and she was gone.

Three months of bitter experience passed by, and the ever-sounding words his child had loved began to hold a deeper meaning, and on that summer evening, as he gathered blossoms from Jetta's rose-tree to carry to her grave, he seemed to hear her voice, "You will say it like Jesus soon, father dear."

The air was full of fragrance as he stood by the love-reared monument, and all around was still. He laid the flowers on the green mound. A change had come over him; he knew he was not the same. Things that engrossed him were losing power, and a great uplifting influence was at work, and there, unseen, he thought, he turned his face upward, and with a groan he spoke. Was he praying? He could hardly tell, but he knew he felt a mighty outgoing from his very soul that brought him strength and help, and he was lost to place and time, till a sound recalled him, and he saw Jetta's teacher approaching.

"I will not disturb you. I often come here; it cheers me in my work among the little ones."

"Stay with me, Mr. Weston, you were my child's best friend; be mine. I begin to see the world within a world, a kingdom that is grand and everlasting. Wealth that is unreckoned in our banks, and to say it—'the Kingdom of Heaven'—like Jesus did, will explain everything, unfold all mysteries. But why must He take her? Does He want them thus?"

"No, He wants them here, if it is well, but He knows, and his way is right. Would you have her here, and maybe miss the Kingdom; or have her there, and by her going enter into its royal boundary, to know no separation for evermore? For, 'Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.'"

The manly head was bowed upon the arm that rested on the marble tablet, and there was a long and solemn silence. Then a new light shone over his face, and he said, as if speaking to his child, "Yes, Jetta, 'tis beautiful, like Jesus said it, I have been slow to learn," and then, raising himself, he turned his eyes upward, and said reverently, "O God, the Kingdom of Heaven, I see and feel its grandeur now, let me enter in."

The two walked home talking in thankful strains of the way a little child had led her father into Christ's Kingdom, and when alone in the room where Jetta said, "You will soon say it like Jesus did," he felt he understood the child-like spirit that only can admit into the region where time and space make no barrier to soul communion, and where Jesus sets his subjects free.

O highly honoured workers in Sunday school or elsewhere, rejoice that you have the treasure of his Gospel to unfold, and seek living power and greater zeal. Your task is glorious, its issues grand for time and eternity, and pray right earnestly to be able above all to "Say it like Jesus did."

O bid Thy blessed Gospel go
Forth to each child of sin and woe,
That all Thy wondrous grace may know;
Thy kingdom come.

MANCHESTER WESLEYAN MISSION

Opening the sixth report of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Methodist Mission, Rev. S. F. Collier declares the past year to have been one of unprecedented prosperity. He says:—"Rapid progress and expansion in the rescue, preventive and relief work, increased evangelistic effort, greater spiritual results, an unusually large addition to the membership, all the varied activities of the church in full vigour, and a better hold on the non-worshipping crowds, especially in the neediest districts, are the facts that stand out in a review of the past year's work. To-day there are nine stations in the Mission at which services are held every Sunday and week-night, with manifold agencies adapted to the needs of the particular districts in which the chapels or halls are situated. Every Sunday 10,000 people worship with us, more than 2000 names are on the members' register, and 3000 children are connected with our schools."

Describing the working at the Central Hall, Rev. D. L. Pawson gives the following "testimony" by a member of the Mission:—

A BACKSLIDER RECOVERED.

"I came to the hall for a long time, but before I came I had formed certain habits that were hard for me to give up. For instance, I used to meet a workmate every Sunday night at a public-house, and after coming to the hall I knew what I ought to do, but I was afraid to break off his companionship. One Sunday night I determined at all cost to go straight home. I hardly know how I managed it, but I did, and during that week I signed the pledge, and found that was the only thing that was standing between me and restoration [he was a backslider of many years' standing]. They were taunting me in the shop the other day, saying I did not come to the Central Hall for nought; I must get something for going, else I should not go so far and regularly. I said, 'Yes, I have got something; I've got to know the wonder of all wonders, that God loves a chap like me; that Christ died to save such a sinner as me. Yes, you are right, I have got something, a new heart, new desires, new aspirations, and am thankful I ever got to know of the place.'"

SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Mr. Pawson is glad to say that the spiritual life was never more healthy. There is a spontaneity to live out the covenant service vow, never equalled before, "To pull or push, to fill this gap or that, anything, if so be that God be glorified, and mankind blessed." Here is the testimony of one who comes a mile and a half to her class, irrespective of the weather:—"I love to be with God's people, I love the services of God's house, and I love very much the going after the lost and trying to rescue the perishing. I feel so happy in doing anything for my Saviour, and for those He loved and died for; but I am never so happy as when I am alone with God, and with his Word.

There are reports from the various workers, and all are full of interest. Mr. J. Sackett, of the Social Department, says: "We have never passed a year wherein so much has been done to uplift the fallen, to succour the needy, to give heart and spirit to the faint and desponding, to cure men of long-contracted bad habits, and to establish noble character in them, as during the past twelve months." Sister Pattie, of the Rescue and Preventive Work, gives facts which afford some idea of the soul-moving sights and pitiful tales of which she has been a sympathetic witness.

HOMERTON BOOK DISTRIBUTION SOCIETY.

This Society is doing a progressive and useful work in the thickly-populated district of Homerton. Its object is the gratuitous distribution, not so much of tracts as of religious periodicals; during last year these numbered 43,080, and they were well received by the people, who are all of the working class. About 1000 of the periodicals published by the various religious societies and sections of the Christian Church are being left every week from house to house.

The Society is connected with the mission work carried on at the Evangelical Hall, Homerton, which is personally superintended by Mr. Charles Button. The source of income is the subscription of the members, all workers at the mission. In order to maintain the weekly output, the Secretary, Mr. M. Gardner, of 93, Cassland-road, South Hackney, will gratefully receive any parcel of suitable literature. We can heartily recommend this effort to our readers.

The May Meetings.

London Female Guardian Society.

Many friends gathered for the annual meeting of this ancient charity in High-street, Stoke Newington, which was held last week under the presidency of Lord Kinnaird. Some melancholy facts were brought out in the report of Mr. W. E. Page, the secretary. Of the 115 penitents received into the institution during the year, no less than seventy-nine came from domestic service, showing the manifold temptations that surround young girls in homes where Christian principles do not rule the conduct. In the course of the year about a hundred left the sheltering walls of the Home, for service and otherwise; of these it is sad to learn that fourteen had to be excluded for improper behaviour. Such work is attended with many defeats and discouragements, but none the less is it necessary; and those who carry it on greatly need sympathetic co-operation.

In his address the noble chairman observed that some friends of the Society had withdrawn support because they thought the parish or municipality ought to take up such work. He showed, however, that rescue work from its nature must be the special care of Christian people imbued with the love and compassion of the Saviour. Lord Kinnaird earnestly appealed for a more generous maintenance of the institution, which is certainly following in the footsteps of Jesus Christ, who said to the sinning, sorrowing one, "Go in peace, sin no more." Other addresses were given by Revs. W. J. Dawson, A. W. Gough, and L. Parsons, and Mr. Marshall Lang, who emphasised the special claims of the work by reason, not only of its peculiar difficulties, but of its Christlike character. One speaker strenuously protested against the unequal code of social morals as between man and woman which too often prevails, and which blunts the finer feelings of true manhood. A pathetic and significant fact elicited from the report was that out of those received into the Home last year sixty-five girls had no mother alive.

The Peace Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held last week in the Memorial Hall, London. Sir J. Pease, Bart., M.P., presided.

The report for the past year, read by Dr. Darby, noted with satisfaction the continuing progress of international arbitration, as was evidenced during the last twelve months by the settlement by that means of the Behring Sea dispute and several other similar international difficulties. The report also recorded the organisation of "the arbitration alliance of British Christians," a body that included the Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Durham, Canon Fremantle, and Canon Wilberforce. The Society made vigorous efforts last Christmas to secure throughout the country an effective observance of "Peace Sunday." Although, owing to increased expenditure in other directions, fewer meetings had been held, yet the use at home both of the platform and the Press had been perseveringly maintained.

The Chairman remarked upon the fact that European expenditure upon armaments had increased by £72,000,000 since 1869. His hope was that the religious bodies of Europe and the Press of Europe would ultimately constrain their Governments into an International Conference, with a view of coming to a common agreement to disarm. At the same time, he thought Great Britain was eminently fitted to take the initiative in this matter.

Mr. Byles, M.P., proposed a resolution urging upon Her Majesty's Government "the pressing expediency of inviting other Governments to consider the practicability of adopting some immediate and effective means of checking the growths of the burdens entailed by the present vast armaments of Europe, and of reducing armaments, which are a danger to peace and carry with them many of the evils of war." His belief was that if Lord Rosebery was asked to do so by the Czar of Russia, he would take the initiative in opening up international negotiations to bring about a common understanding in this matter.

Mr. T. Snape, M.P., expressed the hope that the chairman would get an early opportunity of proposing in the House of Commons a resolution condemnatory of the retrogressive, reactionary, and ruinous policy that was being pursued by the Governments of Europe, a resolution which would, he thought, be carried. Other resolutions were adopted which respectively favoured the establishment of a permanent high court of arbitration and supported the Peace Society.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen

Amongst the most enjoyable meetings of the year many reckon the Fishermen's gathering, with its North Sea choruses and stirring testimonies given in vigorous, if somewhat unconventional, style. This was held on Thursday at Exeter Hall, which was densely crowded, and which assumed for the nonce a brilliant and nautical aspect, with banners and other emblems of a seafaring life. H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck showed her interest in the work by distributing the prizes and certificates.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, outlined in an introductory address the history, progress, and results of the Mission. He believed that the work was of God, and that by it He was winning glory to his name and blessing those who otherwise must have lived and died in ignorance of Him.

The Dean of Norwich opened an eloquent address by remarking that the work of the Mission appeared to him to wear the aspect of "Galilean Christianity," for even as our Lord Jesus called to Him fishermen, so this Mission seeks to win fishermen to the Saviour. Therefore while all true service is dear to our Master, He must have a special regard for those who served just where He walked while on earth. Passing on, the Dean dwelt on reasons for praise to God in connection with the Mission operations, and showed the service it is doing in bringing the Gospel before a class largely unevangelised, in rendering help to the sick and injured, in supplying wholesome literature for the long weary hours, and in extending the hand of Christian sympathy and love to the brave and simple-hearted men who for us dare the hardships and dangers of the stormy North Sea.

Dr. Newman Hall followed with earnest words on the perils of the deep, and the need that the men of the trawling fleets should be ready for a sudden call. He thanked God that the M.D.S.F. carried the Gospel to these toilers, and had been the means of bringing many into the joy and peace of salvation.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon added a few words, trusting that the Mission ships would be used to drive away or ameliorate the hardships of the fisherman's life, and cultivate true friendship and devout worship.

After a lively chorus from the smacksmen, Her Royal Highness distributed the certificates of the St. John Ambulance Association to members of the crews of the Medical Mission ships who had gained them. Drs. Gilbart Smith and W. T. Grenfell described the circumstances under which first aid to the injured is rendered at sea. Good-conduct stripes were also distributed to a number of skippers and men, whose qualifications were stated by Mr. H. A. Campbell. Lastly, Mr. W. F. A. Archibald introduced Mr. Brickwood, steward of the Cholmondeley, who in November last plunged into the sea and saved a shipmate at the risk of his own life.

Messrs. T. B. Miller, and T. A. Denny, and Colonels Phayre and Wroughton added a few words, and the afternoon meeting was brought to a close.

In the evening the hall was again crowded. The leading feature of the proceedings was the delightful testimonies borne by a succession of fishermen representing Hull, Grimsby, Gorleston, Lowestoft, Folkestone, and Ramsgate. These spoke of the former state of things at sea, of the blessing which the Mission vessels had brought with them, and of the boon which the medical aid had been to hundreds of sick and injured men and boys. Whatever others might say, it was abundantly evident that these trawlers appreciated highly the work of the M.D.S.F.

Col. Wroughton showed a series of dissolving views, illustrating North Sea life and labour, and pleading earnestly the cause of the Mission.

Dr. W. T. Grenfell came next with a set of pictures from the Labrador coast, showing the dreary and dangerous life led by the cod-fishers. He told what he had tried to do last year, and asked prayer for the service this season. He was to start the next day for Labrador with two doctors and two nurses. He also made the cheering announcement that a Canadian millionaire, who began life as a boy at a cod-fishing station, has presented the Mission with a steam yacht for service on the Labrador coast.

Country Towns Mission.

The annual meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday, May 23, Mr. F. A. Bevan presiding. The report referred particularly to that part of the Society's work which lies in the villages, the spiritual needs of which are ground for increasing concern on the part of earnest Christians. Of the fifty-seven missionaries in connection with the Society about thirty are working in clusters of villages throughout the country. In addition to the districts which are visited regularly, many others have received occasional visits during the year, and with encouraging results. The excess of expenditure over income for the year was £75, which, with an adverse balance brought forward, increases the indebtedness of the Society to £350.

The Chairman spoke of the Society's operations in the country as kindred to those of the London City Mission, its object being to supplement the efforts of the various Christian Churches, though necessarily the work of the Country Towns Mission often lies in districts where the simple Gospel is not faithfully preached, and where the value of its labours is thereby much increased. He said that the missionaries who went into the streets and lanes of our great cities and into the highways and byways of our country districts came, in his opinion, the nearest to the apostolic pattern.

Three of the Society's missionaries gave accounts of their work, two of them speaking of effort in villages in Kent and Berkshire, and one in Burton-on-Trent.

Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, then spoke a few words, which were calculated to help any who wished to be increasingly useful in the work of the Lord.

Aborigines' Protection Society.

Lord Northbourne presided at the annual meeting of this Society, held last week at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate Within, London. Sir George Grey, formerly Governor of New Zealand, wrote apologising for absence, and added:—"During the long time I have been connected with your Society, and have watched its proceedings, it has been the means of securing for the aboriginal inhabitants of several colonies advantages and valuable privileges which would not otherwise have been secured for them." The Chairman commended the Society as being independent of party and free from bias. Frequently as civilised races advance, aboriginal races seem inevitably to disappear before their advance; but it is wise and well to remember that the true strength of England over subject races consists, as in India, in the justice and fairness with which the natives are treated.

The Bishop of Mashonaland moved—"That the extension of British territory over natives in Africa, which has had further development during the past year, calls for increased energy in securing for them just treatment and the benefits that should follow from their being brought under the influence of civilisation and Christianity." He took occasion to correct the wrong impression which people at home were apt to form of the Matabele and Mashona people from books written and letters sent to the newspapers by writers whose facts were altogether erroneous, although they claim to write with personal knowledge. Efforts were perpetually made, for instance, to blacken the character of the Mashonaland natives. It was said they were useless, unreliable, and were thieves. He had spent some considerable time amongst them, and so far as his experience went this was untrue. When they had stolen at all from the white man, they had been first robbed by the whites, and they despoiled the latter by way of retaliation. Neither were the natives lazy. They would work so long as they were fairly treated, and were not denied at the end of a month's labour the wages promised them at the beginning. The problem now in Matabeleland was how the natives could live side by side with the white people. The danger was that if an adequate amount of land was not allowed them in their own country they would be pushed over the Zambesi, either to be killed by antagonistic races, or, on the other hand, to repeat the raids which they were wont to carry on in Mashonaland. He was decidedly of opinion that they should be permitted to remain in Matabeleland in reserves of their own. It should be borne in mind that the natives of Africa were yet a child race, and care should be taken as far as possible to prevent their superadding to their own vices those of European settlers.

Rev. R. P. Ashe, from Uganda, seconded the motion, expressing a high sense of the sincerity and goodness of the natives in Uganda when they are once convinced of the error of their ways. The sense of superiority over the natives with which he first went out to Eastern Africa soon disappeared after acquaintance with them.

After hearing from Miss I. B. Wells a description of the brutalities practised upon the negro race in America, a resolution was adopted expressing "an earnest hope that the Government and people of the great American Republic will take prompt measures to prevent such lawless proceedings and to secure for all alleged offenders of whatever colour fair trial in duly constituted courts of law, the meeting being assured that this is the only method consistent with the principles of justice and humanity, and that it is equally essential to the well-being of all sections of society."

Monthly Tract Society.

The annual meeting of the Monthly Tract Society was held on Wednesday, last week, at the Prince's Hall, Ealing, and was influentially attended. The aim of the Society is to circulate tracts among the upper classes at home and abroad, and the report presented by the secretary, Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, was in many respects cheering. During the year a number of new tracts for adults and children were added to the series; but owing to the lack of funds, the committee were obliged to curtail the number of free grants. The year's work included the distribution of 1,091,946 general tracts, 730,139 foreign tracts, and 50,120 Protestant tracts. The balance sheet for the year showed that the total receipts amounted to £1708 19s. 1d.

Mr. H. J. Allcroft, who occupied the chair, evinced a warm interest in the Society and its work. Sir Robert Phayre, who followed, related his own experience as a tract distributor in the military hospitals in India. He always sought to obtain for circulation such tracts as taught the cardinal principles of the Bible. Floods and floods of obscene literature, calculated to promote the setting up of the kingdom of Satan, are being circulated, and Christians should do their utmost to counteract the influence of that class of literature by the distribution of tracts which would propagate the kingdom of God.

Colonel Morton, of Mildmay, spoke a word for the Society with much pleasure, for at the time of his conversion, in 1860, he was greatly helped by reading the tract, "Have you?" issued by the Society. Rev. J. Gosset Tanner rejoiced that attention was paid to the dissemination of literature of a distinctly Protestant character. The other speakers were Revs. J. Summerhayes and J. S. Pawlyn, who cordially commended the Society to increased support.

Field Lane Refuges.

The fifty-second annual meeting of the Field Lane Refuges was held on Wednesday last week, in St. Martin's Town Hall. For an hour before the speeches began, the children from the schools demonstrated their accomplishments.

Temporary shops had been erected in the hall, and the children could be seen engaged in tailoring, shoemaking, darning, sewing, knitting, and other handicrafts, in which they are carefully trained. They looked intensely happy in their work, and certainly gave great pleasure to the friends assembled. In due course the carpenters cleared away the temporary workshops, and the audience was then entertained with physical exercises and musical drill by the boys and girls.

Mr. Peregrine Platt, the secretary, read an abstract of the report, which stated that, through the co-operation of voluntary workers, all departments had been vigorously carried on. There are 213 boys and girls at present under training. The Bible Ragged School had gathered the poorest children together for instruction in Scripture truth, the number on the books being upwards of 1000. The Girls' Sewing School had been attended weekly by 234 children, and 521 garments had been made by them. The ranks of the Band of Hope had been kept well filled, and the meetings well attended, the membership numbering 162. The Servants' Training Home has accomplished a solid and useful work. The Ragged Church service had a congregation of about 600 every Sunday morning. The Mothers' Meeting was probably the largest in London, the number of members being 639. The Refuges had sheltered 853 men and women, and assisted 310 to work again. The agencies for the relief of distress are numerous, and have been instrumental of much good.

Hearty addresses were delivered by Dr. Newman Hall, Rev. A. J. Poynder, Vicar of St. Michael's, Burleigh-street, and Sir George Williams, who occupied the chair.

Aged Christian Blind.

Sir George Williams presided at the fourteenth anniversary of the Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, on Thursday evening. The report, read by Rev. J. F. Osborne, showed that since the commencement of the work 182 aged blind persons had enjoyed the benefits of the institution. There are now in residence 66 women and 16 men. The work of the year had been carried on with energy. The chief thing to be regretted is the deficit in the balance-sheet of £550. It was felt that any retrenchment would be a calamity, for there are about 11,000 aged blind persons in the United Kingdom who need such a home.

Rev. J. R. Wood said he had watched the work of Mr. and Mrs. Bright all along from the first, and knew of no better Christian service. Addresses followed by several ministers and friends, including one from Mr. W. C. Parkinson, of the London County Council. Rev. H. Bright, the hon. superintendent, has been indefatigable in his efforts to maintain the efficiency of the institution.

Colporteurs and their Work.

The Colportage Association connected with the Metropolitan Tabernacle has completed twenty-eight years of service. In the report read at the annual meeting on Monday evening by the secretary, Mr. W. Corden Jones, it was stated that the number of districts worked by colporteurs is ninety-one. The sales reached a total of £9580, or less by £1040 than the total of the preceding year. In addition to mere book sales, however, the aim of the Society is distinctly evangelistic, and a large number of visits have been paid from house to house. The financial position of the Association has occasioned some anxiety, as there was a "further deficit of £585 4s. 7d."

In the afternoon the men assembled in conference, many striking details of work being given; and as president of the Association Rev. Thomas Spurgeon gave an address to the men. He said that no body of workers more needed refreshment than colporteurs; they might think their work hard, but if God had put them in it they might be thankful. As colporteurs they had peculiar difficulties, for they had to work with their bodies in carrying their loads, as well as work with their minds. He hardly knew how they managed to do all they did; but the chief quality they needed was tact—the talent of talents, and the one which simply made all their other talents useful. One with feeble powers might bring more glory to God than another with great powers in whom tact might be wanting. Tact was especially necessary in visiting and in speaking to the sick; and in all cases it was just saying the right thing at the right time. With no tact they might do more harm than good, and might do so by saying the right thing in the wrong way. They needed to bring their work before God in prayer. They should also learn wisdom from their critics; hints though strangely novel might be useful. One thing was evident, their work was in accordance with the mind of God; it was a privilege to scatter and speak the Word of Life. Let the good be diffused, and the evil would flee away. Colporteurs were light-bearers, and carried on a Christ-like work, but they needed to be constant in prayer.

Dr. Spurgeon, Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, and the committee afterwards drank tea with the men. The meeting in the Tabernacle in the evening was presided over by Dr. J. A. Spurgeon.

REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR has received a warm welcome on his coming to London. Last Thursday his induction to Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting Hill, was attended by friends from all parts of London. Among the speakers were Revs. Walter Morison, D.D., and J. T. Levens. On Lord's Day morning Rev. W. M. Clow, of Aberdeen, was the preacher. The new minister occupied the pulpit in the evening, when there was a fine gathering. Both minister and congregation are hopeful that an era of prosperity and blessing has now been inaugurated at Trinity Church.

THE EXETER CAMPAIGN.

Speaking at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, on Monday, Mr. Henry Varley gave some account of the revival in Exeter. He reminded his hearers that at the recent Thanksgiving Meetings the idea was suggested that as the Israelites sent out companies to besiege the cities, so it would be well for bands of workers to attack unitedly the provincial cities one after another, labouring in each place until some impression is manifestly produced. If we are right in teaching that the close of this age is drawing near, then we may expect that it will rapidly ripen into pronounced ungodliness. As germinates the seed in the ground in the spring months, so evil has been germinating without showing very marked development. Now, however, the time of quick ripening seems to have come. We are forewarned of this that we may not be stumbled, but while we know it will be so, our protest must none the less be clear and vigorous.

Now we have been six weeks campaigning at Exeter. Our weapon has been the Word of God; but we have not hesitated to attack the strongholds of ungodliness and sin. I am more and more persuaded that we, as workers, lose a great deal of power by not openly challenging the evils that are ruining our brothers and sisters. For example, Exeter is pre-eminently characterised by its very large number of public-houses; and Mr. Huckle, a worker from the North of England, found that a large number of these houses had poor fallen women attached as part of the concern. We found instances in which, behind a most respectable frontage, shameless wickedness was being deliberately fostered and maintained. The magistrates and police declined to interfere. At length we laid the facts before them so that they were compelled to make inquiry, and such an abominable state of things was revealed that one house was peremptorily closed, and the man and his wife were disfranchised from holding a licence in the United Kingdom. Certain facts discovered were of the most atrocious nature, and a disgrace to our common humanity. The hidden things of darkness were brought to light, and wrongdoers (many of whom had been regarded as most respectable) were put to shame. There are actually in Exeter more public-houses than there are bakers', butchers', and grocers' shops.

Now, as to the work, the whole city, I believe, has been stirred from end to end. There is scarce a house or cottage into which the Word has not gone. Last night the closing meeting in the Victoria Hall was densely crowded, and when some reference was made to these abuses the people burst out into applause, which was with difficulty checked. The result of the meetings has been the conversion of hundreds, and the restoration of many backsliders; while some two or three thousand Christians have testified to great accession of spiritual strength and light through the Bible readings.

After three weeks' work I sent for Ned Wright, who can deal more effectually with a certain class than I can. He also was greatly blessed, and last night, while I had the Victoria Hall packed, he had the Royal Public Rooms crowded out. He has had several interesting cases, in which most notorious drunkards have been saved. It should be stated that the proprietor of the theatre had to withdraw a play he had announced, explaining that he could not make a house, as we had all the people. This work cannot stop. I wish Mr. Lane, or some such servant of Christ, would go and make a second attack, continuing the work.

Mr. Varley closed by reading, and applying to the circumstances of the case Prov. xxiv. 12 and James v. 1. He deplored the inertia and the policy of laissez-faire adopted by many Christian men in view of these evils of which he had spoken.

CHICAGO BIBLE INSTITUTE.—Mrs. S. B. Capron, who has been superintendent of the Woman's Department in Mr. Moody's Bible Institute at Chicago since it was founded in 1889, has resigned on account of the pressure of advancing years, and will make her home henceforth in Boston. Her successor is Miss L. L. Sherman, a graduate and former teacher at Mt. Holyoke and also principal for three years of the Northfield Training School. Both of these women have almost ideal qualifications for work of this character, and Mrs. Capron's departure to the East causes universal regret. Another change in the Institute is the appointment of Prof. W. W. White, late of the theological seminary in Xenia, O., as one of the permanent teachers.—Congregationalist.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.

A growing interest in foreign missionary work and a practical sympathy with the workers in the field is always a vigorous sign of life in any association banded together for the glory of God and the promotion of Christ's kingdom; and the missionary conference of workers among Roman Catholics, organised by the Women's Protestant Union, in connection with its third anniversary, is certainly a move in the right direction.

Following on the conversazione, noticed last week, the conference meetings, held at Exeter Hall, extended over two days, with three meetings each day. Most of the speakers were those who are engaged in a hand-to-hand fight with Rome in her own strongholds. She was represented as showing a very different front to that which she puts on in England, where, as observed by one speaker, she is in the position of a "caged tiger," and anxious to gain the good opinion of those around. Many of the speakers were from the Continent; but there were also Mrs. Hall (North-West America), Miss Muir (China Inland Mission), and Pastor Jas. Fanstone, who is just returning, with a contingent of workers, to Brazil. His testimony was that "There was nothing he had ever thought about which so confounded him as this monster of Romanism." A tree is known by its fruits; and the pastor's verdict was that, in Brazil, the tree of Romanism bears the fruit of open desecration of the Sabbath, gambling by means of extensive lotteries, intense hatred, sustained in family feuds, and an unblushing immorality. Irish Church Missions were represented by the Rev. F. B. Johnston (Miss. Curate and teacher of itinerating evangelists). Rev. C. G. Baskerville, having a son in that part of the mission field, spoke of work in Uganda, stating that, though the Protestants were first in possession there, Roman Catholic priests are now coming out in the proportion of twenty to every one sent out from Salisbury-square. Miss Ida B. Wells pleaded the claims of the negroes of the Southern States, who are in danger of becoming Romanists through the apathy and un-Christian attitude of Protestants.

Perhaps two of the most interesting addresses of the Conference were those given on Wednesday morning by Mons. Saillens, working amongst infidels and Romanists in France, and Mr. F. Hathaway (connected with Mons. Bertrand's Mission to French Priests). The latter reported a very remarkable movement among Roman Catholic priests in France, which seems "to be proceeding from God, and to have in it very little of the human element." Letters from priests were quoted, showing a growing discontent with, and disbelief in, the tenets of their own religion, and an earnest spirit of inquiry after a more enlightened way. One priest writes:—"Popery is a diabolical humbug." Much the same evidence came from Mons. Saillens. He had a conversation with a priest at Lourdes on the occasion of one of the great pilgrimages, and this priest had said he had been praying that all those people might not return home infidels. "This place," said the priest, "is the great manufactory of infidels for France."

There is food for reflection in the remark of Mons. Saillens, that Roman Catholics and infidels abroad are casting it in the teeth of the workers that "there are those in your Protestant pulpits who do not acknowledge the authority of the Bible." They had "two great enemies against which to contend—Roman Catholicism, which sought to destroy the Bible by burning it, and the Downgrade of New Theology, which sought to destroy it by scorning it."

Misses Larritt and Wilson gave a narrative, powerful in its simplicity, of the work they have been doing for five years in Haute Savoie, where they have had the privilege of seeing souls led into the light through the study of the Word of God, which they have been quietly and steadily disseminating there, in spite of opposition. Miss Wilson made a powerful appeal to W.P.U. members to come over and help in the work in France, which she said "is fast closing to the Gospel," but as yet the door is open. Interesting accounts of their work in Brittany were given by Pasteur and Madame Lecoat. Miss De Broen also spoke.

At each meeting the president (Mrs. Arbuthnot) gave statistics of the aims and objects of the W.P.U., and never lost an opportunity of urging the necessity of a personal acceptance of a personal Saviour each for her and himself. Gentlemen are now admitted as associates. Above all it is necessary that Protestant work should be Christian work. The spiritual tone which it is ever the endeavour of the president to maintain, is a hopeful sign of the W.P.U. It is intended that in the future at the monthly prayer meeting of the association, the special needs of those working among Roman Catholics in the foreign mission field should be remembered. For this purpose letters respecting their work are solicited, addressed to Mrs. Arbuthnot, hon. sec. W.P.U., Plaw Hatch, East Grinstead. A special scheme which this Association has now in hand is the raising of a fund for the placing of invalids in Protestant convalescent homes. This is intended for those who cannot afford to pay, and who are consequently often induced to go to Homes where pressure is put upon them to conform to ritualistic practices. The need for such a fund experience has proved to be very urgent.

In his speech at the closing meeting, Dr. Barnardo urged the district visitor members of the W.P.U. to ascertain and familiarise the parents in their districts with the law which provides that every child shall have the right to be brought up in the religion of its father, stating that there is a great leakage Romewards amongst the children placed in workhouses for lack of the enforcement of this law.

BEHIND THE MUSLIN CURTAINS.

"In a certain maternity case, a nurse was sent to attend a woman who had always been looked upon as fairly well off. There was nothing in the room, it is true, but a chair, a table, and a bedstead; but there were clean sheets on the bed (taken out of pawn for the occasion), and a tidy bit of red twill as coverlet. The inevitable muslin curtains screened the bed from the view of passers-by; it was a downstairs front room. The nurse, however, accidentally pushed open the door of a back room on her way to the yard, and found (it was winter) three little children with a single dirty cotton garment apiece, huddled together on a bedstead devoid of mattress or bed clothes, crying and shivering with the cold. The room was almost dark, but one could faintly discern a little coffin propped up against the wall, containing the ex-baby, who had mercifully been taken just before the next addition to the family circle."

The above is from "some daily experiences of the nurses" of St. Mary's Maternity Charity and District Nurses' Home, Plaistow, the first annual meeting of the supporters of which took place on Wednesday last in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. There was a large and influential attendance. The Earl of Winchilsea made an able chairman, and in the course of his address set forth the objects, claims, and ever-increasing usefulness of this, the only charity of the kind established in Her Majesty's reign.

Sister Katherine (Miss Twining), the superintendent, is at the head of a staff of five permanent nursing superintendents, who have thirty-five nurses under them. The work covers an area of 2800 acres, with a population of 113,000 souls, and to show the needs of that population, the nurses' visits have often amounted to 150 in a single day. During 1892, 687 maternity, and 660 district cases occupied the nurses in a total of over 24,000 visits. During the past nine months the work has greatly increased, there having been 639 maternity cases. Lord Winchilsea concluded his address with an earnest appeal that the work might be put on a larger basis, and that its scope might be enlarged by the teaching of maternity nursing, and the sending of trained, efficient help in such cases all over the country.

The Hon. Sydney Holland drew a vigorous and touching picture of the contrasted lots of the rich lady of the West-end and the poor woman of the East-end, "in the hour of woman's greatest peril." As a dock-director, he knew something of the lives and circumstances of the poor, and he could fill that hall with men who would gratefully testify to the work done by that noble woman, Sister Katherine. He asked that she and her helpers might be cheered by having their present cramped, comfortless, scattered, and totally inadequate quarters superseded by a building where, at least, Sister Katherine may have her nurses within call. At present she sleeps on one, and they on the opposite, side of the street. He spoke of the valuable work carried on by means of the diet kitchen, which sends out suitable food to invalids in necessitous cases. A memorial to the Queen prays that Her Majesty will allow the charity to be called Queen Victoria Maternity Charity instead of St. Mary's. A strong appeal was made for funds to carry on the work. Contributions should be sent to Sister Katherine, at the Central Home, Plaistow, E. M. B. G.

REVIVAL IN AMERICA.

Reports come with regard to the work accomplished through Mr. Yatman in San Francisco. For several weeks he carried on work in a great tent, speaking five times a day for a great portion of the time, and for the remainder three times a day. The audiences, large at the first, steadily increased, and culminated in the greatest service ever known in San Francisco, when fully two hundred persons arose for prayers. About three thousand listened to the closing sermon on "The Path of Life," and hundreds went away unable to gain an entrance. Among those greatly benefited were the church workers, and at the ministers' meeting before he left, Mr. Yatman gave a forcible address upon law in relation to revival work. A series of resolutions were passed at that meeting, recognising his marvellous power in leadership, his tact and skill in bringing men to religious decision, and the permanent and beneficent results of his labour, and expressing the hope that he may be able to return to San Francisco in the early fall to carry forward for six months or more the great religious campaign so auspiciously inaugurated.

In New York City, the regular noon meetings at Fulton-street and elsewhere have taken the place of the special services, and have felt the continued impulse of the interest of the past weeks. At one of the meetings, Mr. Arthur Milbury, secretary of the Industrial Christian Alliance, told of the work they were doing among the poor, not merely in relieving their wants, but in leading them to Christ, and sought the special prayer of Christian people for their best success.

In the Philadelphia Presbytery, sixteen of the churches were blest with revival. The meetings for prayer and social worship have been numerous and well attended. In Utah, the presbytery reports a marked increase in the attendance upon the mission day-schools, and a number of strong Mormon settlements, where the Christian work had hitherto seemed to be almost hopeless, have been stirred to the very centre. Many of the new converts have been strong Mormons, and there is abundant evidence that the good work has only begun.—New York Independent.

THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCES.

The lovely slopes of East Northfield are to be the scene of many interesting gatherings during the next three months. During June there will be a number of meetings of various kinds bearing on the work and welfare of the splendid schools that Mr. Moody has planted on both sides of the River Connecticut. The last few days of the month will be devoted to the Young Women's Conference inaugurated last year. Besides Mr. Moody himself a number of experienced workers will take part, including Major Whittle and Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston. The programme will comprise workers' training classes, missionary conferences, etc.

The first ten days in July will be given up to the World's Students' Convention, with a long array of speakers; those best known in this country are Bishop Thoburn and Dr. A. T. Pierson. Between this Conference and the end of July Bible lectures or readings by able students of the Scriptures will be given daily on week-days. At these two conventions for the young people physical training will not be overlooked.

The general Conference of Christian Workers will assemble as usual from August 1 to 13, and a strong team of speakers is provided. They include Dr. Gordon, of Boston, Dr. Dixon, of Brooklyn, Dr. A. T. Pierson, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Major Whittle, Mr. G. C. Needham, and others. Mr. Moody will preside, while Mr. Sankey and Mr. Stebbins will be in charge of the praise. Mr. Meyer will remain at Northfield throughout the latter half of August and will give daily Bible lectures.

An interesting event of the season will be the opening of the new Auditorium, capable of holding 2500 persons. An illustrated monthly, entitled Northfield Echoes, is about to be published, in which there will be preserved for future reference the important teachings given at these conventions.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE JUBILEE MEETINGS.

The stir of preparation for this œcumenical assembly is about over, and very soon after these lines are read by the public the deeply-interesting proceedings will have begun. The last touches of brown and gold have been given to the entrance vestibule at Exeter Hall, and its portals are ready to welcome the thousands who are now speeding towards it from all parts of the globe. Many of the foreign delegates have been for some days in evidence, and the American accent is helping to fill the void left in the Strand by the disappearance of the shovel hat of the provincial pastor.

Those who wish to become familiar beforehand with the course of next week's functions ought without delay to possess themselves of the "Illustrated Jubilee Programme," which has been prepared as an extra of The Association News. Copies can be had from the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street (6d., post free 8d.). It is a really splendid production, teeming with excellent illustrations of the places and persons that will be prominent in the jubilee engagements. The literary part of it has been done with skill and judgment.

We believe the only parts of the week's happenings not mapped out in this programme are the meetings at Exeter Hall, on the forenoon and afternoon of Wednesday—Jubilee day. The morning is to be devoted to a special session, when addresses will be given by picked and experienced speakers, on the transcendent claims of Christian work on behalf of young men, and the best methods of doing the work. The veteran Dr. Theodore Cuyler has promised to speak. It is hoped that Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, and Canon McCormick will also take part. In the afternoon there will be a reception of those representing the leading religious societies, who will bring messages of congratulation to the President and the workers of the Association generally.

The mention of the President leads us to note that the knighthood bestowed on him by Her Majesty has given genuine pleasure to his many co-workers, who rejoice that the good work of which Sir George Williams is the chief embodiment is welcomed and recognised by those in high places. It is expected that the distinction thus bestowed will help yet further to extend and deepen the influence of the Y.M.C.A., and so make it a more fruitful channel of blessing to the young men of the world.

London is determined not to be behindhand in the matter of hospitality to the special strangers within its gates these coming days. Over a thousand of the foreign and provincial delegates will be entertained in the homes of Christian friends. The arrangements for dinner and tea during the jubilee days are perhaps the biggest on record. The great canvas pavilion erected for the purpose near the Thames Embankment will seat 2300 for dinner and tea. Over the festive company will float the flags of different nations.

The extraordinary demand for tickets on the part of the public affords an index of the widespread interest felt in the occasion. The hard-worked and indefatigable secretary of the Jubilee Council, Mr. J. H. Putterill, informs us, respecting the meeting in the Albert Hall, that that leviathan structure might be filled three times over, judging from the number of applications. Another proof of the firm hold that the Y.M.C.A. has secured in the community, is to be found in the fact that over 1400 ministers in London and the provinces have promised to preach special sermons on its work next Sunday.

In our next two issues we hope to give copious sketches of the proceedings.

The Stockholm correspondent of The Daily Chronicle states that Prince Oscar Bernadotte of Sweden, the second son of King Oscar, left Stockholm on Monday for London, to take part in the forthcoming jubilee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Prince Oscar, as it may be remembered, married some years ago a private Swedish lady, Miss Munk, maid of honour to the Queen, by which marriage he forfeited his rights of succession to the throne. The Prince, who is a commander in the Swedish Navy, and, like his father, takes great interest in his profession, is very religiously inclined, and interests himself very much in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association.

ALDERSGATE-STREET MAY BREAKFAST.

Last Friday morning, by the early hour of six, the old home of the Association in Aldersgate-street was the scene of an animated gathering for the May breakfast. "Sir George," as we must now call the President, was up to time; as also were a number of American and foreign friends who had arrived for the approaching jubilee functions. A substantial and well-served repast having been discussed, a meeting followed with Mr. R. L. Barclay in the chair. Needless to say the congratulations to Mr. Williams on his knighthood were many and warm. In his reply to these the President said he had never coveted the honour graciously bestowed on him, but he trusted its result would be fresh courage and inspiration in labouring for the highest good of young men. Mr. Barclay, in the course of his remarks, alluded to the proposed amalgamation of the two centres of work at Aldersgate-street and Exeter Hall, so as to secure greater economy and efficiency in the work of the Association in Central London. Admirable addresses were given by Rev. W. R. Mowll and Rev. F. B. Meyer, while a host of other friends and visitors from afar took a share in the speaking; most of them verbally joined in the special joy of the hour. About a hundred and fifty young City men were present, and the occasion was altogether a hearty and enjoyable one.

BRIEF NOTES.

The general secretary of the Southport Association, Mr. T. W. Gladstone, has resigned his position, which he has held for nearly eleven years.

The South-Western District Executive are about to publish a new monthly to be entitled "The District Review." The first number is to appear in July.

The Leicester Y.M.C.A. Foreign Missionary Society reports that the results of the past year are a great increase over any previous year, and for this the Committee are praising God. The last conference on missions resulted in one young lady offering herself to the C.I.M. The meetings were full of power.

The National Scottish Conference will be held in Galashiels, in September. Professor Lindsay will preach on the Sabbath before the Conference, and Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, will address the reception meeting. Some interesting practical subjects will be discussed. The well-known business-man-evangelist, Mr. W. A Campbell, of Glasgow, will speak at one of the public sessions.

The Trowbridge (Wilts) Branch held successful annual meetings on May 22 and 24. Mr. J. P. Haden was re-elected president, and Messrs. C. Carey and S. W. Randall again consented to fulfil the duties of honorary secretaries. The branch has made excellent progress, and the agencies employed for the benefit of young men were never before so numerous. The total membership this year is 148.

Y.M.C.A. work progresses slowly but surely in South Africa. In Cape Town the Association has started the winter's work, and between lectures, debates, and meetings of one kind and another the rooms are kept bright and cheery like "a home from home." A straight talk is given every Sunday afternoon, lasting three-quarters of an hour, and is listened to by about 150 young men, which is a good number for Cape Town. A reception committee has been formed for the purpose of having two members "on duty" every night to welcome strangers, and as someone meets all steamers, the strangers are well looked after. Mr. W. G. Sprigg has been appointed general secretary, and is expected shortly from Melbourne.

G. A. H. M.

In connection with the Y.M.C.A. Fellowship Unions and Church Guilds in Scotland, a holiday week is being organised at Callander, N.B., July 14th-21st, at a very moderate cost. The week will be spent under canvas, and most of the time will be taken up with rambles and excursions in the Trossachs and neighbourhood, including visits to the Braes o' Balquhidder, Rob Roy's grave, Ben Ledi, the Roman camp at Ardoch, Dunblane Cathedral, Doune Castle, and Loch Katrine. Meals will be provided in common, and each morning after breakfast there will be a short service in the camp, to be addressed by representative clergymen of each of the churches. There will also be one or two addresses on social and literary subjects. Particulars may be had of Mr. G. W. Wight, 150, Hope-street, Glasgow.

---

THE HOWARD-STREET MISSION held its annual meeting on Tuesday, last week. Mr. N. Soames, secretary, read the reports showing the great amount of good work carried on. Short addresses were given by Mr. Vale (chairman), Rev. W. Nye (of Worcester Park), and other friends. The superintendent gave a brief account of the work done in the neighbourhood for the past twenty-one years.

THE Y.W.C.A.

In connection with the Windsor and Eton Branch, an afternoon meeting was held a few days ago at the Deanery, Windsor Castle. H.R.H. Princess Christian was present, showing the deep personal interest she takes in all matters in connection with the work at the Homestead. Miss Wingfield Digby, of Bournemouth, spoke of the Y.W.C.A. in its general aspects, and Miss Potter, the hon. sec. of the work amongst the young women of Windsor.

On Sunday afternoon, May 20, at 3.30, the Central Institute, Morley Halls, W., had the great pleasure of a visit from Dr. John G. Paton. The audience of about 300, presided over by Lord Kinnaird, was composed chiefly of young girls from business houses, the greater number of whom had never before seen or heard the aged missionary, and who listened with rapt attention to the thrilling story of his labours for Christ among the cannibals in the New Hebrides.

A sale of work in aid of the funds of the Edinburgh Y.W.C.A. was held last week. In declaring the sale open, General Nepean Smith said the Institution was a place where young women could come and find rest and quiet, and where their welfare was well looked after. The sale had been held to pay off a mortgage and a small debt on the building which had somewhat handicapped the efforts of the council. If they had this mortgage removed, perhaps they might further extend their good work.

The second anniversary of the West Norwood Branch has been held. Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., presided, and gave an address at an afternoon conference. In the evening, the chair was taken by Rev. E. L. Roxby, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Tulse Hill. Mrs. Donald Campbell, president, reported an increased membership, and that much successful work had been accomplished. The attendances at the Bible-classes and meetings had been good, and great spiritual blessing had been received. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird spoke afternoon and evening.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

There are now 18,710 associates in the Endeavour Societies of Great Britain and Ireland.

During the past year 3,878 members of Endeavour Societies have become members of the Christian Church.

The Christian Endeavour movement is rapidly taking hold of the United Methodist churches. In the Leeds and Bradford district there are about forty such societies, and most of them have been formed during the year.

There are now eighty-three Presbyterian Christian Endeavour Societies in the British section. At the recent Presbyterian rally in London twenty societies were represented, addresses being given by Revs. Dr. MacEwan, J. G. Train, and J. R. Gillies.

A Christian Endeavour picnic took place on Hampstead Heath on Saturday, when 150 children from the West London Mission were entertained by members of two local C.E. societies. The whole thing was got up within a week by a simple process of co-operation, which might well be followed elsewhere. It is hoped that similar parties will be provided for each Saturday on Hampstead from various West End missions.

At a conference held last week, under the auspices of the Notts branch of the East Midlands Association, Rev. R. Pursey, of Beeston, read a paper on "The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour: What it is, and What it is Doing," in the course of which he said that the Society had discovered a capacity for Christian work in the young, and given them a definite work to do. Revs. W. Woods, J. Douglas, T. Cutts, Evan Webb, and P. Miller took part in the discussion.

THE STUDENTS' CONFERENCE AT KESWICK.

We understand that the Student Volunteer Conference, initiated so successfully last summer at Keswick, will fall this year after the convention on spiritual life, instead of before it. In its last issue The Student Volunteer says:—

A splendid programme has been prepared. Old friends like Dr. Maxwell, Dr. Murray Mitchell, Dr. George Smith, Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Wright Hay, and Mr. Eugene Stock are expecting to be with us again. Among the fresh voices will be those of Dr. Bruce, Persia; Mr. Rowland Bateman, India; and Professor Snape, Aberystwyth. It is possible that we may be honoured with the presence of Dr. John G. Paton. Up to the present we have not succeeded in securing a Continental deputation; but the American S.V.M.F.M. is sending its two strongest men, Messrs. J. R. Mott and R. E. Speer. Let every Volunteer do his best to come. If anyone thinks ten days' meetings too much, let him come for the Student's Conference, whatever other days he may miss.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

THE YEARLY MEETING.

London Yearly Meeting began on Monday last by the meetings on Ministry and Oversight, which were times of remarkable power and blessing. Never before, perhaps, were they so large, and the interest was maintained throughout.

On Tuesday Isaac Sharp thrilled the gathering by his description of his world-wide travels, as an evangelist and ambassador of the Church. Besides those of Friends, missionaries of almost every Church were visited and encouraged, and especially in lands where age is venerated, to see a man in his eighty-sixth and eighty-seventh years "enduring hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ" went to the hearts of the people. The Church at home received her messenger with gladness and gratitude, and left him at liberty yet to visit Syria and the South of France if way shall open for it.

At the same meeting Dr. Richard H. Thomas and his wife, both ministers, of Baltimore, U.S.A., were liberated to visit in Gospel love the Friends in Denmark and Norway, and of Germany, and to do such other work as duty indicates in those countries.

In addition to Dr. Thomas and wife, Wm. T. Pearson, of Iowa, and Timothy B. Hussey and wife, of New England, and Theophilus Waldmeier, of Mount Lebanon, were very acceptably present. On Wednesday, the 23rd, the yearly meeting itself began. Friends had looked forward to a time of special blessing at this annual gathering, and they have not been disappointed. The "burning" question in prospect agitated their minds, and the new arrangement of a representative Home Mission Committee is expected to promote the cause of truth and the harmony of the body.

The statistics showed a growth during the year about equal to that of the population, while many believe that a much larger growth is probably near. The adult school movement spreads and blesses; the Missionary Helpers' Union prospers; temperance work gathers force; anti-vivisection, anti-opium, and purity, all gathered their earnest and hopeful hosts; and work in France was ably advocated by Justin Dalincourt, of Paris.

The modern revival of mission work among Friends was rehearsed at a large gathering on Saturday morning, in the splendid Bedford Institute, Spitalfields, by Wm. Beck, whose son has rendered such noble service to the cause. Women Friends have heard Miss Ida Wells with regard to lynching in America, and deeply sympathised with our wronged and outraged coloured brethren there.

The Home Mission and Temperance meetings occurring next week, we cannot report in our present letter. The tone of this Yearly Meeting is very hopeful, and love reigns in a remarkable degree.

Willesden, 26th May. Wm. Hobson.

FOREIGN MISSION ASSOCIATION.

On Monday evening Mr. Arthur Pease presided over the annual meeting of supporters of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association. There was a very large attendance, and much enthusiasm characterised the proceedings.

There are fifty-two missionaries in direct connection with the Association, and eighteen Friends working under other auspices. The operations of the Association are confined to Madagascar, India, and China. The year's expenditure amounted to £12,764, which was so much in excess of the income that £3527 had to be withdrawn from the legacy fund to cover the deficit.

A stirring address having been delivered by Henry Stanley Newman, the Chairman described his recent visit to the mission stations in India, creating much interest by an outline of the story of a fakir who is helping the work at Sohagpur. A man of large attainments, he had for years been in search of peace of soul, but by no rule of life or penitential journeys could he come into its enjoyment. His conversion has been abundantly attested, and he seems to be a very effective preacher among the Hindu population.

After an address by Theophilus Waldmeier, of Brumana, the venerable Isaac Sharp spoke. At the age of eighty-seven, he has just returned home in vigour of mind and body from a two or three years' visit to yearly meetings in the United States and to mission fields in China and Mexico. He spoke for twenty-five minutes of what he had seen in China, dwelling more particularly on a journey of 1500 miles he had taken up the Yang-tse-Kiang.

CITY NOON PRAYER MEETING.

The value of some central place of prayer, where, apart from denominational distinctions, Christians may meet on common ground, hear each other's voices, and wait together upon God, finds frequent illustration in the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street. On Monday, for example, there were present a party of missionaries on the eve of starting for Brazil, a young Armenian, co-worker and fellow-traveller with Dr. Baedeker, a pastor from Geneva, and an honoured evangelist fresh from stirring scenes of service in Exeter.

HELP FOR BRAZIL.

The Brazilian party were first called upon to speak. Mr. Fanstone introduced the young labourers, all of whom come from Dr. Grattan Guinness's College. Last year, he said, a young brother accompanied him (the speaker) to Brazil, and is still working usefully there; but this is the first party that has gone from this land to that vast empire, which, though nominally Christian, is in the densest darkness, knowing nothing of the simplicity of the Gospel or the Word of God. Of course it must be remembered that there are a few missionaries from the United States who are doing noble work; but the field is wide, the need is great, and something should be done by the English churches. The whole question of missions in Roman Catholic countries demands earnest and prayerful attention.

The young missionaries then spoke, telling how they were led to give themselves for Brazil, and asking prayer for their whole future service. The names are Miss Melville and Miss Vigor going to Rio de Janeiro, and Messrs. Kingston and Joyce going to Pernambuco.

A more formal farewell meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, when again Mr. Fanstone and his party were commended to God in prayer.

WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

Pastor Vernier, of Geneva, rejoiced to hear the voices of those young labourers starting for service among Roman Catholics. His own field of labour lay in Roman Catholic lands, and he had long felt that the condition of the nations on the Continent under the yoke of Rome did not receive sufficient attention. Whatever might be the experience of English Christians, it could not be denied that on the Continent the power of the Church of Rome is shaken; as a spiritual force she is losing her hold. It is very instructive to observe that Rome is discovering that she must give the Bible to the people if she would retain her hold.

"I heard," said the speaker, "a priest from Tahiti state lately that he had come home to raise a considerable sum of money in order to provide a new edition of the Bible for the natives of Tahiti, as the R.C. missionaries had found they must give the people at least the New Testament if they were to retain their hold of them. Afterwards, in the course of personal conversation, this priest admitted to me that it has become a matter of necessity to circulate the Bible."

This the Evangelicals in Geneva have long understood, and it has been their glory and joy to circulate, according to the means at their disposal, the Word of God. "Will you pray for us and for all workers in Roman Catholic lands? Although these are nominally Christian, the spiritual darkness is very dense, and the condition of the people very sad. We shall have a gathering of our agents and colporteurs at Geneva on June 27. Will you pray that we may be revived and refreshed?"

AN ARMENIAN WITNESS.

A young Armenian, Patla-ka, which, being interpreted, means "Precious," was introduced to the meeting, and, speaking by interpretation, said:—"I am very thankful to see so many children of God met in prayer. We cannot have such gatherings in my country. All we can do in the darkness is to shine out the light. When I was converted eight years ago it was great joy to me. No one told me what to do; but I could not help it: I must witness for Jesus. When the police came to my house in Baku they took all my books and papers, even the texts on the wall, and made an official inventory and carried them away. When they were going out of the door they noticed a text over the door which they had overlooked. I prayed them to leave it me, and as their inventory was finished and signed, they did leave it alone. It was, 'God is faithful'; and He is, is He not?"

Next came Mr. Varley, whose account of the Exeter Campaign we give on another page. Thus it will be seen that the prayer gathering on Monday was singularly rich and varied in interest.

THE SCOTTISH ASSEMBLIES.

The Assemblies of the Established and Free Churches began their sittings this year in Edinburgh on Thursday of last week. The opening service of the Established Church was held in St. Giles's Cathedral, where the retiring Moderator, Dr. Marshall Lang, of the Barony Church, Glasgow, preached a most impressive sermon from Mark i. 23, "All the city was gathered together at the door." Last year, in his closing address, he discussed in an eloquent manner the social problem, and in his sermon on Thursday he again called attention to it. He spoke, first, of the needs of the city, and, second, of the duty of the Church. The city, he said, is the predominating factor in modern civilisation, and our country, from being chiefly rural, is now mainly urban. Graphically did the preacher describe the East-end of some of our large cities, such as Glasgow, with its atmosphere polluted by smoke, its one-room houses, and countless public-houses. With such an environment, how is it possible for the people to have any pure and noble conceptions of life? Their surroundings drag them down and keep them down, and their only hope lies in the work of the Church. Dr. Lang pleaded earnestly with his brethren to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and persuade —ay, compel—the people to come in.

Dr. Lang also delivered an inspiring address at one of the early diets of the Assembly, when the report on "Christian Life and Work" was given in. The committee which has charge of this department of the Church's activities is under the direction of Professor Charteris, who, for the past twenty-six years, has watched over its important interests with unremitting care and zealous faithfulness. He is now obliged to resign this position owing to ill-health, but the work accomplished by this committee will be to him "a monument" more enduring than brass. Through its labours guilds have been formed all over the Church, in which there are now 20,000 young men and 18,000 women. An order of deaconesses has been instituted for work among the poor, and seventeen are now in the field, whilst a training-home and hospital are provided for them in Edinburgh. The circulation of the organ of the committee, Life and Work, is upwards of 100,000, and it is one of the chief instruments in stimulating congregations in aggressive work. Dr. Lang enlarged upon the good and great results achieved by this committee, pointing out in impressive language that the Church was not a bundle of organisations, but an organism, instinct with the life of his glorious Head, condemning in the strongest possible manner the tendency to have separate churches for the poor and the rich, and calling upon the Church to trust for her prosperity, not in an arm of flesh, but in the living God.

In the Free Assembly the sermon was preached by Dr. Walter Smith, of the High Church, Edinburgh, who was listened to with profound attention, as he dwelt upon the characteristic features of the preaching in the first age of the Church. His text was "Preaching the Lord Jesus," and it gave him abundant opportunities for contrasting much of the fickle preaching of the present day with that which once "turned the world inside out, and upside down." The first preachers proclaimed not a dry abstract of doctrine, but a living, loving Saviour for the acceptance of their hearers. Christ's death and resurrection were the two pivots on which their whole teaching turned.

The hour spent in doctrinal exercises next day was felt to be very refreshing, and the assembly turned to its work with the strong desire in each heart that this year something definite should be done for heralding a new departure in aggressive and home mission work. S.

BURDENS.—There be some burdens not felt so much by those that carry them, as by those who look on and pity. It is often said that he who lives by the sea never hears the roar of the waves. These things teach us the eternal value of such words as, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," and are a living commentary on the Master's teaching, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest . . . For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light." (Matt. xi. 28-30.)

ANGLICAN MISSIONS.

The great Conference on Missions connected with the Church of England is in session this week. A large number of colonial and foreign bishops have assembled for the event. The Conference was opened on Monday with a service in St. Paul's and a reception at the Mansion House.

St. Paul's Cathedral was thronged long before the hour of service on Monday by members of the Conference and their friends. The Bishop of Durham (Dr. Westcott) preached a long sermon from Ephesians iii. 8, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." His argument was that, as St. Paul had been called to face this great responsibility, so the English nation and the English Church had been called to a special mission for the building up of the Church in other lands. England was the mother and mistress of nations, and it behoved us to build up in our empire the Church which had been the parent of its greatness. The strength of a nation lay in its spiritual, not in its material, resources; but our material development had far exceeded our spiritual development. Let us take everywhere our witness to Christ in all its simplicity.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

The Archbishop of Dublin presided over the annual meeting of the Italian Church Reform Association on Wednesday last at Morley Hall. The report of the year, read by Rev. T. E. Campbell Colquhoun, gave evidence of increased interest in the work of the reformation carried on by Count Campello and his helpers, but afforded no reason for congratulation as to finances.

In a telling speech, the Archbishop described the important openings God has given at Papigno, Castel di Lago, and other places. Count Campello is now prepared to undertake work in Milan. With two of his ministers he hopes to plant the banner of the Cross in the midst of that great centre of atheism, indifferentism, and superstition.

Rev. J. J. Lias, having lately returned from Italy, where he visited the different stations, spoke hopefully and encouragingly of progress made. Canon Thornton also appealed, in stirring words, for funds to carry on the work, and more especially for help for the Milan Mission.

The present time is chosen for this Mission owing to the Exhibition now going on in Milan, at which will be gathered people from all parts of Italy. Communications may be addressed to Miss Mayor, Rockills, St. Stephen's-road, Bournemouth.

GOSPEL SONG IN MAURITIUS.

Rev. C. A. Blackburn, of Beau Basin, Mauritius, writes as follows to a friend in this country; any responses should be sent to the secretary of the Missionary Leaves Association, Mr. H. G. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Islington:—

Three years ago, God blessing my labour, a "Mahout," or priest, of great influence among these people, was brought to Christ. Soon after his conversion he began to tell his co-religionists of the great things the Lord has done for his soul. He earnestly desires becoming an instrument to bring others to the Saviour, and has been spending his time in singing the Gospel to his countrymen. The Sautpattis, instead of reading, sing their prayers, etc. He has lately got a book of "bhajans," or Gospel songs, which was sent from India among other Hindi tracts, and has been singing them to hundreds of Indians in their own native tunes, so much appreciated by them. They crowd round him, and listen to his songs with the greatest attention. When he has sung one of the "bhajans," he explains it to them. This is a new departure in the Mauritius Mission, and it seems to attract a great many people, and to make a good impression upon them.

I have been thinking of forming a staff of singing evangelists to go about in the camps on the sugar estates. Unfortunately, our Mission has no funds just now, and cannot take any more agents. I therefore beg of you kindly to use your influence, and try to get a few friends to join together and take this old man as their evangelist there. I am sure they would be doing a very good work; the Lord would bless their labour.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.

MEETINGS FOR THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER.

The Strangers' Rest, 24, Park-lane, after having undergone extensive alterations, is to be reopened on June 11, at three o'clock, when the Rev. Denton Thompson will speak, and Mr. F. S. Arnot, formerly of Garenganze, will speak at seven p.m.

For over eighteen years the work of preaching the Gospel and distributing the Scriptures has been carried on without intermission among the seamen of various nationalities and foreign emigrants speaking many languages. It was after gatherings for special prayer that the premises were first taken, and it is, we believe, owing to prayer that God has signally owned the labours of the band of voluntary workers who have continued so steadfastly to make known the Gospel.

It seems to be fitting, therefore, that the reopening meetings should take the character of thanksgiving and prayer, which we propose should not be confined merely to the immediate work of the Rest. We invite all Christians, of whatever denomination, to come and unite with us in pleading for a mighty revival throughout this land, which may extend, in its influence and power, to the far ends of the earth. Those who were present at the recent thanksgiving meetings held in Mr. Charrington's large hall in London, when some thousands of Christians assembled, can testify to the spirit of faith and expectation.

We are stimulated when we think that many Christians will be in sympathy with us, some of whom are believing that in the near future God is going to visit the Church in such a way that the Revival of 1859 and 1860 will be a small thing compared with what He is about to do. We are sure that the hearts of not a few round Liverpool will also respond to this desire to turn to God. Let us come with great expectation, for it is according to our faith; not limiting God by our unbelief, but remembering what wonders He has done in the old times, let us come boldly to the throne of grace.

R. Heber Radcliffe.

A CANADIAN-FRENCH CONVERT.

Mr. Bourgeoin, Principal of Pointe-aux-Trembles Schools, in which there are 184 children, largely of Roman Catholic parentage, writes to The Presbyterian Record, of Montreal:—

"Among our pupils we have a young man from Quebec, whose uncle is a priest of one of the largest churches of Montreal. B—— enjoyed the favour and protection of his uncle till a year ago. He was a member of the choir, and was well paid for his services. His uncle himself selected a boarding-house for him. But it happened that the landlord was secretly reading the Bible, and he soon spoke about it to B——, who began also to read it. Through confession the priest heard about it, and endeavoured, but vainly, to persuade his nephew to quit that house and cease reading the Bible. Seeing that he did not succeed, he cunningly caused him to lose his situation, and when he was without resources or friends he offered him all the money he needed if he would consent to go to the Jesuits' College. The lad refused, and sought admission at Pointe-aux-Trembles, where he has become, under the powerful influence of the Holy Spirit, not only a Protestant but we believe a sincere Christian.

"A few days ago he went to Montreal to see his uncle on business. Hardly had they exchanged a few words, when the priest, rising angrily, said to him: 'How is it that a scholar of Pointe-aux-Trembles dares to come and call on me? You are a dishonour to all our family. Your parents are ashamed of you, and will die of sorrow. I would rather stretch my hand to a wretched drunkard fallen in the mud of the street than touch a renegade like you.' B—— received coolly that shower of invective, and replied: 'I am very much surprised, uncle, to see a great priest like you, who pretends having made and swallowed his God this morning and every day for the last forty years at least, who still keeps in his heart such un-Christian feelings. I see better than ever why you hate so much the Bible which condemns you in every way.' To meet such insults, repeated frequently, to face the difficulties of finding a living among their own people, and to overcome the opprobrium cast over them, requires from our young converts more faith and courage than many would imagine."

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—No. 7.

One Sunday afternoon lately, whilst coming out of Sefton Park, where there were crowds walking about, I met quite a number of people with tracts in their hands. Thinking somebody must be ahead of me distributing them, I hurried on to find out who the interesting Christian worker might be, and at length overtook a young man whom I did not know. I said, "Well, friend, have you got something good here?" "Yes," he replied; "how are you, sir? I was wanting to see you. Do you remember four years ago asking me the question, "If God took me away that night, should I go to Heaven?" I said "No, I don't remember it at all." "Well," he continued, "you did, and that was the thing which caused me first to think seriously about these matters; but I know the Lord now." "A word spoken in season, how good is it" (Proverbs v. 23).

Another day I gave a tract to a Custom House officer at the Bramley Moore Dock, and talked with him. He said that some few months before I had given him a tract and asked if he knew the Lord Jesus, and these words were made the means of his conversion. How the Lord can thrash the mountains with a worm, and use the weakest instrument in revolutionising men!

When stepping on board an Egremont boat, I heard a sailor swear during a conversation he was having with half-a-dozen other sailors. I suddenly stopped, and said, "You swore, and God heard you." Then all gave me their earnest attention as I pointed them to the Saviour who died to save such sinners as we are.

Two months ago a middle-aged gentleman was rapidly passing me on his bicycle, when all at once he alighted and approached me, saying, "Will you allow me to apologise for speaking unkindly to you some time ago, when you asked me a question?" I remarked that I did not remember the circumstance. He said it was so. "I am extremely sorry for having done it, and hope you will pardon me." He quickly mounted his bicycle and was soon out of sight.

James says, chap. v. 16: "Confess your faults one to another." I believe this was a case fulfilling that injunction; not confessing sins to a priest, as there are no priests in the Christian religion, excepting Christ, who is the Great High Priest, and all believers kings and priests unto God offering up spiritual sacrifices to Him.

THE RAILWAYS AND THE LORD'S DAY.

The Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath (president, Major-General Bruce) is a new effort in connection with the London Anti-Sunday Travelling Union. Commenced by Christians of various names, in dependence upon God for supplies and success, it has already made friends among railway shareholders aggrieved at the Sabbath-breaking of the corporations to which they belong. The Sunday conveyance of goods by rail, and especially in Scotland, has attracted the committee's attention, and opposition to some portions of it is now being organised.

Perhaps few Christians thoroughly realise that there are at least one hundred and fourteen thousand Sunday goods trains in Great Britain every year. Some are of opinion that this unnecessary and uncalled-for traffic should be legally suppressed. It is largely upheld by the business men who promote it through attachment on their part to an unfounded idea of its absolute necessity to the trading public. Opposition made to proposals for its diminution or discontinuance will probably be fierce and prolonged.

The committee of the S.U., however, believing that they are in the path of duty and of Divine Providence, have chosen their motto from Deuteronomy xx. 1-4, and having laid the whole matter before the Lord, they appeal to lovers of their country and of the Lord's day to send them the monetary supplies necessary for the continuance of the struggle. The secretary, Mr. Jas. Fox Wilson, 22, Western-road, St. Leonards, will be pleased to correspond with shareholders, and to give additional information.

FAMILY PRAYER, however well-conducted, will not do it. The regular saying of a child's prayers at her bedside morning and night will not do it. Her mother must herself live in prayer; must herself live by prayer; must herself absolutely enjoy prayer as she enjoys nothing else on earth, and thus she will make prayer the best refreshment and the best enjoyment of her children.—Dr. Alex. Whyte.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—In a recent number of The Christian there is a notice of the work of the Army in Travancore, on which I beg leave to remark:—

This little kingdom is about the one-hundredth part in area and population of the Indian Empire. The London Missionary Society has laboured there ever since 1805, and the Church Missionary Society since 1816. Nor have their efforts been restricted or in vain.

The former has four principal stations, but its nine European missionaries and more than 300 native preachers and evangelists carry the Gospel into hundreds of villages. Nor have they laboured in vain. There are more than 50,000 converts associated with this one Mission, and every year the number is increased by hundreds, and even thousands, whilst more than 16,000 scholars in 360 schools attest the variety and thoroughness of the work.

The Church Missionary Society, aided by the Zenana Society, has a record of equally remarkable results, its fourteen European missionaries being aided by 406 native helpers, who have at least 28,700 converts under their charge, and two years ago received 1800 in one year.

In Travancore and the adjoining small province of Tinnevelly, there are, I believe, more missionaries and fairly well-trained native agents, and certainly a larger proportion of native Christians, to the general population, than in any other equal area of all India.

Now, is it right or wise, is it according to the principles clearly deducible from the teaching of our Saviour and the Apostles, for the Salvation Army to pass by many districts through India far larger than Travancore, where there are no missionaries or native agents, to intrude into fields already the best and longest occupied?

This is contrary also to a principle generally accepted by all the Evangelical agencies throughout India, of non-interference with one another's spheres of labour, and it must, in many ways, cause anxiety to the agents previously there, endanger the peace and discipline of the numerous Christian communities they have gathered, and injure the Christian cause in the estimation of the heathen.—I remain, yours faithfully, Edward Storrow.

MISSIONS IN ANGONILAND.

Dear Sir,—I understand that exception has been taken to statements contained in my letter inserted in your issue of Dec. 14, 1893. When I then stated that "eight Z.I.M. workers had gone forward into Angoniland—a country hitherto unreached by missionary effort," I was simply quoting from letters just come to hand from Africa. I now find, however, that after the decision was arrived at, events transpired to prevent some of the proposed workers going forward. The Z.I.M. have only four missionaries in Angoniland. The five stations granted to this Mission in that part of the British territory have all been located by our workers, but not yet all possessed. We trust some of the large contingents recently sent forth will be able to take up work at these stations.

The other part of the statement has already been replied to by Mr. James Stevenson, of Largs, who pointed out that the Free Church of Scotland has had for years more than one station in South Angoniland. I am glad to know from some of our own missionaries in the field that the Livingstonia Mission is doing a valuable work there, the influence of which extends for miles around. May the Lord more and more increase their number and their usefulness!—Yours very truly, R. Caldwell.

FIRST OFFENDERS AND HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

Dear Sir,—I find it is proposed that in future all lads under seventeen years of age, who may be charged or convicted for any offence, shall be kept separate in our prisons from those of riper years.

This appears at first sight to be a change for the better in prison administration, but long experience teaches that it is not so. I know many lads seventeen years of age who are far more "criminals" than men at thirty-five; and to mix such youths with young boys who have committed a first offence, would be disastrous in the extreme.

What I would suggest, therefore, is (1) That no lad who has been previously convicted should be allowed to exercise, or should in any way be classed, with first offenders. (2) That no boy under fifteen years of age who is a first offender should be sent to our ordinary prisons at all, but should be otherwise dealt with, say, for instance, by a committee formed in connection with our School Boards.

Briefly stated, my argument is, that not so much the age, but the proficiency in crime, should be the point to be kept in view in dealing with the matter in question. Yours faithfully,

Wm. Wheatley.

HOME OF REST, ALPERTON PARK.

A Home of Rest has been opened at Alperton Park, near Harrow, Middlesex, which it is hoped will prove a source of health and blessing to many of the young men and women engaged in business in London. This Home has been opened to meet a long-felt need, in connection with the Bible Class work of business houses, viz., a bright house within easy distance of the Metropolis, where anyone requiring rest and change, or while in search of a situation, may find all the comforts of a home at the lowest possible cost, and in fellowship with those who love our Lord Jesus Christ.

The house is prettily situated, and has a garden and field attached. It commands an extensive view of the surrounding country, and the air is invigorating. At the opening recently, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who is president of the undertaking, addressed a goodly assemblage of friends on "The Two Rests"—the rest given and the rest found (Matt. xi. 28, 29). Messrs. Barton and Grinter, the founders and hon. secs., briefly related how they had been led to open the home. Young people employed in houses of business will always have the priority of admission, but when rooms are vacant any Christian workers, hospital nurses, governesses, and others, will be welcomed. Communications should be addressed to Sister Emma, The Rest, Alperton Park, Harrow, Middlesex.

CESAREA HOSPITAL.

The third annual report of this institution, worked by American missionaries, says: There is no longer any debt on the building. A year ago we reported that three patients had been cared for in the guest rooms of the dispensary. During the past year one hundred and six patients have been accommodated, ninety of them during the past six months since the hospital began to be known. The number is limited apparently only by the lack of accommodation. Almost all of them have been surgical cases.

Seventy-eight were Armenians and Greeks, and twenty-eight Mohammedans. The aggregate number of days spent by these patients here has been 1271, giving an average of twelve days each. Thus, the building has turned out to be much more of a hospital than we dared to hope in the beginning, But the makeshifts which we are compelled to adopt in the care of these patients and the inadequate nursing weigh heavily on us. For economy of space as well as of money we have no bedsteads.

Aside from the in-patients, the record of the out-patient work is as follows: new cases, 2541, old cases 2312, total 4853; visits made 774. Of the 2541 new cases there were, Turks 792, Armenians 1161, and Greeks 576. Communications regarding the work should be addressed to Rev. William S. Dodd, Cesarea, Turkey.

HOW BISHOP SMYTHIES DIED.

The following particulars regarding the last days of Bishop Smythies have been communicated by Rev. Duncan Travers, secretary of the Universities Mission to Central Africa. The Bishop had been working very hard for months. He had had several severe attacks of fever, and had been in the hospital at Zanzibar for a fortnight before he and Mr. Travers embarked on board the steamship Peiho on May 4. The Bishop, who had been at Magela Station, about thirty-five miles from the coast, returned to Zanzibar on April 3. He conducted the morning service at Kiungani on April 8, and preached at the Cathedral in Zanzibar the same day. Two days afterwards he gave what proved to be his last address, and shortly afterwards was taken to the hospital, where he remained until he left on May 4. From the moment of departure he grew worse. On the day after sailing he was very restless, sleeping and waking by turns. On Sunday, May 6, he was no better. In the evening he was moved to a more airy cabin, but later on he became much worse. Early on the following morning everything betokened that the end was near. The Bishop became unconscious, and at half-past nine died. Had the steamer been one day nearer Aden, it might have been possible to bring the body there, but this was out of the question; and so at sunset the body was committed to the deep.

REV. J. McNEILL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

At the closing meeting of Rev. John McNeill's mission at Johannesburg, South Africa, an alarm of fire was raised in the densely-packed circus. The windows were immediately smashed, and people rushed out in all directions. Before the place was cleared, order was restored, and many returned to hear the close of Mr. McNeill's address. He described the false alarm as a ruse of Satan to break up the meeting, but said he would not allow himself to be done by the devil.

Mr. McNeill's experiences at Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, were somewhat remarkable. Up to the time of his arrival there, a variety company had, in professional parlance, being "doing good business." Mr. McNeill proved a great counter attraction, and on the evening of his first appearance the attendance at the theatre was barely sufficient to cover the electric light bill. The second evening was still more unprofitable. The curtain rose to an audience of only one person, whose money was, of course, returned. At Mr. McNeill's service not an inch of space was obtainable.

A correspondent in sending to us one of the foregoing paragraphs, says "It shows that the good old Gospel story has lost none of its drawing power even in these hard places of the earth." The writer had the pleasure of attending all the meetings held by Mr. McNeill in Bloemfontein, and they were indeed seasons of power and soul blessing.

THE WORLD'S NOONTIDE HOUR

OF PRAYER AND PRAISE.

We pray to God fourfold:—That alcohols and narcotics be banished: for home influence in government. That the laws for the world beyond the home may be framed by the same two voices which frame the laws for the home. That God's standard of virtue be acknowledged for the brother and the sister. That artificial restrictions be removed from all honest employment.

And Christ we adore. So the grace within us—For home and the world beyond the home, maketh supplication. "Oh ye children of men, praise ye the Lord, praise Him and magnify Him for ever. Oh ye holy and bumble men of heart, praise ye the Lord, praise Him and magnify Him for ever. Oh ye light and darkness, praise ye the Lord, praise Him and magnify Him for ever. As it was in the beginning is now, and ever shall be, his kingdom without end."—Amen.

AN IDEAL SUMMER HOLIDAY.

Several friends have written us with reference to the announcement in last week's Christian, asking if the Summer School will open for ladies. We regret that this point was not made quite clear, especially as our answer will, we fear, be a disappointment.

Much as we should have wished to be able to meet the needs of lady-workers in this direction, we have found it impossible to arrange for their reception at Cliff this time. God willing, we shall hope to do something for their accommodation next year.

EPILEPTICS.—The committee of the National Society for the Employment of Epileptics announce that, owing to a munificent gift of £5000 from Mr. Passmore Edwards, they have been enabled to secure a farm of 135 acres for the proposed Epileptic Colony. Skipping's Farm lies near the village of Chalfont St. Peter's, in Buckinghamshire, and is within easy reach of the Rickmansworth and Chorley Wood stations on the Metropolitan Extension, and the Rickmansworth station on the North-Western Railway. It is situated in a most healthy and beautiful neighbourhood, at an elevation of about 300 feet above the sea. The building of suitable cottages will be commenced and proceeded with as speedily as possible for the reception of persons suffering from epilepsy, and yet capable of some occupation. The funds, however, are entirely inadequate to the erection of such cottages and workshops as will meet the probable demands for admission, and the colony will be able to be commenced only upon a very limited scale, although there is a very large number of epileptics in this country whose condition would undoubtedly be improved by the treatment and care they would receive in the colony. The secretary of the Society is Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 20, Hanover-square, W.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The very sudden death of Professor Romanes removes from Oxford a very distinguished and popular member of the University. He was a great Darwinian in biological views, and founded the Romanes lectureship, of which Mr. Gladstone was the first and Prof. Huxley the second holders.

Anything connected with Uganda is very welcome in Oxford, and hence Captain Lugard's recent lecture was attended by a very large audience. His testimony to the marvellous power of missionary work there was full and hearty, and cannot fail of being of great value to the representative and distinguished company present.

The anniversary of the Cowley-road Congregational Church Sunday-school was held last week, when sermons and addresses were delivered, and a very encouraging report read. One note of discord was regrettably heard, a minister referring to a belief by some in an "infallible book" as being incorrect, and asserting that it should be in "an infallible Christ." Such an antithesis is utterly fallacious, and is calculated to do immense harm. Fortunately, another minister present quietly objected to this mischievous statement.

The open-air services at the Martyrs' Memorial are being vigorously carried on by a band of Inter-collegiate Christian Union men.

CAMBRIDGE.

Meetings in connection with the South African General Mission were held at the Henry Martyn Hall on Monday afternoon and evening. Rev. T. Graham Tarn presided. Mr. Spencer Walton, director of the Mission, gave an interesting description of the progress, difficulties, and encouragements experienced in that vast mission field.

Those members of the University who promote the Sunday evening open-airs have met with some obstacles in their earnest endeavours. Last Sunday evening the police ordered them from one spot, and when in the Market Square, opposition was shown by some demonstrative and noisy undergraduates.

On Sunday morning Rev. C. J. Proctor, vicar of Holy Trinity, preached an interesting and stimulating sermon on "Christian Socialism." We were pleased to hear him, while approving of many of the aims and principles of Socialism, emphasising the insufficiency of these principles alone, and their inability to transform the heart and life. In the evening Principal Moule preached upon "The Forerunner." His sermon was marked by that devoutness and deep spirituality so characteristic of him.

Dr. Bonney, of St. John's College, preached the University sermon on Sunday afternoon in Great St. Mary's Church.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

One of the most useful institutions in Dumbarton is the Denny Institute, which was erected to perpetuate the memory of the late William Denny, shipbuilder, whose life was written by Professor Bruce. An endowment of £3500 has now been provided for it by the Denny trustees.

On the evening of the opening day of the Free Assembly at Edinburgh, a great temperance meeting was held, presided over by Lord Overtoun. It was reported that ninety-two per cent of the F.C. students for the ministry are total abstainers. Rousing speeches were made by the chairman and others.

The original Secession Synod held its meetings last week in Glasgow. This is one of the smallest Presbyterian communions in Scotland, there being in it only twenty-seven congregations. Four students belonging to the Free Church Secessionists were allowed to enter the Hall of this Church to be trained for the ministry.

Hutchesontown Free Church, which was acquired by the Caledonian Railway Company some years ago, has come into the hands of Rev. John Robertson, of the City Temple. It will be used by him as a baptistry, a rallying-place for his workers, and a meeting-place for week-night gatherings. The Christian Scotsman is to appear as a weekly on July 26.

Dr. Tyson, who is so widely known for his drink cure, visited Glasgow last week, and, under the directions of a committee of prominent citizens, commenced to treat several dipsomaniacs. Each member of committee brought forward a case, and undertook to see that the patient strictly conforms to the directions given him. The results of the recent experiments in Dundee have been satisfactory on the whole.

In the report of the religious condition of the people which has been presented to the Established Church Assembly, the Commission, which has visited chiefly in Fifeshire and Aberdeenshire, state that a steady improvement is taking place in the social condition of the agricultural population, though the "bothy" system still lingers there. "Sleeping accommodation is not yet all that it should be, and houses for married men are far too scarce in many districts."

IRISH NOTES.

The sixth annual convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held this week in the Antient Concert Rooms, Dublin.

Six or seven years ago unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper was used in only about half a dozen Irish Presbyterian churches, but now it is used in nearly a hundred.

The Dublin University Fuh-Kien Mission is to be assisted by a Ladies' Auxiliary, which has been recently formed, and which is about to send a lady missionary to China.

The first of a series of consecrated meetings, under the auspices of the Belfast Y.M.C.A., was addressed by Rev. Henry Montgomery, who gave a very earnest talk on "Consecration."

Mrs. Mary Ann Fuller, wife of Rev. Dr. Fuller, formerly rector of St. Mary's, Dublin, has bequeathed £21,000 to religious and charitable purposes in Dublin and the neighbourhood.

The opening meeting has been successfully held of a society which has been inaugurated in Trinity College, Dublin, for the purpose of banding together church-workers within the University.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard received a warm welcome in Dublin last week, when they addressed two large and enthusiastic gatherings on the various aspects of the temperance reform.

The sixty-fifth annual meeting of the Irish Congregational Union was held last week in the Independent Church, Cork, under the presidency of Rev. W. G. Davies, of Coleraine, and was of a very encouraging character. Delegates from England and Scotland were present.

OBITUARY.

MRS. WALTER DOUGLAS.

A letter from Mr. Harrison Ord, dated Geelong, April 23, brings the sorrowful tidings of the death of Mrs. Walter Douglas, whose painful illness we mentioned in a recent issue. Without any unusually alarming symptoms she passed quietly away in her sleep on April 19. Her husband, who is himself in a very weak state of health, feels the blow very acutely, and we earnestly commend him to the prayerful sympathy of our readers.

MRS. STANLEY PUCKLE.

Many of our readers will hear with deep regret of the death of Mrs. Stanley Puckle, of The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells. She passed peacefully away in sleep, after a few days' illness of heart disease and congestion of the lungs, on the morning of Tuesday, May 22. She was deeply interested in work among the poor, and soldiers, and was specially known to readers of The Christian in connection with the "Lavender Bag Mission." It is the great wish of her sorrowing husband and daughters that they may able be to carry on the work she so loved.

REV. C. F. MOSS.

The death is announced of Rev. C. F. Moss, a retired Congregational minister, who resided in Birkdale. He occupied the pulpit in Southport as recently as Sunday week. For twelve years he laboured as a missionary of the London Missionary Society in Madagascar, and the malarial fever, with which he was several times seized, seriously weakened his constitution. From 1884 to 1889 he was pastor of the Trafalgar-road Congregational Church, Birkdale, and for several years was one of the secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society Auxiliary for Lancashire and Cheshire.

PROFESSOR ASTIE, LAUSANNE.

The death is announced of Professor J. F. Astié, of the Independent Faculty of Theology, Lausanne, at the age of seventy-two. He was a man of solid culture and wide experience. When young he studied at Geneva, Halle, and Berlin, and after a three years' pastorate in America, he entered upon his professorial work. He was a disciple of Vinet, and did much to popularise the teaching of that great man. His published works included "The Spirit of Vinet" (giving selections from Vinet's works), and a very useful edition of Pascal's "Thoughts." He was also the author of a commentary on St. John's Gospel.

MR. STEPHEN C. CORK.

Park Chapel, Crouch End, has lost a most devoted worker in the person of its secretary, who passed away on the 19th inst., at the age of sixty-seven. His illness was but brief, resulting from a chill contracted while meeting delegates of the Christian Endeavour Convention at the railway terminus. For many years he had worked laboriously yet joyfully in all kinds of church work, seeking no reward and deprecating any praise. Humbly, faithfully, he was ever at his post, and, having enjoyed excellent health, was always ready to do the work of others as well as his own. The place of such a man will be very hard to fill. He was an efficient helper in the work of the Sunday School Union.

REV. JOHN CAMPION, DONCASTER.

Many, familiar with work in Yorkshire, will hear with regret of the falling asleep, on Saturday, 19th inst., of Rev. John Campion, who was ordained fifty one years ago, and spent the whole of his clerical life in Yorkshire. He will especially be remembered for his work for nearly a quarter of a century at St James's, Doncaster, the "railway church." The C.M.S. and other Evangelical organisations always found a warm and active friend in Mr. Campion. He was a diligent sick visitor, thoroughly loyal to the Church of England, but an uncompromising opponent of everything in the shape of Romanising Ritualism. Of late years he has taken a somewhat gloomy view of the future of the English Church, predicting that it would go on from bad to worse till righteous public indignation would sweep it away entirely as an Establishment. The advance of Ritualism has been to him a source of intense grief and sorrow.

MR. CHARLES E. WHITTLE.

Mr. Charles E. Whittle, the only son of Major D. W. Whittle, was recently killed by a fast passenger train on the Chicago and North-Western tracks. Mr. Whittle made his home in Wheaton. Upon returning from Chicago, he got off the North-Western train at Elmhurst, about ten miles from Wheaton, and started home on his bicycle. He was fond of this exercise, and often rode that part of the journey morning and evening. He kept between the track for a few miles west of Elmhurst, when the 6.30 fast train from Chicago for Omaha approached him. The engineer gave no alarm by whistle or bell, and a projecting beam on the pilot of the engine struck him on the back of the head, fracturing his skull and causing instant death. Mr. Whittle was about twenty-five years of age, and leaves a wife and two little girls, the younger being a baby. Most of his life was spent in Chicago, where he was universally esteemed. He was educated in the public schools of Chicago and in Edinburgh. A young man of fine physique and remarkable ability, he had already won a high place as a man of business and a citizen. Combined with business talent, he possessed Christian qualities which exercised an influence for good among his fellows. Much sympathy is felt for Mrs. Whittle the young widow; Major and Mrs. Whittle, the father and mother, and the two sisters, May and Ruth. Major Whittle, who was engaged in evangelistic work in Wilkesbarre, Pa., was at once notified of his son's death.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Oxford.—Messrs. W. P. Crombie and W. Day are holding special meetings in Oxford, and a work of grace is proceeding. Each day Christians meet for prayer apart from denomination.

Cardiff.—An evangelistic mission, conducted by Miss Oram, at Miskin-street Chapel, has been productive of great good. The services have been well attended, much power has accompanied the message of the Gospel, and several persons have professed conversion.

Mr. W. G. Taylor has been evangelising in the Mint Chapel, Exeter, giving ten days' work and laying himself out for a soul-saving campaign. The congregations were large, and there were a number of genuine conversions. On the last two evenings Mr. Taylor lectured on Australian needs to crowded gatherings. His visit has been a blessing to many.

Ireland.—A fortnight's Gospel mission has been held in Belfast by Rev. W. G. Taylor, of Sydney, Australia. Mr. Taylor is giving this week to similar work in Dublin, and purposes giving next week to Enniskillen. Excellent evangelistic services have also just been held in Carryduff Presbyterian Church by Rev. Chas. Davey and Rev. Dr. Williamson, of Belfast; and in Ballybay Methodist Church by Rev. G. W. Rea, of Ballyshannon.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing upon twelve days' mission in Gospel Tent, Brigadier Hill, Enfield, conducted by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, commencing Sunday, June 3.—For special services at Oxford by Mr. W. P. Crombie and others.—That God will abundantly bless a mission for youths that is being started in Bloomsbury.—For a mission by Mr. E. J. Kennedy in Hengler's Circus, Hull, from June 17 to 24.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. James Stokes, of New York, the well-known friend of Y.M.C.A. work in Paris, has been nominated a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., left Cape Town on Wednesday week on his way home from Australia, and is expected in London the second week in June.

Archdeacon Warren, of Japan, is expected home shortly, and friends in Sunderland are looking forward to his making that town his headquarters while in England.

Dr. William M. Taylor, of New York, is, by latest accounts, greatly improved in health, and his friends are encouraged to hope for him many more years of usefulness.

Rev. J. Stephen Barrass, Rector of St. Michael Bassishaw, is suffering from a throat affection, and has been forbidden by the doctors to speak in public for two months.

The Princess Christian has given her patronage to a bazaar to be opened at Morley Halls, Hackney, on June 12, for the benefit of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche in Stepney Causeway and branches.

Rev. B. Baring-Gould has been appointed to succeed Rev. C. C. Fenn on the Secretariat of the C.M.S. He intends starting in the autumn for a six months' tour through the missions.

Rev. W. A. Wills, who has done good work in Chou Ping, China, has arrived home in fairly good health. He reports a large proportion of baptisms as having lately taken place in his district.

Mr. F. S. Arnot, of the Garenganze Mission, has taken a house in Waterloo, Liverpool, where he will for a time conduct the export business of the mission. A number of friends from various parts of the country recently met for missionary conference at his house.

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe are hoping to spend June and July at Braemar in the Aberdeenshire Highlands. We trust our much-esteemed brother may find there a recruitment of his physical health, which for some time past has been in a weak state.

Mr. J. Barnabas Bain, of the Liverpool Town Mission, who has been on a two-months' trip to the East for his health's sake, has returned greatly benefited thereby. He received last week a very hearty welcome from his friends and fellow-workers.

Rev. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. and Miss Cuyler were expected to arrive in London on Tuesday. They have come across the Atlantic for the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee, and will, during their stay in London, be the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Newman Hall, at Hampstead.

Dr. Newman Hall, in his Merchants' Lecture at the Memorial Hall, on Tuesday week (on the subject of "Assurance"), observed that it was his 78th birthday. He could look back on more than sixty years, during which he had had the assurance that Christ was his Saviour and friend.

Rev. John M. Scroggie has been visited at his home at Haddington, N.B., by Professor Sir Grainger Stewart, of Edinburgh, who says, "Although Mr. Scroggie's disease is of a very serious nature, there is no reason why he should not get perfectly well, and be as strong as ever he has been for his evangelistic work."

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan.—Our readers will be grieved to hear that Mr. Fegan's health has been failing lately. He came back from a short change worse than when he started, and is now confined to bed at the Boys' Home. The head pains and sleeplessness from which he suffered some years ago have returned, and have brought on much prostration and depression. A prolonged rest, with perfect quiet and as much freedom as possible from care of any kind will, it is hoped, with God's blessing, restore him to health.

BE NOT INTERMITTENT in attention to the education of your child. Consider that the vigorous and complete unfolding and improvement of each succeeding stage of life depends on the vigorous, complete, and original development of every preceding stage.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—A gathering of representative friends took place last week at Highbury New Park, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Merriam. Mr. Richard Stone, of Union Chapel, Islington, and vice-chairman of the Ragged School Union, presided. In the course of his address he urged that the religious teaching of the ragged schools was wanted more than ever now that we had a national system of education. Rev. W. H. Harwood said that the friends at Union Chapel had worked with the Ragged School Union ever since its formation. The Ragged School Union had ever been the ally of the churches, and during the Jubilee year all the churches ought to make collections on its behalf. The children of Christian families should have some knowledge of the working of this society, the work of which was still so sorely needed.

The Book World.

JUNE MAGAZINES.

YOUNG ENGLAND maintains its high ground; instruction combining with imagination to make it useful and bright. (3d. Sunday School Union.)

THE FIRESIDE, edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, is "always good alike." In the June number there are some very attractive sketches, also selections from various sources. (6d.) Other useful serials are:—HAND AND HEART, THE DAY OF DAYS, and HOME WORDS. (1d. each. "Home Words" Office.)

Messrs. Partridge's monthlies are of the most useful kind. For elders there are THE MOTHERS' COMPANION and THE FAMILY FRIEND, both for the home circle. For juveniles there are THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND and THE INFANTS' MAGAZINE. THE FRIENDLY VISITOR is a Gospel monthly for all classes (1d. each.)

THE KING'S OWN.—The June issue of this capital monthly has many attractions. Rev. D. Gath Whitley continues his "Glimpses of a World Long Passed Away," describing some monsters of the deep in olden times. The editor, Rev. John Urquhart, writes on the antiquity of Hebrew writing, and Rev. F. E. Marsh answers the question, "Why am I a Christian?" (6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

THE MISSIONARY REVIEW OF THE WORLD is full of matter of peculiar interest and value. Dr. Pierson writes on "Miracles of Missions"; Rev. James Douglas, of Brixton, S.W., on "Unoccupied Mission Fields," with special reference to Tibet; Rev. F. B. Noble, secretary of the Chicago Congress on Africa, on "Christendom's Rum-Trade with Africa: a Modern Devil's-Mission"; and Mr. Spencer Walton gives an account of mission work at the Cape. Maps and illustrations add to the usefulness of this healthy monthly. (Funk and Wagnalls.)

GOOD WORDS has a leaf or two out of Dr. Lansdell's diary of travel in an excellent paper called "Across the Backbone of Asia." He says the people of Chinese Turkestan are without a single missionary, Protestant, Papal, or Russian. Rev. A. R. Buckland writes an animated and well-informed account of London 'buses and busmen. "The Bishop of Ripon at Home" is one of the most readable papers in the SUNDAY MAGAZINE. Rev. R. P. Ashe's article on Uganda is welcome at this crisis in the history of that country. Prof. Lindsay eulogises the late Prof. Robertson Smith. (Isbister & Co.)

Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s serials are always welcome, and yield a good dividend of interest to the reader. THE QUIVER holds a firm position for attractiveness and variety: it moves with the times in artistic excellence, and keeps up the high tone of its articles. THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND, when complete, will be a veritable magnum opus. Part 92 reaches the time of the ill-fated campaign for the relief of Gordon at Khartoum. THE BOOK OF HEALTH will well repay the closest personal study. COTTAGE GARDENING is in every way admirable as a counsellor and guide in matters domestic. We have received Part 6 of Dr. Payne-Smith's FAMILY PRAYER BOOK.

THE YOUNG MAN has a portrait of Mr. A. E. Fletcher, editor of The Daily Chronicle, and a vivid literary sketch of him in the double rôle of editor and farmer. Dr. Dallinger unfolds some of the mysteries and delights of microscopic research. Miss Agnes Weston has a prominent and deserved place in THE YOUNG WOMAN. Among the contributors to a good number are Mrs. Josephine Butler, Agnes Giberne, Mrs. Oliphant, Mrs. Esler, Miss Billington, and others. The article on "Children at School," by Dr. Schofield, is itself worth the price of THE HOME MESSENGER. There is a short but excellent sketch, with portrait, of Dr. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh. (Partridge & Co.)

THE CENTURY is brilliant as ever in illustration and varied in articles of solid worth. The authors of "Across Asia on a Bicycle" tell the story of their ascent of Mount Ararat. There is a description of a new invention by Mr. Edison called the Kinetophonograph, by which action pictures can be recorded and reproduced at any distance of time. A short paper on "Tissot's Illustrations of the Gospels" is accompanied by some very striking pictures. A series of letters from ex-ambassadors on American civil reform show the deep necessity of doing away with the "spoils system" of awarding civil offices in the United States. ST. NICHOLAS is a rare children's feast of frolic, phantasy, information, and fine pictures. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THE SUNDAY AT HOME, among many excellent papers, has a timely notice of the Y.M.C.A. jubilee, a well-illustrated sketch of "Sunday in Oxford," and a deeply interesting case of conversion, illustrating the work of Miss Child's Welcome Home. THE LEISURE HOUR is full of good things; we are specially attracted by a racy sketch, "Galloway Bygones," from the facile pen of Rev. S. R. Crockett, and an account of the new Tower Bridge, by Mr. W. J. Gordon. THE GIRL'S OWN PAPER and BOY'S OWN PAPER maintain their high reputation. The smaller periodicals maintain their high character. FRIENDLY GREETINGS is an admirable selection of illustrated readings for the people. THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN and LIGHT IN THE HOME are as cheerful as ever; and for the little folks there are THE CHILD'S COMPANION and LITTLE DOTS. (Religious Tract Society.)

ORIGINAL HYMNS FOR CONFERENCES AND SPECIAL MISSIONS. By C. Russell Hurditch. (1d. Shaw & Co.) Many will welcome this little collection—evangelical in tone, Scriptural in teaching, and melodious in measure. Doubtless not a few of the hymns will find their way into general use in the service of praise.

EVERYBODY'S COOKERY AND HOUSEHOLD GUIDE. Saxon & Co. (Cloth 6d., leather 1s.) "Everybody" has long since learnt to value this series of publication, dealing as they do with a great variety of subjects. Here we have 170 pages of recipes, alphabetically arranged, with an appendix of various useful matters relating to household necessities, with comprehensive index, etc. This addition to the series is sure to meet with wide acceptance which it deserves.

STREAMS FROM THE VALLEY OF BERACHAH, by S. A. Lindenberger (Jno. Snow & Co. 3s.). The first chapter describes the healing by faith of the writer. But she goes beyond faith-healing to faith-health—"Not a blessing or simply a healing, but the Blesser and Healer dwelling inside, and Christ's divine health for the body continually supplied." What exactly is meant by this we do not apprehend. The remaining chapters contain much that is very helpful in Christian experience.

"HE'S DONE IT, SIR." By Pearl Fisher. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) This is an attractively got-up and well-written account of the rise and development of Mr. T. Wintle's Undenominational Christian Mission in Monmouthshire. It constitutes a telling instance of what can be done by one consecrated man who heartily gives himself to service among his own people. The incidents interwoven with "Pearl Fisher's" narrative show that the gospel of prayer and loving help is as powerful as ever in blessing sinning and sorrowing humanity.

WITNESSES FOR CHRIST, the very useful work of Edward Backhouse and Charles Tylor, has appeared in a new and cheaper edition (4s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.). By judicious compression, the matter which originally occupied two volumes is now presented in one, which is admirably printed in bold type. The work has been revised throughout, and fully justifies its second title, "Memorials of Church Life from the Fourth to the Thirteenth Century." There are twenty illustrations; and an index and list of authorities add to the usefulness of the volume, which is a sequel to "Early Church History," by the same authors.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES IN MODERN ENGLISH, translated from the Greek by Ferrar Fenton, is a good piece of tentative work. We doubt if the author would regard it as more than this, although the book is in its fourth edition, revised and corrected. Every page is suggestive, but we have detected several passages which but weakly represent the original, and are only indifferent specimens of modern English. Mr. Fenton deserves encouragement in his endeavours to help intelligent people to understand the Scriptures; and in a future issue he will be able to present proper names with uniformity, to adopt various improvements, and to guard against annoying typographical and other errors. The preface would be none the less forcible for the exclusion of some expressions of an unjustifiably censorious character. (1s. Digby, Long & Co.)

---

The tenth issue in the "Excellent Women" series (1d. each. Religious Tract Society) is devoted to MARY LOUISA WHATELY, so long associated with Christian work in Egypt.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF OUR LORD, by Thomas Ryan, is a review, on "Futurist" lines, of the prophetical works of Dr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness. There is also a study on the Seventy Weeks of Daniel's prophecy. (3d. W. G. Wheeler.

THE "JOYFUL NEWS" MINIATURE series of booklets is likely to prove popular as well as useful. The first two issues are directed against indulgence in strong drink and the gambling vice. (3s. 6d. per 100. Thomas Champness, Rochdale.)

WANTED—ANTISEPTIC CHRISTIANS, is a striking booklet by Maud Ballington Booth, who says: "The principles of antiseptic surgery are cleanliness, purity, non-contamination. As for Christianity, its very spirit and essence is purity, war against sin, and non-contamination with the world.' (W. G. Wheeler.)

LINES FOR THE MASTER is a series of poems by Ernest Spring, printed on tinted paper, and issued as tasteful leaflets by Biddle & Son, Haydon-place, Guildford (packets of 100, 1s. 4d. each). A sound spiritual tone accompanies the lines. Copies of the series of twelve leaflets will be sent free to such as forward a halfpenny stamped addressed envelope.

GOSPEL LEAVES, by Mr. Cheyne Brady. (6d. per packet of 100. Drummond's Tract Society, Stirling.) This evangelist has for many years done good service as a writer of tracts. This last series ("Packet 8") is written in a lucid and forcible manner, well calculated, under the power of the Holy Spirit, to arouse concern in the minds of the careless and ungodly.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. E. S. Savage has been appointed to Jesmond, Newcastle.

Rev. J. S. Whichelow, a warm Evangelical, has been appointed to St. James's, Muswell Hill.

Rev. J. John Hunt, of St. Paul's, Penzance, is about to enter on the charge of St. Barnabas', Birmingham.

The Duchess of Teck opened last week a restaurant and House of Rest in Lambeth for factory and other poor girls.

Canon Bell presided last week at a meeting in Cheltenham, when a branch of the National Protestant Church Union was formed.

The Liverpool C.M.S. anniversary sermons were preached on Sunday. Bishop Stuart and Rev. J. G. Garrett, of China, spoke at the public meeting on Monday.

Rev. Gamaliel Milner, who has accepted the charge of St. Mary Crypt, Gloucester, has lately been working in St. Luke's parish, Ramsgate, where he will be greatly missed.

A special Foreign Missions Festival will be held in Southwell Cathedral on June 12. Addresses will be given by the Bishop of Mashonaland, Bishop Stuart, the Bishop of North China, and the Bishop of Lahore.

The Record believes that the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Hull, vacant by the removal of Canon M'Cormick to Highbury, has been offered to Rev. J. W. Mills, St. George's, Birmingham. The charge was offered to and declined by Rev. H. E. Fox.

Dean Vaughan will resign the Mastership of the Temple on July 1, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his acceptance of the office. Any strength that may remain to him after that date will, he says, be at the service of the Church in the diocese of Llandaff.

At the annual meeting of the South-Eastern Clerical and Lay Alliance, to be held at Ramsgate on June 5 and 6, papers will be read by Canons Girdlestone and Knight and Revs. W. Odom, W. Senior, M. Kaufmann, S. Thelwall, Dr. Kinns, J. Barton, and H. Sutton.

The Archbishop of Dublin presided on Wednesday week over the fifty-first anniversary meeting of the C.E. Young Men's Society, held at the Leopold-rooms. The proceedings were of an interesting character, and special emphasis was laid by the several speakers upon the proposed extension of the work on more distinctly spiritual lines.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At Amble a new chapel was opened last week.

A new church is being erected at St. Anne's-on-the-Sea.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded a short mission at Badeley.

Rev. W. L. Lee, late of Plymouth, has commenced his ministry at Kettering.

Rev. W. J. Dixon has entered on his new charge at St. Paul's Church, Wigan.

Rev. A. W. Brough, of West Maitland, Australia, has been accepted for service by the L.M.S.

Rev. Alex. Cowe, of Hillhead Church, Glasgow, has decided to decline the call to Stannary Church, Halifax.

Rev. and Mrs. F. W. B. Weeks, of Eastbourne, left South Africa for England last week in the Dunottar Castle, and are expected to arrive home about June 3.

Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, reports a membership of 292. There are 430 children and young people in the Sunday-school and Bible-classes.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson celebrated last week the twenty-fifth anniversary of his settlement at Latimer Chapel, Stepney. Special sermons were preached, and a prayer and praise meeting was held, at which Revs. W. Marshall and A. Mearns delivered addresses.

The London Missionary Society's new steamship John Williams has started on her voyage to Sydney, under the command of Captain Turpie. A few friends accompanied the steamer to Gravesend, where an opportunity was afforded the pupils at Milton Mount College to inspect the vessel. The old mission ship John Williams sailed on the 14th ult. from Sydney on her last missionary cruise.

Rev. G. A. P. Arbuthnot, rector of Littledean, spoke at the anniversary meeting of Littledean and Pope's Hill Congregational Church. In the course of his address, he said: "I do believe, my dear friends, in unity, not in uniformity. God has various requirements. My former life in the army showed me that we require every force in the service. So God requires various branches of service, that his kingdom may be spread in the hearts of the people. I desire, as the rector, to work in holy fellowship and shoulder to shoulder with those who are preaching the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I rejoice to hear that the work in this church is increasing and deepening, for where God blesses a people He will also bless a neighbourhood."

Calls.—Rev. John Gregory, of Oak-road, Leeds, to Adelphi, Hackney-road, London; Rev. B. G. Archer, of Wellingborough, to Lonsborough; Mr. George Lang, to Soothill, Batley; Mr. S. Mellidge, to Vale, Broadstairs; Rev. James Le Pla, to Harringay; Rev. G. Sadler, of Portsmouth, to Weedon.

Resignations.—Rev. John Foster, of Ravensbourne; Rev. John Coxon, of Bishop Auckland.

BAPTIST.

A new chapel has been erected at Heatherlands, Dorset.

A new church has been formed at Marsh-street, Bradford.

Enthusiastic recognition services have been held at Lee in connection with the settlement of Rev. F. G. French.

Rev. G. Short preached last week at Broughton, on the occasion of the recognition of Rev. H. A. Tree, the new pastor.

Miss Tetley, daughter of Rev. J. P. Tetley, of Taunton, has been accepted by the Missionary Society for service in China.

Rev. J. J. Griffiths, of Cardiff College, has been recognised as pastor at Bridgnorth. Professor Davies preached on the occasion.

The work at Sevenoaks Church, under the care of Rev. C. Rudge, is being much blessed, and souls are being added to the church.

The meeting-house formerly used by the Friends in the Vineyard, Abingdon, has been opened, after alterations, as a Baptist church.

According to statistics gathered by Rev. D. B. Richards, the professed believers belonging to the denomination in Wales number 100,999, and of these 6564 were baptized in 1893.

During the past year fifty-two scholars and seven teachers of Back-street Sunday-school, Trowbridge, and its three branches, have been baptized and received into church fellowship.

Rev. John Tuckwell has removed from Aldridge-road Villas to Trematon Villa, Acton-lane, Harlesden, N.W. Letters may also be addressed, Westbourne-grove Chapel, Bayswater, W.

The Sunday-school connected with Cann Hall-road Chapel, Leytonstone, E., has over eleven hundred children on the roll. The school buildings were recently enlarged at an outlay of about £1400.

Returns of the coloured Baptists of the United States show a membership of 1,483,535; baptisms during the past year, 74,677; churches, 12,199; ordained ministers, 10,971. The number of Sunday-schools is 7866, with 466,733 scholars and 34,271 teachers.

The Mayor of Birmingham on Monday laid the memorial-stone of the Sunday-school buildings which are being erected at Highgate-park Church. The estimated cost is £1500, towards which Mrs. Atkin, who has been connected with the church for sixty years, has given £1000.

At the thirtieth anniversary of Abbey-road Baptist Chapel, under the care of Pastor H. E. Stone, held last week, the report stated the church now consists of 895 members, 108 having been received into fellowship during the year. Seventy-two were also baptized, including members of the Church of England and other Christian communities. Sunday-school, open-air, and other work is making gratifying progress.

Calls.—Rev. W. A. Wicks, of Ross, to Christ Church, Aston Park, Birmingham; Rev. Hugh Singleton, of Workington, to Smethwick.

Resignations.—Rev. C. A. Davis, of King's-road Capel, Reading; Rev. W. Robinson, of Astwood Bank.

METHODIST.

A new mission chapel has been opened in Workington.

The Methodist New Connexion are organising a Forward Movement in London.

At New Brompton and Halstow many conversions have been recently reported.

The memorial-stones of a new chapel have been laid at Clown, Mr. T. D. Bolton, M.P., taking part.

Mr. T. Weedon, Connexional evangelist, has conducted a series of special services at Tamworth, and many persons professed decision.

It is anticipated that at the coming Primitive Methodist Conference very special attention will be given to the position of affairs in villages.

This day the Billy Bray Centenary celebration takes place in the Billy Bray Memorial Church, Carharrack, Cornwall. Rev. F. W. Bourne preaches at noon, and many friends have consented to take part.

New chapels are being built at the Beacon (Luton), Woodside (Hunslet), Desborough, Newburn (Northumberland), Linton, Arthlington, Pleasley, Horsforth (Leeds), Abry (Alford), and Port St. Mary (Isle of Man).

Mr. George Hooper, Connexional evangelist, has conducted missions in Hull at Campbell-street and Dansome-lane Churches. Special men's meetings have been held; large numbers assembled, and great good has been done.

The workers at the Grove Mission, Great Guildford-street, Southwark, have received permission to hold services in the workhouses and casual wards of the district. The Brothers now visit the hospitals in the vicinity, speaking to the patients and giving them suitable literature.

The Missionary Committee has received intelligence from the Zambesi Mission party that the brethren had held their first meetings amongst the Mashukulumbwe, having the help of an interpreter. The leader of the mission asks for more missionaries to be sent, so that several centres of work may be begun.

The Evangelists' Home at Birmingham has now a mission-car, worked by two men, one a good singer, the other a capital open-air speaker. The Bromsgrove Circuit, which is many miles in extent, and has quite a number of strong village societies, has been availing itself of this method of increasing its agencies, and the "Gospel on wheels" system has proved a marked success. The car men have sold a good deal of Gospel literature, have visited the people in their homes, have held a number of well-attended meetings, and have aroused a widespread interest.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. P. M. Kirkland, of West Derby, has been elected Moderator of the Liverpool Presbytery.

Rev. C. Moinet received a very warm welcome last week from his congregation on his return from the East.

Rev. Griffith Ellis has returned home, greatly benefited in health by his prolonged visit to the Grand Canaries.

A large number of ministers have intimated their intention of attending the coming devotional Conference at Reading.

Professor Laidlaw, of Edinburgh, visited Newcastle last week in order to preach the anniversary sermons at Jesmond Church.

Rev. Benjamin Hughes, of St. Asaph, who has just undergone a painful operation, is now considered out of danger, and hopes are entertained of his recovery.

The pastor and elders of Regent's-square Church gave a social reception to young men last Thursday evening, when the lecture hall was filled and a pleasant time was spent.

The inaugural meeting of the Presbyterian Social Union for London was held at the Holborn Restaurant on Monday week. The attendance numbered 170, including many ladies. The chair was taken by Mr. H. M. Matheson, and the objects of the Union were explained by Dr. Pentecost. The Union will meet four times a year, its objects being closer fellowship and more effective co-operation in Christian work.

Calls.—Rev. James M'Kinnon, of Strathfillan, to Kildalton; Rev. H. J. Wotherspoon, of Burnbank, to St. Mark's, Edinburgh; Rev. James Milroy, of Freuchie, to Pleasance, Edinburgh.

Resignation.—Rev. J. T. Dixon, of Douglas, Isle of Man.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The total annual circulation of the Army's forty-three newspapers and periodicals is 37,720,000.

General Booth will visit next week a few of the provincial centres, accompanied by Commissioner Coombs, who has just arrived from Australia.

La Marechale gave on the 22nd inst. an address in the largest Concert Hall in Havre, and the day following opened a new Salvation Army Hall in the Rue St. Quentin.

A successful rescue meeting was held a few nights ago in the Portsmouth (Lake-road) Baptist Chapel. Miss Agnes Weston presided, and spoke of the means of good the Army Homes had proved in the town.

At the coming international congress at the Crystal Palace there is to be a street filled with public-houses, pawnshops, and so on, illustrating "The Way In to Darkest England," and another consisting of labour bureaus, elevators, and the like, showing "The Way Out."

The annual meeting of the darkest England Scheme will be held in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Monday, June 11, at 7.30, when General Booth will speak on the present position and prospects of the scheme. Mr. John Corry will preside, and many leading men interested in philanthropic work have promised to take part.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Addington-road, Croydon, on 20th inst., Rev. W. Fordham, aged seventy-four, a valued Congregational minister for many years.—At Amhurst-road, N., on 22nd inst., Mr. E. A. Tibbatts, aged sixty-two, a helper of the Lord's servants.—At Teddington, on 19th inst., Mrs. Williamson, aged twenty-five, wife of the Baptist pastor.—At the Parade, Birmingham, on 20th inst., Rev. H. W. Wakefield, aged seventy-eight, the devoted minister of the Tabernacle Chapel.—At Crouch End, Mr. Stephen Cork, for many years a valued worker at Park Chapel.—At Braintree, Mr. John Dyer, aged seventy-four, a useful servant of Christ.—At Ipswich, Mr. James Beaumont, for over forty years a preacher of the Gospel.—In Glasgow, Rev. John Fraser, the beloved senior pastor of Cumberland-street U.P. Church.—At Stanningley, Mr. Abraham Tetley, aged eighty-seven, a true helper of the Lord's work.—At Tintagel, Prebendary Kinsman, aged eighty-three, the highly-esteemed vicar of the parish.—At Gosforth, on 16th inst., Mrs. J. G. Fenwick, aged seventy-one, a helper of many.—At Dublin, Mr. Thos. O'Connor, for many years Church Education Society's assistant secretary and accountant.—At Sligo, suddenly, Rev. T. H. Moulsdale, rector of Ballysamaghan.—At Poyntzpass, co. Armagh, Rev. Thos. Irvine, Presbyterian minister, aged 79 years.—In the Congregational Church, Warminster, on Sunday evening (27th), very suddenly, Rev. Thomas Gilbert, aged 80, for many years a faithful minister.—Mrs. Mary Browne, the beloved mother of J. J. Browne, London City Mission, fell on sleep on April 23.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Keighley Town Council is being urged to prohibit even the occasional sale of strong drink in the public parks.

The lady Mayor of Pleasantown, Kansas, has dismissed all the police, and closed all the public-houses and gambling-saloons.

Steamers licensed to carry passengers on the Manchester Ship Canal are only allowed to supply non-intoxicating refreshments.

There will be a Crystal Palace Fête on August 25, originated and organised by the juvenile department of the London Branch of the C.E.T.S.

The Glasgow Town Council has decided, owing to the drunkenness, high rate of infant mortality, and crime, to put a restriction upon the hours during which public-houses, within certain areas, remain open.

It is stated that leading men met in New Zealand to discuss the liquor question. Women attended in force, drowned the voices of timorous male adherents of Temperance, finally taking possession of the platform in the interests of prohibition.

Mr. Caine, M.P., in a recent address said he had no fear that the publicans would be pauperised after the Veto Bill is put in operation. He knew houses in Newcastle in respect of which the magistrates had refused the liquor licences, but these were now successfully managed as refreshment houses, without intoxicating drink.

Lady Henry Somerset is appealing to the children of British women for subscriptions towards the erection of a memorial fountain in London. It is also proposed to commence a children's section of the B.W.T.A., to be known as the Loyal Temperance Legion. The funds having come in so freely for the proposed Farm Home for Inebriate Women, steps are being taken to secure a suitable site.

The recent C.E.T.S. Conference approved of the licensing proposals contained in the Bill which the Church Society party are promoting in the House of Commons. The Bill, as is pretty well known, aims at reducing the number of licensed houses to no more than one for every 1000 of the population in towns, and one for every 600 in rural districts. The compensation to those who lose their licences would be paid during five years only, and out of funds raised by a licence-duty on the houses that remain.

At this season of the year, when so many labourers in our Foreign Mission Work are in London, it has been thought fitting that the Metropolitan Women's Total Abstinence Union should hold a meeting to hear the accumulated voice of many lands on the vital question of total abstinence from alcoholic drinks. At the Imperial meeting in Queen's Hall on June 8, there will be representatives from distant countries under British rule, from the colonies, and from ports and places affected by British commerce.

PROHIBITION IN AMERICA.—The State dispensary law in South Carolina having been declared unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court, the liquor-sellers have brought further test cases before the same Court to get the point settled whether that part of the law is operative which forbids the issue of licences and the sale of liquor. Contrary to their expectations, the Court has decided that the law forbidding the sale of liquors without a licence remains in force, and also that there is no provision in the law of the State giving any authority to grant licences. Hence an injunction has been granted restraining the council of the city of Florence from issuing any licences, and a liquor-seller, who was in gaol for selling contrary to the law as now defined has been remitted to the custody of the city police till delivered by due course of law. South Carolina is, therefore, under prohibitory law pure and simple and the anxiety of the temperance party now is to secure the enforcement of the law. The penalties for violation are 200 dollars, or six months' imprisonment. Governor Tillman has declared strongly for enforcing prohibition, and several municipalities have taken prompt action.—Leeds Mercury.

Notes and Comments.

THE publishers are much obliged to those readers who responded to their application for certain back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN. They will be further obliged by spare copies of numbers 1200 and 1208 (January and March, 1893), with name and full address enclosed, so that stamps may be remitted for them.

An exceedingly important memorial has been presented to the members of the Royal Commission on Opium, signed by fifteen missionaries in China, representing the various British Societies. The memorialists strongly emphasise the evils caused by the opium habit in China, and urge the Commission to recommend that the Indian Government should restrict the production to the supply of what is needed for medicinal purposes in India and elsewhere. We hope to give the full text of the memorial in our next issue.

The course of the Royal Commission on Opium has been such as to require the fullest examination of the subject, independently of the Commission proceedings. This impartial review is firmly and admirably done by Mr. Broomhall and others, in the current issue of National Righteousness. The number also contains excellent portraits of the late Sir Arthur Blackwood and Mr. George Gillett, both of whom were earnest and weighty upholders of the righteous policy advocated in this excellent serial.

All who would learn for themselves to what degrading depths of deceit advocates of the Romish Church will descend in the effort to defame one who has left their ranks, should read The Christian Irishman for June (Mecredy & Kyle, Dublin). It gives a fuller account than appeared in our own columns of the horrible conspiracy against Rev. Thomas Connellan, which, however, failed disastrously. Mr. Connellan has been left with heavy costs to pay, but surely there is Protestant chivalry enough in the three kingdoms to relieve him of the burden; his address is 18, Bachelor's-walk, Dublin.

The Church Missionary Society recently appealed to its supporters at short notice to wipe off a deficit of nearly £13,000, and was gladdened by receiving in response the sum of £16,580. Now it sends forth another call—this time for men to enter the field. The Society publishes a list of missions in all parts of the world which need reinforcement by the end of the year. Definite posts require to be filled, and clergymen, doctors, and other laymen are asked to present themselves. The circular says:—

The supply of female workers is most cheering, as encouraging the hope that not only will the urgent needs be met, but that no real claim for such help will be declined this year. The demand for women will increase as the absolute necessity for this agency is more evidenced by practical experience. But where are the men?

The Archbishop of Canterbury delivered himself of some wholesome doctrine at the Missionary Conference last week. He said:—

The day is coming, sooner or later, when politics will not be carried on by parties, and so with mission work. The Church must be her own missionary society. How could a society deal with other churches, with a native ministry, with great geniuses?

True, the missionary obligation rests upon the Church at large—not upon any section merely. If it is true that societies cannot deal with great geniuses, the same is equally true of ecclesiastical corporations. Church history abundantly shows that Christ has dealt with great geniuses outside Church organisations, as well as in connection with Churches on the one hand, and representative societies on the other.

We were hardly prepared to hear what was stated at the Conference—that caste is tolerated in the Christian Church in India, and that it is, as a tacitly tolerated thing, one of the causes of the slow progress of missions, and in some cases of their positive decline. Bishop Wilson said years ago that caste must be abandoned, "decidedly, immediately, and finally," the only safe, because the only Christian, advice. Unfortunately, this has not been done, and now there is a call for some council or authoritative body to decide against it. Failing that, why should not each missionary do so? We are sure that many do, and the raising of the question in this way will give such faithful men more courage and firmness in dealing with the evil. The religion of the Saviour is emphatically one of brotherly love and brotherly kindness, and any violation of its spirit never fails to hinder the spread of the Gospel. In England itself we have few things which are doing the Church more subtle and deadly harm than social exclusiveness.

The fact to which Rev. R. P. Ashe has called attention—that the Church of England has not constituted in heathen lands "one self-governed, self-supporting, expanding Church"—is surely a serious reflection on the methods on which work has been done. There is no doubt that a wide difference exists between many or most of the lands in which Christ is now preached to the heathen and the countries in which He was originally preached; but still, when every allowance has been made, there are old lands, such as India and China, in which it ought to be possible to form self-governing and self-supporting churches. Poverty and ignorance and the degrading influence of heathenism were as potent against Christianity nineteen hundred years ago as now, and if they were conquered then, they can be conquered now; if in the cities of Asia, then in those of China and Japan, Central Africa and the islands of the sea may need much longer nursing, but for them also an independent course should be anticipated and prepared for.

Mr. Eugene Stock's paper on "The Relations of Church of England Missions with Roman Catholic Missions and with other Protestant Missions," was replete with facts of great significance, and we are glad to find that it is published entire in last week's Record. Regarding Rome he said:—

It is the literal and painful truth that, all round the world, Rome's attitude towards us is one of persistent, bitter, unscrupulous interference and opposition. In West, East, and Central Africa; in Palestine and Persia; in North and South India; in Ceylon and Mauritius; in China and Japan; in New Zealand and among the red Indians of the Dominion of Canada, it is one uniform story.

Mr. Stock recognised the extent and importance of other Protestant missions, pointing out that they raise three-fourths of the whole amount spent upon foreign missions by Protestant Christendom. After candidly facing facts, he advocated generous relations between Anglican and Nonconformist missions.

In the Women's section of the Conference Mrs. Bannister showed that the true missionary vocation must arise from personal love to Christ and to the souls for whom He died; there must be a Divine call and a Divine equipment. Earnest pleas were made for various fields. Home interest in mission work was discussed at length, and Miss Alcock, author of "The Spanish Brothers," gave a résumé of the work of the Irish auxiliary of the C.M.S. Though there were touches in some of the papers which showed that the writers would not run comfortably in harness with thorough-going Evangelicals, yet, considering the very evident divergence of opinion on many points, there was a wonderful harmony of purpose in the Conference.

Our German brethren have been prompt in planting mission stations in that portion of New Guinea which is under the German flag. In 1880 an exploring expedition was sent from Berlin, in 1885 missionaries followed. They have had much to suffer, and, as often happens in new missions, they have had much to discourage them—sickness, deaths from the murderous violence of the natives, and other causes. But the language has been in part mastered; a medical missionary has gone to the aid of his brethren. The natives have learned to trust their new friends, and are beginning to acquire the arts of civilisation, while the Way of Life is expounded to them.

A missionary in India recalls, in a letter to us, a prayer-meeting which he attended in his early days, the memory of which is yet refreshing to him in his far-away field of work. It was an unsectarian meeting, held at a central school-room on Saturday evenings. He says:—

Our spiritual horizon was wonderfully widened by those meetings, and the levelling influence of prayer was, beyond all knowing of it, beautiful. Sectarian differences vanished as completely as if they had never existed, and the note of high and sacred fellowship was struck; it was never lowered while the meeting lived. The prayers got enfibred with our very being, and the memory of them is among the most precious things of our life. We seemed to get bathed into the very dew of heaven, and our souls were invigorated with the energy and glory of the Spirit.

Our friend's testimony to the practical value and power of the meeting is very striking. "The minister went to his services clothed with power;" he never felt giving up an hour and a half on Saturday evening to be a loss.

The teachers in the school came into closer contact with their scholars, and I remember a poor labouring man who could neither teach, nor preach, except by his blameless life, showing me his twopenny testament, which he always had with him, and telling how the prayer-meeting had discovered to him the inestimable worth of the sayings of Christ. Then the membership of the churches went up; in ways direct and indirect, the work of God was revived. Out of that prayer-meeting four missionaries went to the foreign field, and five ministers gave themselves to the work at home, and a host of able teachers and Christian workers yet remain, who can bear testimony to the gracious influence of that meeting.

All this from one hour a week given to prayer, at a meeting which lived a quarter of a century ago!

Rev. W. E. C. Wright gives, in The American Missionary Magazine, an account of the "New Negro," which is full of encouragement. The new negro, who has sprung up in place of the old degraded slave, is a man of intelligence, energy, and often high character. Governor Buckner, of Kentucky, lately expressed his surprise that there were so many cultivated coloured gentlemen in the State. A negro missionary has given to a tribe in East Central Africa four books of the New Testament translated from the Greek by himself.

It is gratifying to see that British condemnation of the shameful lynchings in America is beginning to have an effect. The attention of those who can deal with and prevent them is now, with the world for witness, directed towards them, and already a desire is expressed that something should be done. Our American friends have it in their own power to give the negro a freeman's life, with all that that includes of quietness, safety, and social reputation. To the form of liberty which he possesses they can add the reality. Englishmen, especially English Christians, are jealous for the reputation of a great nation, as well as anxious that the old emancipation struggle should not be made a nullity by the lawless portion of the community.

The Bishop of Ripon told an interviewer from the Sunday Magazine that he should like to preach the cry, "Back to the land" to all those idlers in towns who have no reason for living in towns.

There are rows and rows of houses in London occupied by people who have no call to be in London. Why should they not go into the country and occupy the delightful houses that are now empty? I am speaking now of people with a few hundreds a year. Life often stagnates in the country for want of people to talk to. We need more people of means and education.

If the offer of a London auctioneer to find a gentleman a house in any county in England rent free, if he would go and live in it and keep it in order, was a bona-fide one, there is evidently a new sphere of usefulness opened for some of our well-to-do Christians.

---

When we read in the Gospels that the servant is to take up his cross and follow Christ, we assent as a matter of course, and in a vague sort of way; but when we see the actual cross, it looks real and stern and forbidding enough. We are amazed that for the sake of Jesus his servants should have such keen suffering. In an "unpublished letter" of Lord Shaftesbury's, now given to the world, he speaks of how and why he was led into his particular kind of service for poor men and suffering creatures; and then he sums up by adding: "My course, however, has raised up for me many enemies and very few friends." The words are simple enough, but how many slights, reproaches, and hard words do they represent, and all because he would be the friend of the helpless. That means that, like his Master, he was against the oppressor; hence the trouble.

---

The article in The Contemporary Review on "Halt!" is one more evidence of the supreme interest felt just now in the subject of international peace. The idea of it is, that the Governments might, at any rate, agree to go no further in the way of preparing for war. Let the expenditure stop at the present figure, and let the armaments have no increase. The game of "beggar my neighbour" is too like actual warfare to be persevered in; therefore "Halt!" The position is good so far. Any termination to the present competitive race will be a gain to men, because it will enable the nations to breathe, and perhaps change their policy.

---

The condition of the West End music-halls requires the immediate attention of the authorities, and, failing them, of every citizen who can spare any time for the question. Evidence abounds of the existence of a state of things which is a reproach to our police force, a danger to society, and a scandal to us as a professedly Christian people. The rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, admits that the scandal is "gigantic," and that it has grown for the last thirty years, notwithstanding all he has done to repress it. A single clergyman, no matter how courageous and active, is hardly strong enough to cope with evils which gather at this central spot as the bad humours of a diseased body collect in an ulcer. The vicious men and women of many lands, the degraded roués of our own provincial towns "up in London for a spree," and the army of the wicked who belong to London alone, all come to this quarter. They should be handled by the police; their halls of shame, which are so gaudy to the outward eye, should be so vigilantly supervised as to make the traffic in humanity impossible. Let the London County Council also make an effort; it has already done good work in this direction, but much more remains to be done.

---

A physician writes to us on the subject of "The World in the Church," and while approving of the views we have expressed, says that the churches should stir up their members to undertake and do, in the name of the Lord, "whatsoever things are honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report," and use their influence to keep them so. He specially refers to nursing as a Christian work, and protests both against the policy which would make it Church work, and also against the policy which would prevent "sisters" from speaking on religion—i.e., he disapproves of the sacerdotal method on the one hand, and the secular on the other. So do we. We can imagine no diviner task for a Christian woman to undertake than that of nursing the sick, but it is not the proper work of the Church, as such, to become a nursing institution. We also strongly oppose the policy of forbidding religious speech to a nurse. No true Christian worker would take the post under such a condition. Competent and devoted women ought soon to be able to demand their own terms.

---

The duty of children to parents in the matter of obedience is often insisted upon; and these days are regarded by some as peculiarly days of disobedience. Ruling is a duty which, we fear, is too often shirked. To command is troublesome; it involves thought, effort, resolution, perhaps conflict with another mind and will. To command is never easy to the idle, to the self-indulgent, to the irresolute. It is, for the time-being, a great deal easier to allow children to go their own way than to insist quietly but firmly that they must take their parents' way. It avoids, for the time-being, collision and strain; but in the long run it causes unspeakable sorrow. The neglected duty of ruling returns in the shape of self-will, selfishness, and sometimes abandoned profligacy on the part of the children. The command of God to children to obey their parents carries with it the command to parents to rule.

---

From the earliest times the Christian Church has called the Scriptures "the Word of God"; and instructed believers have not been at a loss for Scripture authority for this designation. Of late, however, there has been loud questioning of the right of the Bible to this dignified title; so in the June number of The Thinker, Professor Bernard examines the point in a learned and candid way. Leaving the passages in which Scripture applies the term (1) to the Incarnate Christ, as in Rev. xix. 13; (2) to the entire message of God to the world, as in the Thess. ii. 13; he comes to (3) those passages in the New Testament in which the Scriptures of the Old Testament are evidently spoken of as the "Word of God."

---

One of these passages is 1 Tim. iv. 5, which is a reference to the Scriptural phraseology employed in the Christian grace before meat; and the other is Mark vii. 13, in which the sacred books of the Jewish canon are contrasted with the rabbinical traditions. Dr. Bernard's study is necessarily confined within narrow limits, and does not consider the many indirect references to Scripture as God's Word written. In our judgment the right of Old and New Testaments alike to the title "The Word of God" stands beyond question in view of the opening verse of the Epistle to the Hebrews: "God, who spake in time past by the Prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The Divine utterances are given in the Bible, which is thus distinguished from any and all other books.

---

Rev. J. M. Denniston's book on Exodus (Morgan & Scott, 3s. 6d.) has, we are glad to say, attracted the notice of scholars of distinction. Principal Douglas, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, writes:—

I have read Mr. Denniston's volume "Exodus" with much pleasure. It is a well-reasoned criticism of that criticism of the Pentateuch which prevails among us at present. To a considerable extent it turns on the use of the two Divine names, Jehovah and Elohim; but it is by no means confined to this. The author even grapples with such a master of the critical linguistic argument as Dr. Driver.

---

"My meditation of Him shall be sweet," are the old familiar words of the A.V., but the R.V. has the rendering, "Let my meditation be sweet unto Him." What thoughts about God can be sweet to Him as He looks into our hearts? Surely such as are full of loving trust in his faithfulness, such as delight in his love, such as recount his past mercies, such as run forward along the line of his promises. What thoughts about man can be sweet to Him? Such as are just, forbearing, tender, prayerful. When we speak with men we are careful to avoid topics that would be uncongenial. Let us think that God's Spirit seeks pleasant communion with the meditations of our heart.

CARRUBBERS CLOSE MISSION.—The thirteenth annual gathering of the Gospel Temperance Association in connection with this mission in Edinburgh was held on Saturday evening. The report, rendered by the vice-president, Mr. G. A. Barclay, showed that the past year had been one of much activity and great blessing. Among the speakers of the evening were Revs. Dr. Black, Dr. John Smith, Yung-King Yen, Mr. James Guther, and ex-Bailie Lewes. At the close a few friends surprised Mr. Barclay by presenting him with a token of their love and respect for his faithful service.

Fellow-Workers a Comfort.

Aristarchus, my fellow prisoner, saluteth you, and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas (touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him), and Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellow workers unto the Kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me.

Aristarchus was a companion in travel of the Apostle Paul, was in the great uproar at Ephesus, and was dragged along with Gaius into the theatre by the excited mob. He was with Paul in his next journey after leaving Ephesus, and was also his companion on board ship when he sailed as a prisoner for Rome. In the Epistle to the Colossians, Paul speaks of him as his "fellow-prisoner," from which it has been suggested that perhaps he and other friends of the Apostle shared his imprisonment with him by turns. Every way he was a right faithful man, a stedfast friend, a fearless soldier of the cross of Christ, a diligent worker unto the Kingdom of God. To say anything of Justus would be impossible; only, he bears this honourable mark upon him—he, too, was a fellow-worker unto the same glorious end—the Kingdom of God. Mark was that fellow-traveller who had once proved unequal to the heavy strain put upon him by the dauntless and self-sacrificing Apostle, but who had now recovered his place in his esteem by having recovered his courage and faith. These were the men who were a comfort to Paul's heart, the only men of the Judaistic party who were so.

The purest and the best natures ask for so little in the way of comfort or encouragement for themselves, and yet can so much enjoy every particle that is given. Nowhere do drops of love find a more congenial soil than in their hearts; by no one is a quicker response given to any word spoken or deed wrought by the Holy Ghost than by them. How intense was Paul's appreciation of the character and labours of these three brethren! The sweet peace and comfort which he had, as he lay in his prison day after day, curtailed in his opportunities of building up the Kingdom of God, was in thinking how these three large-hearted, faithful men toiled, each in his own way, in the beloved work from which he was almost cut off.

When a worker is absorbed in his work, his comfort must come through his work. If you want to reach him, you must serve it. If you would fill his heart with joy and thankfulness, you must carry it forward to new successes and triumphs. The comfort of the leader of an expedition would not be that his lieutenants looked after his personal ease, that they spread his table with dainties, that his tent was snug and weather-proof, whoever else might have to sleep on the ground. It would be in knowing that one enthusiastic feeling glowed in every heart, that everyone was proud of his post, and intent only upon fulfilling its duties, and that daily, in spite of all discouragement and difficulty, the grand object for which they had started was being surely achieved. The purest comforts of friendship are not those we derive from the pleasant evening chat, from the sense of neighbourliness, and from little acts of kindness, useful as all these are, but from knowing that our friend does his part well, stands true to truth, keeps his steps by the Word of God, follows his Lord and Master faithfully, befriends and upholds every noble, humane, Christian endeavour. The name of such a friend is music; the thought of him is an inspiration and a thanksgiving. You may seldom meet, and seldom correspond, but the simple recollection of the true servant of Christ is enough. If he be linked with you in service, his purity of motive and uprightness of aim, however you may differ on some points, yield perennial joy. "I thank my God upon all my remembrance of you, for your fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now."

Our World-Wide Empire.

By Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, Birmingham.

In the providence of God our country has become the greatest empire of ancient or modern times. In 1707 England became Great Britain by the Act of Union with Scotland. But long before this, in 1620, the Pilgrim Fathers landed in New England, and the foundations of our colonial empire were laid. Gradually Great Britain expanded into Greater Britain, which now covers one-third of the territory of the globe, includes one-fifth of its population, and is still growing, adding quite lately to itself immense territories in Africa.

Comparing this empire with some of the greatest of ancient and modern times, we see at once how far Greater Britain exceeds them. The empires of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Græco-Macedonia, Carthage, and Rome were smaller far than ours, both for territory and population. This also is true of that "family of great empires which arose (as Professor Seeley says) out of the contact of the Western States of Europe with the New World." In their most palmy days Greater Spain, Greater Portugal, Greater Holland, and Greater France never approached Greater Britain in extent.

Significant, indeed, is this unique expansion. Significant, too, is the fact that this expansion has not been followed hitherto by a contraction which has marked the other four empires. To quote Professor Seeley again, "Greater Spain disappeared, and Greater Portugal lost its largest province—Brazil. Greater France and a large part of Greater Holland were lost in war, and became merged in Greater Britain. Greater Britain itself, after suffering one severe shock (the loss of the United States), has survived to the present day, and remains the single monument of a state of the world which has almost passed away."

I do not think that any Christian man who intelligently watches the workings of God's providence in human history will be satisfied to account for this historical enlargement, which has been so rapid and well maintained, by any theories of our martial prowess, our commercial energy, or our genius for colonisation. Whatever may be due to these causes, our world-wide empire has a distinctly religious meaning. Our expansion is directly providential, and links itself with the expansion of another Kingdom, even that Kingdom of Christ, "which shall never be destroyed." With all our many faults, we Britons enshrine the purest form of Christianity current in the world. Our churches are mainly Protestant, and the greatness of our empire facilitates the progress of the true Gospel of Christ. France at one time far surpassed us in her colonial empire. But supposing she had retained Canada, triumphed in India, secured South Africa, and annexed Australia and New Zealand, can it be imagined that the progress of genuine Christianity would have been as considerable as it has been?

Wherever England has planted colonies, Protestantism has been planted too; while the expansion of France, like that of Spain and Portugal, secured the expansion of Roman Catholicism. If, for example, the vast Indian peninsula, with its 295 millions of people, were a province of France (as at one time it seemed destined to be), is it at all likely that our army of Protestant missionaries would be tolerated, or, if barely tolerated, would have half the liberty they possess at present? Since, then, English rule gives everywhere a freedom to the propagation of the Gospel which would be most unlikely under the supremacy of Roman Catholic Powers, it is indeed incumbent on English Christians to make full use of the liberty so providentially accorded. Our immense opportunities are our immense responsibilities. May God give us grace to realise the former and fulfil the latter!

God, who has enlarged our empire, says to English Christians to-day, "Be ye also enlarged." In reference to the missionary enterprise, there are at least three kinds of Christians: those who are merely parochial in their sympathies, those who are narrowly patriotic, and those who are really œcumenical. The parochially-minded limit their regards to what they can actually see around them. For them even England has no existence religiously. Only a little less limited in view are those patriotically-minded souls to whom all foreign work is "outlandish." God wants us to be œcumenically-minded, and as English Christians belonging to a world-wide empire it is specially our duty so to be. Christ's favourite expression descriptive of Himself was "The Son of Man." Born a Jew, and brought up amongst a people whose narrow patriotism prevented them from realising their relationship to humanity generally, He chose a title in habitually speaking of Himself which emphasised that relationship. To Christ no man was a foreigner, and to Christians the more they enter into the spirit of their Master, the great race distinctions will be in no sense barriers to sympathy, prayer, and action, but only convenient lines of demarcation. We are defrauding ourselves, our Lord, and the heathen if our realised environment is measured by any circle smaller than the circumference of the globe.

Especially let us all foster the œcumenical spirit of prayer. Through this the humblest Christian may have a world-wide sphere. We may not be able to travel, we can give our thoughts no world-wide currency, but we can give our prayers a world-wide efficiency. By way of the throne we can teach the world. Who can complain of a narrow sphere for action when God gives him a world-wide sphere for prayer! And if in so great a realm some of us are not at home devotionally, but seem to ourselves to be strangers and foreigners, then let us beseech God that He would so broaden us by his Spirit, that realising that we belong to the fourteen hundred millions of the human race, we may pray, with much more intelligence and intensity than we ever did before, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Broadened by the Spirit, we shall add one country after another to our devotional territory, and shall not rest until we can intelligently intercede for the world.

A HOME FOR SAILORS.—On Saturday last friends of Christian work among sailors assembled in goodly numbers at Buckhurst Hill to consecrate by prayer and thanksgiving to God the house "Springfield," in the Epping-road, which has been opened as a Home for convalescent sailors by Miss Child, of the "Welcome Home," Ratcliff Highway. It has long been laid on the heart of Miss Child to provide such a retreat for sailors recovering from illness, and for Christian strangers when on shore awaiting the departure of their ships. Captain Mead and a number of sailors addressed the gathering. Several men are already enjoying the advantages of the Home.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

III.—CISTERN MAKING.

(Jer. ii. 13.)

Attempt, how vain—
With things of earthly sort, with aught but God,
With aught but moral excellence, truth and love—
To satisfy and fill the immortal soul!
To satisfy the ocean with a drop;
To marry immortality to death;
And with the unsubstantial slave of time
To fill the embrace of all eternity.
—Pollok's "Course of Time."

There was probably but little interval between Jeremiah's call and his entrance upon his sacred work. When once the Spirit of God has established a code of communications between Himself and the soul whom He has selected to be his mouthpiece, He is likely to avail Himself of it constantly. The difficulty is to lay down the wire through the ocean depths; but when it is there, the messages flash to and fro repeatedly. So we are told that to this young ardent soul "the word of the Lord came" (ii. 1). Coming, it thrilled him.

He dwelt little on the ominous mention of the inevitable conflict which the Divine voice prognosticated. He did not stay to gauge the full pressure of opposition indicated in the celestial storm-signal. He had been told that kings and princes, priests and people, would fight against him; but in the first blush of his young faith he thought more of the presence of Jehovah, who had promised to make him a "a defenced city, an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land." How tenderly God veils our future, and leads us forward step by step! But there is a difference between the elastic hopefulness of youth and the experience of manhood. The earlier chapters of Jeremiah differ from his lamentations, as the first green of spring from the sere foliage of autumn.

As we study the words and deeds of this most human of prophets, let us pass through his plaintive cries and tears and prayers, to that Divine Man, whose gentle spirit was so closely anticipated and reflected in that of his servant. In every age He is at work through his servants, striving against sin in every form, and seeking to set up his reign of righteousness, peace, and joy. In Jeremiah's words, we have His vehement beseechings and remonstrances; in Jeremiah's prayers, we have echoes of the unutterable intercessions of the Holy Spirit; in Jeremiah's conflicts we have the Divine antagonism against flesh and blood, and the rulers of the darkness of this world; in Jeremiah's lamentations, we have the Divine grief over human wilfulness. This priest and prophet of the Jerusalem of David and Solomon had a remarkable course to pursue, in presenting in the obscure mirror of his life the cross and sorrow of the true Priest and Prophet of the restored Jerusalem.

I. The Prophet's Twofold Burden.—When Jeremiah began his ministry, going from Anathoth to Jerusalem for that purpose (ii. 2), Josiah, though only twenty-one years of age, had been for thirteen years on the throne. He was commencing those measures of reform which availed to postpone, though not to avert, the doom of city and nation. His measures were as drastic as those of Cromwell and his soldiers, in their determined effort to remove every vestige of Popery from churches and public buildings. "They brake down the altars of the Baalim in his presence; and the sun-images, that were on high above them, he hewed down; and the Asherim, and the graven images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strewed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them. And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and purged Judah and Jerusalem" (2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, 5, R.V.).

There must have been a great cawing among the rooks when the trees in which they had so long nested were felled. For seventy years the grossest forms of idolatry had held almost undisputed sway. The impious orgies and degrading rites, which licensed vice as a part of religion, were in harmony with the depraved tastes of the people. What, therefore, ecclesiastics and their flocks felt towards Henry VIII. when he demolished the monasteries, and to the Protector, when his officers pursued their work of devastation, must have found ready place in those early years of Josiah's reign.

The result was, first, that the work of reform was largely superficial. It did not strike beneath the surface, or change the trend of national choice. And secondly, that there was a strong political party determined to promote a closer alliance with Egypt, which, under Psammetichus, had just asserted her independence against the King of Assyria. In these two directions the young prophet was called to make his influence felt.

First, he protested against the prevalent sin around him. The one thought of the people was to preserve the outward acknowledgment of Jehovah by the maintenance of the Temple services and rites. If these were rigorously observed, they considered that there was no sufficient cause for charging them with the sin of apostasy. This enabled them to insist that they were not polluted (ii. 23); and to reiterate, with wearisome monotony, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these" (vii. 4).

It was Jeremiah's mission to show that mere outward observance was worse than useless; it was compatible with a real forsaking of God. Like the hectic flush, it only concealed the corruption eating its way into the heart. Like the flowers on the edge of the precipice, it hid the fatal brink. Nominal profession is compatible with utter atheism; and this is the worst form of atheism, because the heart parries every attack with the foil of apparent and avowed belief.

This will account for the plain denunciations of sin, that came burning hot from the lips of the young prophet. He includes the priests and expounders of the law, pastors and prophets, in his scathing words (ii. 8). The valley of Hinnom, with its obscene and cruel rites, is quoted in evidence against them (23). The blood of children flung into the fires is detected on their robes (34); the trees of the groves whisper what they have witnessed beneath their shadow; and the jagged rocks tell stories they dare not conceal (20; iii. 6). Every metaphor is adopted that human art can suggest to bring home to the people their infidelity to their great Lover and Redeemer, God (iii. 20).

He also protested against the proposal to form an Egyptian alliance. The little land of Canaan lay between the vast rival empires founded on the Nile and the Euphrates, much as Switzerland between France and Austria. It was, therefore, constantly exposed to the transit of immense armies, like locusts destroying everything, or to the hostile incursions of one or other of its belligerent neighbours. Now, the policy of a considerable party at the Court of Jerusalem had always been to cultivate alliance with Egypt or Assyria. In Hezekiah's and Manasseh's time the tendency had been towards Assyria and Babylon; now it was towards Egypt, which had in a remarkable way thrown off the yoke which the great king Esarhaddon in three terrible campaigns had sought to rivet on its neck. The prophet strenuously opposed these overtures. Why should his people bind themselves to the fortunes of any heathen nation whatsoever? Was not God their King? Would not He succour them in times of overflowing calamity? Surely their true policy was to stand alone, untrammelled by foreign alliances, resting only on the mighty power of Jehovah, serving his purposes, true to his law, devoted to his will. "What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor (i.e., the black Nile); or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river? . . . Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? Thou also shall be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria. Yea, thou shalt go forth from him and thy hands upon thy head; for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them" (ii. 18, 36, 37).

This, then, was Jeremiah's mission—to stand almost alone; to protest against the sins of the people, which were covered by their boasted reverence to Jehovah, whom they worshipped as the tutelary deity of their land, beside many false gods; and to oppose the policy of the Court which sought to cultivate friendly relations with the one power that seemed able to render aid to his fatherland in the awful struggle with the northern kingdom which he saw to be imminent (i. 15). And this ministry was exercised in the teeth of the most virulent opposition. Here was a priest denouncing the practices of priests, a prophet exposing the lies of prophets. It was no slight thing to expose the falsehoods alike of priest and prophet, and accuse them of healing the hurt of the daughter of his people slightly, saying "Peace, peace," when there was no peace. Small wonder, therefore, that the most powerful parties in the state conspired against him; as in after days Pilate and Herod joined hands gainst Christ.

II. The Imagery He Employed.—It is a scene amongst the mountains. In that green glade a fountain rises icy cold from the depths, and pours its silver stream downward through the valley. You can hear the music of its ripple, and trace its course by the vegetation that follows it. It is always flowing in abundance for young and old, for the villagers in the hamlets, and, when it has grown fuller and broader, for the inhabitants of large towns along its course. But its banks are unvisited, neither cup nor bucket descends into its crystal depths; for all practical purposes it might as well cease to flow.

Far away from that verdant valley, as you climb the hill, you hear the clink of the chisel, and presently come on a vast concourse of people of every age and rank, engaged in making cisterns in the quarries that lead down into the heart of the hills. The bead-drops stand thick upon their brow, as from early dawn to far on into the night they pursue their arduous toil, wrestling with the stubborn granite. They will not avail themselves of the materials of former times, nor utilise the half hewn cisterns deserted by their ancestors. Each man has his own scheme, his own design. They are there when spring casts her green mantle over the pasture lands that come to the edge of the quarry, and when the summer heat makes the quarry like a kiln. Whilst others are gathering in the ruddy grape and golden corn of autumn, they remain constant to their toil, and they are there amid the biting cold of winter. After years of work a man may achieve his purpose, and complete the cistern on which he has spent his years. He calls on his neighbours to view his accomplished purpose, and waits expectant of the shower. Presently it descends, and he is filled with pride and pleasure to think of the store of water which he will be able to secure. But lo! it does not stay. As soon as it enters, it passes out. There is a fatal crack or flaw; or the stone is too porous. He finds, what every one of his neighbours has found, or will find, that with the utmost care the cisterns wrought in the quarry can hold no water.

What an infinite mistake to miss the fountain freely flowing to quench the thirst, and hew out the broken cistern in which is disappointment and despair! Yet this, said the prophet, was the precise position of Israel. They had done as no nation else, though search were made from the far west of Chittim to the far east of Kedar. The heathen at least were constant to their gods. False religions were indigenous to the lands where they had originated—the same idols worshipped, the same rites performed, the same temples filled with succeeding generations. But his people had forsaken God, as a maid might lay aside her ornaments, or a bride her attire; and in resorting to false religions and heathen alliances, they were hewing out for themselves broken cisterns which would fail them in their hour of need.

Very pathetically the prophet reminds them of the past. The kindness of their youth, the love of their espousals, their holiness to the Lord, and the song with which they celebrated their deliverance on the shores of the Red Sea, suggested a sad contrast to the evils that cursed the land. Through him the voice of God is heard inquiring the reason of this lamentable apostasy. The chapter is full of questions, as though God would elicit the charge upon which they had deserted Him. "What unrighteousness have your fathers found in Me, that they are gone far from Me, and have walked after vanity and are become vain? Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? or a land of thick darkness? Wherefore say my people, We are broken loose, we will come no more unto Thee?"

There is nothing sadder than the ebb of love, when we are compelled to sit on the beach and watch the slowly receding waters as they drop down from the high-water mark which they had reached with the dancing wavelets. This takes the light from the eye, and the spring from the foot. And life can never be quite as it was. The tide may come up again; but it will never efface the recollection of the ebb, and the fear of its return. This in human experience is something like the pain felt by the Eternal, as He saw Israel, for whom He had done so much, turn from Him to strangers. Bitter, indeed, to hear them say to a stock, "Thou art my father"; and to a stone, "Thou hast brought me forth." Their apostasy was to God as though a wife should go from the husband that doted upon her, and become another man's (iii. 1).

III. Its Application to Ourselves.—Many cistern-makers may read these words—each with soul-thirst craving satisfaction; each within easy reach of God, whose nature is as rock-water for those that are athirst. But all attempting the impossible task of satisfying the thirst for the Infinite and Divine, with men and things.

There is the cistern of Pleasure, embroidered with fruits and flowers, and bacchanalian figures, wrought at the cost of health and rest; the cistern of Wealth, gilded, and inlaid with pearls, like the mangers of the stud of Eastern kings; the cistern of Fame, hewn by the youth who tore himself from the welcome of home, and the embrace of human love, to climb, with his banner of strange device, the unfrequented solitudes of the mountain summit, far above all rivalry, and even companionship; the cistern of Human Love, which, however beautiful as a revelation of the Divine Love, can never satisfy the soul that rests in it alone—all these, made at infinite cost of time and pains, deceive and disappoint. In the expressive words of Jeremiah, they are "broken cisterns that can hold no water." And in the time of trouble they will not be able to save those that have constructed and trusted them.

At your feet, O weary cistern-hewer, the fountain of God's love is flowing through the channel of the Divine Man! Stoop to drink it. We must come to the level of the stream, if its waters are to flow over our parched lips to slake our thirst. You have already dropped your tools, and are sitting weary of your toil. List to the music that fills the air and floats around, like the chime of angel voices: "Come back to God. Do the first works. Forsake the alliances and idolatries which have alienated you from your best Friend. Open your heart, that He may create in you the fountain of living water, leaping up to eternal life. . . . The Spirit and the bride say, Come! And he that heareth, let him say, Come! And he that is athirst, let him come: he that will, let him take the water of life freely."

WORK IN CORSICA.

In a letter, dated Bastia, Corsica, May 28, Major Colquhoun sends a printed "Occasional Letter," telling of the work of the Gospel Mission at Bastia, conducted by him and his wife. It tells of much earnest colportage in different places, and other work of a more private and personal sort. In his letter Major Colquhoun says:—

"Even since the time of our report going to press we have made further advance. There is a pronounced spiritual movement going on among the people in Bastia. One case might be cited of a father, a well-to-do proprietor in the island, and resident with his family in Bastia, who, since his own definite confession of Christ, has so influenced his entire family, both by precept and example, that wife, grown-up daughters, and boys, all seem to be gladly following in his footsteps. They have reading of the Word and prayer in the house, and the father joins with us in earnest prayer at every private meeting for himself and his family.

"Another man was first awakened, three years ago, through reading a New Testament found among some old books. That sufficed, he says, to make him 'give up' swearing, drinking, and other sins. When he heard the confirmation of the written Word in our meetings in Bastia last year, he says he became as a man 'transformed,' which, I suppose, may be taken to mean 'converted.' And now he is reading the New Testament at every spare moment at home, with his wife and children, who also come regularly with him to the meetings.

"A very good feature in all the cases of apparent conversion which have this spring presented themselves in our midst is that, without exception, each has continued in the study of the Word and in prayer, desiring to grow in grace and in knowledge. In one other case, a man found himself shackled in the house where he lived, amidst scenes of sin, and could not at once shake himself free on account of owing the people money. He described to one of my men how, after having given me his promise, he was during this period in agony of conscience. Very soon, however, he made up the money, stepped out into liberty, and came and told us all.

"Such indications, and many other circumstances we could mention both in connection with Bastia and the villages seem to demonstrate, surely enough the spirit of grace at work."

DR. PARKER ON RATIONALISM.

The eloquent pastor of the City Temple addressed the Free Church General Assembly in Edinburgh, on Tuesday evening last week. The major part of his deliverance was an amplification of a recent Thursday noon address on the modern modifications of certain words that have borne pregnant meaning in the past. We give the closing part of the Doctor's speech:—

"I have spoken of all these verbal felonies with some measure of self-control, but at this point my self-control may possibly fail me, because I now come face to face with a felony compared with which all other thefts are the meanest of petty larcenies. It has been suggested that rationalism should annex the whole Christian idea, divest it of its supernaturalism, and use its godliness without a God. Dr. Pfleiderer is in substance—I dare not commit him to precise words—not disinclined to take over the Incarnation, the Cross, the Resurrection, and the Ascension of Christ; nor is he disinclined to allow us to believe in the Holy Ghost, provided all these ideas, facts, and histories will submit to cast out the elements of the miraculous or the supernatural. We may retain our Bible, but not as a supernatural revelation; we may retain our Christ, but not as the incarnation of the living God; we may retain the resurrection, but not in the sense of the personal Christ returning literally from the grave in which He was buried. I hold that this is the most monstrous proposition ever made to the Christian reason or the Christian conscience. We are to live in a world of ideality. We are to part with substance, and exchange it for shadows. We are invited to perform a miracle which is little less than to supernaturalise reason and to denaturalise conscience, in order that we may displace a supernatural faith and get rid of a supernatural morality. I do not know what others may do in response to this appeal; but for myself I declare with all solemnity and vehemence that I will not be a party to this

GIGANTIC AND BLASPHEMOUS CONFISCATION.

"We shall make no impression upon the enemy at any point unless we maintain the distinctiveness of Christian teaching. Comparative religion is a subject which no earnest mind will undervalue; at the same time we must remember that Christianity stands apart from all the other religions of the world, and is not to be included in a common plural. Not where Christianity is like other religions, but where it is unlike them, we find the beginning and the secret of its power. We have not to speak of the religious sentiment as a whole, but of the Christian doctrine in particular. Christianity is known by one symbol. When we conceal that symbol we lose power. The symbol of Christianity is the Cross of Christ. It is not our duty to arbitrate as between contending religions; our business is to proclaim what we believe to be the religion sent down from heaven as we find it in the person and ministry of the Son of God. And as our message is distinctive, so must be our method of proclaiming it. Every man must preach according to his own individuality of mind and temperament, but every man must so preach as to win souls for Christ. We read in the Acts of the Apostles that the missionaries and evangelists so preached that many were turned unto the Lord. That is the first great purpose of Christian preaching. I call your attention to that word soul—they so preached that multitudes were converted, their souls were on fire; they revealed the mighty Saviour of the world, they did not disguise the awful reality of sin, and they held up the cross so loftily and definitely that men were affected by its pathos and subdued by its appealing love. I care not how literary, or intellectual, or splendid our preaching may be if it is not alive with the very love of the heart of God. Jesus Christ does not ask for our intellectual splendours, or for the finely-sculptured phrases; He bids us go forth under the whole heaven and tell the good news that He Himself tasted death for every man. We must not so as to make a great and impassable distance between it and the common people. As on the day of Pentecost, every man must hear in his own tongue the wonderful works of God.

INTELLECTUALISE THE GOSPEL

"I would advise all young preachers to be so distinctive in their preaching as to make a comparison between it and mere literature simply impossible. Speak with your whole heart. Do not imagine that you have thoughts so great and dazzling that they cannot be expressed in English terms. Depend upon it our mother-tongue is quite equal to the expression of our mother-wit. Do not so talk that the people will be unable to understand you. There may be epoch-making books, and epoch-making sermons, but I should jealously examine them lest they made the kind of epoch which it is not our lawful business to create. Make your epochs in your converts. Make your epochs in useful lives, and happy homes, and steady progress; if you make other epochs than these as Christian preachers and evangelists, I care no more for such epoch-making display and vanity than I care for the epoch-making rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built. Your simplicity will be your strength. Your earnestness will be your glory.

"The distinctiveness which I claim for Christian preaching and Christian service generally, I also claim for the Bible. I believe the Bible is a unique book; separating itself infinitely from all other sacred literature. There is a Higher Criticism which we would all encourage; a competent, earnest, reverent scholarship which we hold to be one of the highest treasures, and one of the strongest forces of the Church. There is another higher criticism which we utterly distrust and condemn. When, therefore, we speak of the higher criticism we must not speak without discrimination. The higher criticism that discredits the supernatural has not yet been able to secure the confidence of my judgment or my heart. I can, in the time at my disposal, give only one instance of the criticism which I encounter with grief and anger and dismay. Dr. Cheyne has stated that in his opinion the 72nd Psalm was written in honour of Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt. Ewald, one of the fathers of the higher criticism, said that it would be utterly perverse to make any heathen king the hero of the 72nd Psalm, but Dr. Cheyne, another higher critic, does not hesitate to ascribe the destination of that psalm to Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt. This is an instance illustrative of the manner in which the higher critics may DIFFER AMONGST THEMSELVES.

For who was this Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt? Canon Rawlinson tells us that he was a man who banished his wife to Upper Egypt that he might marry his full sister, who had formerly been the wife of his brother-in-law. I am not able to believe that he was contemplated as the subject of eulogy by the author of the 72nd Psalm. Sorry and painful would be the reading of that psalm in the light of Canon Cheyne's suggestion. No, gentlemen, ten thousand times no. I cannot believe that God will divide his throne with the devil.

"But Canon Cheyne says that the Psalm was written before Ptolemy Philadelphus had disclosed the darker shadows of his character. A poor prophet, then, must this Psalmist be reckoned, but I will not ask when Ptolemy Philadelphus discloses the baser elements and aspects of his character, I will simply contend that in proportion to the holiness of any man would be his repudiation of the ascription of such honours as are offered him in the 72nd Psalm. Those honours cannot realise their fullest meaning in any mere man. There is only one Person in all history who can clothe Himself with such honours justly and appropriately, and that person is the Son of God; of Him we can truly say, 'He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth; yea, all kings shall fall down before Him: all nations shall serve Him.' I shall still regard the 72nd Psalm as the great missionary ode, and when I sing it with understanding and heart, all its music shall be poured into the ear of Him 'who loved me and gave Himself for me.'

"I leave these sentiments for the calm and just consideration of one of the greatest Christian assemblies in the whole world. I am not here in any representative capacity. You kindly invited me to address you upon the general religious situation, and I have discharged my task to the best of my ability. I do not expect everyone to agree with me, but I recognise the fact that there is a kind of opposition which is one of the most useful elements in spiritual education. I have proceeded by way of suggestion rather than by way of elaboration, and I have done this in full view of the fact that indication is necessarily marked by an incompleteness which may invite criticism and controversy. We have everything to gain by a free and trustful exchange of opinion. Nothing is to be more dreaded, within our own lives, than intellectual indifference and spiritual stagnation. I would appeal to the heroic sense that is in every Christian soul. It is to no little war that we are called. We are engaged in the most tremendous battle ever fought on the theatre of history, and it becomes every one of us to be loyal, sincere, self-sacrificing, and resolute. The battle is not ours, but God's. We may take an optimistic view of the issue in the degree in which our religious faith is enlightened and profound. They that are for us are more than all that be against us. Young men, I beseech you to answer with valiant hearts the trumpet call to service, to battle, and it may be to suffering. In this army we have no room for laggards and cowards. If we serve in the Christian cause from a corrupt or inadequate motive, the issue will be shameful and pitiable. My appeal is to courage, to loyalty, to heroism; and if any man be otherwise minded, the only honour he can do the ministry is to leave it; and I beseech him, if he be not conscious of the highest motives, to turn back ere he bring disgrace upon his profession; if any man be timid, self-regarding, reluctant, 'Let him turn and flee.'"

AMONG THE JEWS IN PARIS.

It is about seventeen years since I was appointed the missionary for France to reside in Paris by the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. After working here for a few years, not without seeing fruit of my labours by the conversion and baptism of many sons and daughters of Abraham, I began in 1887 to deliver public lectures to Jews in a hall on the Boulevard de Sebastopol. As such gatherings and lectures had never before been attempted in Paris, many friends doubted whether the Jews of the city could be induced to attend. A considerable number of Jews came in, however, and listened attentively to my first lecture on Zech. ii. 14 :—" Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for so I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." They willingly accepted tracts and New Testaments, and promised to come again.

Ever since then I have continued with but slight interruption to lecture to them, not once a week, but several times weekly, especially since we removed to our little mission hall 2, rue du Roi de Sicile. Here, aided by a good colporteur, we have our Bible classes twice a week, and meetings at which I lecture three times a week. I have also an inquiry room, where I instruct those who desire to know more of the truth as it is in our blessed Lord. Our meetings begin with a hymn in French, prayer in Hebrew, reading a portion of Scripture, generally from the New Testament, in Hebrew, the same is read in German or French, a hymn, after which I set forth the Gospel of Christ, adducing proofs from the Bible, and supported by Rabbinical and historical testimonies. I am glad to say that the Lord is blessing our humble efforts, and many have been led by his Spirit to confess Christ openly in baptism, and are leading consistent Christian lives.

But there was another very important branch of our work left untouched and uncared for, and that was the work among the sadly-neglected and ignored Jewesses. It is beyond credit how profoundly ignorant these poor women are of the Scriptures and of true religion. I have more than once attempted to interest friends in their behalf, but without success. The funds of the Society are so behind that the committee dare not undertake additional work. I wrote to a beloved Hebrew Christian in Scotland, and told him of the sad state of affairs, and to my great joy he collected from Scottish Christians the amount required for the first year's expenses for a Bible-woman, in the hope that English friends would now come forward and provide for the maintenance of the work. Help will be thankfully received at the London Jews Society's Office, 16, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C. The Bible-woman has already gathered around her a number of Jewesses, who attend her Bible and sewing classes; and a large number of Jewish children attend her Sunday-school.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON has been calling attention to a boycott resorted to by the liquor ring to bring pressure to bear upon M.P.'s who support any measure affecting the drink traffic. If any member who happens to be in business votes for either a Veto Bill or the Budget proposals, he is to be no longer patronised by liquor men.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The friends of this well-known Mission rallied round Mr. Hurditch in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, on Tuesday week, when the twenty-ninth anniversary was held, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch made an opening statement, in which he dwelt on the unsectarian character of the work, holding forth the Word of Life, through the crucified Jesus Christ. Since last year there is nothing extraordinary and certainly nothing sensational to report. We believe in the Gospel of Divine Grace as sufficient to attract and mighty to save. Our aim is the salvation of souls, and we seek to Gospelise this poor world by all legitimate means—using tents, indoor and outdoor services, and colportage work; we shall be thankful when God enables us again to send out into the villages a new Bible and Gospel carriage.

We go first to the towns, then the villages, and thence out, as the Lord may lead, into the foreign field. Many who were born to God, and trained to service in the Evangelistic Mission, are now among the heathen, and we keep in touch with them by correspondence, the printed word, and gifts in the way of ministry when possible. One of the first converts of the Evangelistic Mission went out in the famous "Lammermuir" party to China, and one of our workers has just sailed for Central Africa.

The centres of work are Kilburn Hall, Malden Hall, Willesden Hall (in a new and rapidly growing district), Bignold Hall, Manor Park Hall, and Mortlake Hall; with very vigorous Missions at Brighton, Stretham (Cambs.), and villages around Banbury where Ritualism and Romanism abound.

Rev. W. R. Mowll opened an animated address by declaring that he was always glad to speak on behalf of such a Gospel work as the Evangelistic Mission, for if there ever was a time that called for the clear declaration of the Gospel it is the present. There are multiplied agencies and incessant activities, but what is the result? The truth is we want the energy of the Holy Ghost; and unless our service is rendered in the power of the Spirit of God we can expect but little result. The speaker proceeded to give a vigorous exposition of 1 Cor. xvi. 13, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men." There is need, he maintained, for such an exhortation, for we do not want knock-kneed, watery, backboneless, jellyfish Christians, but men and women who can stand up for God in an ungodly age. Let us live for Him and be filled with his Spirit, and we shall be drawn closer one to the other.

Mr. Abraham Wallis spoke of the good work going on at the Bignold Hall, Forest Gate, where God is giving great blessing and has saved many souls. The work is prospering, so that they are about to build an extension. He had seen a good deal of the various halls of the Evangelistic Mission, and he knew that in each of them good work is being done.

Mr. Purcell bore testimony to the work in progress at Brighton. He was thankful Mr. Hurditch had been led to start there. The Athenæum, hired for Sundays, is well filled; while the week-day work in Pelham Hall goes on well. There are grand opportunities for open-air preaching. Altogether, under the care of Mr. Edward Hurditch, a very blessed work is in progress.

Mr. D. C. Apperly testified to his general experience in the work of the Mission. He thanked God he had seen very great blessing, and he wished continued success to the Evangelistic Mission.

Mr. Routledge declared that the work at Stretham deserved special mention. God has used it to the saving of many souls; not only in the place itself, but also from many villages around. Indeed, the Sunday afternoon service is largely attended by villagers coming in from the fen country to hear the Word. Fully one third of the adult population of the village is found in the Hall every Sunday.

At this point Mr. Hurditch submitted a financial statement, showing that for the present needs of the work generally, and of the Wilton Home of Rest at St. Leonards, about £1000 are urgently required. He wanted to know if he was to go on or to fall back. The need for such direct Gospel work is as great as ever. So far as he knew, the reply of his friends to-day is what it was two years ago, when he raised a similar question—go on; but if he were to go on the funds must be supplied. Mr. T. A. Denny and several others had sent liberal contributions, and it needed but a resolute effort to clear off the liabilities and enable him to start free on the summer campaign.

Rev. John Robertson came next, with a racy and practical address on Christian service generally. The first thing is that the workers must be believers. Till they are born again they cannot serve. Proceeding, he took the saying, "A true man must be head, heel, and heart" as the theme of an exhortation to the workers. The head must be right, intelligent, and instructed in the things of God, and sound in the faith. The heel must be ready for instant going when the call comes, and, on the other hand, firm planting where God bids us stand for the right. Then the heart must be on fire with the love of God, glowing with sympathy for our fallen fellows.

Mr. Henry Varley called serious attention to the deplorable spread of Sacerdotalism and Ritualism as evidenced by the latest issue of the "Tourist Guide." Popery is making determined efforts to recapture England, the hitherto impregnable stronghold of Protestantism, and she is doing it by means of Ritualism in the National Church. On the other hand Rationalism is working great evil, ramming, if we borrow the illustration from the Victoria disaster, the Church of God, and by shifting the centre of gravity causing it to "turn turtle." In view of such things we need more than ever the clear and unmistakable declaration of the Gospel, and this is the aim of the Evangelistic Mission to further.

Rev. Henry Sharpe added a few sentences on the power of the Holy Ghost, and the conditions on which He is willing to work in and by the believer.

Mr. Morgan concluded with a warm plea on behalf of the work of the Evangelistic Mission.

CENTRAL SOUDAN MISSION.

Many have been following with interest the resolute attempt being made by Mr. Herman G. Harris to penetrate from the north the central region of the Soudan. An occasional paper issued by the Mission gives a letter from Mr. Harris, dated Tuggurt, Algeria :—

We arrived here two days ago, exactly five weeks since we started from Gabes. It soon became evident that the French authorities were very suspicious and jealous of us. They insisted on sending a mounted Arab soldier with us all the way, changing the man from town to town. After some time their number was increased to two, and finally to four as we were nearing the frontier, and might possibly have given them the slip, and gone to the south. On reaching Tuggurt I was at once informed by the military authorities that they would not allow us to proceed any further, the alleged reason being the unsafe state of the country beyond.

This door to the Soudan is thus closed; the Lord has his own plan, and may not, perhaps mean us to go by this route.

There is a considerable Arab and Negro population here, and we think it a good centre for the time-being for my two comrades to stay and study Arabic and seek to spread the Gospel. We have, therefore, hired a portion of an Arab house for six months. It is rather rough quarters, but Messrs. Crook and Dick are not seeking for an easy path, and will rejoice if the Lord permit them to spread the Gospel in this place. I have engaged a good Arab man-servant for them, and hope they will make rapid progress with the language. I myself leave here in a few days for the province of Tunis, en route for Tripoli. I expect to reach Tripoli by the end of May, if not earlier, and there remain, to continue my Arabic studies, till the end of August.

I shall want £50 at least by the end of August for my contemplated journey to the Soudan. I have no doubt the Lord will provide the funds, if it be his will.

Mr. Thomas Holt sailed on May 9, from Liverpool, with two companions, to renew the attempt to enter the Soudan from the south. The route proposed is from Lagos to Sakoto, the largest of the negro kingdoms of the Central Soudan, passing Ibadan, Oyo, Ilorin, and Rabba, a distance of fourteen days' journey. Mr. Holt estimates that the sum of £400 will be required for this important branch of the work, the funds of which are kept distinct from the general account of the Mission. For this amount he is looking to Him who has never failed, that He may influence his stewards to supply every need. The hon. sec. is Mr. R. Caldwell, St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

ADVENT CONVENTION AT CARLISLE.

A PROFITABLE Convention on the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the coming again of our Lord was held in the Drill Hall, Carlisle, on Thursday and Friday last. Three meetings were held each day, and there were large audiences. Mr. HENRY CARR, of Carlisle, presided over the opening meeting, and delivered an appropriate address on 2 Kings xx., in which he referred to the manner in which Christians had neglected the study of one of the most important sections of God's Word. Rev. Dr. BULLINGER spoke on the importance of rightly dividing the word of truth in its many different aspects.

Dr. BULLINGER presided over the afternoon's meeting, and spoke of the past scattering and the future gathering of the Jews. Rev. JOHN RIDDELL, of Glasgow, delivered an able address, in which he took the Bible book by book, described the connection and characteristics of each, and showed the perfect harmony of the whole. In the midst of all the diversity of writers and circumstances and subjects there is perfect harmony, God speaking in every word, and controlling every thought.

Rev. LANCELOT HOLLAND (Edinburgh) spoke of the parousia (appearing) of Christ, and critically examined all the passages of Scripture in which reference is made to it.

Mr. BRANDRETH'S subject was "The Jews." He had often heard Christians ask what they had to do with the Jews. They had everything to do with the Jews. The whole of God's honour was bound up in Israel, and if God is not faithful to the promises He had made to the Jews there is no guarantee that He will fulfil promises made to the Gentiles.

Rev. W. M. SHEPHERD, vicar of St. John's, Carlisle, presided over the evening meeting. Dr. BULLINGER spoke of the great movements which are now taking place in Palestine, preparing the way for the return of the Jews to their native land. Rev. L. HOLLAND dwelt upon the necessity for casting every idol out of the heart before we can feel the joy that is bound up with the expectation of Christ's early coming.

Pastor JOHN ROBERTSON (Glasgow) delivered a brief address. After narrating how he came to this precious truth, or how the truth came to him, he said he did not believe they would ever enter into this glorious truth by argument. They would never reason themselves into it. It must be the gift of the Giver of all good. He prayed that God would lead them to take their place beneath the great white cloud, and to wait for the coming of Christ.

On Friday morning Mr. ROBERTSON again spoke on this subject. Describing himself as "a child of very very short age in this glorious hope," he said he could not go into the details, but he had in his heart the blessed conviction that Christ is coming again. When the Apostle received of the Lord that which he gave to the Church at Corinth, when the symbols of the death of the Lord Jesus were put on the table, the Spirit links the death of Jesus Christ to his coming again. That was what struck him first with great force. Years ago, during his first charge, Mrs. Baxter visited his northern manse, and they spoke on this subject of Christ's coming. Like many young ministers who had just concluded a long college course, he was a bit conceited, and he told Mrs. Baxter how he had listened to this professor and that professor, read this book and that book, but he failed to grasp this truth. He would never forget the rebuke which she gave him. It did him a world of good. Quietly she said, "You have listened to this man and that man, read this book and that book, but have you ever talked to the Lord about it?" He had never done that. If they got into his presence they would come out with this blessed truth in their hearts.

On Friday afternoon Pastor MARSH, of Sunderland, delivered an impressive address on the coming again of our Lord. Rev. L. HOLLAND completed his trio of addresses on the parousia of Christ, and urged his hearers to take up their residence in Christ.

The last meeting was very largely attended. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Bullinger and Pastor Marsh, the latter dealing exhaustively with the inspiration of the Scriptures.

WORK AMONG THE BAROTSI.

WE fear that our readers hear too seldom about the faithful and humble service that is being done for Jesus Christ in Central Africa by Rev. F. Coillard and his helpers. That veteran missionary is unwearied in his abundant labours among the benighted Barotsi tribes, but he is not prone to self-advertisement. A singularly vivid, pathetic, and interesting account, however, has come lately from him, and is published in a profusely-illustrated pamphlet by the British Committee of the Evangelical Mission to the Upper Zambesi, of which Mr. R. H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, is hon. sec.

M. Coillard's long letter is dated Barotsi Valley in September last, and gives the latest accounts of the progress of the Mission, as well as some estimate of its many difficulties. There are stations at Kazangula, where Mons. Jalla is the chief worker: at Sesheke, where the missionaries are Mons. and Madame Goy; at Sefula, where M. Coillard was himself stationed for some time, and where Mdme. Coillard died; Lealuyi, and at the capital of King Lewanika's territory, where the pastor is now endeavouring to establish a working centre. Details are given of the endeavours at these different posts. One of the most hopeful branches seems to be the industrial work of Mr. Waddell, a Glasgow brother, at Sefula. We counsel our interested readers to send to Mr. Hunter for a copy of the pamphlet, which will far more than repay perusal. In concluding his account, M. Coillard says:—

"This report gives a faithful picture of the situation. It is not glowing with success, but it is brighter than it has been for years past. Our needs are as transparent as they are urgent, and it is not necessary that I should press them more on the hearts of Christians who so heartily and liberally have already associated themselves to this humble work. We are most grateful to the ladies and gentlemen of the committee for all their efforts to bring the Mission to the notice of other Christians in England and Scotland. We have no other claims on their interest, save that the work entrusted to us is not ours, but the Lord's; but we know that that claim is strong enough to enlist and ensure the sympathies of all those who are interested in Africa, and who daily pray, 'Thy kingdom come!'

"As for us, we are deeply impressed with the golden opportunities given to us to do God's work among these wild but interesting Zambesians before the coming tide of European immigration sweeps over them. We anxiously look at the field: we mark on the map a chain of posts which it is important should soon be occupied; we cover the whole valley, the most populated part of country, with a network of stations and out-stations; we establish at Sefula a strong educational and industrial centre, with a Bible-school somewhere for the special training of teachers.

"Alas! all these are but our desiderata! Sickness and death have been busy among us. We have graves on every station. Our service here is a solemn one, consecrated by suffering. One of the founders of the Mission, Mons. Jeanmairit, with his family, two families of Basuto teachers, and last year a young man just then arrived from Paris, have, on account of broken health, definitely left the Zambesi, and gone to settle in Basutoland, These losses, involving at the same time heavy expenses of outfits and journeys, have sadly weakened our little band of workers. We are individually nailed to our stations, unable to visit each other to seek comfort and advice; and what is worse, we are unable to travel as we would like, and proclaim through the length and breadth of the land the glorious Gospel of salvation. The workers, the Master of the harvest alone can call and send them, and to Him we pray. The means, God's stewards, honoured by Him with the keeping of his wealth, and with the ministry of dispensing it to his own glory, they shall provide as they are able. We leave it to them and to God. But in closing we would earnestly request from the people of God, from all those under whose eyes these lines may fall, the crumbs, if nothing more, of their powerful interest and sympathy."

THE WOMEN AT OLYMPIA.—The tea meetings which Mr. William Forbes commenced some time ago for the employees at Olympia, are being continued in the same room by the local churches in Kensington. He can now give more attention to the employees engaged in the theatres.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

THEIR YEARLY MEETING.

IN my communication last week two slight inaccuracies occurred. What I meant to say was that "no burning question" had to be settled this year, and that the pen of Wm. Beck had rendered noble service to the cause. It is not usual for the clerks of the yearly meeting to have to announce three deaths during its sittings, but so it was this time, Charles Haylard, of Tottenham, late record clerk. Joseph Armfield, of Croydon, and John Phillips, of Tottenham, at the venerable age of about ninety years, had passed away. All had attained a good old age, and kindly things were said of all.

The delicate question of American correspondence was discussed for six or seven hours in very large meetings, with the outcome that no material change except in method is taking place. An earnest attempt was made to induce the yearly meeting to open up correspondence, if possible, with the "Hicksite" or Unitarian Friends, as well as the small bodies of dissentient Friends across the Atlantic, but the soundly evangelical sense and feeling of Friends made that course impossible. A very able and general epistle to all those yearly meetings with whom we have hitherto corresponded was heartily adopted, and notwithstanding divergence of sentiment, great love characterised not only this, but all the discussions of the yearly meeting.

Among the attractions of the annual gathering the nine o'clock prayer-meeting holds a conspicuous place. Perhaps never before were the meetings so lively, harmonious, and powerful as this year. Their solemnity and unity were indeed beautiful and helpful, and in some of them testimony was borne to the blessing received during the yearly meeting.

The Foreign Missions annual meeting, that of the Home Mission Committee, and that also of the Friends' Temperance Union, held on three successive evenings, were perhaps the most largely attended of any yet held; and many minds are asking, if the work continues to grow, how we shall find room for these great gatherings, the room being crowded each evening with probably not less than 1200 persons. Friends have now seventy missionaries in the foreign field, and the need and cry for extension are constantly felt and heard. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who gave a noble and telling address, was doubtless an attraction to the temperance meeting.

Subjects of world-wide interest are looked afte by the Meeting for Sufferings (or standing committee of the yearly meeting), and reported on to the body at large. Wherever slavery, injustice, or wrong appears, whether in Africa, India, America, or at home, Friends lend an attentive ear and kind hand to the sufferers, and the annual meeting is sure to hear of and sympathise with them.

On the subject of peace, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, by invitation, gave a very able and telling address, while different meetings of a special character were held for the young, both separately and unitedly. Interest, warming up to the point of enthusiasm, develops year by year, and with the growth of the evangelic and loving spirit a bright future seems to lie before the Society of Friends. The brotherhood of which they are the exponents and expression is what the world, and in some sense even the Churches, need, and with the revival of the true evangelical spirit of "early days" the need may in some measure be met by the younger generation of Friends.

Many of those who have had the privilege of attending the yearly meeting just over will probably have felt that for the prevalence of love and brotherhood, the able and temperate discussion of intricate questions of far-reaching importance, the hopefulness animating Friends generally, the large attendance and interest of those in early years, and the felt and acknowledged presence of the Head of the Church, few in recent years have equalled it. Gratitude and hope, thankfulness and peace filled many hearts as the yearly meeting of 1894 closed on Friday last. WM. HOBSON.

REV. J. SCOTT LIDGETT, head of the Bermondsey Wesleyan Settlement, has obtained possession of an old tavern in West-lane, and opened it as a new temperance public-house club and rallying-place for working men and benefit societies.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 10.—JEREMIAH XXXVII.

Zedekiah's Inquiry and the Divine Reply (1-10).—The name Coniah, from whose name the prefix Je is dropped, is a term of reproach. He was a man without God. (2) It is astounding that after so many reproofs and verifications of Jeremiah's words the whole people were still so regardless of his remonstrances and entreaties. (3) The message of chap. xxi. is slightly different to this. Here the issue of the conflict between the Chaldean forces, beleaguering Jerusalem, and the Egyptians which were coming to raise the siege, was still in the balance. There, after the repulse of Pharaoh, the Chaldeans were again advancing against Jerusalem. So this chapter premises that (4) Jeremiah had been in the prison (xxxii.-xxxiii. 1), from which he had been released. (5) Pharaoh's advance caused the temporary withdrawal of the Chaldean army; but Jeremiah assured the king that they would return. (9, 10) We often comfort ourselves by thinking that the judgment of our sins will not fall upon us. Every temporary respite encourages us in the hope, but God's mills grind on, however slowly, and they grind to powder.

The Prophet's Flight and Capture (11-21).—During the withdrawal of the Chaldean forces, Jeremiah took the opportunity of going to his native village, either to take possession of land, which he had bought from Hanameel, or to sell his crops. (14) The grandson of Hananiah, whose death Jeremiah foretold (xxviii. 16), thus took his revenge, and arrested Jeremiah as a deserter. (16) This prison consisted probably of a pit, out of which cells were excavated; in one of these Jeremiah spent many days. (17) There was no thought of the consequences to himself, or the prophet might have uttered smooth things. (20, 21) God still needed his witness in the guilty city. It was his hand which had brought Jeremiah back, and inasmuch as he was doing God's work his bread was provided him, and his water was sure. Within the precincts of the prison he was also secure from treachery and violence. God put his light into a strong case, and fed it with oil.

MONDAY, JUNE 11.—JEREMIAH XXXVIII.

The Dungeon (1-13).—The Chaldeans were back again. From his prison the voice of Jeremiah was heard through the city, for the people had free access to him. (2) Obviously his counsel that the people should go forth to the Chaldeans weakened the preparations of the Jewish leaders. He had no alternative except to declare God's truth, but it must have sorely hurt him to appear indifferent to patriotic efforts at resistance. (5) Zedekiah was weak. He used words of compliment, which thinly veiled his impotence and moral cowardice. (6) This was probably a cistern which had been used for water in the siege, and perhaps specially for the Court. (7) It is significant that the servant of God was helped by an Ethiopian. Many a time has there been religion in hearts where it was least expected. Ethiopians were amongst the earliest Christians (Acts viii. 27). (9) As there was no bread in the city, much less would it reach the prophet. The thirty men were to secure the execution of the king's edict. Trust God, O prisoners of hope! He has not forgotten you. He will bring you out from your dungeon. He will raise you up help. God has still his Ebed-melechs, whose name means "A king's servant"!

The Last Pleading (14-28).—The third entry faced the palace. This was a memorable interview. On the one hand Zedekiah in the last agony of fear, on the other the prophet worn with imprisonment and suffering, but confident in God and truth. We are reminded of Herod and John the Baptist, of Ahab and Micaiah. None that resist the Word of God can escape being broken by it. (17) It was the way of faith. It seemed unlikely that going forth would save his life and the city, but if he had dared to do as the prophet suggested, he would have found God's word true. (19) There are always fears in the way of doing God's will, but they break before resolute obedience as cobwebs. (22) Disobeying, the evil he feared would come to him inevitably, not from the deserters, as he thought, but from the women of his own harem. (27) The Bible does not justify Jeremiah in this verbal deception. Certainly the princes had no right to ask. Still there was subterfuge in the reply, not justifiable, not consistent with the loftiest faith. We are simply told the fact. Perfect trust would have made this unworthy answer needless.

TUESDAY, JUNE 12.—JEREMIAH XXXVIII.

The Fall of Jerusalem (1-14).—The siege had lasted eighteen months. The princes sat in the gate, the seat of judgment. In their names are contained references to the idols. Rab-saris, chief of eunuchs; Rab-mag, chief of magi. The lower city was taken, and the upper lay within their grasp. Zedekiah fled from the opposite side of the city, to escape beyond Jordan. (6) This reconciles chap. xxxii. 4, with Ezek. xii. 13. (8) One month after the city was fired, the temple and the palace perished, and there was a third deportation of the chosen people. Only the poor were left, and these received the lands which had been taken from them wrongfully. (11) Notice God's care of his servant. He was not only delivered from injury, but he was allowed to choose his lot. Those that fear God and serve Him utterly may suffer the hatred and obloquy heaped upon Jeremiah, but God numbers them amongst his jewels. Not a hair of their head can perish, and He inclines mighty heathen kings to become their protectors. For Gedaliah see xxvi. 24.

The Reward of Ebed-melech (15-18).—This takes us back before the city was taken. A bright reward came into the life of this good man. He was hated for his good deed to the prophet, but he would be delivered and saved amid the confusion of those last days. Put your trust in God, and your life will be a prey, hidden under the shadow of his wings, kept as the apple of his eye.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13.—JEREMIAH XL.

Jeremiah's Release (1-6).—In the sack and burning of the city, Jeremiah seems to have been led away in chains with the other captives, and not till he reached Ramah was he fully set at liberty. (2) The captain of the guard, like so many more of Nebuchadnezzar's officers, seems to have respected Jeremiah for his true and earnest words. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He makes even his enemies to be at peace with him." He had full liberty to go where he would. He might, without doubt, have gone to Babylon and lived there in peace and honour, but he chose to suffer affliction with his own people rather than accept the best that Babylon could give. And so he returned to Gedaliah.

A Gleam of Prosperity (9-12).—These were captains of the scattered forces of the Jews who now gathered around Gedaliah, fearful that the Chaldeans would inflict on them the fate suffered by Jerusalem. He assured them of their safety as long as they were prepared to submit to the King of Babylon. Gedaliah offered to bear the responsibility with the Chaldeans, whilst they were free to gather the fruit of the land. Indeed, there seems to have been a general rally of Jews from all quarters around the new-made Governor, with whom Jeremiah was associated.

Treachery (13-16).—Some suspicions of the plot were already rife, and were communicated to Gedaliah by his friends. Why Baalis should take part in the conspiracy does not appear. Ishmael had grounds for dissatisfaction, because he belonged to the seed royal, and may have thought himself entitled to the leadership of the remnant of his people. Gedaliah, however, was generous and unsuspicious, and withheld his friend Johanan. How marvellous that God should allow a man who was evidently raised up for a great purpose to be as fuel to the flame of jealous hate!

THURSDAY, JUNE 14.—JEREMIAH XLI.

The Murder of Gedaliah (1-10).—It was only the second month from the burning of the city. The crime was aggravated because they had eaten together. It was in violation of the sacred bond of hospitality. It was a suicidal act, since the King of Babylon had made him Governor. (5) The shaven beard indicated profound sorrow, as did the cutting which was forbidden (Lev. xix. 27). (6) These tears were simulated by Ishmael to disarm suspicion, and to lead them to think that his grief was as great as theirs. (8) By this artifice, which appealed to the cupidity and need of Gedaliah, they saved their lives, and secured his downfall. (10) It may be that Ishmael even intended to sell these girls as slaves. It was an abominable and atrocious crime. One of those that makes us think that the evil that men do originates in the hatred and sin of the evil hosts of darkness that lie so near us. We need spiritual power to overcome.

Righteous Vengeance (11-18).—Even in this world a judgment throne is set up, and men are judged. (13) Ishmael's followers turned against him. His captives gladly took the opportunity to escape, but Ishmael, a lonely fugitive, fled. (17) Their ultimate destination was Egypt, but they halted at the compound or inn, which bore the name of Chimham, to whom David gave it, as a recognition of Barzillai's loyalty. So, finally, all they that draw the sword shall perish by the sword. The wicked shall consume away as the fat of lambs, their schemes shall prove abortive; their high-handed wrong shall return on their own heads.

Fret not thyself because of evil-doers; they shall be soon cut off. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him.

FRIDAY, JUNE 15.—JEREMIAH XLII.

The Appeal to Jeremiah (1-6).—The servant of God, being at rest in Him, is generally level-headed. Men naturally resort to him for direction and advice. In the prophet's case it had been evident that the Spirit of God dwelt in Him, and spoke by his lips. Evidently he had established a reputation for prayer. The people asked his intercession that they might know the way wherein they should walk, and the thing they should do. In this double-barrelled prayer we may all join. (4) We have no right to withhold aught that the Lord hath spoken, and which it is needful for men to know. We must not add thereto, or detract from, lest our names be taken from the book of life. (5) This was a fair arrangement. Oh that we were ever really willing to obey. But, too often, as here, complaisant words are used when the heart is in revolt. "Evil" means what they might dislike.

Jeremiah's reply (7-22).—God often keeps us waiting. If the vision tarry, wait. The delay brought out the simplicity of the prophet's mind. At all costs he must get God's word. (10) God had appointed the supremacy of Babylon. To accept it was the way of wisdom and safety, and though it seemed contrary to human expectation that they should peaceably enjoy life under Chaldean rule, yet if God assured them of his protection, all would be well. (13) Human prudence so often hesitates and prefers its own way. "We will go," "there will we dwell." As before Jeremiah bade them go forth to the Chaldeans, so now he urged them to accept the Divine policy of remaining under their sway. (19) Apparently whilst he was speaking, he detected an evident movement of dissent amongst his audience. He answers this, and pleads that they would not deal deceitfully against their souls. How bitter Jeremiah's disappointment! How terrible his indictment. "Ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord in anything"! Was ever true heart more bitterly wrung than his! It seemed as though his life was one long failure, but we cannot fail if we will do the errands of the Almighty.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16.—JEREMIAH XLIII.

The Answer of the Proud Man (1-3).—What we do not like we account false. Man's pride cuts out of Scripture the tidings of the doom of sin, but he cannot thereby escape the doom itself. Pride even says the truth speaks falsely. The ungodly are fickle as the wind. In the previous chapter, they unanimously declared the reliableness of Jeremiah, here, they impugn it.

The Flight to Egypt (4-7).—Tahpanhes was on the Egyptian frontier. This return to Egypt was a sorry end to the great history of the nation since they left it under Moses. But there was a graft or shoot left which repaid Jehovah's care, and was to be the origin of the spiritual Israel.

A Terrible Prediction (8-13).—Pharaoh's palace was being repaired at this time, so mortar and brick were in the entry. The stones laid in the mortar were prepared for the throne of the King of Babylon, which was to be erected upon them. In escaping to Egypt, the Jews had rushed into the arms which they had left their country to avoid. (10) Nebuchadnezzar is called God's servant, as though he sought among the heathen executors of his will, which He failed to find in Judah. (12) The idol gods could not deliver Jehovah's people. (13) In the fifth year after the fall of Jerusalem, these predictions were literally fulfilled. Bethshemesh was the Greek Heliopolis, the City of the Sun. "The pillars" are obelisks. The moral is to take the way of faith and obedience though contradicted by human wisdom. It alone leads to light and safety.

THE MILAN EXHIBITION.

An exhibition is being held in Milan, attended by large numbers of people from different parts of Italy. Feeling it is an opportunity for evangelisation which ought not to be lost, I have with great difficulty secured a hall close to one of the exhibition entrances. In this Roman Catholic country many will not let a room to a Protestant, especially for the purpose of holding meetings. A correspondent in your paper in November said, "As there was to be an exhibition in Milan, could not the Christians there hold meetings as was done in Chicago." I sincerely thank him for the suggestion. I have invited ministers from different parts of Italy, earnest Christians who have the gift of evangelisation, to hold daily meetings.

We propose to have meetings every evening and three times a week in the afternoon. Each minister is invited for a week. The four local ministers, who are members of the Evangelical Alliance, the Waldensian, Wesleyan, Free Church, and Baptist have promised to help. I would earnestly ask the prayers of your readers that there may be many converted and Christians awakened and strengthened. The hire of the hall, furnishing, lighting, board, lodging, and travelling of the ministers, the supplying of the Book dépôt, all need funds, and we shall be very glad if any friends will help. I am hoping to be in England the last week in July, through August and September, and shall be very glad if friends of Italy would invite me to give an account of the work here at drawing-room meetings or garden parties.

THE WOES OF THE DRUNKARD.—PROV. xxiii. 29-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 31.

THERE is a story told of a lady who, to cure her husband of the habit of intemperance, had him photographed while in a state of intoxication, and presented the picture to him one morning at breakfast. It is said that the remedy proved effectual. This lesson is a true photograph of the drunkard, and should prevent any from beginning a habit which may lead to such terrible consequences. Rev. C. Bridges calls this "the drunkard's looking-glass." Those who are only beginning the habit will do well to look into this mirror, and take warning.

The evil of intemperance is not exaggerated. No picture could be true which was not terrible. There are few of us who cannot recall some who sat with us in the same Sunday-school, and of whom this description has now become a fact. They have had all the pleasure that the intoxicating cup can give them, and are now reaping the harvest of "woes." These woes are: (1) Inward. Note the margin of Rev. Ver. (29). The conscience feels the bitterness of remorse, dreads the terrible issue, and cries out "Oh!" and "Alas!" This is perhaps the first woe the drunkard feels. The bitterness of it only he himself can know. The contrast between what he was and what he is; the regret that he should ever have formed the habit; the sense of helplessness and hopelessness now, all these cause him inward pain. (2) Social woes follow. Drink makes a man contentious and complaining, inflames the passions, makes him forget the claims of his family. Have you ever been waiting with the drunkard's wife and children for the return of the drunken husband and father? Have you noticed how they have trembled at the sound of the unsteady footstep, and how they have had to flee from his presence as soon as he entered? The picture is too vivid to be forgotten by some of us. Men who naturally love their home become cruel tyrants when influenced by drink. (3) Then come bodily woes. Wounds (29) received in causeless disputes, or in accidents for which drink is solely responsible. The whole face and form of the drunkard show marks of his sin. As John Ploughman puts it: "The nose blushes for the sins of the mouth." The bleared eyes, dimmed through excess (30), begin also to see strange things (33, R.V.) under the influence of delirium. Drink, like another demon, holds full possession of the man, so that he becomes insensible to his danger (34), and will return to his sinful habit in spite of every warning. (35) Illustrations of all these consequences can be found in every daily paper.

WHAT IS THE REMEDY?—There are some who deny that total abstinence is ever taught in the Bible. Carefully note verses 30-32. All these curses are attributed to the excessive use of strong drink (30). They "tarry long" and seek "mixed wine," i.e., spiced, drugged, and therefore more powerfully intoxicating. All these consequences result from such intemperate indulgence. But what is the remedy? A moderate use of this intoxicating cup? Solomon is too wise to make such a proposal. The evil results from excess, the remedy is the most stringent, total abstinence (31). The wine cup is described in its most fascinating character. And the advice is not—Take as much of it as will conduce to health and enjoyment, but—Don't even look at it. How often has a look at some tempting object led to sinful indulgence! The advice means: Keep as far away from it as possible. Don't presume upon your fancied strength to be able to stand where others have fallen. Avoid the company where the wine cup will be offered to you. He who never takes the first glass will never take the second. In New Testament language that means "deny yourself" (Matt. xvi. 24). Until you can find a better remedy, would you not do well to adopt this?

The lesson applies to every other form of sin, of which the fascinating wine cup is a fitting type. Yet, remember, that resolutions and pledges are in themselves powerless to effect a man's deliverance. Men must not only look away from the sin, but must look to the Saviour (Isa. xlv. 22). W.

TRACTS FOR TRINIDAD.—Rev. J. L. Steele, Epworth House, Tunapuna, Trinidad, B.W.I., writes:—A few years ago you inserted in your columns my plea for tracts, and I was thankful for the hearty response accorded me then. Souls have been won and others strengthened by the little messages of love and warning. I have been transferred now from Prince's Town to Tunapuna, and here find a yet more crying need of evangelistic literature, to warn the thousands of benighted people around of their eternal danger. I would again ask those who can help to send me parcels of tracts, large and small, plain and pictorial, earnest and evangelistic.

For the Young.

MUSICAL DRILL.

"OH, sister, if only we had a piano!" They were drilling. Little arms and feet worked well in unison, pale faces glowed with a spark of healthy colour from the regular exercise, and all twelve children, from fourteen-year-old Alice to Baby Doris, were doing what the Americans call their "level best."

Baby Doris especially, for she only it was who had been to a real gymnastic exhibition, and had come back brimful of delight and excitement, to teach the others some new exercises, and tried with all the might of her four-year-old vocabulary to explain the way they should be done.

And they were getting on. Some few weeks they had been learning to drill now, and already narrow little chests had begun to expand; stooping shoulders straightened themselves, drooping heads instinctively became more erect. They all liked it. It was fun to them—an interesting game, but nearly each drilling lesson always ended with something like this—"Oh, sister, if only we had a piano!" For drilling without music, after all, is rather tiresome—in fact, it may be compared to a plum-pudding without the plums.

And who are these children? Come with me to Hope Cottage, Woodford Green, Essex, and I will tell you. There you will see a company of little lassies, with sad, sad past histories. Most of them have come there through the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and their poor little faces will cloud over terribly if you ask them anything about their former lives. Happily, however, among the very tiny ones, these sad things are soon forgotten, and they learn to laugh and play like other children. Only twelve little girls are received at once into this Rescue Home, but in the course of years very many have passed through it, and have reason to thank God for the happy years they have spent there.

Mrs. Johnston—whose Home it is—assisted by the deaconess-matron, Sister May, from Tottenham, do their very utmost to care for these poor little ones in the best possible way, and every effort is made to make them forget the misery, starvation, bad habits, and ways of their short, but terrible past.

Kind, gentle words and looks replace the drunken cruelty and oaths that once were theirs; good and wholesome food is given them instead of hard crusts and not enough of those. School and play replace the training in vice, which was all the education they were receiving; and good habits of truthfulness, obedience, and cleanliness are enforced, not by harsh words and cruel blows, but by kindness and patience, and much careful teaching over and over again. Best of all, they are taught to know and love Jesus, to pray to and serve Him.

The Home is not like your idea of an orphanage—not one bit. It is a bright, pleasant little house, only large enough to hold the twelve children comfortably, and it does not look the least like an institution. The children are not dressed in any uniform, and they go to school every day just like their more fortunate little sisters who have homes of their own, and a father's and mother's love to shelter them.

A nice garden surrounds the Home, and one long bed in it is divided into several smaller ones by stones and shells, each of which beds is proudly claimed by one of the children as "my garden." There they can weed and rake and hoe and plant to their hearts' content; and even pull up the seeds again to see if they are growing without anyone scolding them.

One little girl has learned to knit gloves very nicely, and is busily employed out of school-hours in making a nice warm pair of gloves for each member of the family before next winter comes to pinch their fingers in his icy grasp.

Another tells you proudly that she made some lentil soup for an industrial exhibition held in Woodford a short time ago, which won the first prize; and that "Fannie" got a first prize, too, for a cake; also that Baby Doris, fired with ambition, pleaded to be allowed to try too, and, nothing daunted, embarked in a "jelly," which, I need hardly tell you, did not win a prize!

But Baby does not mind her failure one bit, and cheerily declares she is going to try again next year. She is the sweetest, brightest little pet imaginable. Go down to Woodford some day and see her. Visitors are always welcomed at the Home, and Baby will chat away to anyone in the most delightful manner, quite devoid of all shyness.

Go one day out of the children's school-hours, and watch them at home. See how well cared for they are; and yet how much more might be done if only there was more money to do it with.

Think, if you had a little sister, starved and ill, treated as these have been, how glad you would be for someone to take care of and be kind to her. Will you, then, not try to help these little sisters of ours—help them to forget the past, and give them the chance of a better life?

Money, clothes, toys, and suitable books are always acceptable; and, oh! if someone only had an old piano that they had quite done with, and yet which would urge them on by quick march and lively gallop to do their "level best" at drilling, how much pleasure it would give these twelve little ones.

I wonder if you have one? If so, send it along to "Sister May, Hope Cottage, Woodford Green, Essex," and see if she does not send you a warm letter of thanks by the very next post.

THE GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.

JUST twelve months ago I accompanied the late Henry Cook, who was connected so long and honourably with this work, on a most delightful mission tour in the new steamer along the Cornish coast. In less than five weeks from the time I left him at Gosport for my usual seaside work amongst the children, he had gone up and gone home to be numbered with the holy in the city which hath twelve foundations.

The worker was buried, but the work still goes on. And many will be glad to know that when I called on Mrs. Cook a few days ago, I heard that the Mission is being wonderfully blessed and sustained by the Lord in all its branches, and that it was never in a more healthy or vigorous condition than it is at the present time. A very cheering and encouraging report has been received from Newton Ferry, where special services have recently been held on board the Good News. A friend of the Mission writes, "Eternity alone will reveal all the good that has been accomplished through the visit of the vessel." Not only was the Gospel preached with signs following, but £3 worth of Testaments were sold on board. And after the vessel had left it was found that the Lord's grateful poor had placed £3 12s. in the box as a thankoffering for the many tokens of God's presence and power manifested amongst them.

The steamer is now at Penzance, where she was joined on June 1 by Mrs. Cook, who hopes, during the next three months, to visit the Isles of Scilly, Cardiff, Bristol, and many places in the Bristol Channel; and on the homeward voyage St. Mawes, Falmouth, Appledore, and Ilfracombe.

Instead of a male evangelist, Mrs. Cook is accompanied on this tour by Miss Gooch, daughter of Pastor Fuller Gooch, of West Norwood. I have pleasure in heartily commending Mrs. Cook and Miss Gooch to all the Lord's people in the various ports they purpose visiting, and trust they will receive much sympathy and support.

POOR BOYS' SUMMER CAMP.—This camp in connection with the Manchester Children's Refuges has been formed for the season at Southport. The object is to provide a week's holiday under canvas at the seaside for poor lads living in crowded courts and streets. Last year no fewer than 1122 poor little fellows enjoyed a week by the sea. To see the white faces of the lads as they appear first in the camp, and their rosy cheeks on departing home after their week's stay, is a sight never to be forgotten. Each Sunday afternoon, weather permitting, an open-air service is held on the camp ground. In the morning and evening of the Sabbath the boys are taken to a place of worship. Public meetings and concerts are held during the week, and everything possible is done to make the holiday a great blessing to the boys.

A Call to Prayer.

Do you ever pray? A strange question, you say. "Why, I pray twice daily, sometimes oftener." Well, perhaps you go down upon your knees and say some words, but do you even pray that effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man, which availeth much? Do you ever so ask as to obtain? That is the true test of having asked aright, and tried by that test is there not need for much more real prayer? Is it any wonder you are receiving so little when you are asking so little? How much did you ask last Sabbath for yourself, for the other members of your church, for your pastor, not to speak of Christ's other witnesses at home and abroad? Do you realise that you are as responsible for praying as your pastor is for preaching, and do you ever think that the power of his preaching will in a great measure depend on the power his people have in prayer? Of old Paul again and again besought his converts to pray that utterance might be given him, and in our own day Spurgeon used to say he could not preach unless upheld by prayer. If men of such gifts and grace needed and sought the prayers of others, may we not conclude that less-gifted men need such help no less?

Are there not many things to ask for? Are all in your church converted to God? Are all the Christians fully consecrated to Christ's service? Are you? Is it not too sadly true that some even of the members have not been "born again," and that many are living more for self than for Christ, and so giving but half-hearted service at the best? How many in your church can humbly but truly testify to having received the power of the Holy Ghost to fit for service, and how many can honestly say that they are willing to go "wheresoever" the Lord may send them? Can you?

Now, if these things are so, if they are even partially true, do they not call us to confession to God, and to a time of humble expectant waiting on Him? The Lord has promised, if we bring all the tithes into his storehouse, that He will open the windows of heaven and pour out blessing till there be not room to receive it, and He is faithful that promised, and will most certainly keep his word. Will you fulfil the conditions? Will you yield yourself and all you have to Him that He may cleanse you from all your filthiness and all your idols, and fill you with his Spirit, and then will you unite in asking that his own people everywhere may be filled with the Spirit? If we agree in asking this in the name of the Lord Jesus, it shall be granted unto us. Brethren! will you so agree?

May the Lord stir up our hearts and enable us to lay hold on Him and wait upon Him till He answers by fire—the fire of the Holy Ghost!

PASTOR CHINIQUY.

In a recent letter Pastor Chiniquy says: "You know how my home library and furniture were completely destroyed by the incendiary torch of Rome about fourteen months ago. Only a few weeks back my printer failed, owing me a thousand dollars. This completes my ruin! Though it is the will of my Heavenly Father to try me by the loss of the last cent I had, I must thank Him for giving me a treasure which is more than all the gold of California, in good health of body, allowing me, though eighty-five years of age, to work in his vineyard as if I were a young man."

A correspondent suggests that a committee should be formed of three or four influential Christian men, and subscriptions invited to secure for Pastor Chiniquy a fixed, if moderate, income for the remainder of his life.

JEWISH NOTES.

PERSIA.

From an account in the Jewish Missionary Intelligence, of a journey by Mr. Norollah through Persia, we learn the surprising fact that the Bab religion, which has made such rapid strides among the Mohammedans, has also taken deep root among the Jews in some places. At one town even the Rabbi himself has become a Babi. This strange religious movement, which is undermining the religion of Islam in Persia, is somewhat similar in character to that of the Brahmo Somaj, and other theistic movements, by which Hinduism in India and Judaism in the western world are being honeycombed to-day.

The Babis, while accepting the New Testament as a message from God, maintain that Christ came again to earth fifty years ago, in the person of Beha, the founder of their religion. Many hundreds of them have been put to death, and many others have undergone terrible sufferings on account of their belief. It is, therefore, all the more striking that Jews should embrace a religion which in so many respects is akin to Christianity. At the present time, however, the Jews in Persia are thoroughly dissatisfied with their own religion, and it is stated on good authority, that were a man to arise who should claim to be their Messiah, they would readily follow him, thus fulfilling the Saviour's words:—"If another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive."

PALESTINE.

Miss Barlee, of the London Jews' Society, who commenced work at Jerusalem about ten years ago, thus describes the changes which have taken place during her residence there:—"Innumerable houses have been built outside the city walls, and new colonies formed. Rows of new houses are to be seen in places where, when I first came, I used to pick wild flowers among the rocks and stones. Progress is written upon everything. The Jaffa Railway, now an established thing, ceases to be an object of wonder to the native population; new lines will soon be open in other parts of the country; a boat now crosses the Dead Sea, and lately I received a letter from Kerak in Moab, where postal communication with Jerusalem has been established. In Jerusalem itself, civilisation has made rapid strides, carriages of every description are now plying to and fro in the different new roads. Missionaries, too, are multiplied. It would seem that the Lord's time to favour Zion is at hand."

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Amidst privations and dangers, which tested their faith and courage to the utmost, Dr. and Mrs. Rocha, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, have succeeded in paying pioneer visits to some of the Jewish colonies in Argentina, which have been recently established by Baron Hirsch. The Lord set before them an open door, and the missionaries were filled with joy when they saw how readily the poor exiles from Russia received copies of the Word of God, or listened to the message concerning their Messiah, whose soul was made an offering for sin, and who is coming again.

The success of these Jewish colonies is now an established fact. H.M. Vice-Consul at Buenos Ayres, in his report to the Foreign Office on the subject, writes as follows:—"These colonies have, so far, succeeded beyond all expectation, and it has now been shown that even those Jews formerly occupied exclusively in town occupations, and destitute of all agricultural knowledge, can become satisfactory agricultural colonists, if practically taught and aided in their work, a fact hitherto doubted, and often denied."

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

At the monthly meeting of workers on Friday last, Mr. W. Noble in the chair, Miss Ellen Everett, lately returned from Zanzibar, gave an interesting account of the Sailors' Rest there. The Rest is not yet fully developed, but requires a library and games which sailors can engage in. The meetings are fairly well attended. There is a great sphere for evangelistic work.

With regard to finances, it was stated that collecting cards are being issued. A lady at Peckham has collected £30 in pennies. Miss Everett also mentioned that she would be glad to address drawing-room meetings in the interest of the work. Rev. W. Cuff followed with a stirring address on the work of God, and the way to do it.

THE SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION

FOR THE SUFFERING POOR.

The object of this Mission is to unite the hearts of Christian people in circulating the Scriptures freely amongst the suffering poor everywhere, and to print them in such an attractive form that the masses cannot fail to read them, and thus be made "wise unto salvation."

To further this object the four Gospels have been prepared at a great cost, and printed separately, at one penny each, being truthfully illustrated from original sketches made in the Holy Land by H. A. Harper, of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

There are upwards of 100 engravings used, none of which attempt to reproduce scenes out of the Gospel narratives, least of all to portray Jesus Himself among his disciples. The reproduction of well-known works of sacred art may be useful in this respect, but these illustrations serve a different purpose. The actual features of the country are here presented: the hill-country of Judea; the Jordan; the road to Jerusalem; various views of the Mount of Olives and Jerusalem; the bridge over the brook Cedron; Bethlehem; Bethany; scenes about Galilee; perhaps the most charming of all, a view of Nazareth from the hills above; the site of Capernaum and Sidon on the sea-shore. There are upwards of sixty illustrations which deal more with the personal life and habits of the people. These are various in subject and also in worth, affording many interesting glimpses into Eastern life. Here we see the washing of hands and of feet; women grinding at a handmill; drawing water; eating from the common dish; greetings in the market; praying in the streets; begging; a scribe busy writing; man on housetop; washing of nets; laden burden-bearer; a Rabbi reading the law; kissing the scroll of the law; a Pharisee binding on phylacteries; and many others.

We believe that those who are naturally disinclined would read the Scriptures if presented to them in this interesting form, and when we think of the efforts that are being made to sow broadcast impure and atheistic literature, of the untold millions of pamphlets that are being sent out, we believe the very best way to conteract the influence is doubtless by a much larger distribution of the Scriptures. These four Gospels, with their beautiful narratives of our Saviour's life on earth, are the very best parts of Scripture to put into the hands of the people. Truth in its beauty will best put to shame the ugliness and meanness of falsehood and foulness; if therefore, we can do anything to make the word of God more attractive, and more accessible to the people, surely this is worthy of our notice. These Gospels, if widely distributed, could not fail to draw men to study that life, or make them fall in love with a character so perfect, so sympathetic and divine.

Should any reader of this letter wish to help to extend this great work, fifty thousand of these Gospels could be circulated judiciously amongst the needy poor by reliable Christian agents in England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Spain, Italy, Russia, Germany, for the sum of £200, or less quantities at £4 10s. per thousand. Donations towards the free distribution of these Scriptures will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the hon. secretary, W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's-churchyard, London. Specimens of the four Gospels beautifully illustrated sent for six penny stamps.

MRS. GRIMKÉ'S TEXT CARDS.

Dear Sir,—There is a very real and effective kind of missionary work carried on in a quiet way by the "Text Card Mission," Wellington House, Higher Broughton, Manchester. Mrs. Grimké gives her time and work gratuitously to this Mission. Many are the workers at home and abroad who have received help. As one such, I would bring this work to the notice of your readers, and plead its cause, as I am informed its work is curtailed through lack of funds.

Mrs. Grimké generously sent me to North China a quantity of cards in Chinese, which I gave as rewards to our Chinese Sunday scholars. Through this and other means, the usual "foreign devil" has been changed to "Missionary, when is it Sunday?" as we go along the streets; and I often see Mrs. Grimké's cards in heathen homes, carried thither by our Sunday-school scholars. Picture cards with texts are taken where the missionary cannot enter. I trust the work will not be allowed to stand for lack of funds.—Yours sincerely, Frederick Brown.

REV. FREDERIC E. WIGRAM,

HONORARY SECRETARY CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

By Mrs. RUNDLE-CHARLES.

THERE is nothing better to be desired for any country at any time, and especially for England at the present time, than that burdensome and responsible public offices should be undertaken freely by men with leisure and property, and of high and disinterested character. The Church Missionary Society has been remarkably happy in having thus secured, successively, the voluntary services as honorary secretaries of three such men as Rev. Henry Venn, Rev. Henry Wright, and Rev. Frederic Wigram. All of them would probably have been felt by those who knew them to be men who, if they thought about the matter at all, would take publicity of any kind as a rather uncomfortable, if necessary, adjunct to what they would regard as simply doing their duty.

Rev. F. E. Wigram was born at Walthamstow in 1834. He is the son of Mr. Edward Wigram, and grandson of Sir Robert Wigram, Bart. He was educated at Harrow, and took his (ægrotat) degree in the Mathematical Tripos at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1857. He was ordained in 1858 to Rev. John Scott's curacy, St. Paul's, Cambridge. On May 1, 1859, he married Frances Wright, daughter of Mr. Francis Wright, of Osmaston Manor, Derbyshire. In 1863 he became curate to his uncle, Rev. William P. H. Wigram, at Wanstead.

In his early years Mr. Wigram's heart had turned towards work in the foreign mission field, and it had been a matter of earnest thought with him whether he should not himself become a missionary. But his life seemed to be led in another direction, and 1864 he became incumbent of Christ Church, Portswood, Southampton. There he was hon. secretary of the local Church Missionary Association for many years. The sudden death of his brother-in-law, Rev. Henry Wright, hon. secretary of the C.M.S., made a blank which it was felt none could fill better than Mr. Wigram. Thus his life was directed once more into its earlier channels, and he was able to fulfil the desire of his heart by devoting himself, not to one mission only, but to the succour and guidance of missions and missionaries on all the fields on which the Society sows and reaps.

It may not be generally known how responsible and important a post that of the secretaries of the C.M.S. is, by the constitution of the society. Rev. Henry Venn used to say they are not like secretaries of a Board, merely carrying out orders, but more like Secretaries of State, forming a responsible Cabinet, of which the honorary secretary would be as the Prime Minister. It belongs to the hon. secretary to correspond with the Archbishop of Canterbury, and to be the general medium of communication with the Ecclesiastical authorities.

But Mr. Wigram's chief work is personal intercourse with candidates and missionaries. This is naturally bound up with the life in his own home, where his hospitality is unbounded towards actual and prospective workers. And it should be remembered that such hospitality in a busy life, however pleasant to giver, as well as receiver, must involve much demand on heart and mind, hospitality being, indeed, the form of "doing good" which has in it, perhaps, the most of "communicating," that is, not merely of distributing from outside, but of sharing the inner self.

Mr. Wigram's liberality in giving in other ways is well known, and cannot be hidden. His donation of £10,000 to the C.M.S. Children's Home is but one instance of the continual flowing forth of kindnesses, great and little. But all his giving of "substance" is indeed as a mere extra thrown in with the entire giving up of time and strength, of life, of himself, to the service of God and man, for the love of Christ, in the great cause of Christian missions. His generous gifts of money to the Home for the Children of Missionaries are only one expression of the fatherly care he bestows on them, befriending and helping them in every possible way, especially those who are orphans.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Lombardi & Co., 13, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.)

For some years after he became hon. secretary of the Society it was his wish and purpose to make a tour of the missions. He felt that his sympathetic help would be more real and to the point if it could be illuminated by personal knowledge of the various divisions of the great battlefield, and personal acquaintance at their several posts with those who are carrying on the battle. At last in October, 1886, he was able to carry out his purpose, and to start accompanied by his eldest son, Mr. Edmund Wigram, on a missionary tour round the world, visiting the Church Missionary stations in India, China, Japan, and North America. This journey took him nearly a year. He did not return till September, 1887.

This was an arduous undertaking, and no mere "globe-trotting tour." In India, for four months, Mr. Wigram was travelling nearly every night, and addressing missionaries or native teachers or congregations every day, sometimes several times a day. A record of this tour is given in a volume of letters from Mr. Edmund Wigram, published at the Church Missionary House. In a portion of Mr. Wigram's journal printed in this volume, written at Karachi, he says:—

> People are slow to realise what the trials and opportunities and hindrances of missionary work are; and I am convinced that were Christians at home to realise, even in a limited degree, what we have seen during these four months of open doors and faithful work, and lack of men and means for efficiently fulfilling responsibilities pressing themselves on the workers, the needed impulse would be given, and many of the difficulties which now sorely try faith and patience would be swept away by the rising tide of practical sympathy and co-operation.

Again, in an address to the Karachi Literary Association, Mr. Wigram says:—

> In speaking of the impressions produced on my mind by what I had seen and heard of the effects of education on the people, I asked my audience to seek an explanation for the fact, testified to by so many (not at all particularly favourable to missionary enterprise) that I cannot doubt it, that men educated in mission schools are known by their employers as men with a higher idea of duty and truth, as men more trustworthy than those educated elsewhere. In speaking of the impression produced by the marvel of British rule holding together so many elements which have, and under existing circumstances can have, no cohesion, I anticipated the time (if the Lord delay his coming) when the spread of Christianity will have broken down the barriers, and welded into one the now conflicting elements of the various peoples who form the British Empire; and that then they would be in a position to govern themselves, and England would be able to yield up the trust committed to her with the happy consciousness that she had endeavoured to fulfil it unselfishly and for the good of the peoples.

Again, as to the importance of Christian education not ending in secret adhesion, but leading to open confession of Christ, he writes :—

I was shown during the day one man who secretly professes to be Christian, and who, a long time ago, persuaded another to administer to him secretly the Sacrament of Baptism. From all I have seen and heard during my tour through India I think one cannot attach any value to the profession of these "secret disciples." One realises more than ever the Divine wisdom of Christ's requirement of his followers to confess Him before men. Sooner or later those who have not had the courage to confess Him openly seem to drift from the faith they have secretly professed. How earnestly we should pray that grace should be given to such men to forsake all and follow Christ, and prove the reality of the "hundred fold" which He gives to all who sacrifice aught for his sake and the Gospel.

What the blessing this journey was felt to be by those on the mission field two witnesses writing from distant and different spheres may show. Bishop Moule writes from Shanghai:—"The blessing conferred by our Lord on the wide mission field by giving Mr. Wigram and his good son the will and power to make their tour of the world, cannot possibly, I think, be exaggerated. How often, during my thirty years abroad, have I longed for such a visit. I thank God I did not wholly miss it, and that it was paid by a man of sympathy so deep and large as our beloved honorary secretary."

An experienced missionary, Rev. R. Phair, writes:—"In the diocese of Rupert's Land, after our beautiful service all in Indian, we were treated to an excellent practical sermon from Mr. Wigram. The chief thanked Mr. Wigram over and over again for the good words he and his people had heard. He added, "We have often heard of the great praying-men, and have received much from them, but to have lived to see and hear a real one, as I do with my eyes to-day, is more than I ever expected." Mr. Edmund Wigram ends his letters with these words:—

So we end our tour amongst the Old World Missions. But though it is the unchanging East that we have left behind us, we come homeward having seen that in this Old World too, buried so long in ignorance and stagnation, there is approaching, and there is in part come already, a resurrection and an awakening to new life and a new world. India and Japan are all astir; old things are passing, new things coming in their place. What shall the new things and the new life be? And how much are we, both as a Church and as individuals, responsible for what they are, and for whether the new life to multitudes of our fellow-creatures is indeed to be true life from the dead, even life for evermore?

Mr. Wigram is regarded with great affection by those who work with him. It is felt that he never expects to be paid in power for his sacrifices of time and property, but is always ready to yield his own personal wishes to others, though always firm as a rock as to convictions and purposes which affect the interests of the great cause to which he devotes his life. The tenderness of his sympathy with disappointed candidates (those who on account of health or other unconquerable difficulties cannot be accepted) has been especially remarked, united, as it is, with the utmost faithfulness and care in choosing the instruments best fitted for the work. Accurate and patient, unwearied in labour, with the insight of love, and the tact of "saving common sense," with an absolute absence of self-seeking or self-exaltation in any form, it may be imagined how his influence tells. What it is at home is shown by the fact that two of his sons and one of his daughters have devoted themselves to foreign missions, two being already in India. Three daughters and one son of his brother-in-law and predecessor, Rev. Henry Wright, are also in the mission field. To such men as these the world owes more than the hand of any biographer can pen.

THE SCOTCH ASSEMBLIES.

The Established and Free Church Assemblies have concluded their labours for another year, and their members are once more scattered over Scotland to take up their work with quickened enthusiasm. The meetings have undoubtedly been of a stimulating character, and some of the speeches were singularly well fitted to advance the Christian cause. Perhaps the one which stood out above all others for its eloquence and power was that given by Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, in the Free Assembly Hall, a portion of which we reproduce elsewhere. He fully rose to the occasion, and gave one of the most emphatic testimonies to the virtue of the old evangelical faith which has been ever heard in Scotland. His address will be a memory and an inspiration to hundreds of ministers for many a long day.

Among the laymen in the Free Assembly, Lord Overtoun has done yeoman service, as he has delivered three great speeches to crowded audiences in the morning on the reports of the Foreign Mission, Home Mission, and Highland Committees. His princely liberality to the Christian cause would entitle him to a grateful and respectful hearing anywhere, but his power as a speaker was never more signally manifested than at this past Assembly. He fairly roused the enthusiasm of his hearers, as he pleaded for more thorough consecration to Christ, and pointed out the happiness and usefulness of the man who had as his motto, "For me to live is Christ." He expressed the longing of many for a great revival of living religion, and signs were not wanting in some of the reports that we are on the eve of times of refreshing. Good work has been done, especially in the mining districts and among the fishing population, and though the Sustentation Fund has suffered somewhat from the depression of trade, yet the income of the churches from all sources is higher than it ever was before. It says much for the spiritual life among the people belonging to this Church that they raised last year for all purposes the magnificent sum of £665,000, and that a large proportion of this was devoted to foreign missions. "Go ye into all the world, preach the Gospel to every creature," is a command which has all along met with a hearty response on the part of this Church, and this may have arisen from the fact that at the disruption all the missionaries in the foreign field threw in their lot with the Free Church.

The two great field days of debate were spent in discussing the Declaratory Act and Disestablishment. On the former subject, which has given rise to so much feeling in the Highlands, the Assembly maintained a firm attitude, refusing to rescind the Act, but adopting a conciliatory attitude towards those who had seceded from the Church. On the latter the Assembly was never so unanimous, only forty-eight rising up in a house of nearly 500 members to vote for a plan of reunion of Scottish Presbyterianism on the basis of an establishment. Union with the United Presbyterian Church was commended to the prayerful consideration of the ministers, office-bearers, and members of the church.

The tone of the Established Church Assembly was never so high as it has been this year. Christian life and work has bulked largely in all the proceedings, and has been spoken to in a most admirable spirit. Dr. Marshall Lang has laid the Church under a deep debt of gratitude by his frequent able and eloquent addresses. He has preached Christ to his brethren with unusual fervour and power, and commended aggressive work at home and abroad in a way that will not be readily forgotten. His co-presbyter, Dr. Donald Macleod, of Park Church, Glasgow, the convener of the Home Mission committee, also deeply impressed the house with his vivid descriptions of life in our large cities, and his earnest appeals to the Church to help in the solution of the great social problem which is fast becoming almost the terror of statesmen. His nephew, Dr. Norman Macleod, of Inverness, made another remarkable speech in giving in the report of the committee, who have been making investigations into the condition of the people in various parts of Scotland. As he said, "There is still much land to be possessed" for Christ, even in Scotland, with all its churches and Christian agencies.

The great field-day of this Assembly was devoted to the discussion of the report on Church interests, which was given in by Lord Burleigh, by far and away the ablest layman in the house. All the leading men took part in this debate, and some of them made such admissions as warrant the hope that, should Disestablishment come, the three large Presbyterian Churches might unite on the Articles of Agreement which were drawn up years ago by the Joint Committee on Union between the Free and U.P. Churches. A general longing for union was expressed in the interests of the thousands in the great centres of population who have drifted away from the Church, and are living in gross religious indifference or open ungodliness.

Altogether, the Assemblies have quickened spiritual life in Scotland, and raised the hope in many hearts that a time of refreshing is about to set in, which will do much to bring about a peaceable and satisfactory solution of many questions which have been depressing Christian workers for long, and weakening the Churches in their efforts to evangelise the land, and spread the Kingdom of God throughout the world.

MISS DE BROEN'S WELCOME.

Dear Sir,—I was present on Monday, May 28, at a very interesting gathering met to welcome Miss de Broen on her return to Belleville, from America.

The Iron Room, which many of the people have themselves called "that blessed place where we found healing for soul and body," and where, praise God, thousands and thousands have heard the words of life, was bright with flags and sweet with bouquets, sent as presents.

The room was opened to its full extent, and filled with friends, several having come from a distance. Many benches were occupied by the women who attended the sewing classes during the winter. Letters of sympathy were received from many friends.

M. Frederick Passy, the distinguished president of the Peace Society for France, spoke eloquently. He is ever ready to show his appreciation of what Miss de Broen has done for the working-classes since she made her home among them just twenty-three years ago. MM. les Pasteurs Prunier et Cresseil warmly expressed the gratitude to God of all present for their friend's safe return among us. Miss de Broen then said a few words which went home to everyone, and alluded to the Lord having during her absence taken home her precious friend Miss A. Ker, who was so tender and true to herself, to Belleville, and to her Heavenly Master.

The result of Miss de Broen's visit to America has been, financially, a failure, owing to the universal depression; but she was asked to speak in many meetings, and friends, both those formerly known in Europe, and others not previously met, will not forget the words she spoke, nor cease to pray for her.—Yours faithfully,

Mary L. Douglas, Hon. Sec.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL TRACT SOCIETY held its annual meeting at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, last week. The superintendent, Mr. S. E. Roberts, said the members, now numbering 261, are distributing tracts month by month in 112 towns and villages in this country, and in twenty-five places abroad. Membership is open to all Christians. Rev. W. Frith spoke from Ps. cxxvi. 6. Misses Larrit and Wilson gave an interesting and vivid account of tract distribution in the dark Romish village of Thonon, France, where they labour in the Gospel. Rev. F. B. Meyer, in conclusion, said life should be a large-print tract for Christ, illustrated with the picture of a happy face.

THE Y.M.C.A. JUBILEE

LARGE AND IMPRESSIVE ASSEMBLIES.

We may truthfully say that the highest hopes respecting the success of this gathering have been fully realised. No previous Y.M.C.A. Convention has been so largely attended, and the proceedings altogether may well mark an epoch in the onward march of this world-wide organisation. The most notable feature, of course, has been the catholicity of the Conference personnel. There may not be as many lesser nationalities represented as there were in Jerusalem at the Pentecost, but the delegations are far more truly representative of the dwellers on the earth. Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australia, and the Islands of the Sea have joined hands in one œcumenic conclave, and the only bond of union is to be found in the one word "Christ." Perhaps the most impressive and comprehensive statement on this point during the Jubilee was that embodied in the loyal address to the Queen, which was moved and carried by acclamation on Saturday forenoon. In that message it was stated that there were those present from Victoria, New South Wales, South Australia, South Africa, Canada, India, and various British colonies and dependencies, as well as from every part of the United Kingdom; from the United States, France, Germany, Belgium, Holland, Russia, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Switzerland, Austro-Hungary, Italy, Spain; from China, Japan, and the far East. The passing of this resolution was fitly followed by the singing of the National Anthem.

But we are anticipating. The first public gathering of the Jubilee was that in Westminster Abbey on Friday evening. Needless to say that the great transept and choir were crowded to excess; many delegates, we believe, could not secure admission for want of room. The scene inside was most impressive, even to one accustomed to see assemblies in that venerable and stately building. Of course there were not the colour and the trappings of a State pageant or ceremonial, but the varied, and we may say illustrious, congregation was nevertheless worthy of the incomparable setting afforded by the interior of the grand old Abbey, wherein reposes the dust of so many of earth's famous and mighty ones. Our foreign friends seemed to be especially interested in the outward aspects of the occasion.

The service, of course, was rendered with more or less of that elaboration of ceremonial that always attends cathedral worship. But even the wretched system of monotoning cannot destroy the simple grandeur and all-embracing scope of the collects and prayers used by the Church of England; while the song by the choir was a perfect concord of sweet sounds. The venerable Dean read the special lesson (1 John ii. 1-17), and it was from this passage that Bishop Temple took his text: "I have written unto you young men, because ye are strong and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." The sermon was a solid exposition of the text, and well fitted to the occasion. The Bishop dilated on the perils and temptations that are inevitable to youth, and especially on the mental and spiritual conflict that often comes from the attacks of religious doubt. Then the preacher referred to the great benefits of association with others like-minded and similarly tried, in the way of sympathy and of strength to fight the battle of life so as to overcome. Some words of warning were thrown in as to the possible dangers of allowing the collective conscience to override individual responsibility. Bishop Temple is a somewhat ponderous speaker, but his words were weighty, and well worth carrying away, in their general drift and purport. After the singing by the choir of the immortal "Hallelujah Chorus," the great audience dispersed to find their way to Exeter Hall for

THE RECEPTION MEETING.

Here again there was an immense and interesting assemblage, which gave the most cordial of welcomes to the worthy president, Sir George Williams, as he passed into the chair, followed closely by Archdeacon Sinclair, Count Bernstorff, Prince Bernadotte of Sweden, the Hon. John Wanamaker, Lord Kinnaird, Dr. Cuyler, and other well-known friends of the Y.M.C.A. In front of the platform was a fine display of palms, lilies, etc., while groups of bannerettes adorned the walls of the auditorium. "All hail the power of Jesu's name" was sung right lustily as an opening song, and then followed earnest prayer in the French, German, and English tongues by Pastor Tophel, of Geneva, Pastor Krummacher, of Elberfeld, and Dr. Newman Hall respectively. Another song (this time a German chorale), and then

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS

rose to extend a greeting to the delegates. His words were delightfully simple, warm, and to the point. His allusions to the hospitality of the City and to the personal honour bestowed on him by the Queen were in the most unexceptionable vein. He said that the dignity conferred was only given to him as representing the work of the Y.M.C.A. He trusted that the result of the Jubilee Conference would be a fresh stimulus and baptism of zeal in carrying on this blessed work among young men. After his little presidential talk, Sir George introduced to give the formal address of welcome. This young and rising ecclesiastic acquitted himself to the satisfaction and admiration of all. Within the limits of a brief address it is difficult to conceive how it could have been better done. We give a full summary of his words:—

To few men is it given in this life to realise their hopes so completely as it had been permitted to Sir George Williams. Fifty years ago the condition of the young men who inhabit the great warehouses of the City of London attracted his attention. He and a few friends formed the happy idea of inviting them in Christian clubs for mutual support and encouragement in their spiritual life on the basis of the simple truths of our faith. It was not to be a Church, but an association. It was not to take the place of religious organisations, but to be their ministering servant. All who hold to the great doctrine of the Reformation were welcomed. It was to promote the spiritual, mental, social, and physical well-being of young men. Such was the design, which has been repeated and multiplied till it has become a leading feature in every country. There are now some 5158 centres scattered throughout the world, with a total membership of 467,515. In the United Kingdom there are 843 centres, with 87,464 members. But, striking as these figures are, they give no idea of the vast multitudes of young men who are brought under the influences of the Association in various ways, through the afternoon services, the outdoor addresses, and through personal friendship and example. It has supplied to the young men of the commercial classes those great religious and social influences and advantages with which the professional class and the leisured class are provided in our splendid system of Christian public schools, our illustrious Christian colleges and universities. Is has given them, in a perfectly natural, simple, and unaffected manner, that bond of spiritual brotherhood which is the joy of the Christian life. It has strengthened their faith, nerved them against opposition and temptation, encouraged them in all that is useful and good. It has cheered the solitary, established the weak, and settled the doubtful. There is a wonderful charm in sympathy, a magnetic power in example, a wholesome force in the personal exhortation of equals and comrades. By God's good blessing the Association has, during fifty varied years of national troubles and prosperity, been adding to the Christian Church multitudes of men who are not only on the side of law and order, but whose object in life it is to do all the good that strong arms and willing hearts can achieve.

The Y.M.C.A. is a representative of the principle of unity. All are welcome who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. It is impossible all of a sudden to bridge over all the divisions that have been caused by the mistakes of the past. But it is better to find out points of agreement than points of difference. We are all members of one body, the glorious invisible Church of Christ. The Association is a living protest for the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. It is a witness to the doctrine of the Church of England that Christ's Holy Catholic Church is the congregation of faithful men throughout the whole world. Churchman and Nonconformist can here forget for a time their lamentable difference, the legacy of unchristian mistakes in the past, and join hands in all good works.

Again, it represents the great protest of the sixteenth century against the tyrannies and usurpations of Rome, and her degradation and corruption of Christian faith. Moreover, it represents the grand truth of the spiritual priesthood of the laity, and of their right to preach and teach God's holy Word in the highways and byways, and in Christian meetings, without infringing on the settled duties of the ordained and regular ministry. Here we find also the fruitful principle of co-operation. If all these young men had been left to the smaller institutions which their own church or chapel could have found for them, little could be done in comparison of those splendid buildings which we now rejoice to see provided for them in every considerable town. The Association is once more representative of the Divine doctrine proclaimed by our Lord of the brotherhood of man in Himself. From all parts of Europe and the world you are here, reproducing in many languages and forms of civilisation the one universal, simple type of Christian character.

The Archdeacon then addressed the German and French delegates in their own languages, pointing out to the Germans how many ties of blood, and kindred, and religion existed between ourselves and them; and to the French delegates, "our nearest neighbours," rejoicing that among the youth of that country there was springing up a real and earnest desire to study the Holy Scriptures. He concluded by commending the Jubilee Conference to the Divine blessing.

Lord Kinnaird, on behalf of the Scotch delegates, thanked the Jubilee council for their hearty welcome. Count Bernstorff did the same on behalf of the Continental friends. Last of all came America's grand old preacher, Dr. Cuyler, who, according to the President, "is a young man yet." Certainly no previous speaker put so much fire and go into his words brief as they were. He said that as he was to speak at a later session he would not now steal any man's minutes. "All I can say now, on behalf of the Yankee delegates is, that the America of George Washington sends a cargo of loving salutation to George Williams." Then the two veterans advanced and clasped hands amidst the resounding cheers of the assembly. Not content with a hearty hand grip, the American pulpit warrior vigorously patted the shoulder of the English knight and then retired to his seat.

Nothing remained after this climax of interest but some announcements by Mr. Putterill, the Jubilee secretary, the singing of the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love," and the Benediction. A most excellent commencement.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2.

At half-past nine this morning there was a devotional meeting. Half an hour later the Convention was called to order for the dispatch of some necessary business. Sir George Williams was, as a matter of course, elected general president of the Conference, with Count Bernstorff and several other friends as vice-presidents. Committees of arrangement were appointed. Then came an interesting function in the reception of the delegates by nations. As each group was named they rose to show themselves, and were greeted by the welcoming cheers of their fellows. The largest delegation was from Germany, but the American band was a numerous one, and lesser groups responded from other lands. We did not notice that any of the black-skinned sons of Ham had been delegated, though there were one or two coloured friends in the meetings; we hope that when another international conference comes black faces will not be conspicuous by their absence.

A season of prayer intervened, and it was deeply touching to hear Saxon and Celt, Teuton and Dane in succession pour out their hearts' desires at the common mercy seat. The babel of different languages was in some respects trying to any not gifted with the facility to utter more than their "mither" speech; but it certainly gave one a realistic conception of the blessed oneness in Christ Jesus, of all peoples and nations and kindreds and tongues.

MR. WEBB PEPLOE'S ADDRESS.

Prebendary Webb Peploe's address was a very striking exposition of the doctrine stated thus in the programme:—"The necessity of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the Associations and in their work." After some introductory words of thankfulness as to the blessed character of the occasion, he said it was impossible to do any real work for the Master in this naughty world except by the power of the Holy Ghost. God the Father loved us; God the Son died for us; God the Holy Ghost alone in this dispensation can enable us to glorify our Saviour in our bodies and our spirits. It is a great privilege and a solemn responsibility to live in this dispensation. Throughout the world the Holy Ghost is working upon individual men to bring them into the Body of our Lord, that we may be members in particular, and may all be one Body, having one Lord, one faith, one God and Father, who is above all, and through all, and in all; and that thus, as a Body of Christ, we may edify the whole body in love until we come to the Perfect Man. Then there shall be revealed the glory of God, as was once seen in creation with Adam at the head; and again in the person of Christ Jesus, the representative Man; and now when the work of the Holy Ghost is finished there shall stand out before the whole universe the Perfected Man from among sinful men and worked into the Body of Christ one by one, and all tending, according to its own particular province, to make man perfect in Christ Jesus the Lord to the glory of God the Father.

Who works out all this? God the Holy Ghost, who came from heaven upon the great Day of Pentecost to take the place of Christ Jesus. He works in us, not for his own glory; for He never speaks of Himself, or works for Himself; but He speaks of Jesus Christ, our blessed Saviour, even as Jesus Christ when He was being perfected loved to speak of God the Father. It is a very beautiful lesson for us to recognise how each person of the Trinity loves to honour the others. The Father loves to glorify the Son; the Son loves to glorify the Father; the Holy Ghost in his dwelling among men delights to bring honour to Jesus Christ, that He may bring glory to the Father in heaven. And we are united into one blessed beautiful Body that we may glorify God and our Saviour by the working of the Holy Ghost alone.

What is the pleasure of the Holy Ghost? What does He do? I turn to two special passages of Scripture that seem to tell us—Psalm cx. 2, 3, and Acts i. 8. I am asked to say that there is no possibility of strength or power for the Y.M.C.A. throughout the world, except as they recognise and make use of God's great gift of the Holy Ghost. Luther used to say, concerning Psalm cx., "This the great high mount Psalm of our beloved Lord Jesus Christ." The Syriac version says, "It is a prophecy of the triumph of Christ over his enemies." St. Augustine said, "It is brief in the number of its words, but it is mighty in the weight of its sentiments." And what shall we say of it, when we recognise that it is more quoted in the New Testament than almost any other passage from the Old Testament? We might say that the great day of Christ's power will be when He returns from the Father to take his great power and reign. But from the moment when He emptied Himself and took the form of man to become the servant of all, it pleased God to begin to bestow upon Him a certain marvellous progressive revelation of power, so that He sent his disciples out with power over nature, over sickness, and over devils.

That would seem to have been the limit of his power on the earth. But the moment He was raised from the dead by the glory of God the Father, He said, "All power (that is, all authority) is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." From the moment that He received power through his resurrection life, He began to communicate it to his disciples. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost; as my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Directly those ten days of waiting were over, the gift of God the Holy Ghost was poured out. As one great writer has said: "There was no limit in the giving; the only limit, apparently, was in the capacity of men to receive." The Holy Ghost came to be unto men what Christ had been. What did Christ send the Spirit to be? We cannot enter into the mysterious workings of the Trinity. We cannot tell what it means when we say that God in Christ became man, and was willing to receive from God the Father what He apparently did not possess as man. Yet it is clear that He had to receive from his Father what He did not apparently inherently possess. What did He receive from the Father that He had not before as man? Absolute separation from all sin. "In that He died He died unto sin (so as to have done with sin); in that He liveth He liveth unto God." He was separated from evil, from sin, from pain, from all that could be described as evil in any possible sense of the word. But He was separated unto—and this is something higher than separated from—the throne of God, being set down at the right hand of the Majesty on high; to hold fellowship as man with God the Father. As He entered the glory He received from God the Father gifts for men. What were they? The mighty gift of the Holy Ghost was given to Christ Jesus now as representative man. It was to be the power to communicate the very life of God. Not that men should be separated from evil only, or unto God only, but that their fellow-men should be made partakers of the Divine nature, and that as such partakers they should pass the life of God to their fellow-men that were dead. We are not fountains, but we are vessels of God; and as vessels of God we are to receive the water of life, and to pour it out upon our fellow-men who lie in the shadow of darkness and death. God the Holy Ghost has been given to man now that he may receive the Christ life, and that it may pass out from him upon this naughty world.

Oh, wonderful honour! Oh, marvellous mystery that sinners such as we are should yet be made meet for the Master's use, in order to communicate life to other sinners: to go to the dead and say, "Look and live"; and as we speak, and work, and pray, the men who lie in death and misery round about us may rise up as a mighty army standing upon their feet to glorify God; and all by the working of God the Holy Ghost. We cannot fathom or understand such a privilege, but I at last begin to understand a little of the infinite love of God the Father in giving his Son, not merely to die for the wicked, not merely to cleanse us from the sentence of judgment, but that He may become the source of Divine life in men, and that He might make men higher, nobler, more splendid even than Adam was in the day of his first creation. Dear breathren, we are meant to be for God's glory, and to begin to show the glory here upon earth; to magnify the Lord Jesus Christ, and say like Mary, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, for He hath regarded the low estate of his poor sinful creatures." And the Y.M.C.A., if it means anything at all, means a body of men who are what we call in English "instinct" with divinity, pervaded by God the Holy Ghost, so that the life of God may pass into us and may then pass out of us. It is a grand honour to carry the Godhead throughout the world, to be made Christ's deputies by the working of the Holy Ghost, and to be allowed to communicate that life that shall make men blessed for ever more.

There is much more to be said, but time has gone, and I only stay to ask: How shall this marvellous privilege become ours experimentally? For you have never fulfilled the high dignity of your calling, which God gave when He asked you to become a member of Christ's body, until you are passing out around you on every hand the mighty riches of his great love. In Ps. lxviii. 9, we are told that "God refreshed his inheritance" with the bountiful shower or dew; the Hebrew words are, gheshem n'davoth. In the passage we have quoted from Ps. cx., "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power," the Hebrew word is also n'davoth. When God gives the refreshing shower of the Holy Ghost, it is that his people may become refreshing showers to the world round about them; they become—what the word really means—free-will offerings. "Thy people shall be free-will offerings in the day of thy power, in the beauty of holiness from the womb of the morning." It means that God the Holy Ghost can only work, first, when poor sinners are made Christ's people by receiving the very gift of life that He offers to them from the Father; and, secondly, as his people say "My Master, my God, my Saviour, my mighty Power, I am ready for whatever Thou wilt from this moment." Are you willing for that? I know that sin never leaves us. There is no man perfect while he walks in mortal flesh. But much can be given and received, and I humbly say that both associations of Christians and individual believers may be made mighty, oh, so mighty, to make Jesus rule in the midst of his enemies, if only they will give themselves to the Lord. I do pray God that the Y.M.C.A. may be what they ought to be in this matter, never condescending to the manners of the world; never going down to trifle with the amusements and pleasures that give satisfaction to the flesh, but a body of men who individually, whether in England or in any of the other lands of the world, are set apart for God, wholly given to Him, so that there shall not be one aspiration of our natures, or one act of our daily life, or one intention of our being that shall not be yielded to God the Holy Ghost. Oh, brethren, we are not contractors with God to make a bargain for his blessings. We are slaves, and as slaves we must abide down before the feet of our Lord, saying, "My Lord, my Master, take Thou thine own, and use it only, and always for thy glory." Then, believe me, a single man may become a mighty man for God.

How many here are prepared to say individually, "My Lord, my God, take Thou thine own, and from this hour use it all for Thyself"? Then let us be joined in association with others, and recognise that we are members of one great body; from that moment we may boldly affirm that we shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is passing, not only into our heart, but into our brain, our hands, our feet. When the whole is yielded up to God for his service, we have yet to learn what God shall do in the next fifty years before the great centenary of this society comes, with a Christian Association that is wholly given to the Lord. May God Almighty make it so. Then we shall see the meaning of these words: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauty of holiness." It is so beautiful to be holy. "Be ye holy, for God is holy."

Following upon the Prebendary's powerful and singularly suggestive exhortation, there came addresses in French and German by Pastor Appia, of Paris, and Superintendent Krummacher, of Elberfeld.

The rest of the noon and afternoon sessions were devoted to the reading of reports from the Central International and various national committees. We have not space for figures or details. There were many notes of progress sounded; while the recital of difficulties was not lacking. In the afternoon the little speeches by representatives of different nationalities afforded scope for much mutual greeting and compliment; not excluding sallies of wit and humorous repartee, especially on the part of the Irish brother who spoke for the fervid and warm-hearted dwellers on the Green Isle.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

In the evening, the conference resumed with a somewhat lessened but very gratifying attendance, to hear the reports of various missionary secretaries who had been visiting Mohammedan and heathen countries in the interests of the young men of these lands. After prayer by Mr. Thane Miller, some general observations on the subject of Missions were made by the chairman of the evening, Sir John Kennaway.

The first secretary to report was Mr. L. D. Wishard, who lately visited the Orient on a mission of inquiry into the state of the young men of India, China, and Japan. He said he regarded the great Methodist Church of to-day as the fruit of a little students' band at Oxford, headed by John Wesley. The first missionary society of the United States also came out of a little company of praying students at Williams College in that land. So with one of the largest churches of Japan. Why, said Mr. Wishard, should not the principle of students' movements in missionary effort become universal all over the civilised and Christian world? Speaking of his personal investigations in the East he told how in Japan already fifteen learned institutions have formed Christian Associations. There are annual conventions in that country largely attended, and hundreds of students have been converted as a consequence, while many have devoted their lives to the spread of the Gospel. Passing to China, the speaker told of Y.M.C.A. work near Pekin. Not content with their home mission field of 400 millions, some of these missionary "boys" are looking out to the great world; they have a mission in Zululand. Some interesting facts were also given as to Ceylon, and Mr. Wishard went on to say that in India the enterprise is encamped before the great Jericho of "caste," and nothing but the Gospel of Jesus Christ can make its frowning walls fall down. In a most eloquent peroration Mr. Wishard said he believed the prayers, the tears, the hopes of Alex. Duff and Wm. Carey would receive their fruition. "We believe, because the missionaries have made us believe—and a thousand of them have been interviewed on the subject—that if we make colleges the distributing centres of Christianity, from them will go forth agencies and agents which will accomplish more in a decade of years than foreigners alone can accomplish in a century."

Having prefaced his personal report of work in Egypt and Palestine with extracts from encouraging letters he had received from Y.M.C.A. friends at Jerusalem, Gibraltar, Malta, and Damascus, Mr. Holmes told of the forming of a Soldiers' Association at Gibraltar—an event of much importance. No man could be a more faithful soldier of Jesus Christ than a really converted soldier in the British Army. The Malta Association registered during its first year 170 members; there is a great field in that intensely Popish island for Gospel effort. Egypt is a large and difficult field, and not much has yet been done expressly for young men. A suitable worker is needed for Egypt, but the difficulty is the lack of means. As to Palestine, Mr. Holmes said he thought the twelve disciples of our Lord were really the first Y.M.C.A. The authorities in the Holy Land are hostile: the blighting power of the Turk holds sway. Pray specially for Egypt and for Palestine. As an expression of the sentiments of the meeting in reply to Mr. Holmes's message, they sang "Hold the fort, for I am coming."

A very warm greeting awaited Mr. Robert McCann, who began by saying that the only thing wanted to complete the conference was the presence of delegates from Darkest Africa. There are twenty-two nationalities represented—a long step in advance of any former gathering—but when will the dusky sons of Africa send their representatives? Mr. McCann spoke first of work among the expatriated Europeans, civil and military, and also among the Eurasians. It is no easy thing to maintain Christian fidelity in Indian society, and all honour to those members of the civil and military orders who have stood true to Christ, and have done much to extend the work of the Gospel, both among Europeans and natives. In some Indian cities, while heathens have become Churchmen, those who were nominally Churchmen have become really heathens. There is great need in those places for the Y.M.C.A. As to the native population there are few large cities in Western India where a native audience cannot be had understanding the English tongue. The Y.M,C.A. is specially suited for India, because of its unsectarian basis. Some most gratifying facts as to progress were given by Mr. McCann, especially in Indore, where an Association has lately been formed, mostly of Hindoos, which is showing great vitality. There is a bright future before the Y.M.C.A. in India.

Mr. David McConaughy said he brought the greetings of fifty millions of young men, embracing Hindoos, Parsees, and Mohammedans. They say, 'Come over and help us." The field is vast, and as yet there is a wide chasm between the Evangelical Mission and the educated young men of India. Without discussing the much-vexed topic of education versus evangelisation, Mr. McConaughy said that unless this educational work had been done, there would certainly to-day be no field in India for the Y.M.C.A. to operate upon. As to progress in the past, it was stated that while some five years ago there was not a Y.M.C.A. member in the empire, to-day there are 3500 members in the sixty-five associations that have reported. An interesting and detailed account of the work in Madras was marked with sunshine and shade. One very pathetic instance of fruit from Dr. Pentecost's late visit was given in the case of a young Hindoo of high social position who was interested in the meetings and eventually confessed Christ. His father disowned him for a time, but now the boy is in the Christian College of Madras, and is being supported by his father, though he has not been restored to his family. In closing his statement, Mr. McConaughy introduced a dusky young Indian, one of the first members of the Madras Y.M.C.A. The young man said a few modest but earnest words, entreating the friends of the Association to come over to India for its help, and expressing the hope that those Europeans who went to India bearing the Christian name might by their lives show a good example to all around.

An unrehearsed part of the evening's programme was the expressive and impressive singing by Mr. Thane Miller, the blind evangelist, of the hymn "Here am I, send me, send me."

PASTOR SPURGEON'S SERMON.

THE Y.M.C.A. AS A CITY OF REFUGE.

A very large number of the delegates made pilgrimage on Sunday morning to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Causeway, to hear a special sermon from Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. The building was crammed from top to bottom, and presented a very inspiring spectacle. The whole service had a special bearing on the occasion, and, judging by ourselves, the delegates must have found it good to be there. The sermon, which was founded on the passage in Joshua reciting the appointment of cities of refuge for the unwitting man-slayer, was a highly appropriate one, and very full of instruction and encouragement to those connected with the Y.M.C.A. After some introductory words of congratulation and welcome, the gifted young pastor said he was indebted to a remark by the late Earl of Shaftesbury for the topic of the morning. His lordship, on one occasion, had described the Y.M.C.A. as grand cities of refuge, places where young men, coming from a distance and removed from parental and domestic influences, found a friendly shelter, where they learned the way of salvation, and obtained courage and confidence to walk in it.

Following out the similitude of the text Mr. Spurgeon said he rejoiced to know from personal experience that there are in all parts of the world those connected with this Society whose hands have got some grip about them, and whose hearts are warm and ever open to the neediest of young men. When the fugitive was once inside the city of refuge it was the business of the authorities there to provide a lodging and occupation for the wanderer. So it was a main part of the work of this Society to find for young men, who are strangers in our great cities, places where they might lodge surrounded by Christian influence and work which should furnish them with the necessities of life. The preacher remarked that the very names of the cities of refuge are full of meaning as bearing on the work of the Y.M.C.A., and while we must not forget that these cities of refuge are primarily types and emblems of our Lord, who is the refuge of our souls, we shall find that the meanings of these names have suitable and suggestive reference to the Society in whose interests we have met.

Pursuing this line of thought, Mr. Spurgeon took up and expounded in turn the names of the six cities of refuge, with their distinctive meanings. The first name, Kedesh, signifies sanctuary, or sacred asylum. The Y.M.C.A. has become just this to hundreds of young men. God only knows whither they would have drifted if they had not been guided by some kind human finger-post towards this Association. They have found a blessed asylum within its walls, and life and grace through its holy ministries. The word "Kedesh" literally means "holiness." What greater need have young men than purity of heart, rectitude, and integrity of mind? Thank God for the Y.M.C.A., as a city of refuge, whose name is Holiness; for beneath its roof are found holy influences, the sacred Scriptures, sanctified pleasures, chaste conversation, and wholesome literature.

Shechem, the next city of refuge, signifies strength, or, literally, "a shoulder." What strength has been imparted through the influence of men of God connected with these institutions: wise counsel, and if necessary kind rebuke. Prayer has been fostered, and there is nothing more strengthening than that. Young men who else had been spiritual pigmies have become giants, because they have been refreshed at these institutions and have been enabled there to drink in of the might of God.

Hebron means fellowship. It will not be far outside the mark to translate it "association." Many of you know the blessing of having good friends and pious acquaintances who help you heavenward. Some of you have experienced the loneliness of the great city or of the new country. You cannot forget that the worst of all sickness is home sickness: the void within the heart which cannot be filled by new friends, however kind. Blessed be the day when you were led, by God's Spirit surely, to seek the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., and to find there a grip to greet you, a heart to house you, and a love to enfold you. How much depends on our companionships! God bless that young man who is just setting out in life, and save him from making bosom friends of those who are not the friends of God. It is said that two dry sticks suffice to kindle a green one; however that may be, it does not take two evil associates to lead another astray; one will suffice for that. I pray you be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, and cheer to those who are setting forth in life.

Bezer means literally a Rock, which implies firmness or stability. Among the essential qualifications of a young man are firmness, determination, grit. There is no man so manly as a Christian man. I do believe this Society helps to make men of young men, in the truest and noblest sense. It leads them to the Lord Jesus Christ, and they are most manly who have learned the most of the man-God, the God-man, Jesus Christ our Lord.

The meaning of Ramoth is height or elevation; for this city stood high upon a hill. I thank God that the work of the Y.M.C.A. is uplifting and elevating; that it inspires in the hearts of our young men hope and courage; that it tends to fill them with laudable ambitions, and enables them to fulfil them. The atmosphere of the Y.M.C.A. is pure and clean, and the young men who belong to it are afforded a wider and more extensive view. I thank God on every remembrance of the work that has been done, and is being done, for the uplifting of our fallen humanity and the raising of it nearer to God.

Golan signifies joy, and if the Association had done nothing save to prove that religion is not the sombre, solemn, funereal thing that some suppose it to be, it has justified its existence. I trust that it will still further demonstrate that they are not miserable who have received Christ's mercy, and that we are not called upon to fling all joys aside when we accept Jesus as our highest joy. I can rejoice even that the Y.M.C.A. has shown to the world that there are recreations as harmless as they are mirthful; that music and gymnastics and such like are not apart from the religion of the Lord Jesus. I do not believe that it is the duty of the Church to provide such things, but if they are to be provided, surely this institution is the very one to do it. No doubt it is necessary to regulate them, last they become hurtful and harmful.

I have no blessing to bestow on the Society; no benediction to pronounce. If it were within my province it should have all that I could give. It is only left for me to pray that God will bless the Association, east and west, north and south; that it may have in all its branches the singing of the spring-time, the sunshine of the summer, the fruitfulness of the autumn, and the whiteness of the winter. May the blessing of the Lord God Almighty rest upon president and officers and every member!

In the second portion of his discourse Mr. Spurgeon proceeded to dwell on the diversified meanings of these words as finding their highest and truest fulfilment in the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Antetype. Verily the delegates must have felt, as they reverently passed out of the great Tabernacle, that they had been fed with the finest of the wheat, in the strength of which they might go forward for many days.

On Sunday afternoon Rev. F. B. Meyer addressed young men at Exeter Hall, and in the evening at the City Temple Dr. Parker preached to a crowded congregation.

MONDAY, JUNE 4.

The sessions resumed this morning under the efficient presidency of Count Bernstorff. The first business on the agenda was the reading of a paper by Mr. R. C. Morse, of New York, on "The Work of the Y.M.C.A. in North America." The paper was a very thorough and comprehensive one, touching with a firm hand on all the points of interest connected with Y.M.C.A. work in the States, in its multifarious ramifications. Referring to some vital points, Mr. Morse said:—

"The Associations, while making their work minister to the whole man, body, mind, and spirit, have maintained the pre-eminence of the spiritual work in their constitution; in the purpose and conduct of officers, directors, and committees; in the life motive and activity of both general secretaries and physical directors, and in the steady growth of meetings for young men on the Lord's Day and during the week. Specially noteworthy has been the multiplication of Bible classes both for evangelistic purposes and for the training of young men for effective personal effort. Remarkable growth in the Bible department is a feature as peculiar to this later period as has been the more prominent development in material resources. Thousands of young men inaccessible by the methods formerly used have thus been brought under the power of positive religious influence."

Some striking statistics were given as to growth in recent years, and many of the special branches of work were referred to, for instance :—

"Christian young men among the great multitude of the coloured race have also begun—under wise leadership and supervision—to organise this work, finding in it adaptation to benefit their fellow young men both in colleges and cities. This extension has taken place chiefly in the Southern States of the American Union."

Some excellent and stirring contributions to the survey of Y.M.C.A. work throughout the world were made by succeeding speakers, the chairman and Prof. Barde, of Geneva, afterwards translating each address in brief for the benefit of the German and French brethren. Prof. Muller, of Utrecht, could report 800 branches with 18,000 members "in our dear Holland." He slily admitted that they were a dogmatic nation, and while English or American friends might be discussing regeneration, Dutchmen would be wasting their time over the mysteries of predestination.

Mr. Hobbs, of Denver, described the marvellous growth of the railway system in America from twenty-three miles of iron road in 1830 to 180,000 miles at the present time. A hundred Associations specially for railway men are now at work, with 25,000 members. In the ablest speech of the day, Mr. J. R. Mott, of the College Associations of America, told of the origin and most gratifying growth of Y.M.C.A. work among the educated young men of America and Canada. These College Associations, he said in closing, are teaching the future teachers, governing the future governors, and preaching to the future teachers of North America. If we can only capture our universities and colleges for Christ we can take the world for Him.

After some words from M. Olandt, secretary of the work among German young men in New York, M. Monnier, of Paris, gave a very interesting little account of an Association begun in that city among the students of the Latin Quartier, with a hundred active members and as many more associates. Now if any English students come to Paris they can be introduced at once to Christian brethren living and working in the students' quarter. The general work of the Paris Y.M.C.A. was reported on briefly by M. Buscarlet. Then Baron von Rothkirch, president of the largest Association in Berlin, told of the progress and the special needs of that work. He was desirous of more being done for the German students.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, lately of the Exeter Hall Association, as the mouthpiece of the British organisations, said that "progress" was the word all round. In every land there are special difficulties, but these are being overcome. Mr. Kennedy counselled the European Associations not to despise the unit. From all the great colonising countries of Europe brethren are continually going forth to new lands. If they go filled with enthusiasm for Christ, and versed in the principles of the Y.M.C.A., they may accomplish great good.

The great land of China was represented by Rev. F. Brown, who was able to tell that he had a hand in founding the first Chinese Association in Pekin in 1884. The one has grown to eight, with 400 members. A great need in China is an American secretary, who shall visit different cities and diffuse a knowledge of the work; and when once the Y.M.C.A. has a hold of the Chinese young men it will do great things for God.

Before the close of the morning meeting a gracious telegraphic reply from the Queen was read, in which Her Majesty thanked the Conference for its kind and loyal message.

The afternoon meeting, with a large attendance, was taken up with the consideration of the twofold basis of the Associations—the union of Christian young men, and their association in work for the salvation of others. An address on "The Tree and its Fruits," afterwards described as "magnificent and poetic," was delivered in French by Prof. Barde, of Geneva. Copies of an English translation were in the hands of the delegates speaking that language. Using the metaphor of the tree, the eloquent professor touched on some of the things that hinder its growth, and applied them to the work of the Y.M.C.A. In a much-applauded passage at the close, he showed how at the last they would find the passport to Paradise to be, not sects or nationalities, but the fact that they had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

In the succeeding discussion, Dr. Gladstone, Lord Radstock, Mr. Clarke, of Spezia, and several foreign brethren took part.

On Monday evening a brilliant reception was given at the Guildhall by the City authorities to the Jubilee delegates. About 4000 persons were present. Early in the evening the freedom of the City of London was presented to Sir George Williams in a richly-designed casket.

TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

Four practical questions were submitted for consideration at the morning session of to-day in Exeter Hall. A large concourse of delegates, under the genial chairmanship of M. Andre, of Paris, followed the reading of the papers and the discussion with evident interest. The first topic was "The Y.M.C.A. in Relation to the Work of Foreign Missions." Dr. Karl Fries, general secretary of the Stockholm Association, read a brief paper, in which the subject was treated generally; the advice was strongly given that the Association should not specialise its mission work, but foster missionary zeal in every way among its members.

A good deal of discussion followed, and there was some diversity of view as to the exact form that the missionary operations of the Y.M.C.A. should assume. One of the most weighty utterances was that of Mr. David McConaughy, of Madras, who strongly deprecated the idea that there is any real distinction between home and foreign missions, and the other idea often expressed that the Y.M.C.A. is a thing outside the Church of Christ. He thought that the churches ought to invite the help of the Y.M.C.A., and the Association ought to respond to the utmost of its ability. The prevailing current of opinion throughout the discussion was that instead of instituting special missionary societies and agents, the Association should strive to strengthen the work of existing organisations.

Next came a paper by Mr. W. Hind Smith on "The Composition and Election of Management Committees." He recited some of the essential qualifications of committeemen—full knowledge of the Y.M.C.A., business qualities, sympathy towards young men, and having a good standing in the Church of Christ. Committees should not be too large, and should be representative of the different churches; members should be in sympathy with all branches of the work. All resolutions submitted to the annual meetings should be first considered by the committee. Mr. Smith was very strong in insisting that Association managers should rigorously avoid debt and keep expenditure well within income.

A lively fusillade of questions was directed to Mr. Hind Smith at the close of his paper. In reply, he said that he objected to permanent committees; that the secretary should seek the co-operation of the committee and get them to share the work; and that he would approve of an advisory council to co-operate with the committee, but not to legislate. In a closing word, Mons. E. Sautter, of Paris, urged that the standard of qualification was pitched a little too high for imperfect men, and that the voice of the general secretary should have considerable weight in the decision of disputed questions.

A paper on financial matters was read by Herr Christian Phildius, secretary of the Berlin Association. He advocated economy and a system of regular contribution; he disapproved of worldly methods of raising money, and he urged that the friendly interest of the general community in the work should be sought; all should be done in the spirit of prayer and dependence on God. The after discussion did not elicit any fresh points of importance. Mr. Hughman closed it by some pertinent counsels both to committees and secretaries. A postscript from Sir George Williams was to the effect that all must combine in the support of the work. In the early days some young members gave as much as £30 and £50 annually. Educate them to begin young, and when they grow wealthy they will subscribe largely.

In the fourth paper, Rev. Jas. Hastings, of Kinneff, expounded the topic, "Higher Biblical Instruction Amongst Young Men the Work of the Association." This instruction, which all advocate, is necessary to save young men from the tyranny of creed, and from the tyranny of wrong living. In carrying out this instruction, it is better to concentrate on one book than to roam at large over the whole Scripture. At the same time, there must be general study. Over-specialism in study leads to a dwarfing of the mind and intellect.

The brief discussion was interesting. In answer to the question what particular book of the Bible he would recommend for special study, Mr. Hastings showed true Scotch caution in saying it would depend on a man's creed. If he were too strong on the Calvinistic side one Epistle should be studied; if over strong on the Arminian side another Epistle would be needful. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, in closing, urged that the Y.M.C.A. should be at great pains to foster the evidential study of the Bible; let it be studied from the historical, the internal, and the experimental points of view.

Tuesday afternoon was given to business, and in the evening the Bishop of Ripon preached at a thanksgiving service in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Our report of the Jubilee will be concluded next week.

ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES.

The festival dinner of this institution, at Putney Heath, was held on Thursday evening at the Albion Hotel, Aldersgate-street, Mr. A. Gibbs, M.P., presiding. Forty years ago Mr. Andrew Reed founded this excellent charity, which has steadily progressed in efforts to deal with the most difficult of complaints. Quoting from the last report, "Upwards of two hundred afflicted persons are attended day by day; skilfully nursed and helped with all the appliances of modern art; carriages to wheel them along airy ambulatories, lifts to bring them from the upper rooms, a broad verandah where they may recline in the summer days, looking over the grounds to the distant hills that bound the prospect. Besides all this, a succession of visitors, bringing change and cheerfulness; concerts of good music attended by people from outside, and, to all who are able to journey, a six weeks' stay at the Seaside House at St. Leonards."

Reference is also made in the report to the heavy loss sustained by the institution by the death of Mr. W. M. Seaman, one of the directors. Having his residence near by, he took a very warm and constant personal interest in the afflicted inmates and in their welfare. Another great blank in the board's management was caused by the death of Mr. J. D. Allcroft, for fourteen years the treasurer.

The chairman, in appealing for the charity, expressed a hope that additional subscriptions would be sent in, remarking that there had been a considerable falling.off in public support recently. In consequence of the lack of funds it had been necessary to reduce the number of those elected. It would be a disgrace to English philanthropy, he thought, if the institution should be allowed to suffer permanently from the commercial depression. Subscriptions to the amount of £2,280 were announced.

EVANGELISATION IN THE CITY.

Every Sunday evening, at St. Mary-at-Hill, Monument, an evangelistic service is conducted by Rev. W. Carlile, founder of the Church Army. It is preceded by open-air services, commencing shortly after six. By this means a large number of passers-by are compelled to listen to the Word of Truth, and many of them come into the house of God. The Prayer-book service is thrown on the sheet; a plain Gospel address is given, and an after-meeting is then conducted. For this and the open-air services workers are greatly needed, as well as to assist in the free breakfast, which takes place at 9.45 a.m.; and supper at 8.45 p.m. It is hoped that many young men in the City, keenly interested in mission work, will give this work their prayers and their presence, as there is ample scope for any who are keenly alive to the salvation of immortal souls.

On a recent Sunday evening many had to be turned away for want of room, and a work of God seems to be breaking out. One young man who came out for Christ, having an important situation in the City, had been a slave to drink for over two years, and at last found himself in the police-station. It is felt that there are many who have some slight musical ability who could assist in the simple orchestra, which is an aid to bring the careless to the House of Prayer. Mr. Carlile is very anxious to obtain the assistance of earnest Christian men and women who can play either stringed or wind instruments, and who would thus like to dedicate their talent to the service of Christ.

DR. M'KILLIAM, of Blackheath, we regret to say, is suffering from serious indisposition, caused by overwork.

GRAY'S YARD INSTITUTIONS.

The annual meeting of the Gray's-yard Ragged Church and Schools was held on Monday afternoon at the hall, 14, Duke-street, W., Lord Radstock (who has recently returned from India) presiding.

Dr. Pentecost opened with a rousing address, in which he said that a work of this kind is an evidence of the moral force of Christianity in leading people to pull against the stream and do things they would not naturally do. Christianity has always been in the minority, but that minority has ever been victorious. There are those who take a hopeless view of things, but the older he grew the more hopeful he became; and the proved results of such a work as this (amongst the most hopeless class) are enough to encourage and inspire fresh hope. The issues of the work supply a wonderful tribute to the overcoming power of the grace of God. In dwelling on the value of persistence, the speaker recalled, by way of illustration, a case in which he had seen a ponderous steel bar set in motion by the reiterated tapping of a common cork weighing scarce a quarter of an ounce. So against the heaviest masses the patient, persistent efforts of faithful workers must tell at last.

Mr. Philip Gough gave some account of the Ragged Church, more commonly known as the Casuals' Service, held Sunday morning and afternoon. Here the outcast and the tramp are gathered in, and after a frugal meal have the Gospel spoken to them in plain language. By reason of the condition of these poor people the task seems hopeless, yet the workers have had evidences—not a few—that the work is not in vain, and that many have been saved. In proof of this, Mr. Gough referred to various cases in which, from the most desperate and hopeless condition, men and women had been laid hold of and brought into the light and liberty of the Gospel. On the previous Lord's Day morning there were quite 500 of these people—many of them miserable objects—in the hall.

Mr. A. G. Fraser spoke of the work generally: the Ragged Church, at which 50,000 of the poorest hear the Gospel in the course of the year; not fifty thousand different persons, for many come again and again. Among the ordinary tramps and casuals, there appear from time to time those who have evidently fallen from a higher grade, and naturally special efforts are made to get hold of such, often with the best results. Then there is the lodging-house with sixty-four beds, the soup kitchen, Gospel services, and other operations of a missionary character. But apart from these efforts for adults, there is the work for the children, including a large ragged school, a company of the Boys' Brigade, a girls' club, and many agencies for reaching and winning the young. Funds are at present much needed; but the great and most pressing want is that of workers. Alas! that in the heart of the East-end poor children should have to be turned away from such a mission for sheer lack of teachers to take them. Surely such a fact needs only to be made known to bring fresh volunteers.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins followed with a spiritual and stimulative address on the secret of strength, which he found in 2 Cor. xii. 9, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." Here we have the second lesson of the spiritual life. The first is, that God meets our unworthiness; and the second is, that He meets our helplessness. This is a Divine fact. We have to distinguish between promises and facts. A promise has to be pleaded and its fulfilment sought; but a fact has to be accepted and rested upon. So here, God's grace is sufficient for us, let us rest on that fact, and go on with his work in the calm assurance that whatever He bids us do, He is sufficient for.

Lord Radstock had listened with deep interest to the accounts of work given. He wished to press home the lack of workers. There is work to be done, there are souls to be saved, and yet there are Christians who are doing nothing, who have scarcely asked the question, What are we living for? Many might feel their own unfitness; but God is able to use this very nothingness and use it for his glory, if only they are willing so to be used.

HOLD FAST TO LOVE. If men wound your heart, let them not sour or embitter it; let them not shut up and narrow it; let them only expand it more and more; and be always able to say with St. Paul. "My heart is enlarged."—F. W. Robertson.

VISITATION OF PRISONS.

Thirty years ago European prisoners in Calcutta were constantly visited by a most excellent Bible-woman, Miss Andrews. She was a little insignificant-looking Eurasian, so small and fragile that her hand felt like a little bird's claw. But she was strong in simple faith, and mighty in the Scriptures. She spent her days in the cells, teaching each man separately. Some could not even read, and many were hardened desperadoes, but she won the confidence and respect of all, and many remarkable conversions could be traced to no other human instrumentality. One, formerly a soldier, had been condemned to death; another had single-handed committed burglaries all over Calcutta; a third, a coloured man, was looked upon as incorrigible. These and many others became so totally changed that when transferred to Ootacamund to fulfil their sentences, the Governor of the prison at Madras remarked he had "never seen such prisoners," and the head of the prison at Ootacamund relaxed the rule which forbids all intercourse with a prisoner for the first three months, and allowed them freely to correspond with Miss Andrews. Mr. King, the master of the Calcutta gaol, spoke most highly of the excellent results of her influence, and gave her full liberty of action. I believe she spent as much time in prayer for each man as she spent in reading the Bible with him.

It was a very quiet work. There was no committee, and the lady who was styled her superintendent confined herself to raising her salary and helping her in any way she could.

Such a work might surely be carried on in every prison in the land. Some woman of influence should be answerable for the Bible-woman to the prison authorities. It appears that it would be an act of mercy to allow the Bible-woman free access to the prisoners during the first months of solitude, as her visits would then be specially welcome. There cannot be worse company for a man than his own evil thoughts.

THE CLAPTON MISSION.

The anniversary of this Mission was held last week at Clapton Park Tabernacle, Blurton-road. The proceedings commenced with a tea-meeting in the schoolroom, which was largely attended. An enthusiastic public meeting was held in the Tabernacle at 7.30, when a large number of friends and supporters of the Clapton Mission were present. Among those taking part in the meeting were Revs. J. B. Knapp, W. Moxham, W. Watson, S. Henderson, and Mr. Fyfe Stewart.

The annual report, presented by Rev. Thomas Jackson, superintendent of the Mission, was of a most encouraging character. The past year was stated to have been the most prosperous in the history of the Mission. The number of members was 349, teachers 64, scholars 661, Band of Hope members 435, being a net increase for the year of 55 members, 12 teachers, 69 scholars, and 95 Band of Hope members. During the year a Home of Rest was opened at Southend-on-Sea, and medical dispensaries at Clapton and Hoxton, which had rendered aid to 2487 persons; 18,000 free breakfasts had been given to destitute children, 5000 articles of clothing, 9000 quarts of soup, and 2000 pounds of bread to necessitous families. One hundred and thirty open-air services had been held, 50,000 tracts and pamphlets distributed, and £1055 16s. 3d. raised for the various funds. The fund for social work had an adverse balance of £427. The agencies of the Mission comprise Gospel Temperance Society, Penny Bank, Maternity Aid Society, Slate Club, Newspaper Reading Board, Loan Society, and a Servants' Registry. The Mission has a staff of three missionaries, four Bible-women, and one medical officer.

THANKSGIVING FOR 1859.

As a missionary in the foreign field, I should like to add my tribute of thanksgiving to that of others, for the blessing which came to me when a child, through the Revival of 1859 and "the early sixties." During that period, while I was at school at Barnet, the Lord brought me to Himself, and put into my heart the desire to become a missionary.

THE GOSPEL FOR IRELAND.

Evangelisation in the Emerald Isle is at the present time attracting the attention and sympathy of Christians in all parts of the land. Ireland undoubtedly constitutes a model missionary sphere. An experience in such a field is invaluable to such as are called of God to serve in "the regions beyond." Help in aggressive Gospel work is much needed. Brave men and true are wanted.

The subject has been brought before the students of the East London Institute, and prayer has been made to God. The interest and sympathy of these foreign missionaries in embryo has taken practical shape in a number of them volunteering for service in Ireland during their summer vacation. This is indeed a cause for thankfulness.

We are most anxious that some of our brethren should work in connection with "The Open-air Mission for Ireland." Mr. George Williams, the noble organising secretary, is ready and willing to undertake the leading and directing of twelve men or more. He cannot guarantee hospitality or financial aid, having no funds for such a purpose.

We regret that the weak state of finance at Harley House forbids an increased expenditure. We are convinced, however, that there are many of God's people who would gladly subscribe towards a special fund for the purpose here indicated.

We calculate that a sum of £200 would be required. We lovingly appeal to the Christians of England and Scotland, as well as Ireland, to help in this important matter. The need is great; the work is difficult; the labourers are few; the door is open. We trustingly look for a prompt and liberal response, believing this thing is of God.

WESSON RIO HARBOUR MISSION.

The report of this work for last year says: "The year's work has suffered somewhat on account of the revolution, but, we are glad to say, has never been wholly discontinued. Our missionary, Mr. Williams, having to pass to and fro a good deal in visiting the Bethel and other ships, became an object of suspicion to both sides, and suffered two short terms of imprisonment—first by the insurgents and then by the Government. The fever has been very bad this season, and many officers and men have suffered from this dreadful scourge.

"Mr. Williams leaves us soon now, attended by our good wishes, to take a course of study which will better fit him for Christian work, and we are in daily expectation of hearing that a man has been appointed in England to take his place. He reports that Bibles, Testaments, books, papers, tracts, etc., have been distributed, hospitals visited, and our Home and Bethel used by sailors of many different nationalities. A number have professed conversion, and some have signed the pledge of total abstinence."

L. C. Irvine, Secretary.

MR. CHAS. INGLIS IN THE EAST END.

This evangelist has finished a month's work at Dr. Barnardo's Mission Church, Limehouse, E., and a goodly number have professed faith in Christ. At the last Sunday evening's meeting Mr. Inglis spoke with intense earnestness and manifest power on the sheep and the goats, and a large number of anxious souls remained to the after-meeting, many of whom, being dealt with by the deaconesses and other workers, were led to the Saviour.

Beside the regular evangelistic services, the evangelist has addressed the boys of the Homes at Stepney-causeway, and the girls at the Village Church, Ilford, holding also Bible readings at the Deaconesess' House, Mile End-road. Mr. Inglis returns to the Edinburgh Castle for another four weeks' labour in July, previous to sailing for America where he hopes to spend some months in evangelising.

Mr. W. R. Lane will be the missioner at the Edinburgh Castle during the month of June, and the prayers of God's people are asked that much blessing may attend his visit.

ANOTHER SAILORS' REST FOR LONDON.—On Sunday night a small Sailors' Rest was opened at No. 9, West India Dock-road, by a Gospel meeting in the English language. For this boon seamen are indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Welin. Till the British and Foreign Sailors' Society can build their larger Rest in the West India Dock-road, the secretary, Mr. Edward W. Matthews, and Mrs. Matthews have become responsible for the Gospel meetings in English. Those willing to help for Sunday and Tuesday evening might write to Mrs. Matthews, 61, Cawley-road, Victoria Park, London, N.E.

A PLEA FOR ZANZIBAR.

Though much has been written and spoken about the needs of Darkest Africa, Zanzibar, to-day the most important port on the east coast, is much neglected as far as missionary effort is concerned. It is true that the University and French Missions have their stations here, and in the case of both these Missions, their work lies amongst the slaves who are released from time to time by the British men-of-war, and who are passed over to those Missions, who undertake to educate them as teachers for their up-country stations. These slaves all come from the mainland. Natives of Zanzibar regard them as the Washenzi (uncivilised people), and consider it quite beneath them to associate with the mission boy or girl, and that the mission churches are places for those who have been slaves.

As a people, the Zanzibari follow the customs of the Arab, and are inclined to Mohammedanism; therefore they are in many ways opposed to Christianity. They are lovers of music, pleasing in their disposition, excitable, and light-hearted. Their one great pleasure seems in following the troops with their band as they march every Friday to the Sultan's Palace. Having had the opportunity of watching their manners and customs, I am persuaded that the best means of reaching the masses would be through the instrumentality of such a band of workers as the Salvation Army. A small work goes on at the Strangers' Rest every Sunday morning, which generally attracts a congregation of some twenty to thirty people. Some of these include the Arab and Indian. This work has been carried on almost single-handed, and it has been noticed, when C.M.S. missionaries passing through Zanzibar have kindly assisted in the speaking and singing, many more have been attracted, and have been heard to say that it was msuri sana (very fine). On one occasion, a young Indian asked whether it was a Salvation Army meeting, as he mentioned that he belonged to the Army while in Bombay. That fact constrains me more than ever to make an appeal to "General" Booth through your paper in the hope that he might be led to send some of his staff to work among the poor dark Zanzibari.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

From Natal Mr. McNeill went on to East London, where crowded services were held on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, May 6—8. The East London Dispatch says:—"The solos sung by Mr. Burke were notable for fervour and intense expression, and his enunciation was most distinct. Of the preacher himself, Mr. McNeill, it is hard to give a description. His matter is grave and witty by turns, but at all times tends to be convincing. Some of his definitions are original and amusing; for instance, he considers a freethinker as one free from thinking, not one who thinks freely. The preacher's arguments are incisive and apt, and when he has occasion to denounce an evil, or a foible, or a mistaken notion, he does so with a force and passion which are intense and resistless. He never enunciates a principle which he does not support, and in supporting it he relies on clear and irrefutable reasoning. His sermon on Sunday night was a remarkable discourse. The subject was a wide one—namely, the 23rd Psalm, which was so familiar to all, having been drunk, as he put it, with mother's milk. His treatment of that Psalm was not only strong, terse, and vivid, but distinctly original.

"It is computed roughly that there were about 1100 persons at the Drill Hall on Sunday afternoon last to listen to these evangelists, about 1400 on Sunday night, and about 1000 on Monday night. Mr. McNeill assured his audience that East London held the record for a Monday night attendance to hear him, even outdoing Southampton."

AGED AND INFIRM MINISTERS.—The annual meeting of the members of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Protestant Dissenting Ministers was held at the Sunday-school Union House, 56, Old Bailey, on Tuesday, May 29. During the past year £863 have been distributed among seventy-two beneficiaries, the amount voted and the number of ministers relieved being in advance of those previously reported. Rev. P. G. Scorey, 49, Tierney-road, Streatham Hill, S.W., is secretary.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—The annual meeting of this mission will be held on Tuesday, 12th, afternoon and evening in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. The chair will be taken at 3 o'clock, by Sir George Williams. The speakers will be Rev. Yung-King Yen, Mr. Montagu Beauchamp, Miss Barclay, Rev. W. W. Cassels, and at 7 o'clock, by Mr. Theodore Howard. Speakers:—Mr. George Miller, Miss Whitchurch, Mr. H. N. Lachlan, Mr. G. A. Huntley, Revs. C. G. Moore, and Archibald Brown, and Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, M.D.

POOR JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Sir,—The following painfully interesting details are given by Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff, our commissioner in Palestine, of visits made by him among destitute Jews in Jerusalem in May, where the weather was already hot and sultry.

"To call it a house to house visitation would be a misnomer; it was literally a hole to hole visitation in fifteen groups of dwellings, where about 500 poor Jews are to be found, rarely any above ground, but underground; below public streets and courts, in cellars and holes wholly out of sight. I have found in courts behind houses steps leading down to lower courts, and from there have gone down to others still lower, in which I have found dark places piercing the débris, fragments of passages and chambers, solid masonry of past ages, where among the ancient foundations Jerusalem of the past gives shelter to the homeless poor of the present.

"On a very hot sultry day, May 7th, in one small dark court were found six women cleaning wheat for grinding, by which, working from sunrise to sunset, they could earn three-halfpence a day each, the air foul, and miasma rising from a well beside them, in which the water when drawn was seen to be alive with insects. A child in a miserable room off the court lay ill with diphtheria. In another, a widow with fever. In another, so dark that we could hardly see, a middle-aged widow wholly paralysed below the waist and all but blind; her only support, food occasionally brought by a widowed daughter with three children, when she can get work. The well and a smaller one rather better, their only water supply, which could not hold out longer than August. In two 'caves' (approached by a narrow winding dark passage under a block of old houses) were two old men dwelling, where neither light nor air could enter, under one of the main thoroughfares of the city, their means rather more than a halfpenny each weekly from the Synagogue; they were Russian Jews.

"The next visits were made at night, and in similar 'holes' were found, among others, eighteen widows, mostly middle-aged, having fifty children among them. In one synagogue were found forty to fifty homeless men, allowed to come at night to sleep in a room there. In another group of dwellings were found forty-nine widows, mostly aged, and ten children, some of which had an allowance of about a halfpenny each a week. These courts were worse, the smells more horrible, yet the people kept themselves clean, and the abodes of the Spanish Jews were clean and tidy. A man with wife and child both ill were found in a place under a court, water running down the wall; the wife almost voiceless with sore throat from the damp. In a recess on an open stairway lay a woman on a stone bench four feet long by two wide, her head on a bare stone; she had nowhere else to sleep. In a large cellar four widows and five children, one very ill; the place had no window, the air very foul. In another, a young woman all alone in the dark, imbecile, a prisoner there above a year, day and night unable to take care of herself, kept locked in for safety; they beg for food and give her some. In the next place an imbecile old man.

"In the same 'court of horrors,' six widows asleep in a dark cellar. On bringing in our lantern one poor creature was observed with head and hand drooping from her bed, strangely white face, fixed eyes; she was actually dying in the dark among her helpless companions. In another cellar four old men and a younger man, emaciated and weak, dying of consumption; a man of some education from Warsaw.

"In another cellar six widows. Among all those visited only one old men complained of his scanty allowance. We were much struck with their patience in such depths of poverty. There was no trace anywhere of drinking habits; patient, sober, submissive, under crushing misery."

These are some details of a heartrending account. We have telegraphed to Mr. Scott Moncrieff to remove some of the worst cases to decent abodes. There are above 40,000 Jews in and around Jerusalem (better off there than in Russia in spite of all). Few can find work. We ask speedy help that we may increase the numbers employed by us, and that we may give food and shelter to more of the helpless who perish in darkness of hunger, thirst, and disease.

—Yours, etc., E. A. Finn, Secretary.

ANTWERP.—Mr. A. A. Harmer, evangelist, is arranging with Pastor J. Adams, of the Mariners' Church, Antwerp, for mission services during the exhibition, when many English and American visitors are expected. A number of ministers and others have promised to help in the services. Mr. Harmer had so much blessing in the work last year, that there seems every prospect of good times. Help towards this mission may be sent to the Editor of Sword and Trowel, Westwood, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.; or to Mr. Harmer, 2, Beulah-road, Thornton Heath, Surrey.

THE LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY.

The committee of this Society is exercised about the financial burden which embarrasses the work. In a published statement they say: "It is now absolutely necessary to do one of two things—either to revise the estimates of expenditure for the present year, which means curtailment in missionary operations, to say nothing of the utter impossibility of taking up any fresh openings for work. Thus, the Forward Movement upon which the Society entered last year will be seriously checked and hindered, much to the regret of all who have the spiritual welfare of the Jews at heart. The alternative and better course is to strain every nerve to raise and sustain the income.

"The committee, therefore, appeal to all who have the means, and the love of the cause in their hearts, to come forward. Firstly, to wipe out the adverse balance at once. And secondly, to raise the general income of the Society considerably, so that it may be equal to the demands that will be made upon it. The committee cannot believe that the Church of Christ will allow the great mission to Israel to languish through lack of means."

ENGLISH-SPEAKING STUDENTS IN BERLIN.

Dr. Stuckenberg, pastor of the Undenominational American Church in Berlin, is leaving for the United States in September next. On Sunday, May 27, the last Sunday-evening meeting was held at his house—the conclusion of a series which has been held every Sunday evening for nine winters without a break.

As usual, the room was crowded with students of both sexes. After a little sacred music the meeting opened with an address by Rev. Dr. Morris, of Lane Seminary, Cincinnati. He spoke earnestly on the subject of "True Religion," pointing out that truth, love, and service are its essentials. Religion, he said, was a growth, not a state. We must wrestle and strive, in order to attain.

A few words of farewell followed from Dr. Stuckenberg. He spoke of the great pleasure it had been to himself and Mrs. Stuckenberg to meet with so many from home in a foreign city. He alluded to the many students of theology, history, and science who had from time to time met in his house in Christian fellowship. The meeting closed with a few words of prayer. May it be God's will to send a faithful and loving pastor to carry on Dr. Stuckenberg's good work, so greatly needed in Berlin.

THE LATE MR, CHARLES WHITTLE.

In sending in some account of the death of this young brother, Mr. G. C. Needham, East Northfield, Mass., U.S., says:—

Of late years Charles Whittle was becoming more and more a devoted Christian. His Sundays were richly occupied, and the last before his summons home he preached in the open air, and taught his young men's class as he was wont to do. His young wife has been wonderfully sustained, so also his bereaved parents and sorrowing sisters. Personally I shall deem it a favour to receive communications from the young men of Belfast and elsewhere to whom Charles was made a blessing five years ago.

While a few friends were holding a memorial service with the mother at the hour of his funeral service in Chicago, we were interrupted by a messenger bringing the startling news that one of the seminary teachers was killed by being thrown from a runaway carriage. Of this most tragic event you have no doubt had information. The announcement of these sorrowful visitations will no doubt call out much prayer and sympathy with Major Whittle and family, and with our beloved Mr. Moody.

A SCHOOL WITHOUT SCHOLARS.—The opening of a school of Atheism at the Maison du Peuple Paris, has been marked by a ludicrous incident which forms the subject of much amusing comment. The professors, MM. Letrillard and Moitet, have resolved to give a fête for young people at the beginning of June, preceded by a course of Atheist catechism. Although at their posts on Sunday week and since, no pupils have presented themselves, and the class was put off. On each occasion, however an Englishman sat patiently awaiting the lecturer and when informed that they had retired, merely replied that he would return. In an interview M. Ruxton, the Englishman in question, stated that he wished to see how far the plan would succeed, as he intended either to found a faculty of Atheism in London or to embrace Christianity. — Daily Chronicle.

Letters to the Editor.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—I have just read Rev. Edward Storrow's letter in your issue of May 31, complaining against our having undertaken work in the south of India, where I may say we have met with some remarkable successes, several heathen Temples having been surrendered to us, and several thousands of heathen having professed conversion.

I must demur to the oft-repeated statements made by Mr. Storrow (a) that we are not wanted in that particular portion of the country; (b) that there are plenty of other unoccupied districts in India. Let me explain. I think I may write with some authority, as I have travelled through the length and breadth of India, and can now look back on the past experience of some eighteen years spent, not in one particular corner of that country, but in almost every portion of it.

In the commencement of missionary work in India, when the societies and their agents were few, the country was divided up by them into what may be compared with the political "spheres of influence" recently adopted in the case of Africa. There was plenty of room, and each society arranged to keep within its own limits. As the societies and their agents increased, these spheres of influence became somewhat more contracted. Nevertheless, they have continued to embrace enormous tracts of country and populations, with which the agents in question have been and are totally unable to grapple. On the one hand, you have a force of certainly not less than five million Hindu and Mohammedan missionaries holding the field against all comers, and entirely supported by the gifts of the natives of India, and numbering some 275,000,000 of followers. On the other hand, you have a small force of something like 1000 foreign missionaries, with (say) 2000 or 3000 native helpers, and a following, exclusive of Roman Catholics, of less than half a million disciples. Looking broadly at these facts, it seems to me somewhat strange that the latter should say that they have no need of further reinforcement.

So far from this being the case, however, it is an undisputed fact that among the existing societies the whole of India is now mapped out into these spheres of influence. The newly-arrived missionary, who does not belong to any existing large society, is treated (may I say, as the pariah, the outcast of missions. I speak not only of ourselves, but of others. He finds himself placed between the horns of the following dilemma. Either he must join one of the existing societies with whose methods or doctrines he may not be in agreement, or he is scouted in every direction. True, he may be allowed the privilege of knocking his head against the wall in some great presidency city, where the arrival of a new missionary does not attract so much attention; but so soon as he attempts to establish himself within one of the spheres of influence where the people are more ready to accept Christianity, he finds himself very much in the position of children playing the game of "You mustn't go there, there's a lion. You mustn't go there, there's a bear. You mustn't go there, there's a wolf." If he acts independently of the societies, and goes where he feels he ought to go, he is at once subjected to a strict boycott. If, desirous of working in harmony with them, he asks for the advice of his elder brethren, he is—may I use the word—misdirected to some unsuitable and often almost uninhabited district, of so undesirable and unlikely a character that no mission has hitherto thought it worth while to occupy it.

As Re Travancore, I may say that we for years held off opening our work in this country, in spite of iterated appeals from the people. Finally, two years ago, we considered the time had come for responding to those appeals, and I think the result is sufficient to prove that we were led by the Spirit of God in so doing. In several cases entire village communities have been swept in, and we have now some three thousand enrolled soldiers. I have not the exact figures before me, but I am informed that at least eighty per cent. of these converts were raw heathen, many of them devil-dancers, drunkards, and notorious characters previous to their conversion.

Of course, the question of what countries and districts are to be occupied, is one which bristles with difficulties to any new and aggressive society commencing work in India. With a view to meeting these, I have more than once approached the secretaries of the various societies, and have drawn up at some pains what seemed to me a reasonable set of regulations by which we were prepared to abide, on condition that they were accepted by the societies. I regret to say, however, that the secretaries have not thought it possible to accept them, and we have been obliged to go on as best we could.—Yours truly, in the Master's service, F. DE L. BOOTH TUCKER.

SOMETHING TO UNLEARN.

SIR,—A recent writer (I think the late Dean Burgon) has told us of a local preacher at Cambridge, who, in his open-air preachings, continually denounced the culture of the University. "D'ye think Powl knew Greek?" he often demanded. He was a man of warm piety and did a good work. But could he have done the same work as Charles Simeon, his contemporary, who, according to your correspondent "Non-graduate," was handicapped by "the wisdom of the colleges"?

Has not God always called out witnesses from among the learned of this world, not to exalt human wisdom, but to meet the wise on their own ground, or else to accomplish some special deliverance for his people? Has He not by means of human learning and research preserved to us his Holy Word in the priceless form we now possess it? Were not those centuries truly called the Dark Ages during which the sources of knowledge were locked away alike from the pastors and the flock? And has not the moral standard of Christian teachers been on the whole higher since the Revival of Learning which preceded the great Reformation? Has the possession of greater talent and knowledge weakened the testimony and narrowed the spiritual influence of such men as Luther and Wesley, Blaise Pascal and Fénélon, Henry Martyn and Adolph Saphir?

It was the last-named who said (I quote from memory), "An enlightened Church will always desire first a spiritual, and next a learned, ministry." He who called a Peter from his nets to be a fisher of men among the circumcised also called a Paul from the feet of Gamaliel to be the great apostle of the Gentiles. Shall we say Paul spent those three years in Arabia unlearning the wisdom of the Greeks? At any rate, he retained much of it to the end, as his sermons and epistles show us.

And in the case of Moses, are we not taking upon ourselves to be "wise above that which is written," when we say that he "had during forty years . . . to unlearn the wisdom of the Egyptians in order to become Moses the man of God?" If this were so, how much better never to have learnt it! Why did Jehovah not call a man straight from the brickfields of Egypt to lead his people out, instead of providentially arranging that his chosen leaders should be reared at the seat of learning and splendour and civil government? Are there not other reasons to account for those forty years in the back side of the desert? Before he could help his brethren he must be as they were. The son of Pharaoh's daughter was an alien to them; he belonged to another order of humanity; they resented both his patronage and his pity. "He fled . . . and became a stranger in the land of Midian, where he begat two sons." Then when he had shared their lot, had known loneliness and privation, had been a servant, a husband and a father, he was ready to respond to Jehovah's revelation from the burning bush: "I know their sorrows, and am come down to deliver them."—Yours, etc., C. W. M.

[The note which called forth the above and the previous letter was not written to depreciate education, but to point out that where the vocabulary of the country people is very limited, it is of no use for preachers to employ words which their hearers do not understand. Simple direct speech and homely illustrations are more effective in such places than learning of a higher order.—ED.]

ROMISH SAINTS.

SIR,—Why do Christians and members of Protestant Churches hold up Romish saints as examples? And why do they do so without first knowing their character and history?

In a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN it is said, "God has often selected the young for posts of eminent service—Samuel and Timothy, St. Francis of Assisi, St. Francis de Sales, Calvin and Wesley." Francis of Assisi placed poverty at the head of all Christian graces, and was the founder of the Franciscans, or Begging Friars, certainly not "eminent service" to the Church of God. His shrine at Assisi is to this day as great a focus of idolatry as that of Shiva at Benares. The so-called Saint Francis de Sales was a polished gentleman, who wrote of Christian love and employed dragoons to convert Protestants.—Faithfully yours, H. C. M.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, NEW CUT. — The seventeenth annual meeting took place on May 29. Mr. Causton, M.P., spoke very highly of the work done among the children. As the Mission building had not been done up for eight years, the time had arrived for the repairing and renovating of the premises to be carried out. He hoped the funds would be forthcoming to meet the cost of so necessary a work. The work, which is carried on by the brothers Young, is in urgent need.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

AT the recent members' meeting at Camden Town encouraging accounts were given of the prayer meetings, Sunday afternoon tract distribution, and the open-air campaign.

During the last three Sabbath evenings Mr. John Quigley, of the Stirling Tract Depot, has been preaching the Gospel to the men's meeting in connection with the Dublin Association.

The report of the Auckland (N.Z.) Association—the oldest Association in the Colonies—shows good, earnest, fruitful work for the past year, both in the spiritual and mental operations. To many the Association has been a refuge in the time of great danger.

Mr. John P. Fay, known in America as the Y.M.C.A. "building debt raiser," has spent six months in Vancouver and raised 20,000 dollars for the Association there. In a little over two years he has conducted canvasses that have aggregated 134,000 dollars.

Mr. Arthur Burson, at one time secretary of the Evangelistic work in Manchester Y.M.C.A., is now in Jamaica, where he went a year ago to see after three missions in the mountains, and to help Dr. Johnson. It is his second visit to Jamaica, for he was there some years ago.

Rev. J. D. Langley, of St. Phillip's Church, Sydney, has been for thirty-seven years connected with the Y.M.C.A., and is entitled to be enrolled amongst the oldest of Association workers in Australia. He was a member of the first committee of the Association at the Antipodes.

The committee of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter have placed their large meeting-room at the disposal of clergy visiting the city during the Church Congress. It is hoped that it will be found useful for prayer-meetings, reading, and conference, and short spiritual addresses by some of the leading Evangelical clergy.

A meeting has been held at Weybridge to mark the moving into new premises. Captain Hawes, the president, pressed much the necessity of keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace by greater devotion and loyalty to Christ. Mr. Le Dale, from Wimbledon, spoke with much power and earnestness. Mr. C. Stubbs, curate of Surbiton, remarked that great as were the advantages of athletics Christ and his claims on our bodies, as well as souls, must have the first place. There has been a marked awakening in this Y.M.C.A. recently, and prayers of others are earnestly asked for greater blessing.

In connection with the Jubilee, special services were held on Sunday at Hackney. In the morning nearly 200 young men were present at a breakfast meeting, when addresses were delivered by representatives of various nationalities in their own languages, and interpreted into English by different friends. In the afternoon a largely-attended service for young men was held in St. Michael's, London Fields, the preacher being the Archdeacon of London, who strongly urged every young man present to at once enrol himself as a member of the Association. During the evening nearly 2000 persons were present at the Clapton Park Congregational Church, when a sermon was preached by Rev. Henry Harries. Later on in the evening the Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium was crowded to hear addresses by delegates from various lands.

On Thursday last, a special conversazione and meeting were held to commemorate the jubilee of the Y.M.C.A., and also to celebrate the re-opening of the Oxford Association building after renovation and enlarged accommodation. The host on the occasion was Lord Jersey, whose presence for the first time was a source of great satisfaction. As Lord Lieutenant of the County and as High Steward of the University, he is, of course, well known, but he is even more greatly admired and respected for the keen interest he takes in all matters of social and religious importance. Lord Jersey, in his speech, bore testimony to the Y.M.C.A. based on his experience as Governor of New South Wales, which was hearty and gratifying. The Oxford Association, by its recent efforts, has incurred a good deal of expenditure, and a sum of £150 is very urgently required. The membership numbers 600, and the work includes an additional 300 as a P.S.A., which is being greatly blessed. A successful and well-attended Bible-class, together with other similar meetings, show that the Christian element in the Association is well to the fore. Mr. D. A. Black, of Belfast, also addressed the meeting, which altogether augured well for a continuance and increase of the work.

THE IRISH METHODIST Temperance Committee have given seventy-three money prizes to Band of Hope children for superior answering in temperance subjects.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Islington.—Mr. J. Manton Smith hopes to begin on June 10 a special Mission in Colebrooke-row Church.

Twickenham.—A three weeks' Mission, conducted by Mr. George Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, in the St. Margaret's Baptist Chapel, was brought to a close on Thursday, May 31, the services having been well attended and most hearty throughout.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been conducted in Omagh by Messrs. Beach and Griffin, of the Gospel Mission Car. Similar services have been held in Athlone by Messrs. Carleton and Robinson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society; and in Garryduff Presbyterian Church by Rev. Wm. Colquhoun.

Weston-super-Mare.—Mr. George Clarke has just completed a sixteen days' mission here. The meetings have been crowded, both afternoon and evening. By permission of the vicar the evening meetings have been held in Emmanuel Church. The principal feature of the mission has been the awakening of somnolent Christians, and the number of cases in which husbands and wives have been blessed.

H. Harrison.

Derby.—A seventeen days' Mission has been concluded here by Mr. Henry Thorne, under the auspices of the C.E. Societies in Derby. A large number were led to decide to trust Christ as their Saviour and King. The attendances were never less than 400, and were usually a good deal larger. From the very beginning young people especially responded to the appeal of truth and love in large numbers, and we believe that great and lasting blessing has resulted, and will continue to flow from the first united C.E. Mission in Derby.

James Mursell.

Mr. Henry Varley has been invited to conduct a mission at Coventry. He asks the prayers of Christians for much blessing on afternoon Bible readings and Gospel sermons at night.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. Auffray, "Edith O'Gorman," having been ordered a long sea voyage and a year's complete rest, sails shortly for Australia.

Rev. H. T. E. Barlow has been compelled by considerations of health finally to decline the missionary bishopric in Japan.

Rev. F. B. Meyer expects to sail, viâ Southampton, for America, per s.s. New York, on July 28, in order to take part in the Northfield Conference.

Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, will occupy the Marylebone pulpit on Sunday morning next. This will probably be Dr. Cuyler's last visit to England.

The Very Rev. H. H. Dickenson, D.D., Dean of the Chapel Royal, Dublin, has been chosen to succeed Dr. Peacocke as Professor of Pastoral Theology in the University of Dublin.

Mr. John Currie, who is well known to many readers as a Scoto-American evangelist, and who has been labouring lately at Santa Cruz, in California, is a delegate from the Montreal Y.M.C.A. to the jubilee of this week. Mr. Currie will afterwards evangelise in Glasgow and other parts of Scotland, as the way may be opened up.

Mr. Josiah Nix was entertained last week at a farewell gathering in the Holborn Restaurant by a number of friends connected with the mission work lately carried on at Wardour Hall. Many regrets were expressed at his departure from the ranks of the West London Mission, and prayerful good wishes were uttered as to his future work.

Rev. Courthope Todd.—By order of the physician, Rev. Courthope Todd leaves England immediately; he has been suffering from lung trouble and overwork for some years. The trustees and committee of the Theatrical Mission have learned, with regret, that he must at once cease from active labour. For the present, the work will be carried on under the direction of Mr. Alfred B. Harding, an old member of the committee.

Rev. John Small.—The Deccan Herald devotes a leading article to a description of the labours of Mr. Small at Poona. He commenced work in 1863, devoting himself to teaching, and becoming an excellent Marathi scholar. Between 1870 and 1874, when Dr. Wilson was in Scotland, he took his place in the college of Bombay. In 1876 he was sent back to Poona. Here he did good service in many ways—in street preaching, in maintaining an orphanage for boys, and otherwise. He now retires after thirty years' work, carrying with him the love of all who know him.

Rev. John Urquhart has resigned his pastorate at Wadham-street, Weston-super-Mare. The necessity for strengthening wavering faith in view of the attacks being made upon the Scriptures has for some time laid Mr. Urquhart under a severe strain. But calls to lecture throughout the country on the "Higher Criticism and the Bible" are now becoming so numerous and so urgent that he has been forced to surrender a work exceedingly dear to him. The wrench is felt not only by Mr. Urquhart but by many warm friends in the church, in the town, and elsewhere. Mr. Urquhart's work at Wadham-street will close at the end of August.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Mrs. Fenton, Rutland Lodge, Clevedon, secretary of the Y.W.C.A. Holiday Home at Clevedon, will be glad to hear from any young women wishing rest and change.

At a public meeting held in Swansea in April it was resolved to perpetuate the memory of the late Miss Mary Grenfell, and a committee was selected to consider the matter. After considering a number of proposals, the committee came to the conclusion that the memorial fund should be devoted to the purchase and endowment of a house for the Y.W.C.A. of Swansea, to be called Mary Grenfell House. This has been heartily taken up, and efforts are now being made to raise the funds. The hon. secretary is Mr. F. S. Bishop, Glanrafon, Sketty, Swansea.

The third annual report of the Highbury Institute states that in almost every branch of the work there has been progress. The committee contemplate furnishing another bedroom to meet the number of applications for admission to the Home. The various classes and meetings give great cause for gratitude. Month by month the numbers increase, and above all there have been proofs of the power of God's presence. Missionary, temperance, anti-opium, and other special meetings have been held; also a sale of work which realised £56. There are 114 members, of whom seventy-five are total abstainers. The Institute is at 17, Aubert Park, N.; Miss Dodd is the superintendent.

OBITUARY.

MRS. THISTLETHWAYTE.

The death is announced of Mrs. Laura Thistlethwayte, who was well known as a public speaker thirty years ago. She has of late lived in retirement at West Hampstead; but in many quarters the mention of her name will revive pleasant memories.

REV. P. NEVILLE ANDREWS.

Many feel that a heavy loss has been sustained in the sudden death of Rev. P. Neville Andrews, chairman of the Cardiff and Swansea District (Wesleyan). On Sunday week he was in his usual health, and preached in the morning a powerful and impressive sermon from Acts ii. 42 and 47, in which he connected the success of the early Apostolic Church with its firm faith in the cardinal doctrines and absence of doctrinal disputes, and especially with its steadfastness in prayer. On Monday evening he was taken suddenly ill, and, in spite of medical aid, died about six p.m. from spasm of the heart. This event has caused great sorrow in the town, where Mr. Andrews was held in the highest esteem.

REV. W. S. H. FIELDEN, MEMORIAL HALL.

This well-known minister, who has been for nearly twenty years secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, died suddenly on Saturday night at Walthamstow. Up to Saturday, he had discharged his duties at the Memorial Hall, returning home apparently in his usual health. At about ten o'clock, however, he complained of pain in the region of the heart, and on going to bed rapidly became worse and died. He entered the Congregational ministry in 1857, his first charge being at Oundle. In 1861 he left England for Melbourne, and returning in seven years, undertook the pastoral charge of Trinity Church, Walthamstow. In his capacity as secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society he was known throughout the British Colonies.

MRS. REED, FULHAM.

Workers in Munster Park, Fulham, are mourning the death of a quiet but singularly devoted worker. A native of Huddersfield, she was left a widow some years ago, and was led to come to London in 1890. Settling in Fulham, she was soon a leader in work. In other ways she was a most zealous worker and a friend to many a neighbour in sickness and trouble. Her Christian character, which showed itself in the beautiful gentleness and uprightness of all her actions, was conspicuously displayed in the wonderful fortitude and hopefulness with which she recently bore the long and painful illness of her son. Though never robust, her health gave way with startling suddenness, and she fell asleep on the morning of the 24th ult. The testimony of her life is that she lived to Christ, and now lives for ever with Him.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

OXFORD.

Rev. H. Price Hughes preached twice to large congregations at Mansfield College last Sunday. In the morning, from Micah vi. 8, his subject was the "Ideal Religious Life, and How to Attain to it," and was a strong testimony to the utter inadequacy of man's own efforts, and the consequent need of the grace of God in Christ Jesus. In the evening, from Isaiah vi. 8, Mr. Hughes dealt with the subject of man in the presence of God, and labouring for God.

The annual reunion of "Old Wycliffites" was held last week, when a number of men gathered to hear addresses by Canon Girdlestone and the Rev. H. V. Stuart, of Wolverhampton. The prospects of Wycliffe Hall are very encouraging, the hall being full for next term.

The Rev. W. Bryant Salmon preached in aid of the Missions to Seamen in St. Clement's Church last Sunday, and gave most interesting accounts of the work from his experience as chaplain.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta was held last Sunday, when an address on the Mission was given by Rev. E. F. Brown, who has been connected with it for thirteen or fourteen years. The Rev. R. L. Ottley also spoke, in the absence of Mr. Gore through ill-health.

Sermons in connection with the jubilee of the Y.M.C.A. were preached in a number of Oxford Churches on Sunday. There are two prominent Christian men in Oxford who are closely connected with that first Bible class from which the Y.M.C.A. sprang.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A handsome present of £1200 has been sent to the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association to purchase a house for "A Weary Workers' Rest," by "one who wishes no name to be given."

Beaconsfield House, Dunoon, has been recently acquired as a home for the Gospel Training College, presided over by Rev. Duncan Macgregor, and an appeal is made for money contributions or gifts of books or furniture that it may be properly equipped.

Rev. J. Small, of Poona, India, addressed a large meeting of the Ladies' Society for Female Education in India and Africa in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on Saturday. He has now retired after thirty years' hard work in the mission field, carrying with him the respect of all who know him.

A farewell meeting was held in the Christian Institute last week to say good-bye to a large party of orphan girls from Mr. Quarrier's homes, who next day sailed for Canada. Mr. Quarrier's address at one of the evening meetings of the Free Assembly created a profound impression on the large audience. His work is year by year adding fresh weight to his words.

A large number of ministers attended the funeral of Dr. James McNaught, of Abbotsford Parish Church, Glasgow. He came from the Kilmarnock district, and was for long connected with the Free Church, during which time he was an ardent supporter of Dr. Begg's Anti-Union policy. He did good work in the south side of Glasgow, where he built up a large and flourishing congregation. He was over sixty years of age when he died.

IRISH NOTES.

The Fion Lodge Industrial School, Ballynafeigh, and Grampian Training Ship, Belfast Lough, for homeless and destitute Protestant boys, have had a very successful year, and are doing most excellent work.

The Dublin Shelter for Men, recently opened, is making great progress, and is proving a distinct boon to the class for whom it was intended. A gentleman who recently visited it was so pleased with all he saw that he has sent the treasurer a donation for £100.

Under the auspices of the local Methodist Council a missionary conference was held in Belfast last Thursday, when an able paper on "Missions" was read by Mr. Alfred Lowe, and interesting addresses delivered by Messrs. F. Megarry, J.P., J. B. McCutcheon, and others.

The Irish Baptist Association met in its annual session in Coleraine last week, under the presidency of Rev. J. Taylor, of Tandragee. The report on membership, which was submitted by Rev. C. S. Donald, of Belfast, showed that the year just closed was one of unprecedented blessing and success.

By the death of Mr. Wm. McComus, J.P., at the age of fifty-five years, Dublin has lost a generous and useful citizen. At a cost of £5000 he presented to Kingstown about two years since a splendid Young Men's Christian Institute. He also was a liberal supporter of almost every good and Christian work.

Notes and Comments.

"Fret not thyself, it tendeth only to evil-doing" (Ps. xxxvii. 8, R.V.). Fretting is the besetting sin of some natures, a restless chafing against things as they are, a peevish impatience with men and their circumstances. It is useless, it is worse, "it tendeth only to evil-doing." There is a power in it to force away the soul from peaceful thoughts and loving fellowship with God, from kindly feeling towards men, and to drive it into positive rebellion. It is infinitely better to "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." Then our delight is in Him, and He can give us the desires of our hearts.

Dr. Parker, at the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee meeting last week, resented with great warmth the imputation that the Evangelical conception of the Gospel is "a shallow sentimental conception." Merely to mention a few names would be sufficient proof of his contention; Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Wesley, Faraday, Neander, Butler, were not intellectual nobodies. It is necessary to say this sometimes. Nevertheless, the old saying of one of the brightest intellects that ever reflected the glory of Jesus Christ is still true—"Not many wise are called." The cross still carries in the burden of "offences" which cluster round it the offence of "foolishness." And men of undoubted mental ability in every department of life in which they move must be willing, for Christ's sake, to be looked upon as "curiously weak in religion."

Dr. Monro Gibson carried the sympathy of the great Y.M.C.A. Conference when he said that it was time the ungodly divorce of the sacred from the secular was abolished. Was it right, he asked, that in one part of their life God should be worshipped, and in another that He should be dismissed? The week-day, he thought, could not be separated from the Sunday. Certainly not. But if testimony can be believed, a good deal of such separation is done. We hear from young men of some masters who have one code of morals for the city and another for the home and the church. Too much importance should not be attached to such observations, as they sometimes come from men who are in an angry mood of mind, self-dissatisfied also, because they know themselves to be blameworthy. But even then we fear that Dr. Gibson had only too good reasons for lifting up his voice in earnest condemnation of a current form of hypocrisy. All the Y.M.C.A.s in the world will fail unless Christian men of business practise the Gospel in daily dealings.

The new President of the Primitive Methodist Conference delivered some timely words on the day of his appointment to office, when he said that he recognised the altered condition of their work as Primitive Methodists; but these conditions were accidental and temporary, whereas the foundation of their work was unchangeable.

He could remember when politics sought them and when they did not seek politics; he should be glad if that day could come again. They might depend upon it, if they sought to become first-rate Socialists or politicians, they would necessarily, or almost necessarily—unless they were indeed very great exceptions to the general rule—become second or third-rate preachers of the Gospel. Let them be preachers of the Gospel first. If they made their mark at preaching the Gospel and saving men, they would make their mark in other directions at the same time.

We are gratified to see that these remarks were met with applause; they will, we believe, find a warm response from Primitive Methodists all the world over.

Another gratifying feature of the Conference was the holding, in the evening, of open-air services in different parts of Chester, the city where the Conference sat. It is generally felt by all denominations that at their great assemblies they should remember "them that are without," and do something to instruct them in the Gospel, and win them to its faith. And we are persuaded that nothing is so likely to be useful as open-air preaching. It is a testimony which is highly calculated to impress the crowd; and the business of Christians is with them. Besides, Primitive Methodism was born to uphold and practise this form of preaching, and it is only holding fast to its best traditions and noblest work when it goes into the streets and lanes to compel the people to come in. It had a most encouraging financial year last year, and this year we hope its history may have as marked spiritual progress.

With all the differences between Christian men and Churches which now grieve our hearts, it is evident that there have been times when separations were wider and feeling more estranged than now. Forbearance has gained some ground; and purity of character, one would hope, is more general. We can hardly imagine a bishop of the Church of England or a minister of any other Church writing and doing as did Gregory Nazianzen. "I am sick," he writes, "of struggling against the jealousies of holy bishops, who render harmony impossible, and make light of the interests of the faith in the pursuit of their own quarrels. For this reason I have resolved (as the saying is) to try a new tack, and to gather myself up, as they say the nautilus does when it feels the storm; to gaze from afar at others buffeted and buffeting, intent myself on the peace of heaven." His determination to fix his mind more earnestly and more exclusively on things above was undoubtedly good and wise. The heavenly should be brought down to earth to calm, to soften, and to purify this life of struggle and temptation, but we hope there is much less of the kind of contention of which he complains.

We sincerely rejoice at the friendly termination, through conciliatory methods, of the cab strike in London. The Prime Minister and the Home Secretary have done honour to their offices by the action they have taken, and we trust a precedent has been established which will be followed in the case of any future disagreements in the industrial world.

The Anti-Gambling League has met with a temporary reverse in the magistrates' court at Northampton. The Bench there decided on Monday that, although it had been proved that illegal betting was carried on, the evidence did not show that the lessees of the racecourse were aware of it, and the case was dismissed. At the same time a bookmaker was fined for betting in the enclosure. The League will of course carry the matter to the Superior Court, where it will receive a more thorough treatment. We hope the Christian public will warmly support the League in their endeavour to enforce the law.

We came upon a few sentences in "Leaves from Spain," which, copied here, may carry comfort and hope to some of the Lord's tried and troubled ones:—

As He once descended from the heights of his prayer in order to walk upon the waves to the help of his disciples who were fighting with the storm and opposing wind upon the Sea of Gennesaret, so He came right down out of his own glorious heaven into the tent-maker's house in the middle of the night, to bring comfort to his exhausted servant, with the words: "I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this city." And the same Eye stands open to-day over the whole world; it has cared through all the centuries, and it cares to-day with the same loving care for his people. He sees their circumstances, their trials, and their conflicts; what we all see; but He sees also, what we do not see, the sources of help in the future. He does not only see the enemies who are concealed among his friends, but also the friends who are concealed among his enemies, and who, in his own time, will be joined to the community of his friends.

Referring to the heavy working expenses of most mission agencies at home and abroad, a correspondent writes:—

Is there no society or mission where the secretaries and officials are unpaid, and office-rent nil? Can no one be found to give their whole time and energies? or give or lend a room or office? To those who have but very small incomes, and out of which they manage to give back to God two-thirds, such a state of things is heartrending. Most gladly would the writer give unconditionally time, strength, and a room, to help any burthened branch of the Lord's work, and enable all moneys to go to it unmulcted.

We doubt, however, if, as a rule, gratuitous work would be found to answer. A mission worked in part of a private house, by a staff possessed of independent incomes, would be an interesting experiment.

The growth of the population in our great cities is always outstripping the growth of agencies for the social, physical, and religious well-being of the people. The rates, when once a city has got beyond a certain size, can never be kept together. Thus London had hospital accommodation for one sick person out of every 133 residents 200 years ago, but now it has only accommodation for one out of 660. The Bishop of London thinks this proves that men's hearts are sadly colder, and that we are put to shame by our own forefathers. This may be so, but we think it is not quite a fair inference. The problem really is, how to provide sufficient churches, schools, libraries, hospitals, etc., for 70,000 more persons every year. It is easy to provide for that number when a city has been six or eight hundred years in growing to that size; but to do it every year seems an impossibility. We manage best with smaller communities.

A correspondent emphasises the importance of studied clearness and sustained fulness in pulpit utterance. He says:—

It is obvious that the influence of a speaker and the effect of his preaching must be seriously discounted when, by dropping his voice or indolently pronouncing his words, only five or six hundred persons out of a thousand present can hear what he says. Many pulpit orators do not speak out straight, so as to be heard by the most distant attendant.

Many neglect the final consonants of words, and thus fail to make themselves understood.

When the Apostle inquired, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" he was, of course, presupposing effective enunciation of God's truth. While it is true that God uses weak means to accomplish great results, it is also true that He has signally employed the consecrated lips of powerful speakers to warn sinners and edify saints. The cry that those who speak for God should "speak out!" is one that deserves to be heard; and we trust it will be heard by "all whom it may concern."

---

The Lancet draws special attention to the subject of "Child-traffic in Italy," basing its remarks on a pamphlet by Professor Litta, a distinguished Sicilian statistician. According to him about 20,000 Italians reside in England, "of whom the vast majority are not robust, independent bread-winners, but children scarcely emerged from infancy, hired from their parents, or, more truly, sold by them, to pirouette and gambol through the European cities to the sound of tambourine or hurdy-gurdy, and by the compassion they excite to draw from the thoughtless almsgiver the dole from which their hard taskmasters earn a profitable livelihood." When English people are tempted to throw coppers to these children, they should remember that they are encouraging idle vagabonds and cruel parents, and are only continuing the miserable servitude of the children. England can do something to stop the evil, but, of course, Italy can do more, and has more urgent reasons for doing it. She must cease her military exactions, and then her people will have a chance to improve.

---

Mr. Carl Snyder, writing in the American Journal of Politics on "What does the American Public Read?" says, that from a careful personal investigation, he is convinced that the literature of a criminal or debasing tendency reaches an average of more than 1,200,000 copies per week, or upwards of 60,000,000 copies per year; that is to say, an average of about five copies for every family in the country. The sum of his inquiry is that, "speaking bluntly," the American people read only novels and newspapers, and as a rule the worst class of each. We hope that this is very "blunt"; for certain it is that thousands of Americans do not defile themselves with these base writings; but what are they among so many? This modern abuse of the Press contrasts painfully with the early days, when so much of the work of the printer's art was given to reproducing the Bible and the finest products of the human mind. Every discovery becomes an engine for evil. It is for Christians to press them into the service of God.

---

"The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." We cannot too strongly insist upon the supremacy of this revelation. He who would see the Father, Jehovah, I Am, must see Jesus; he must, by the grace of the Spirit, be able to say of all the grace and truth that appear in the life of our Lord, The words and the works are the Father's. "God was in Christ." Luther has set forth this truth in his own homely, powerful way: "Whoever would know God and theorise about Him without danger, let him look into the manger, begin from below, and learn to know first the Virgin Mary's Son, born at Bethlehem, lying on his mother's lap and sucking the breast, or hanging on the cross; then he will well learn who God is. This knowledge will not be dreadful, but full of love and comfort. And guard against lofty, soaring thoughts of climbing up to heaven without this ladder, namely, the Lord Christ in his humanity, as the Word sets Him right simply before us; stop here, let not reason lead thee away from here, and thou wilt understand God aright."

HOW TO PLEASE GOD.

I have been thinking over those wonderful words of our dear Lord: "These things have I spoken unto you that My joy might remain in you." If we could only take in their true, deep meaning, how it would uplift and glorify our whole lives! That we may give Him joy. Think of it! Does not the very thought thrill your heart with rapture? And this joy here spoken of is not that joy of the Good Shepherd on finding his sheep that were lost. It is the joy which the Sinless One feels as He beholds his likeness growing in us; his joy in knowing that we are daily dwelling more closely in Him and He in us, until we indeed become "one spirit" with Him.

It seems to me that many of us have had strangely chilling thoughts on the subject of "pleasing God." We had been taught, perhaps, so much about the sinfulness of our fallen human nature, that we had thought it utterly impossible ever to be capable of pleasing the All-Holy, before whom, we are told, "all our righteousness is as filthy rags." Ah! there is the mistake—all our righteousness. But we who have received Jesus as our Saviour, and entered into the wondrous life of fellowship with Him, have no longer any righteousness of our own. "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me." If we really yield ourselves up to his guidance, his life enters into our very being, his Divine nature takes possession of us, his indwelling becomes the spring of all our motives and actions, and as we go on "from strength to strength," ever growing into conformity to his image, his joy remaineth in us.

O strange and glorious thought that we may be
A joy to Thee!

Who would not go on triumphantly, in spite of all difficulties, and pain, and sorrow, with such an aim, such a possibility as this? St. Paul dwells on the same thought when he says, "Ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God"; and again, "Holy, acceptable unto God." He reminds us also that "Enoch pleased God."

Oh then, let us put away from us that old grim idea of God as One who is so far, far off in his solitary holiness, ever frowning upon our sinfulness and shortcomings, and whom none of our feeble efforts can ever please, but who for Christ's sake tolerates us and our childish attempts to do his will! This is not Christ's teaching; it is a cruel, untrue representation of the loving Father who not only forgives but delights in us as his own children; for that dear Saviour's sake indeed, but also for our own when once we yield ourselves unto Him in loving, childlike obedience. "The Father Himself loveth you," says the Saviour, "because ye have loved Me." Oh let us realise this wondrous thought, this precious truth, that we may and can please God! It will make us live nobler, grander, more earnestly-consecrated lives; it will gladden our darkest pathway, and transform and glorify our daily "trivial round and common task," until at last our "joy shall be full."

THE EXETER CAMPAIGN.—In your report of my addresses at the noon prayer meeting on the work in Exeter, the reference to the closing of the notorious drinking house and haunt of sin reads as though my work in the city had led to this result. Such was not the case; I purposely gave Mr. Huckle's name, that the credit for the result should be his. The bulk of the evidence he secured was taken before the Gospel Mission began; I was not aware who Mr. Huckle was, but I gladly bear testimony to the valuable service he has rendered in Exeter. There is a temperance council in the city, and that body employed Mr. Huckle. Of the gentlemen engaged in that work, I would gladly add, "honour to whom honour is due." Henry Varley.

JORDANS MEETING HOUSE.

That "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than War" truly finds expression to-day in the honours publicly bestowed on good men as perhaps never before. And among the heroes of peace few stand higher than William Penn, the celebrated founder of Pennsylvania, and author of the basal laws that govern the great Republic of the West. It is well known that Penn was buried in the burial ground at Jordans, Bucks; and the fact that last year 600 names were inscribed in the visitors' book there, while over double that number who also visited the venerable spot did not sign their names, indicates a growing interest in the memory of a great and good man.

Twice every year there are gatherings at Jordans that are really unique. On the Sabbath that comes in the middle of London Yearly Meeting, and on the Thursday week following, these meetings are usually held. This year, in spite of rather unfavourable weather, the meeting-house was well filled on the Sunday morning; and the "meeting for worship" was a time of solemnity and blessing. In the afternoon every available seat in the house was occupied; probably, as many as got seats were turned away for want of room, while numbers, including scores of children, remained outside. Again quiet and solemnity reigned, and the Gospel was most lovingly proclaimed. The influence felt found expression in the warm shake of the hand, and oft-expressed wish that the meetings were held "oftener," or "always"; and the invitation to "come again," earnestly given, made one feel that rural England could still appreciate living Quakerism, and that possibly a tent pitched in the graveyard would still further widen the opportunity of blessing at the quakers' yearly meeting at Jordans.

Last Thursday "Jordans monthly meeting" was held, and the width of interest was illustrated by the presence of Dr. Springett, rector of a parish in Sussex, and collateral descendent of the beautiful Gulielma Springett Penn, whose remains lie at Jordans; Dr. Pearson, of Iowa, who had forfeited the pleasure of a visit to Windsor Castle with the Y.M.C.A. in order to give a Bible-reading there, together with people of every class from around.

On the peaceful ground of Jordans classes and creeds that far too often clash united under the banner of Christ, and "worshipped the Father in spirit and in truth." The sight was beautiful and exhilarating. Friendly rivalry in saying the kindest things one of another was manifest, and harmony of heart was supreme. Mr. Summers, of Beaconsfield, who has written so much of the families and Friends buried at Jordans, spoke some loving words at the close of Dr. Pearson's Bible-reading, and the sense of gratitude felt by all found expression in prayer and praise to God. The meeting became enthusiastic as the difference between the fields in Palestine was described, whose fences or divisions are seen in the absence of corn, but are lost in the wealth of the healthy and vigorous grain, so the fences that separate Christians are lost in active Christian life.

The loving and large hospitality of Wm. H. Cranstone, of Hemel Hempstead, Theodore Harris, of Leighton Buzzard, and Richard Littleboy, of Newport Pagnel, extended so liberally to visitors, much enhance the pleasure of attending a Jordans monthly meeting. W. Hobson.

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh writes: "At this season of the year scarce a day passes but we receive a communication from some open-air worker or Christian working-man, assailed by ungodly shopmates, appealing for a free grant of our Anti-Infidel Tracts to distribute, but we are now without funds. What are we to do? Will your kind readers therefore replenish the treasury of our "Gratuitous Tract Distribution Fund," which is considerably overdrawn, that we may be in a position to respond to the most pressing of these appeals?" Communications should be sent to W. R. Bradlaugh, 70, King's Cross-road, London.

VICE IN BOMBAY.—Some earnest Christians in Bombay are finding out that the devil does not relinquish his strongholds without a severe struggle. They have been working late at night in a disreputable street, seeking to dissuade men visitors from entering dens of vice. In fulfilling this task they have been subjected to repeated physical assault and damage. Worse still, when action was taken against one of the assailants, the Parsee magistrate dismissed the accused, and ordered the Christian workers to cease their efforts.

Sixty Years After.

SIXTY years ago, Dr. Conquest offered a prize of one hundred guineas for the best essay on the Love of Money, as to which he said, "Many of the wisest and the best of men are of opinion that there is no sin so prevalent among professors of the Gospel as the love of money, and yet there is no subject on which so little has been written well. Andrew Fuller says, 'It will in all probability prove the eternal overthrow of more characters among professing people than any other sin, because it is almost the only crime which can be indulged, and a profession of religion at the same time supported.' "

The Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel and Dr. Pye Smith awarded Dr. Conquest's prize to the essay entitled, "Mammon," by Dr. John Harris, author of "The Great Teacher," "The Great Commission," etc., and subsequently Principal of Cheshunt College.

This invaluable book leads us to think, among all the conventions which are being held, what subject more imperatively demands consideration than obedience to our King's command to preach the Gospel to every creature? What hinders Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith but our selfishness and covetousness? What would tend so much to deepen the spiritual life of the Church of God as digging the love of money out of her heart and using her wealth to evangelise the world? What would so hasten the coming of the Lord as to prove our God, by bringing all the tithes into the storehouse, whether He would not pour out of the opened heaven a blessing which the world itself would not be able to contain? What would promote Scriptural holiness of heart more certainly than to write "Holiness to the Lord" upon every possession, from the prancing horses to the meanest household vessel?

"We pray," wrote Dr. Harris, "for the coming of the Kingdom of Christ, and wonder, at times, that our heartless, disunited, inconsistent prayers are not more successful. But what do we expect? Let it be supposed that a convocation [conference, convention] of all the Christians upon earth should be held, to implore the conversion [or evangelisation] of the world. How justly might an ancient prophet be sent from God to rebuke them, and say, 'The means for the [evangelisation] of the world are already in your hands. . . You are asking Him to do that, the very means for doing which are at this moment locked up in your coffers, or wasted in costly self-gratification. . . . Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house to lie waste? Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, consider your ways. Look abroad over your assembled myriads; calculate the immense resources of wealth placed at your disposal; imagine that you were to be seized with a noble generosity, like that which at different times descended on the ancient people of God; and here say, what enterprise would be too vast for your means? Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed ME, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. . . . But, till then, come rather to humble yourselves before Him for embezzling the property with which He has entrusted you for his cause, and expending it on yourselves.'

"And while we were listening to this righteous rebuke, should we not feel that we were standing before the Lord in our iniquity? Would not confusion cover us?"

If this was true and fitting sixty years ago, how much more so now, sixty years after!

The World and Its Religions.

BY REV. EDWARD STORROW.

ALL estimates of the earth's population, and especially of its non-Christian portion, are approximate only, since in most heathen lands no census has ever been taken, and where it has, with the exception of India, it is unreliable. Of late years great attention has been paid to the subject, especially by very competent English and German geographers, whose statements generally, but not invariably, I follow.

According to these, the total population of the earth is nearly 1,500,000,000, distributed as follows:—

|---|---|
| Asia ... ... ... | about 850,000,000 |
| Europe ... ... ... | about 380,000,000 |
| Africa ... ... ... ... | 130,000,000 |
| America (North) ... ... | 95,000,000 |
| America (South) ... ... | 52,000,000 |
| Australia and adjacent islands | 6,000,000 |

These vast multitudes adhere, more or less, to the following faiths or superstitions:—

|---|---|
| To Protestantism ... ... | 165,000,000 |
| Roman Catholicism ... ... | 195,000,000 |
| Greek and Oriental Christianity | 95,000,000 |
| Mohammedanism ... ... | 192,000,000 |
| Hinduism ... ... ... | 208,000,000 |
| Buddhism ... ... ... | 336,000,000* |
| Confucianism ... ... ... | 60,000,000 |
| Shintoism ... ... ... | 14,000,000 |
| Judaism ... ... ... | 8,000,000 |
| Paganism (unsystematised) ... | 225,000,000 |
| Parsees, Sikhs, etc. ... ... | 2,000,000† |

An analysis of these numbers reveals some striking and suggestive features.

1. Europe and America are almost entirely Christian, in the general sense of the word. Asia and Africa are as entirely non-Christian. Hinduism is the most restricted in locality, being confined entirely to India. Buddhism is found only in Eastern Asia and Ceylon. Mohammedanism has its strongholds in south-western Asia and northern Africa, but there are 30,000,000 in China, and no less than 57,000,000 in India, with an unknown number of millions in Central Africa. Christianity is the most widely diffused; for whilst its great centres are Europe and America, there is no country of great extent where it has not a considerable body of adherents; but it again has its limitations, since the Greek and Eastern Churches are almost confined to the Russian and Turkish Empires. Roman Catholicism has its chief centres in Southern Europe and America among the Latin races, whilst Protestantism has its strongest centres in Western Europe and North America.

2. Paganism is the most suitable term under which to include the various unsystematised, crude polytheisms scattered through Asia, Africa, and the numerous islands of the East.

3. Christianity has the largest number of adherents of any religious system. Next follows Buddhism. Then Hinduism, closely followed by Mohammedanism. But if Confucianism, Shintoism, and Taoism be reckoned with Buddhism, as in practical life they often are, the numerical difference between it and Christianity will be seen to be small.

4. Separating Christianity into its three most distinct parts, we see that, as religions, Buddhism numerically stands first, Hinduism second, Mohammedanism and Roman Catholicism third and fourth, and Protestantism fifth.

5. If we divide the earth's population into masses of twenty-five millions each, we see that Buddhism has thirteen, Hinduism eight, unsystematised Paganism nine, Mohammedanism nearly eight, Romanism nearly eight, Protestantism six, the Greek Church four, and Confucianism more than two.

6. Viewed from the Protestant Evangelical standpoint, the survey is alike impressive and humiliating. Less than one-third of the human race are Christian, in the general acceptation of the word, and but one in nine a Protestant!

7. Contrasting Protestants with all non-Christians, it is seen that the latter are almost seven times as numerous as the former. Thus, there are nearly 1,040,000,000 human beings—more than two-thirds of the human race—who practically have no Bible, no Sabbath, no adequate knowledge of God, of the Saviour, and eternal truth. The vast majority of them have never once had the Gospel preached to them.

Will the reader try to conceive what these stupendous numbers signify? It is difficult, it is even impossible, for most of us to imagine what a million signifies. Let anyone try to count that number, and he will acquire a new conception of the word.

No one can count as rapidly as the seconds pass. If we could do this, and were to count at this rate for eight hours a day, more than a month would pass before a million was reckoned! An ordinary lifetime, therefore, would not suffice to count the number of those now living who are without God and without hope in the world.

Or take another illustration. The heathen and Mohammedan population of the earth is twenty-seven and a-half times that of Great Britain and Ireland. If we are moved to effort when we hear of a village, or a district of a town without the Gospel, how ought we to be affected by the thought that there are hundreds of millions without the most elementary knowledge of God and of Christ!

*These are the only figures on which statisticians considerably differ, Sir Monier Williams placing the number as low as 100,000,000. Buddhism is the most elastic of systems. It absorbed, witout destroying, the aboriginal superstitions of South Eastern Asia. And the numbers depend on whether they are called by the general name themselves accept, or the phases of superstition which underlie it. If the number of Buddhists be reduced, the number of pagans must be proportionately increased.

IMBECILES AND LUNATICS.

DEAR SIR,—I have felt for a long time that I should like to call attention to the case of a neglected class of our fellow creatures, viz., the imbecile and lunatic in our asylums. The idea seems to prevail that this class are quite beyond the reach of Christian influence, and that any approach to the subject of religion would be detrimental to their well-being. Hence they are left to themselves very largely in the matter, or religious subjects are carefully withheld. Having had occasion to visit patients at some of these institutions, I have been particularly impressed with the fact that the one thing needed to help and heal these "dwellers in darkness" is the light of the Gospel. One case in which I was interested is a blessed proof of this.

Moreover, many patients have long lucid intervals when they are quite in a condition to be dealt with as ordinary individuals, and many are detained simply because they have no one to be responsible for them for a short time after being set at liberty. Do we not need an "Aid Society" for such? An intelligent Christian man helped in this way has successfully held responsible situations for some years.

While the physically and spiritually sick are being so carefully dealt with, is it not time that, like our Master, we missioned the mentally sick also? This is written with the hope that some who may have access to these institutions, and who may possess tack and grace for the work, may be led into doing something to help and comfort these unfortunates. "Remember those who are in bonds as bound with them."—Yours faithfully, JOHN FRASER.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

IV.—THE SECOND DISCOURSE.

(Jeremiah iii.—vi.)

"Surely the time is short,
Endless the task and art,
To brighten for the ethereal court
A soil'd earth-drudging heart:
But He, the dread Proclaimer of that hour,
Is pledged to thee in Love, as to thy foes in Power."
Keble.

We do not know how Jeremiah's first address was received. It was impossible for Jerusalem to have heard the eager pleadings of the young preacher, protesting so earnestly against the policy of its leaders, and the practices of its priests, without becoming aware that a new force had entered the arena of its public life. And from that moment, through the forty-four years that followed, the influence of his holy example and fervent words was destined to make itself mightily felt. One star of hope more shone over that hotbed of corruption, the very atmosphere of which was charged with symptoms of impending dissolution. Another voice was audible through which God could utter his pleadings and remonstrances.

In his second discourse, lasting from the third to the sixth chapters inclusive—and which perhaps is preserved as a specimen of Jeremiah's words at this period—there is an added power and pathos. The flame burns higher; the sword has a keener edge; yet the tone is more tremulous and tender. There is more than ever of the spirit of Jesus, bewailing the blindness and obstinacy of men, as the vision of impending judgment looms clearer before the soul, and the violence done to the redeeming love of God is more clearly apprehended. In his own touching words, Jeremiah was as a gentle lamb led to the slaughter (xi. 19); but he was also strong as a lion, in the vehemence with which he strove to avert the doom, already gathering on the horizon, and threatening to devastate his beloved fatherland. If any pure and holy soul could have saved Judah by its pleadings, tears, and warnings, Jeremiah would have done it.

But it was not to be. The upas had struck its roots too deeply. The ulcer was too inveterate. The evil that Manasseh had sown had too thickly impregnated the soil. This, however, did not appear in those early days of Jeremiah's ministry; and with all the hopefulness of youth, he thought that he might yet avert the disaster. Surely a voice warning of the rocks that lay direct in the vessel's course, and a firm hand on the tiller, might yet steer the good ship into calm deep water.

This discourse is occupied with a clear prevision of the Chaldean invasion; with plaintive expressions of pity and pain; and eloquent assertions of the redeeming grace of God.

I.—THE PROPHET'S PREVISION OF APPROACHING JUDGMENT.

At the opening of Jeremiah's ministry, as we have seen, the land was rejoicing in a brief parenthesis of peace; like a glint of light on a mountain side, in a cloudy and dark day. It was a welcome contrast to the experience of the previous centuries. And it appeared probable that it might last. The mighty empire of Assyria was weakened by internal dissension; Babylon was becoming a formidable rival of Nineveh; the Medes, under Cyaxares, were beginning to descend the western slopes of the Taurus; whilst in Egypt Psammetichus was too deeply engaged in expelling the Assyrian garrisons, consolidating his kingdom, and founding his dynasty, to have leisure or desire to interfere with the tiny neighbouring kingdom.

Thus Josiah was able to pursue his reforms in peace, and there was no war-cloud on the horizon. It was on one of these days of Josiah the king (iii. 6) that the newly-appointed prophet startled the men of Jerusalem and Judah, as he made known what he had seen on his watch-tower.

He had heard the trumpet summoning the peasantry from the open country to the fenced cities, leaving their crops at the mercy of the invader, to save their lives. He had descried the lion stealing up from his lair in the thicket, to destroy the nations. He had caught the cries of the watchers from the northern heights of Dan to Ephraim, and so to Jerusalem, as they announced the advent of the invader. He had beheld the desolation of the land, the hurried retreat of the defenders of the holy city herself, some to thickets, and others to holes in the ragged rocks. Yes, and he had seen the daughter of Zion gasping in the extreme of her anguish, and crying, "Woe is me now!"

So real was the whole scene to him that we find him turning to his brother Benjamites, who had fled for shelter to the metropolis, bidding them flee still further south. He beholds the preparations for the siege, and the chagrin of her assailants that the evening shadows of declining day interpose between them and her inevitable capture. He describes the invader as a mighty and ancient nation, gleaning Israel as men gather the last grapes into their basket; cruel and merciless as evening wolves. Their quiver a sepulchre; their sword a terror; their charging cry hoarse and deafening as the roar of the sea; their chariots and cavalry irresistible. The mere report of their deeds would induce in each hearer, as it were, the pangs of travail (i. 15; iv. 6, 7, 16, 19; vi. 9, 19, 21). And the words of the young prophet were as fire to wood (v. 14).

It has been supposed that these words referred to the invasion of the Scythians, who about this time poured in countless hordes over Western Asia. The cities of Nineveh and Babylon alone, because of their great strength, escaped; the open country was swept utterly bare; all who could not escape were barbarously massacred or carried off as slaves; villages and towns were turned into charred and smoking ruins. But these barbarian hordes do not fulfil the entire scope of the prophet's words. They do not appear to have entered Palestine; but to have passed down on the eastern or western frontier, skirting the territory of Josiah, and driving the panic-stricken people to the shelter of the larger cities, whence they traced the path of the invader, lit by conflagrations kindled on their ruthless march. It is better therefore to refer these ominous words to the invasion of Judah by Babylon, which was to take place in thirty years, but of which the people were amply warned, that they might put away their abominations and return to the Fountain of Living Waters.

II.—HIS PLAINTIVE EXPRESSION OF PITY AND PAIN.

The tender heart of Jeremiah was filled with the utmost sorrow at the heavy tidings he was called to announce. Throughout the book we constantly encounter the expressions of his anguish. True patriot as he was, it was hard for him to contemplate the impending destruction of the Holy City. The noblest traditions of his people were represented in those cries, which for a little demand our consideration.

"The sword," he says, "reaches to the soul." And again, "My heart! my heart! I writhe in pain! the walls of my heart will break! my heart groans within me; I cannot keep it still" (iv. 19, free translation). He identifies himself with his land, and it seems as though the curtains of his own tents are being spoiled, as in a moment. He struggles against uttering his message of judgment till he can no longer contain himself, and becomes weary with holding in (vi. 11). He addresses Jerusalem as the daughter of his people, and bids her gird herself with sackcloth and sit in ashes, mourning as for an only son (vi. 23). He asks how he may comfort himself against sorrow, because his heart faints within him (viii. 18). He wishes that his head were waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears, that he might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of his people (ix. 1). He wanders alone over the mountains, weeping and wailing because the pasture lands are dry; whilst the lowing of the cattle and the song of the bird are hushed (ix. 10). "Woe is me!" he exclaims; "my wound is grievous."

He had no alternative than to announce the judgments which he saw upon their way; but there was a sob in the voice that predicted them. So far from desiring the evil day, very gladly would he have laid down his life to avert it. The chalice of his life was full of that spirit which led the Master in after years to weep as He beheld the guilty and doomed city. Thus, too, has many a great preacher of repentance, in all the centuries of Church history, known something of this bewailing. Side by side with vehement denunciations of coming judgment, there has been the pitiful yearning over lost men.

We need more of this. Nothing is so terrible as to utter God's threatenings against sin, which are predictions of its natural and inevitable outworking, with no sign of anguish or regret. If we are called to speak of judgment to come, it should be after hours of solitary prayer, weeping, and soul travail. It is only in proportion as we have felt for sinners, that we can warn them. It is only in so far as we have known the Saviour's pity, that we can dare to take up the woes He pronounced against Pharisee and Sadducee, or threaten the fate which He so clearly and awfully denounced.

Our mistake is in dealing with generals and not with particulars; or in using terms which have passed from hand to hand, until their inscription is worn away. We have not realised the loss of one soul; or the unutterable woe of hell for one apostate; or the meaning of the undying worm and the unquenched flame. And probably the best way of entering into the meaning of any of these terrible conceptions is to try and realise what they would mean for any one soul who was dear to us as life. Then from the one we might pass to the many; from the one lost soul we might understand the meaning of a lost world. Let us look at these things from the standpoint of the Saviour, or of a parent's love, or of the soul itself; and when such thoughts have saturated our hearts, as the dishonour done to God, the loss sustained by Christ, the anguish wrought into the texture of one disobedient life—we shall be able to speak to men of the judgment to come, with streaming tears, tremulous voice, and breaking heart. Such preaching will always be a convincing and irresistible argument to turn sinners from the error of their ways. Nothing is more awful than to speak of the great mysteries of life and death, of heaven and hell, of the right and left of the Throne, without that compassion of heart which is borrowed from close communion with the Saviour of the world.

III.—HIS ASSERTION OF REDEEMING GRACE.

Few of the sacred writers have had truer or deeper views of the love of God. It is to the earlier chapters of Jeremiah that backsliders must always turn for comfort and assurance of abundant pardon. The word back-slide is characteristic of this prophet.

To Jeremiah's thought, sin could not quench God's love. It may come in between man and wife, severing the marriage tie and leading the husband to divorce her whom he had taken to be his other self; but though our sin be more inveterate and repeated than woman ever perpetrated against man, or man against woman, it cannot cut off that love which is from everlasting to everlasting. The clouds may dim, but they cannot extinguish, the sun. Sin may hide the manifestation of the love of God, but can never make God abandon his love to us (Jer. iii. 1).

The love of God goes forth in forgiving mercy. He only asks that the people should acknowledge their iniquity, and confess to having perverted their way, and forgotten their God. It were enough that they should accept the terms of the confession which he himself suggested: "Behold we come unto Thee, for thou art the Lord our God"; and he assures them that though their sin and iniquity were sought for, there should be none (iv. 1, and v. 20).

The love of God does not deal with us after our sins. He gives showers immediately on repentance, He does not keep his anger for ever; He intervenes between us and trouble, as the soft sand between the homes of men and the yeasty foaming ocean; He waits to receive us back, saying, "If thou wilt return, O Israel, unto Me, thou shalt return." Ours the pleasant land; ours the goodly heritage; ours the rest for the souls—all of which we had forfeited, but all of which are restored to us when we return.

What true and delightful conceptions were vouchsafed to the young prophet of the love of God! Many similarities between his expressions and those of Deuteronomy suggest that it was his favourite book, as, if we may venture to say so, it was our Lord's; and perhaps it was from that ancient writing, then newly discovered, that he derived his inspiration. But, in any case, his living spirit had drunk deep draughts of the everlasting, forgiving, pitiful love of God, revealed and given to men in Jesus Christ our Lord. Oh, blessed love!—through which backsliding hearts may be admitted again to the inner circle, and have restored the years that the cankerworm has eaten.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION has twenty-seven missionaries set apart for the visitation of public-houses, of which there are 10,000 within the area covered by the Mission.

BRIGHTON.—The thirty-fourth anniversary of the Brighton Open-air Mission was observed on Sunday week, when special united services were held on the Esplanade. Workers associated in various denominations gave earnest addresses, and dwelt on what the Lord had done by means of this open-air testimony. The secretary of the mission is Mr. T. Thwaites, 47, Upper North-street, Brighton.

Christians in Conference.

COLWYN BAY.

This Convention was held from June 4 to 8. More than ever it has been a time of great blessing. The keynote of all the meetings was, "Death to self, and the indwelling of Christ." Some of the speakers, and of those who testified to their experience, emphasised the difference between death to sin and death to self. The morning meetings were set aside for prayer and testimony. The testimonies were very original, showing how differently God deals with different people. Two of the meetings were devoted almost entirely to the consideration of "How to discover God's will in matters of daily life and Christian service." On this subject there was some deep teaching. Great stress was laid on the practical side of holiness. It is not only an inward experience to be enjoyed, but a life to be lived in the sight of men.

Many will have cause to praise God for this Convention. The one aim of all was to exalt our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. T. L.

GLASGOW.

A most successful convention was held in the Queen's Rooms, Glasgow, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last week. Several of the best-known servants of God in Scotland took part, and the meetings were greatly blessed. Mr. J. E. Matheson acted as chairman throughout.

On Tuesday morning the chairman introduced the subject for the day, the inspiration of the Scriptures, in a brief but noteworthy address, in which he spoke of the unique unity and harmony which characterised every one of the sixty-six books of the Bible. Mr. Dunn followed with a fervid and earnest address on the first Epistle of John, for the purpose, he explained, of getting into a right attitude before God.

In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming delivered a model address on the prophecies in the Old Testament concerning our Lord, the absolute fulfilment of which could be traced through the New. Mr. Alex. Stewart spoke on Luke xxiii. and xxiv., and traced their connection with Isaiah liii. and liv. Mr. Long, of Glasgow, closed the meeting with an earnest address on the inspiration of the Scriptures, and reasons for placing implicit faith in it.

At the evening meeting, which was very largely attended, Dr. Bullinger spoke on 2 Timothy iii., and declared that now, as in the time the Epistle was written, their only resource was the inspired Word. Mr. Louis Lieschng dwelt upon the fulfilment of the prophecies of Daniel. Rev. W. L. Holland, Edinburgh, spoke on the writings of the great fathers of the first three centuries, and showed how implicit was their faith in the inspiration of the Word.

On the following morning Dr. Elder Cumming opened the Conference with an address which came like an inspiration to the large audience. He took as his text Rom. iii. 5, which recorded what he described as the most solemn passage written by St. Paul. The speaker followed the history of Israel step by step, showing most graphically their past, their present, and their future glory, which was reserved for them in spite of all their waywardness and perversity. They had two alternatives—either Israel must continue for ever before God, or God's word was no more to be believed. The future of Israel was guaranteed by God, and already "the fig tree" was blossoming. Had they ever known in the history of the Christian Church men more inspired by God with love and wisdom in dealing with the Jewish people than some of the prominent workers in our own day?

At the afternoon meeting Rev. W. L. Holland having spoken of the perfect government which Christ was coming to establish, Rev. James Smith gave an instructive address on some of the more prominent parallels in the Bible.

At the evening meeting Mr. Brandreth spoke on the restitution of all things. Dr. Bullinger's subject was, "The Seventy Weeks of Daniel's Vision." Mr. Matthews, of Glasgow, concluded the meeting by a brief description of Jewish work in Glasgow.

On Thursday afternoon a new feature was introduced into the Conference. An invitation was given by Mr. Brandreth to any who had any difficulties or doubts upon any of the subjects discussed, to write questions. Several questions were sent in, and were replied to on Thursday afternoon.

The meetings on Friday were specially devoted to the consideration of the Lord's speedy coming, and several earnest and inspiring address were delivered to very large audiences.

On Saturday afternoon and evening two meetings were held in the Hope Hall, Paisley. J. L.

STOKE NEWINGTON.

The eighth annual Holiness Convention was held at Wellington-road Hall, May 28 to June 3. Rev. Darlow Sarjeant presided.

Notwithstanding the roughness of the weather the attendance was very large, and the inquiry rooms were entered by hundreds. The chief speakers were Revs. F. Paynter, J. H. Hopkins, J. Brash, C. Musgrave Brown, E. Davidson, Professor Rendel Harris, Messrs. J. G. Govan and Reader Harris, Mrs. Rendel Harris, Mrs. Reader Harris, and Mrs. Amanda Smith.

Professor Rendel Harris alluded to the hunger epidemic which is spreading amongst the churches. If these meetings are to be worth anything, there must be definite dealing with God. What lack I yet? Where do I come short of the glory of God? We will desire no holiness made up of sentiment. A friend of mine says, "I am not going to think I am fully saved until I have ceased to be cross." We cannot be fully redeemed without enduring God's judgments on sin. When we sing, "Come, Holy Ghost," do we really mean it? Lord, open our eyes wider, and if our profession has gone beyond our life bring us back to reality.

Mr. Brash quoted Phil. ii. 5, R.V., "Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus," self-sacrifice. Have the churches ever grasped this law of the Kingdom? Perfect obedience is willing to work in the shade, unseen, unappreciated, not much fruit seen by others. We are to be brought into living union with Christ by faith. Rev. F. B. Meyer remarked, you must not seek an experience, but you must seek the Holy Spirit "whom God hath given to them that OBEY Him" (Acts v. 32). "We receive the promise of the Spirit through FAITH" (Gal. iii. 14). I was ready to leap when I first saw the meaning of these words. This verse does not mean that we need stay up all night, nor wait for an enthusiastic meeting to receive blessing. It may be received without emotion. There is an anointing and a filling stored in the Risen Christ. When a man by faith has received these, he will have a deep sense of God and others will know it.

Mr. Davidson alluded to the double promise (John xiv. 13, 14), and to the need-be for the exercise of faith: "I have asked and I believe." The idea of being a Christian and not being a saint never entered Paul's mind; I am sorry it has entered into the mind of so many since. "Now the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart, and a good conscience" (1 Tim. i. 5, R.V.). Is this to be the end of this Convention? "Love suffereth long and is kind," can bear injury without resentment, does not hastily condemn, nor sharply reprove, does not judge a brother who differs from us. "Love vaunteth not itself," no humility like the humility of love; love never pushes itself forward, but is always ready to do its duty.

Mr. Govan said it was not to be wondered at that there was so much blessing on the day of Pentecost. People came together not to hear Peter, not to hear grand words about what God had said, not to hear what one or another thinks, but to hear God . . . . He understands "all the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart." People may sing a good deal, may seem to love God with their lips, but it is at the heart He looks.

Rev. C. Musgrave Brown remarked that if we would enter the pathway to Pentecost, we must be willing to come down, to be nothing. Christ "made Himself of no reputation." "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Christ, were baptized into his death?" Have we been thus identified with Christ?

Dr. F. Montague Miller spoke from Mark iv. 35-40. How often as soon as Jesus is received into the ship the storm comes, the testing comes. How often after a man has been speaking of Christ's keeping power, his own faith is tested. Christ says to the yielded soul, "Let us pass over unto the other side"; I am with you through life's journey. There will be no sinking of the ship though the waters may boil outside; "how is it that you have no faith?" You knew as a FACT that I was here, did you want feeling? I am with you to give victory moment by moment, in service, in business life, in social life. Frances Anne Budge.

GUILDFORD.

There has been an extremely practical tone about the Guildford Convention this year. It was held last week in the tent, which has been removed to a new and convenient site near the London-road Station. Rev. F. Paynter presided throughout, his addresses being crisp, brief, and to the point.

At the Bible-reading on Tuesday morning, Rev. J. J. Luce cautioned against the danger of becoming "Convention-hardened saints." More and more he felt that, sooner or later, these conventions would end in failure unless those who came to sing and pray about the blessing received it. It was a solemn thing that Christians should thus come together, to ask for the power to live the overcoming life, and go away and live at the same low level. That thought, too, was well illustrated by Rev. Evan Hopkins on Friday evening, by the high and low-level line to the Crystal Palace both reaching the same destination, but the one leaving the steps to be climbed by a long and weary way, the other giving access without any such effort.

It is impossible from lack of space to take note of the addresses seriatim. Perhaps among the most telling of the addresses were two by Rev. S. A. Selwyn on "Gospel-hardened and Honorary Christians," that of Rev. C. G. Moore on "Christian Fellowship," and that of Rev. E. W. Moore on "The Sounding of the Jubilee Trumpet." It was one of the saddest sights (said Mr. Selwyn on Wednesday morning) to see a soul which had often heard and rejected the Gospel, and had become Gospel hardened; but there was such a thing as a "Gospel-hardened saint." He proceeded to show how it was possible to attend convention after convention, and yet the teaching bore no practical fruit. The quaintness of some of Mr. C. G. Moore's remarks enforced a smile, but he kept steadily to his subject, witnessing against the lack of Christian fellowship in the Church to-day. Mr. E. W. Moore's address upon "The Sounding of the Jubilee Trumpet" in the year of release was full of suggestive thought, moreover, the subject was a seasonable one, as he remarked that it is a year of jubilees.

On Friday evening Rev. C. A. Fox spoke from 2 Kings iv. 2, from the widow woman who had nothing in the house "save a pot of oil." Those who know Mr. Fox's style can imagine what such a subject was in his hands. Bishop Stuart took the Bible-reading on Friday morning. At all these readings Rev. W. Houghton presided. It was fitting that the meeting for consecration to the Master's service at home and abroad should be also led by Bishop Stewart, who has laid down honour and position to return to the Foreign Mission field.

THE MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

The usual three hours' missionary meeting was held on Saturday morning. Sir John Kennaway contrasted the present attitude towards the Foreign Mission field and that of 100 years ago, when people generally took no interest in the subject. Rev. F. L. Denman (London Jews Society) gave interesting details of his work in London. A stirring address was given by Rev. G. Ensor, who came to plead on behalf of the women of India. Mrs. Balf (Scinde, N. India) gave an inspiriting address. It made her sad, she said, to come to a convention and see so many Christians gathered together. She wanted to scatter them abroad amongst the heathen. Other speakers were Miss Whitchurch (China), Mrs. Spencer Walton (Gen. Cape Mission), Mr. Norrollah (working among the Jews in Persia), Rev. W. W. Cassels (C.I.M.), Dr. Churcher (Medical Missionary, N. Africa), and Mr. Lloyd (China). The closing address was given by Mr. Spencer Walton. The usual pleasant re-union and missionary meeting took place in the grounds at Stoke Hill in the afternoon. M. F. G.

THE LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOLS AND MISSION have been before the public for fifty years. The report gives particulars of Bible schools, mothers' meetings, Gospel services, and philanthropic effort. The scholars exceed six hundred in number, the larger proportion of them being boys. We read:—"Not a few responsible positions in the City are held to-day by men who have attended our schools in years past, and have thus laid the foundation of a life morally and financially prosperous. On Sundays we sometimes find it necessary, when the 300 seats of the hall are filled, to seat the surplus attendants in the room adjacent. The Tuesday meeting has an average attendance of 200. The open-air meetings on Clerkenwell Green are, as much as ever, a special feature of our mission." The work is evangelical and unsectarian. Communications regarding it may be addressed to the treasurer, Mr. H. L. N. Noel-Cox, 2, Edinburgh-mansions, Victoria-street, S.W.

The Y.M.C.A. Jubilee.

Taking up our record of the Jubilee proceedings at the point where it was dropped in our last issue, we may say, in a word, that the Bishop of Ripon's sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral on the Tuesday evening was an extremely eloquent one. From the text, "What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" (John vi. 28), he showed in glowing language that in its essence Christianity is a life spent among men for men. Service and sacrifice, in order to the regeneration of men, are the great watchwords of the true Christian life. The great cathedral was uncomfortably crowded, and the service was most impressive throughout.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6.

Wednesday was Jubilee Day, and after a praise meeting there was a public gathering in the morning in Exeter Hall. The Hon. John Wanamaker presided, and the addresses were largely in honour of Sir George Williams, for whose work through the Association God was fervently praised. In some opening remarks, the Chairman said that during the Conference he had been living the past over again. Henceforth there is no such thing as a stranger or a foreigner; their fellowship was with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. In consequence of the Conference, the Association would be marked "up" in the eyes of the entire world. No longer would Christian ministers regard it as antagonistic or indifferent to Church life and work.

Referring to missionary purpose, the speaker said: Men will give years of their lives without salary to serve their country as members of Parliament. Is there not a kind of patriotism for the Kingdom of Heaven, that calls upon those that have means and power to devote those talents to the service of God? We ought henceforth to be stronger, wiser, more consecrated than ever before. A piece of gold that goes through the Mint, and has the Queen's stamp impressed upon it, is for ever different from what it was before. So the men who had attended this Conference should be stronger and more zealous than previously—should be like a vast bundle of kindling wood, to set the world blazing with the love of Christ.

Canon McCormick, of Highbury, spoke in warm appreciation of the work of the Y.M.C.A. The Associations are creating and cementing friendship, binding the members together in the bonds of a holy love. This is a great service to the State, for those who are guided by Bible principles will be the best of citizens. In addition to doing its best to elevate society, the Association is moulding the character of its members for time and eternity, and endeavouring rightly to represent Christianity before the world. In conclusion, the Canon commended to notice the saying of Robert Moffat: "Have great faith in the power of God's Gospel."

Dr. J. Monro Gibson asked, Whence came the life which has been the secret of this wonderful growth—whence the force underlying it? Is it the conspicuous ability of the young men? No one of us would claim that, and certainly no one else would grant it. Is it through our leaders? The answer of those who have guided us is, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us; but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake." Search into the matter, and the result will be a demonstration of the presence and the power of Him in whose name our work is done; the power of the living Christ underlies the Association phenomena.

Dealing with religion in daily life, the speaker said: It is about time that we had done with the ungodly divorce of the secular from the sacred, that we had done with the superstition that God is to be acknowledged only in a part of our life, and disowned in all the rest. The day is coming when "upon the bells of the horses shall be 'holiness to the Lord.'" When that time arrives there will be an end of the cursed gambling on the turf. Let sin be sacrilege, as it is, and work and play devotion, and I will not say that the Kingdom of Heaven will be "at hand," but that it will be here. In conclusion, Dr. Gibson congratulated young men on being young to-day, when the opportunity to deal with evils and advance righteousness is so manifest.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, who was warmly received, followed with a cheery speech. He "lifted the curtain of memory" on thirty-seven years' acquaintance with the Y.M.C.A. and its founder. Addressing the departing half century, he asked for its testimony. One thing that had been learnt was that the only substantial Christian unity is in loving labour for the Lord Jesus Christ. Other lessons are:—We have one Master to serve, one Book to go by, and one purpose to pursue—even the bringing of young men to Christ. Moreover, the Association has only one source of power, the Holy Spirit of God. In conclusion, Dr. Cuyler gave the Association a motto for its second half century, "Union in Christ for a world that is without Christ."

Some hearty words followed by Mr. Morris Jessup, of New York, who had been investigating London slums during the previous day, and seen much to grieve him; and Mr. James Stokes, introduced as "once altogether from America, now partly from Paris," who had recently found much to interest in an examination of the work of the Young Women's Christian Association in Great Britain.

TRIBUTES TO THE PRESIDENT.

The afternoon of the Jubilee Day was allotted to the reception of various deputations of Y.M.C.A. Associations and leading religious societies, and the presentation by them of congratulatory messages to the president under the auspicious circumstances of the day. The chairman was Mr. Frank A. Bevan. A hearty ascription of praise in song to Jesus Christ was followed by earnest prayer from Lord Overtoun.

A long array of telegrams and messages from widely-scattered Associations was next read by Mr. Robert Burn. Toronto wired, "Go forward." Hazlewood, Isle of Wight, wished the Association "Many happy returns" and long life to the founder. Johannesberg, Transvaal, chimed in from afar, and Bombay followed suit with an appropriate text. The Springfield (Mass.) Training School sent 2 Pet. i. 2. Detroit Y.M.C.A. cabled, "God bless you and yours." Salutations and Christian wishes came from the sons of the Alps forming the Swiss-French Association. Stockholm sent a Scriptural benediction; Copenhagen did alike. Similar greetings in varied form came in turn from Lausanne, Hamburg, Berlin, Milan, Neuchatel, Bridgwater (the birthplace of Sir George Williams), Jersey, Burton-on-Trent, Antwerp, various parts of China, Christiania, and from the Young Women's Association of Norway.

Closely following each other, there next passed along the platform in person the representatives of many associations and religious bodies in London with which the President has been closely associated. First of all, Lord Kinnaird, on behalf of the English Association, read an illuminated address, couched in the warmest of warm words. The Scotch brethren followed; and then the Irishmen, who could not present a formal address, "by reason of the indisposition of the Irish Sea," as Mr. Black, of Belfast, wittily remarked. Australia and North America were succeeded by France, whose delegates left with Sir George a bronze statuette of King David as representing eternal youth; the City of Paris gave a bust of Admiral Coligny, who yielded his life for his country. The stream of gratulation flowed on. Herr Krummacher, with inexhaustible eloquence, told out the sentiments of Germany; and Count Von Moltke spoke for Denmark. Tokio, Japan, had a representative in Mr. Omura. A little group of ladies, headed by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird, appeared for the Young Women's Association, to which Sir George has ever been a kind friend. As the mouthpiece of the nearly two millions of Christian Endeavourers throughout the world, Dr. Cuyler uttered Christian salutations to the Y.M.C.A. and its president. Thereafter there passed along delegations from the C.M.S., the British and Foreign Bible Society, the R.T.S., the London City Mission, the China Inland Mission, the Commercial Travellers' Association, the Church of England Young Men's Society, Field-lane Refuges, the S.S. Union, the Ragged School Union, the Band of Hope Union, the National Temperance League, the Zenana Mission, the Glasgow Evangelistic Association, and last of all the London Bible Women's Association.

All these friends shook hands with Sir George, to whom the demonstration, though agreeable enough from one point of view, must have been somewhat trying and exhausting. In a few modest words at the close, Sir George disclaimed any idea of personal desert in connection with the work of the past half-century, and paid a most cordial tribute to all his Association fellow-workers. The memorable proceedings of the afternoon were brought to a close by earnest prayer from Hon. John Wanamaker.

THE ALBERT HALL ASSEMBLY.

This gathering in the evening of Jubilee Day placed a fitting crown on the more public part of the celebration. Probably the most splendid auditorium in the world never showed a more impressive and stirring sight. Every part of the building was crowded with an eager and deeply-interested throng of spectators. The long programme was carried through with complete success.

After a recital of sacred music on the great organ, there was a clever and well-executed gymnastic display by picked Y.M.C.A. men; the high jumping and vaulting were specially cheered. Then for half an hour there was a rare feast of song, provided by Mr. Carter's choir, the Swedish singers from Upsala, and last but not least Madame Antoinette Sterling, whose rich full voice went rolling in delightful cadence through the vast spaces of the building.

At eight o'clock Sir George Williams assumed the chair, and the mighty assemblage joined in singing the Hundredth Psalm. Then prayer was offered by Count Bernstorff in German, by Prof. Barde in French, and by Dr. Pentecost in English, the whole company joining in repeating the Lord's Prayer.

In an excellent little speech Lord Kinnaird presented to the President a marble bust of himself in the name of many Y.M.C.A. friends throughout England. The bust is a speaking likeness. When Sir George Williams rose to reply, he was greeted with immense enthusiasm, the feelings of the Conference finally finding vent in three ringing cheers. Sir George expressed his heartfelt gratitude for the many kind tokens of esteem of which he had been the recipient. They little thought when they began in a humble way fifty years ago that the work would have grown to such proportions. All these honours had come to him somewhat late in life, but he felt himself a young man yet, and he hoped to be spared for some further service on behalf of young men. This splendid Conference means that there is a great future for the Association. It must occupy countries as yet unpossessed. The young men of India, China, and Japan are waiting to be brought within its scope. How many mothers' hearts have sung for joy these fifty years when they knew that their sons had come under the influence of the Association and been led to the Saviour. The great work of the Y.M.C.A. is to save those whom the devil is seeking to destroy.

In very good expressive English, Prince Oscar of Sweden conveyed the hearty Christian greetings of his countrymen; and the Upsala singers seconded their Prince in a rousing musical rendering of the 92nd Psalm. Canon Fleming's speech, which followed, was a clear and admirable pronouncement. The Association, he said, has generated one of the great Christian forces of our time in the realm of doing good. It must have a great future before it, because it has a distinctive mission. It does not form a sect or a church, but unites all young men who hold Jesus Christ to be their Saviour according to the Scriptures, and it associates them in the work of saving others. This is a programme large enough for the ambition of any man. It takes the whole Bible for its creed; we cannot afford to lose any fragment of that Book. We need not be afraid of those who think they are born to set the Bible right. If it cannot stand a good shaking from these pigmy critics let it go. But it has stood, and will stand to the end. The Association has a life as well as a creed. All the fruits of all the sciences grow pale before this greatest of all sciences—the winning of souls to Christ. Heresies come, not from the active workers for Christ, but from the idlers. Nothing promotes Christian union like Christian work.

In the course of a clever and much-applauded little speech, Hon. John Wanamaker said that in all America there is only one titled man, Sir George Williams. This great British empire on which the sun never sets cannot own the whole of one little man. Some references to the action of the Queen led Mr. Wanamaker to utter warmly appreciative sentiments towards Her Gracious Majesty.

At this stage of the meeting Mdme. Sterling sang, with much feeling, the 23rd Psalm, and on being recalled for an encore gave the audience a little surprise by saying: "Dear friends, let us have but one Church, the Invisible Church; let us have but one country, God's country; let us have but one creed, to love God—our Father-Mother God, and our neighbours as ourselves."

The closing address by Dr. Joseph Parker was, like all that had preceded it, worthy of the great occasion. He predicted that when the centenary of the Y.M.C.A. arrived, the Bishop of London would preach in the City Temple, and the pastor of the City Temple would officiate in St. Paul's Cathedral. Nothing can hinder it, for the Son of Man is coming, and the heaven of God is descending. From some complimentary words suitable to the occasion, Dr. Parker entered upon a strong defence of the Evangelical conception of the Gospel. He had been preaching it for forty-two years, and he meant to preach it to the end of his days. There is nothing like it for intellectual compass, moral discipline, and spiritual unction. It is not a shallow, sentimental conception. There is enough in it to drown any intellect we may have. If all in this assembly were on fire for God it would move the world. If we would be true to our responsibilities and to our symbol, the Cross, the world would hear of us, and those who now spend days at Epsom would be ashamed to go. The time will come when the Prime Minister of England will be a living example to the young men of the country. Kings and rulers shall bow down before Christ, and all nations shall call Him blessed. It is true that this Association is not a sect, but I believe in being really convinced of, and intensely devoted to, some form of truth. Let us have a sense of personal responsibility, a personal love of prayer, and a personal record of service. The distance between Unitarianism and the Evangelical conception of Christ is the distance of infinity. An honest, honourable, sincere Unitarian is perfectly possible, but the man to be dreaded is the man who takes Evangelical money for preaching non-evangelical doctrine. To take "commission" from both sides in a transaction is wrong in commerce, but it is worse in Christian doctrine. I believe in God the Son. I am saved by his blood. I am not sufficiently refined to drop that great symbolical expression. I believe in the Holy Ghost—not a mere affluence, or influence, or afflatus, or windy sentiment which no man can comprehend or utilise, but in a living, energetic, sanctifying Holy Ghost.

After some references to the overflowing hospitality of America which he has experienced, Dr. Parker said that in entertaining our visitors on this occasion, we were only returning what we had received. At the close of his speech a large number of interesting lantern views, in illustration of the work and personnel of the Association, were thrown on the screen, and some further jubilant song brought a most remarkable meeting to a close.

THE VISIT TO WINDSOR.

It is now customary at such celebrations to give the opportunity to visitors to visit some place of historic interest. Windsor was chosen for this Jubilee gathering, and no better selection could have been made. Thursday dawned somewhat doubtfully from the atmospheric point of view, but before the delegates had quitted London the sun shone out, and the day was all that could be wished. Without a hitch of any sort, so far as we have heard, the party, numbering some 3000, were conveyed to Windsor, free of charge, by four special trains—two from Paddington and two from Waterloo—thanks to the generous kindness of Mr. John M. Cook, of tourist fame.

The arrangements that had been made by the Jubilee Council for the delectation of the visitors left nothing to be desired. Everything was looking its best, and the restful beauty of the scene was something to be remembered. Special facilities had been secured, so that the two earliest of the four sections were able at once to proceed by way of the Long Walk, through the rich green pastures and wooded enclosures of the Home Park, to the Frogmore Mausoleum, where reposes the dust of Albert the Good. The wealth of costly ornamentation divided the admiring interest of the visitors with the many splendid paintings, illustrative of Bible themes, and the central sarcophagus, with the recumbent effigy of the Prince Consort. Visits were afterwards made to the Model Farm, with its array of prize cattle; to the gardens, conservatories, and vineries; to the dairy cows, and the cool shades of the creamery; and later on to the well-known State apartments of the castle, and the Albert and St. George's Chapels. An ample luncheon was served about midday in a large marquee, erected in the Home Park. In the afternoon the party was photographed, in three sections, on the East-terrace; so that the visitors from afar may carry home with them a fitting memento of a delightful and profitable season of intercourse.

THE FAREWELL MEETING

was held at five o'clock under the shadow of the Castle walls, in front of the gate facing the Long Walk. As one friend remarked, it was perhaps as fair a scene as all Old England could afford. The only drawback to the happiness of those present was the absence of Sir George Williams, whose strength had given way under the tremendous strain of the Jubilee days, and who had been ordered to take complete rest. It was comforting to hear, however, that the indisposition was not regarded as serious, and that a few days' rest, it was hoped, would bring complete restoration.

At this good-bye gathering, Mr. HOWARD WILLIAMS presided. The company sang "All Hail the Power of Jesu's Name." Superintendent Krummacher prayed lengthily and earnestly in German, while Dr. Newman Hall continued the supplication and thanksgiving in English. Prebendary Webb-Peploe proposed a telegram of thanks to Her Majesty; this was warmly seconded by Count Bernstorff, and carried by universal acclaim; with lusty cheers for the Royal lady, and the singing, of course, of the National Anthem.

A parting message from the Swedish Prince having been read, our kinsmen from across the Atlantic once more found an able mouthpiece in Mr. Wanamaker, who lauded the Queen, praised Sir George Williams, and declared that for him the word "foreigner" would in future have no existence. Mr. Thane Miller, the blind singer, from Cincinnati, added some heartfelt words, and Mr. Howard Williams thanked the company on his father's behalf.

A short and impressive exhortation to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and to consecrate the coming days by faithful, humble service for the Master, came from Mr. Webb-Peploe. Then "the old man eloquent" from Brooklyn, Dr. Cuyler, gave the closing words of all:—"What a glorious love-feast we have had. It has been a foretaste of the New Jerusalem, in which more kindreds, and peoples, and tongues than have met on this occasion will join in the song of 'Hallelujah to the Lamb.' The memory of this Conference will warm the longest and coldest winter that Scandinavia ever saw. The story of it will be told out beyond the Rocky Mountains of the West, and in the far-away homes of Christianised New Zealand. We have seen great things, have we not? We have seen London open her Guildhall to humble, earnest, consecrated devotion to Christ. Oh that our friend Sir George were with us to-day. Notes have been struck in this Conference that will echo in heaven. And now, as we separate, we look each other in the face again, and feel each other's heart beat for the last time, under the walls of Britain's old Royal homestead, where dwells (and long may she dwell there) that noble, pure, loving, gracious lady, who is Queen of Hearts even amongst American Republicans. I do not dare to let my heart out here. I am going to have a good cry over it. I have kept back the tears a good while. By-and-by, under the walls of a nobler, grander, wider palace than this, the Palace of the King of kings, we will meet and clasp hands and join hearts, and sing the endless song of 'Hallelujah to the Lamb.' Home to our work, for a little while longer, for Jesus and the Y.M.C.A.—for the great work of saving this world for God; then home, home to rest eternal, for ever and for evermore." The venerable Doctor pronounced the Benediction, the Doxology was sung, and the Jubilee Conference was ended.

We cannot close our report without expressing in the most unreserved way our appreciation of the splendid way in which the Jubilee Council, with its executive officer, Mr. J. H. Putterill, aided by many able helpers, organised and carried through the engagements of the Conference. The arrangements at Exeter Hall for the convenience of visitors, and the generous hospitality shown by the Council and other friends in the purveying of refreshments on such a gigantic scale, were the admiration of all alike. We are sure too that those in private families who acted as hosts to the strangers within our gates got for themselves a rich blessing through happy Christian fellowship with those sojourning in their homes.

THE usual British Secretaries' Conference is being held this week at Shaftesbury House, Margate.

GRACE.—Although we shall bless and praise God through eternity, we shall only thereby acknowledge the debt we owe, but not pay an atom of it.—Romaine.

THE HOUSE OF REST.

MISS MASON'S friends rallied round her well on Friday afternoon, when the twenty-eighth anniversary of the House of Rest was observed.

Mr. JOHN CORY, who presided, dwelt on the importance of such ministry as this, on behalf of those who have given strength and life to the service of Christ. He was thankful that here these might find not merely rest of body but also refreshment of soul, whereby they might return to duty revived and reinvigorated in spirit. During the past year no fewer than 871 had enjoyed the blessings of the House of Rest. The new outgrowth, the Aged Workers' Home, must peculiarly commend itself to all who know how difficult living sometimes becomes, in advanced years, for those who have toiled long and well in the Lord's work.

Miss MASON reviewed, in her own pleasant and informal way, the work and experiences of the year, one of special difficulty in Christian service. Still, the work has been kept going, 871 have passed through the two Houses, and have gone back to their respective fields of labour, strengthened and refreshed. Some might ask why there should be meetings of various kinds at the House of Rest. The answer is that true rest is not torpor; that as food was needful for the body, so spiritual food is necessary for the soul; and the testimony of all is that the fresh power and blessing gained in the House of Rest had sent them back to work with new heart and energy.

As to the Aged Workers' Home, Miss Mason reminded her friends that while last year this new Home was almost a waste of emptiness, it is now fairly furnished, and has eight inmates, whose life stories are thus summarised in the report:—

Miss C., age sixty-nine, for many years engaged in home Missionary work, and for nearly twelve years in midnight and rescue work. Miss D., age seventy-three, for thirty years engaged as Bible-woman and other mission work. Miss B., age sixty-eight, Bible-woman for thirty years in one district. Miss F., age sixty-five, many years Bible-woman, but has been unable to work for the last eight years, and had attempted to maintain herself by needle-work and teaching a few small children. Mrs. R., age sixty-seven, for twenty years engaged in rescue and other mission work, has been incapacitated for work for some years. Miss S. B., age sixty-two, for thirty-five years engaged as Bible-woman in London and provinces, suffers much from rheumatism, and is quite unable to work. Mrs. F., age seventy-nine, engaged in evangelistic and other mission work for a long series of years. Miss G., age sixty-four, for more than forty years has worked in various parts of London and the provinces as Bible-woman and visitor among the sick poor.

This Aged Workers' Home gives a comfortably furnished room to the labourer over sixty years of age, rent free, with firing, where she may spend her last days on earth in peace and quietness; and at the same time remain within reach of spiritual privileges.

The general expenses of the year on the whole work shows a deficit of £73; but the present special need is in connection with the expenditure on the new Home. About £300 is wanted to clear off everything; conditional promises have been received amounting to £150, and efforts are being made to raise the remainder.

Rev. F. B. MEYER very heartily supported the claims of the House of Rest on the sympathy and support of all. Lady HOPE dwelt on Service and Rest, showing that efficiency in the one depended to some extent on the reality of the other. Mr. T. A. DENNY added a few vigorous sentences, after which Miss WESTON, in her own generous and genial fashion, presented the claims of the Home on all who love the Lord and love his workers. Revs. S. L. DIXON and HENRY SHARPE having spoken briefly, the proceedings were brought to a conclusion.

CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE AND SAILORS.—The monthly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights connected with the Seamen's Christian Friend Society was held at the Institute, 215, St. George-street, E., on Thursday evening, Mr. Lampard presiding. Addresses were given by the chairman and others, and in the course of his remarks, Rev. G. J. Hill detailed the work carried on by the mission in London and other stations, telling how sailors had been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and led to accept the Saviour. He also read extracts of letters lately received from sailors converted years ago, who still remain stedfast, and are true members of the body, letting their light so shine as to be a credit to themselves and an example to others. Amongst the most interesting cases of recent conversion was that of a Roman Catholic sailor, who, dealt with by the Divine Spirit, through the society's missionary at Fowey, had been led to trust in Jesus only. A number of testimonies were given by sailors who had been rescued from the world.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 17.—JEREMIAH XLIV.

The Sins of the Jews in Egypt (1-14).—These cities are named in geographical order. Migdol was near the Red Sea; Noph, i.e., Memphis, now Cairo, (2) So inveterate was their love of idolatry that they burnt incense to the gods of Egypt, and Jeremiah was sent to remonstrate with them, and to say that if such sins had caused the ruin of their country, still more certainly would they secure the destruction of the remnant that had fled to Egypt. (4) How tenderly God pleads! Often we may hear his gentle voice, saying when we are on the brink of some sin, "Oh! do not this abominable thing that I hate!" (7) Sin is suicide. It is a great evil committed against ourselves. (12-14) The Jews that had fled to Egypt imagined that it would be easier for them to return to their own land than for those that were exiled to Babylon. The contrary would take place.

Jeremiah's Remonstrances against the Women (13-23).—The votaries of gross superstition will misinterpret the clearest providences. In fact they are blind, or they see all things crooked. To judge from these women's words it would seem as if their land had enjoyed one long summer of prosperity unbroken by judgment. It was convenient to forget the repeated judgments which God had inflicted upon them. Nothing could be further from the truth than to say they were well and feared no evil as long as they burnt incense to Astarte. All their troubles had arisen from that source, as Jeremiah said. We form superficial judgments.

Prediction of Coming Disaster (24-30).—They protested their loyalty to the vows they had made to false deities. God said that He too would be loyal to his word. He had sworn by his Great Name. He would watch against them for evil. He would vindicate his name. So Herodotus tells us that Hophra was dethroned by Amasis, by whom he was strangled. The remnant of the Jews were harried as a flock of sheep by savage dogs, and few returned to Judea. God's word always stands. It cannot pass away. Its promises and threatenings are sure.

MONDAY, JUNE 18.—JEREMIAH XLV.

Consolation of Baruch (1-5).—These words to Baruch were spoken eighteen years before the taking of Jerusalem, so that this chapter follows chapter xxxvi. For many years Baruch acted as the prophet's amanuensis. (3) Baruch appears to have been timid and fearful for his life, because of the suspicion he had incurred from his countrymen. To the pain of seeing his country filled with idolatry, and devastated by the conqueror, he had the additional sorrow of being hated by his fellow-citizens. The weariness of his heart made him pine to fly away and be at rest. It is wonderful how these two weak men stood together against the nation! (5) Baruch seems to have had a high ideal of what life should bring to him. His expectations had been raised as he stood at the entrance of the path. He had thought that he would play some glorious part in the history of his people, and therefore his disappointment was greater. It is better to let God lead us into great things than to seek them. It is best to do little things from great motives. This will make a great life. Baruch's experience of bitter trouble was balanced by the sense of security. His life was promised him. So amid the sorrows of life we may rest upon the assurance that we can never perish. Sooner or later, the darkest lane must lead into the light of life. You who find no rest, hear the voice of Christ saying, "Come unto Me." Rest is his gift.

TUESDAY, JUNE 19.—JEREMIAH XLVI.

This chapter contains two distinct prophecies. The one announces the defeat of the Egyptian army by Nebuchadnezzar. The other, delivered long afterwards, foretells the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Babylon.

The Defeat of Egypt (1-12).—This prophecy was uttered when Pharaoh was going against Carchemish on the Euphrates, and met Josiah at Megiddo (2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 20). Four years after Nebuchadnezzar defeated him in a terrible battle, which is described in these verses. (3, 4) A call to the battle. (5) The astonished spectator witnesses the rout of the army. (6) The Chaldean leaders gave orders that there should be no sufferance. (7, 8) The Egyptian host is compared to their own Nile, overflowing its bed. (9) These are names of tributary nations in Upper Egypt. (10) The ground is soaked with blood, and covered with victims, as the site of an altar. (11) Egypt was virgin, that is, never before subdued, but no medicine would avail to heal its awful wound. So all that set themselves against the Rider upon the white horse must perish (Rev. xix. 11-18).

The Invasion of Egypt (13-28).—Sixteen years after the fall of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar invaded Egypt. (14) These cities were known well to the Jews (chap. xliv. 1). The surrounding countries were desolate, and now the time had come when Babylon and Egypt should meet to decide the empire of the world. (15) This is thought to refer to the idols, especially the bull-shaped. When God goes forth against man, he is swept away; he cannot stand. (16) Then the tributary nations resolve to make for their own territories. Your greatest helpers and enemies shall one day be but a noise that passes and is forgotten. (18) Nebuchadnezzar would be as superior to Egypt as Tabor and Carmel among hills. The Egyptians are here addressed, and bidden to gather their victuals preparatory to the long march of exile. (20-21) Luxury and fulness of bread had so enervated the Egyptians and their allies that they would become like heifers and bullocks going to the slaughter.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20.—JEREMIAH XLVII.

The Prophecy against the Philistines (1-7)—After defeating Josiah at Megiddo, Pharaoh Necho may have smitten Gaza; or Pharaoh Hophra (xxxvi. 5-7), returning from his fruitless attempt to save Jerusalem from the Chaldeans, may have smitten it. In either case this prophecy was delivered previously. (2) The smiting of Gaza would be followed by a more sweeping destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, described as descending from the north. (3) In that awful onset, parents would forget the natural ties of affection to their children. (4) Their allies at Tyre would be involved in a similar catastrophe. The Philistines came from Caphtor originally (Deut. ii. 23, Amos. ix. 7). Some say that Caphtor was Crete. (5) Baldness was the sign of intense sorrow, cutting was the heathenish symbol of excessive grief. (6) The sword of the Lord cannot rest until it has completed its mission of vengeance, and is there not a sense in which the sword of Divine justice could not be quiet, until our Saviour permitted it to sheath itself in his body on the tree. If you are not sheltering there, be sure that nothing else will avail. In this life and the next there will be a controversy between you and the wrath of a Holy God, which will involve the disquiet and anguish of hell itself.

THURSDAY, JUNE 21.—JEREMIAH XLVIII.

These prophecies against Moab should be compared with the previous ones by Isaiah, with which they have much in common. (Isa. xv., xvi., xxiv.). They were fulfilled by Nebuchadnezzar five years after the fall of Jerusalem.

Threatenings of Judgment (1-13).—Nebo, a mountain and town. Misgab, an elevation. High as these fortresses were, they would not avail against the invader. (2) Heshbon was the chief city, the foe having taken it; it plots there evil against the rest of the land. The word means "plotting." (5) Horonaim lay in the plain, and Luhith in the heights. They would be alike filled with the cry of the fugitive Moabites. (7) Chemosh (Num. xxi. 29, 2 Kings xxiv. 13). (9) Nothing but wings could deliver the people from their terrible adversaries. (10) Sent to do God's work, the Chaldeans must do it thoroughly. (11) An emblem borrowed from the vineyards for which Moab was renowned. When wine is left to settle it retains unimpaired its flavour, so when there are no changes in men's lives they become proud. (12) Wanderers, i.e., "pourers-out" (see R.V.). How often God pours us from vessel to vessel.

The Desolation of Moab (14-34).—Let us notice the pathos and the beauty of this elegy. (16) When calamity comes, and affliction hastes fast, we are tempted to bemoan our punishment, but not to mourn for sin. (17) The rod was a symbol of empire. It was snapped. (18) Dibon was famed for its water courses, it would sit in a parched land. (19) The land had been populous, but now city after city would be desolate. (26, 27) As Moab had derided Israel, so he should be derided. (28) What a tender suggestion for us all. There is a rock in which the dove may make her nest. (29-30) Six times Moab's pride is mentioned, this is man's greatest fault, but it comes to naught. (31-32) The tender heart of the prophet is rent with the woes he predicts. The catastrophe that overcame Jazer would be exceeded by that which would overtake Sibmah, for its children were to be carried across the sea. (33-34) There would be a cry, yet not that of the vineyard, only of the fugitive and the pursuing foe.

The Anguish of Moab (35—47). In the sorrow of the prophet is reflected the terror of Moab's fate. (38) A broken vessel, which even the potter casts aside. (40) Nebuchadnezzar is the eagle. (43) When one evil was avoided, others should wait to complete the work of destruction. (45) "They that fled stand without strength under the shadow of Heshbon." They thought they would be safe there. Ah! vain hope! The fire goes forth thence. (47) A gleam of hope! Like sunset hue after a stormy day, God will bring again! However heavy the trouble that sin has procured, there is always a bringing again! Let the Shepherd bring thee Home.

FRIDAY, JUNE 22.—JEREMIAH XLIX.

Ammon (1-6).—When Israel was carried away captive, Ammon had seized on the deserted territory of Gad. But Judah was the proper heir. (2) Rabbah was their principal city. Malcham, their idol, who is said to have done what they did. The daughters would be smaller towns scattered throughout the land. The R.V. is clearer: "Then shall Israel possess them that possessed him." (3) Nebuchadnezzar destroyed first Ammon, then Moab; the latter is summoned to weep as it sees the tide of invasion sweeping over its neighbour. (4) "Thy valley shall flow"—i.e., with the blood of the slain.

Edom (7-22).—There is great similarity between this and Obadiah's prophecy. But that was probably fulfilled earlier by Sennacherib. This was to be fulfilled by Nebuchadnezzar. The same expressions have a further reference given them. Teman was celebrated for its wisdom (Job. ii. 11). (8) "Deep" in caverns, or in the deserts. It is a suggestive command. We need to dwell deep in the love of God. Hidden ones. The calamity may sweep over, but it cannot touch us there. (11) The fatherless and widow, bereft of their natural protector, shall find refuge and help in God, if only they will claim it. (12) If the Jews had to drink the cup of judgment, surely aliens could not hope to escape it. (14) Obad 1-3.—It is as though God were arousing the Chaldeans in the work of invasion and destruction. (16) Pella, the capital city, was hewn out of the rocks, amid which it was perched like an eagle's eyrie. (17) The land is now an utter desolation.

Damascus (23-27).—The kingdom, as Isaiah predicted, had been destroyed; but the city had revived, to be overthrown, as we are told here, by Nebuchadnezzar. The sorrow that swept over the land was like the restlessness of the sea, that cannot be quiet. Those places in which so much evil had been meditated against Israel, should become desolate. Benhadad was the common name of Syrian kings (2 Kings xiii. 7).

Kedar (28-33).—These were wandering desert tribes; their property consisted largely in camels and cattle. They dwelt in tents, and therefore had no gates or bars. (31) This is the summons to the invader. To dwell alone indicates the separateness and isolation of their national existence. Men may dwell at ease, but be near impending calamity and judgment.

Elam (34-39).—Persia is intended, famed for its bowmen. It was invaded by Nebuchadnezzar, but became restored through Cyrus. God is ever setting up his throne on earth, and judging the nations.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23.—JEREMIAH L.

This prophecy of the fall of Babylon must have given no small comfort to the exiled Jews.

The Return of the Jews (1-5).—Around the erected standard were gathered the nations to war. Babylon had in turn oppressed them all. The Medes came from N.E., and the prediction of the desolation of the land was so utterly realised that for centuries all trace of the great city was lost. (4) A partial fulfilment of these words was given in the return under Ezra, which included many Israelites, but surely there is a complete realisation yet to come (Ezra iii. 12; Hos. iii. 5; Zech. xii. 10). (5) We may well imitate the returning remnant in their resolve that the covenant with God should be an everlasting one. Oh for more constancy in our adhesion to our Saviour! Yet it can only be wrought by his keeping us near his side.

The Overthrow of Babylon (6-20).—How many souls still forget their resting-place, and wander afield. (7) Israel's adversaries excused themselves as being the agents of divine vengeance, but their wanton cruelty was now to be recompensed. (8) This is a summons to Judah to leave the land of their exile. (11) As an overfed animal waxes wanton and unmanageable, so Babylon, by a long course of prosperity, had become luxurious and corrupt. (20) When God forgives He blots out the memory of our sin. It is as though it had never been. Though our great adversary should endeavour to cast it against us, it will be impossible for him to succeed.

The Medes (21-32).—How strong and terrible are these words. It is as if the sufferings of the Hebrew people found relief in anticipating the awful doom of their greatest foe. (22) The sound of battle fills the land. (24) The city is taken, not by assault, but craft. (25) The opened armoury of God ransacked to find weapons. (26) The utter destruction of the mighty city. (28) The story of her fall borne far and near. (30) The doom of pride.

The Counsel of Jehovah (33-46).—Though sin may hold its victims with a strong hand, the Redeemer is stronger far. He will plead their cause. (36) The sword and drought pass across the land and leave it desert, and they are followed by an incursion of wild beasts. (41) How graphic this description of the awful roar of the charge of Cyrus and his hosts on the enervated people of Babylon, who should go down before them as often as the smaller nations had done before themselves. (45) This was one of the greatest episodes in the history of the old world, and excited wonder and alarm wherever the tidings came. Let us rejoice that we have received a kingdom that cannot be moved, and that our home is where no crash of falling empire can reach.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JUNE 24.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Deut. xxxii. 9.

A PERIOD of about 250 years is covered by this series of lessons. With the exception of the first lesson, the whole series is occupied with the history of Joseph and the earlier incidents of the life of Moses. Both these persons occupy a prominent place in the story which Stephen told before the Sanhedrim (Acts vii.). The lessons suggested by the series may gather around these two.

With the incidents of Joseph's life all our scholars are familiar. At seventeen he appears as a youth whose godliness found expression in his obedience to his father, and his witness against the sins of his brothers. This early piety, in spite of the foolish indulgence of Jacob, and the cruel opposition of his brethren, had much to do with the strength of character he afterwards displayed.

The next lesson (III.) shows how godliness in all ages exposes to persecution. Wrong appears to be successful, but no incident can be rightly judged alone. After results must be taken into account. In the light of what followed, who would not rather be wronged with Joseph, than do the wrong with his brethren?

The Golden Text of Lesson IV. is well illustrated by the fact it narrates. What the brethren meant for evil has been overruled for good; and Joseph, who in time of difficulty honoured God, is now honoured by Him. The text will be equally true of those who honour Him to-day.

In the next two lessons (V. and VI.) Joseph's piety finds expression in the spirit of forgiving love he shows towards his brethren; and, especially in his command concerning his bones, his true sympathy with his descendants, and his confident expectation of the fulfilment of the Divine Word.

Don't overlook all the beautiful teaching of his life. Can any other faith be suggested which could make his life more worthy, or his death more peaceful? Be imitators of his faith if you would imitate his conduct.

Moses is prominent in the remaining lessons. The incidents surrounding his birth remarkably resemble those of Jesus, whom he foreshadowed. Note how, while the oppression was getting more bitter and cruel, God was preparing a deliverer.

Nothing is more instructive than the manner in which God trained and fitted his servant. First, in the home of his mother; then as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, he was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; then, to humble him, his forty years in the home of Jethro; and lastly, the revelation of God to him at the Bush. Two things must be learned by every worker—first, "without Me ye can do nothing," and secondly, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." The first Moses learned by forty years in lowliness, the second he learned at the Bush.

Among the many lessons to be learned, those suggested by some of the persons we have met must not be overlooked. In Joseph's brethren, see the bitterness of sin, as seen in the accusations of a guilty conscience years after the sin was committed. In Pharaoh we have an instance of how means calculated to convict and soften, when resisted, tend only to harden; and how surely those who harden themselves against God are defeated. In the Israelites we see that God does not forget his promises, and is better to his people than they fear; and how prone human nature is to yield to the spirit of murmuring and unbelief.

The Gospel, as seen first in the history of Joseph, then in that of Moses, and especially in the Passover Lamb, should not be overlooked. The Scriptures we have searched testify of Jesus; let us not be of those who, though they search the Scriptures, which testify of Him, yet will not come to Him (John v. 39, 40).

IRISH VILLAGES.—A lady correspondent writes drawing attention to the great spiritual destitution of some villages in Ireland, naming specifically one place about twenty miles from Belfast. She is anxious that some worker should settle in that neighbourhood. Further information from Miss Andrews, care of Miss Dawson, Marathon, Bangor, co. Down.

THE FUND FOR AGED, DESTITUTE, AND INVALID GOVERNESSES, founded in 1887, has thirteen annuitants, receiving amounts ranging from £10 to £26 each. The workers are all voluntary, and help is only given to cases of real need and known worth. Several of the annuitants have been teaching for nearly fifty years, one of them for a longer period. Friends are wanted in all parts of the country to promote the objects of the Fund. The hon. head secretary is Miss Duckett, "Elwyn," 11, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, N.W.

For the Young.

"BABES IN THE WOOD!"

WHEN my babes come to the wood they are like "Alice in Wonderland." Poor little bairns! What a new world it unfolds to them! Their wondering eyes sparkle with joy as they contrast for the first time the giant oaks of the forest, the shady woodland walks, and the cool green grassy carpet beneath their feet, with their City playground, the asphalte yard of the Board school, or the more common one of the gutter and flagstone, and, more often than not, the courtyard of the public-house, which familiarises them with many an awful scene and drunken brawl.

For another year the Forest Cottage Home has been opened to the poor sickly and starving children of London, and many have spent a happy time within its doors, gaining fresh health and strength, and learning precious lessons impossible to learn amid the evil surroundings of their daily life. You will be glad to know that 169 children have spent from a fortnight to six weeks in the Home, and all have returned greatly benefited in many ways. One dear little girl left this earthly home for the presence of her Saviour. Dear little Nellie came to us very ill, and we hoped, with loving care, she would recover as many others had done. From the first the doctor told us her case was critical, that she had been long neglected. We had not the heart to send her back to her sad one-roomed motherless home, where she had dragged out the five years of her little life. So she was nursed with loving care till she passed away, longing to go to Jesus, and dear mother whom she fondly remembered.

Some very sad cases have passed through the Home since last April, but the matron, Miss Walter, met them all in a spirit of earnest devotion, and for Christ's sake expended upon them every care, trying to bring them back to a state of health, at the same time seeking to lead them into the fold of Christ. "You would find it very hard to love Jesus if you lived where I do," said one poor young girl, evidently not long for this world. With drunken parents, and handicapped as she was with a dreadful affliction, surrounded with dirt and misery, and often starving, one might find it hard to believe in any good.

But often again we are greatly cheered when we see the children daily growing brighter and happier, and bounding about with glad smiles and rosy cheeks, rejoicing in their novel and healthful surroundings. In the autumn of the past year we were obliged to change our quarters, and the removal has in every way been good. The house, though small, is more comfortable, and more adapted for the wants of the children. It is pleasantly situated quite close to the forest, and the children have only to open the garden gate and they are on the grass, and a few steps will bring them beneath the forest trees. Then a short beautiful walk and they are within Wanstead Park, where the air is most invigorating, and all the surroundings are beautiful alike in summer's leafy reign or winter's hoary frost.

Since last April not a few children have come to the Home direct from hospitals, and the change to fresh air, with good food, and every necessary attention has soon restored them to buoyant health. One poor girl while crossing the crowded London streets had been knocked down by a cart, its wheels passing over her legs. She was taken to an hospital, and after spending some time there she came to us. The poor child had a fearful gash in one leg, and the other dreadfully swollen. But four weeks of kind care in our Forest Cottage Home made the little one quite well, and she returned home a new creature. Accidents of this kind are not unfrequent, but by God's blessing not one child has failed to recover, and the Forest air has worked wonders for them.

The children who come to the Home are very poor, many of them so badly clad that both clothes and boots have to be given to them that they may come tidy, and their own garments taken from them and burnt. If such is the state of the children, it is not hard to guess what their homes must be. In most cases it is one room, where father, mother, and several children eat—just what they can pick up; sleep—huddled together, sometimes six in a sort of bed; and live—anyhow, as best they can. No wonder these poor children think our cottage a paradise, and want to live there always; and no wonder they cry over their spring cots at parting, as if they were leaving a dear old friend. You would hardly understand a child not knowing what her cosy, spring, white-quilted cot was, but it is true; or being half afraid to get between the clean white sheets; and asking with wonder "however" they got them to look like that. When this child was asked where they slept at home, she answered, "We sleep on the floor; five of us together."

"I am quite sure I could not have gone on any longer if I had not seen you," said a poor young girl who had spent a sunny fortnight of never-forgotten bliss at the Home. "It is so hard, and I get so tired of it all, and now my sister has fallen down stairs and hurt her spine, and mother always ill in bed, and father often out of work, I hardly know what to do, and sometimes think I must give up."

Poor child! often worn out with continual nursing, and wanting bread, no leisure for rest, no time for prayer; is it a wonder that such a burden should seem too heavy for a girl of thirteen years? It is, indeed, a privilege to take such poor, distressed girls away from all their cares, and give them a fortnight of real, happy girl life. Think what a relief it must be to leave the continual drudgery and dirt, the foul air, and hideous sights all behind, and just revel in home comforts, bright sunshine, shady trees, lovely flowers, plenty of time for play, and to learn to be a girl again.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES IN IRELAND.

Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, of Trinity College, Cambridge, accompanied by a dozen university men from Oxford and Cambridge, will, D.V., be holding special services for children and young people at Portrush and Portstewart (N. Ireland) during July. The services will be held daily on the beach, and in addition to meetings for adults in the towns the workers hope to have a series of open air meetings in the villages and hamlets of the neighbourhood.

Special prayer is asked for blessing on this work, especially in the extension of the Scripture Union.

THE CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Baldock, June 16 to 18; Andover and neighbourhood, June 24 to 28; Stockwell Orphanage, July 1 (3); Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Netley, June 15; Maresfield, 16th-Horsham, 17th; Littlehampton, 20th; Walberton, 21st; Felpham, 22nd; Bognor, 23rd; Patcham, 24th; Petworth, 25th; Pulborough, 26th.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., June 17, Acts xix. 1-12; Mon., 18, xix. 13-27; Tues., 19, xix 28-41; Wed., 20, xx. 1-12; Thurs., 21, xx. 13-24; Fri., 22, xx. 25-38; Sat., 23, xxi. 1-14.

"HEARTS AND HOMES."

"HEARTS and Homes" is the cheery designation of a useful village gathering held at Lee, S.E. Miss Margaret Snowdon, superintendent of the Home for Christian Lady Workers, "Snowdonia," conceived an advance upon the popular mothers' meetings, and invited husbands as well as wives to her house. "What a good idea!" was the mothers' response; "my husband and I will be glad to attend, and we would rather come together." Sometimes a mother will have two boys with her; in other cases the husband comes one evening and the wife the next.

Describing the work, Miss Snowdon writes:—"The majority are, I am sorry to say, as yet, those who come 'singly,' from the reason that 'husband drinks, pray for him;' or 'wife is the trouble, come and talk to her.' This meeting in due time will be most profitable as far as it reacts on the home. For the aim is to elevate in piety and virtue our artisans' homes. Men and women meet as persons of another rank meet in their drawing-rooms, to be encouraged in their home responsibilities. Young people help in the singing."

"Snowdonia" is the centre of other agencies, educational and evangelistic. Ladies of culture desirous of undertaking village work should communicate with Miss Snowdon, and benefit by her valuable experience.

SCOTTISH WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.—This Union has been quickened into more active life through the efforts of its energetic secretary, Rev. J. W. Paterson. Meetings are held monthly for prayer and consultation, and many new members have been and are weekly enrolled. Those who desire to join may communicate with the secretary, Rev. J. W. Paterson, 11, Braid-crescent, Edinburgh.

THE GOSPEL AT EPSOM.

THE OPEN AIR AND LONDON CITY MISSIONS.

A worker in connection with the London City Mission writes:—

With more energy than ever, this work has been carried on during the past week, under the auspices of Miss A. E. Alexander, making her thirty-sixth year of continuous effort in this the great race week at Epsom.

On Saturday evening the work began, and on Sunday some eight or nine friends were earnestly at work. Monday brought an added number of workers, and the gipsies, etc., were visited, closing the afternoon with a gipsy tea, on the Mission premises, to about 160. It was felt to be a season of power and blessing. Tuesday brought more workers. A great disappointment was that Mr. Frank Cockrem, the secretary of the O.A.M., could not join us, being laid aside by illness. After prayer in Mission Hall, about twenty of the brethren were engaged throughout the day at the railway station, and in all the avenues leading to the course, in tract distribution, and personal intercourse as opportunity served; while some twenty-five members of the choir took their way to the course.

On Derby Day the work of attracting and keeping attention increased in difficulty, but never through the long morning did the excellent singing of the choir fail to attract the crowds, and thousands heard the Word of God. The afternoon turned too wet for any open-air work to be done; so at six an informal meeting was held, and praise and prayer and testimony. Then followed what will make the Derby night of 1894 ever memorable to those who took part. Some fifty of the cabmen on strike had come to Epsom with their boxes to solicit help for the Strike Fund. They met with anything but a kindly reception on the Downs, and had grown disheartened. They came to the Coffee Palace and Mission premises wet through, and sad and hungry. Miss Alexander made arrangements that a tea should be given them. While this was being got ready, they were ushered into the hall; hymns were sung, and earnest sympathetic addresses were given by some of the brethren, pointing them to the source of all comfort, help, and life. After tea Miss Alexander gave a brief address, that will dwell long in the memory of all who heard it. The dear fellows, as they left us, showered blessings upon our heads.

On Friday evening there was a meeting for praise and testimony at the hall, showing what wondrous things God had wrought during these race days. One interesting case may be mentioned. On Thursday morning a young man drew near with his mother and father; a brother spoke to him. "I don't believe there is a God," said the young man in reply. This led to conversation, and at length the poor fellow broke down. "I have never had anyone to lead me to the door of heaven as you have done, and now I enter in." He left the course rejoicing in his Saviour.

Never before have we found a better spirit of hearing or men and women more willing to receive the Word, whether spoken, sung, or in the form of the often-despised tract. Even bookmakers and tipsters asked for some, one saying, "I always get as many as I can for my wife and children; all want to see and read them."

INTERVIEW WITH MR. NIX.

If Christ were living now in London, in human form, would He go and preach his Gospel on the Epsom racecourse? Mr. Josiah Nix at any rate thinks He would, and it is a great grief to that enthusiastic evangelist that so few of those who are supposed to be the special servants of Jesus Christ—the regular ministers of religion—descend from their pulpits and carry their message right into the midst of the seething masses who need so sorely to hear and to obey that message. Only three ordained ministers joined the band of fifty odd workers last week, which, under Mr. Nix's lead, held a part of the fort on Epsom Downs during the days of the racing. To glean some particulars of the week's work (says a representative) I made a call on Saturday morning at 124, Gower-street, where I found Mr. Nix brimming over with good news, and anxious to tell it out for the encouragement of others.

"I suppose you had a good time?"

"Better than ever; it has been the best year at Epsom we have had. There were so many interesting features that I hardly know where to begin. We proceeded on the same lines as in former years. What strikes me most of all at Epsom is the readiness with which copies of the Gospel are accepted; without any exaggeration there seems a positive thirst for the Word. It looks the most unlikely place in the world for such a sign, and yet we found it so. I have never had a sufficient supply of Gospels to meet the call for them. I had to restrict the workers, as they went forth from the tent, to twenty or thirty, and sometimes only ten copies. People of all grades ask for them. I wish some friend or friends would send to me at once 50,000 copies for our race-course work."

"What about the Mission to the race-courses throughout the kingdom that you broached last year, Mr. Nix?"

"We have now definitely started it. We will welcome members of all the Christian Churches, the only qualification being an intense desire for the salvation of their fellow-men. The annual subscription is half-a-crown. Information will be forwarded to all who communicate with me. We hope soon to have representatives on every race-course. I have three men in view who are admirably fitted for the work, and whom I desire to see entirely devoted to it. One is a redeemed prize-fighter, the second is an ex-nigger-minstrel, and the third is an old sailor. I hope the friends of Gospel work will enable me to set them free for this service."

"Now, Mr. Nix, will you tell me some of the specially interesting points to which you have referred?"

"First of all, let me say that on the Saturday night before Derby week, my wife went to the prayer-meeting we had at Craven Chapel. She was much moved when there, and it was strongly impressed on her that the Christian women of England might do something to save their brothers from the awful curse of gambling. She is anxious to see a Women's Auxiliary formed to this Racecourse Mission. They might make and collect articles for an annual sale of work, and in other ways gather funds.

"Another thing that encouraged me immensely happened late on the Monday night, just when I arrived at Epsom station on my way to the Downs. The friend who drove me to the tent told me, as soon as I got into the trap, that a man got up in his chapel near Epsom a few weeks ago and said: 'I have travelled all over the world, but I had to come to Epsom races to get converted. Last Derby day I went into the Gospel tent and gave myself to Christ. I have been baptized, and have joined the church; my wife has been converted, and has joined the church; my daughter is converted, and she is also joining the church. So I am thankful to God for the Gospel on Epsom Downs.' This news set me on fire even before the work of the week began.

"One of the most delightful incidents of the Mission," continued Mr. Nix, "happened on the Tuesday morning. You know that Miss Alexander, of Epsom, has for over thirty years taken an active part in helping the Open-air Mission to carry on this work on the Downs and in the town. On Tuesday morning this year we had a united prayer-meeting in the tent. There were members of the Open-air Mission and of the London City Mission with us, and we joined in supplicating the Divine blessing on the preaching. Miss Alexander gave us a very interesting account of the work of the past thirty years, and spoke warm words of encouragement to us. I was glad of the opportunity of expressing my own gratitude to God, and to Miss Alexander, whose zeal and devotion in the past had made it possible for us to take up the work under such favouring circumstances. The spirit of prayer was in the meeting, and we were all greatly refreshed. This gathering led to a friendly interchange of speakers also on the race course. I went and spoke with the Open-air Mission band, and some of their representatives came and spoke in our ring at another part of the course, so that we presented a united brotherly front to the common foe. Nothing would rejoice my heart more than to see these brethren also have a tent on the Downs; there is plenty of room for a thousand of us."

"I am sure, Mr. Nix, the readers of The Christian will be delighted to hear what you have just told me; such friendly co-operation and sympathy are what we want to see more of in all our Christian work. Had you any seasons of special interest during the week?"

"Indeed we had. Speaking generally I may say that we were received in a very marked way by the people. The crowd on the Downs was of a rougher sort this year than ever before in our experience. Many things were stolen by the rough youths, and raids were made on the refreshment booths during the absence of the police, but no attempt was made to molest us in any way. Many of the bookmakers expressed their pleasure at seeing us again, and said that we were doing a lot of good.

"One thing that struck me was the spirit of deep conviction that seemed to fall on the people who listened to us. Let me give you one instance. A very clever conjurer heard the preaching, and the spirit of conviction so took hold of him that he could not continue his tricks; in spite of his wife's protestations he packed up his things and came down to the tent. On Derby Day, after the great race had been run, the rain began to fall. A crowd flocked into the tent for shelter; and what a time we had! People were in tears in all parts of the tent. The climax came when this conjurer, who had been praying in one corner with a worker, came to the front, signed the temperance pledge, and addressed the crowd from the platform. He told them he had been convinced of sin outside, and had come to the tent. Now he believed that, in answer to his prayer, Christ had pardoned his sin. He asked them to pray for him, that he might be true to God. Others declared that they meant to lead a new life, and altogether we had a blessed and delightful time.

"Friday, the Oaks day, will stand out in the memory of the workers as the most remarkable day we ever had at Epsom. I have never witnessed in connection with any Gospel services anything like the power that appeared to attend the Gospel message. When we sang, or prayed, or spoke, the people seemed as if they could not help themselves. While we were having prayer in the tent, one man came and looked in with the tears streaming down his face. I sent a worker to speak to him. The man had a large amount of money in his possession. He said he would give anything if he could get peace in his soul. I am not certain if he went away satisfied, but he said his mind was fully made up that he would not rest till he had secured peace with God, and I feel convinced that he will become an earnest Christian. Two ladies, beautifully dressed, who listened, seemed rivetted to the spot, as though it were impossible for them to move. One of the workers went and spoke to them in a kindly, courteous way, when they burst into tears. I believe both were soundly converted.

"It has been our rule to leave the tent, to return to town about 3 o'clock on the Friday, but this year the Spirit of God was so manifestly working with us that we could not get away till half-past four, even then we felt very loth to leave the spot where God had blessed our labours so abundantly."

"I suppose, Mr. Nix, you were well supported by your helpers?"

"Yes, they were a body of earnest, devoted men. One of those who spoke first on Tuesday morning said:—'Four years ago I came to this course to see the races. I saw some young men, dressed in light coats and white hats, singing, praying, and speaking. An invitation was given to come to the Gospel tent. I went there, and I heard them say that they found in Jesus Christ entire satisfaction. They said they did not want to put any money on horses; they did not find it necessary to have a pack of cards, or to frequent the theatre, in order to be satisfied. I said to one that satisfaction was what I wanted, and what I hadn't got. I was told I could get it for the asking. I did ask, and I found it. I felt it my duty to come to Epsom this year again, not for the races, but to tell the people as I tell you that Christ has entirely satisfied me, and that He will satisfy you if you ask Him.' The workers were delighted by this unexpected testimony."

"Well, Mr. Nix, it seems to me you have good grounds for being in a very thankful mood. One closing question: Do you think there are any signs of a waning public interest in the races?"

"As I told you, the crowd this year was rougher than before. The respectable middle-class people are not attending as they used to do. When we first began work at Epsom there were at least twenty coaches drawn up in line the night before the Derby; this year there was only one. The thing seems to be changing. The majority of those who go now go, I should say, to try and make something. But these men cannot make money out of one another, so I am in great hopes that the thing will drop and ultimately die."

The Late MR. F. C. BLAND.

WE have already recorded in these columns the death of this beloved and honoured servant of God. In failing health for some time past, Mr. Bland's last illness seized him at Weston-super-Mare, where he had spent the winter. From there he was removed to Rosary-gardens, South Kensington, the residence of his son, Dr. A. R. Hamilton Bland, under whose care he remained until he "entered into rest" upon April 5.

Born in 1826 at Derriquin, upon the Kenmare river, county Kerry, where his family had been settled for generations, Mr. Bland's early life was spent in Ireland, and in due course he entered Trinity College, and received his degree in Arts from the University of Dublin. At the comparatively early age of twenty-three he married the lady who now survives him, and who has been in no mere conventional sense his companion and friend and fellow-helper through all the vicissitudes of five-and-forty years. On his marriage Mr. Bland settled at Derriquin, devoting himself in part to the management of the estate, which under his care emerged from the barbarism in which many parts of Ireland were sunk at the time of the potato famine, and in part to the amusements and hospitalities of an Irish country gentleman in a county as noted then for its social pleasures as it is famous at all times for its extraordinary natural beauties. A man of commanding presence and charming address, Mr. Bland was a special favourite with his fellows, and among the tenantry his word was law. Throughout the estate, indeed, his rule was a "benevolent despotism." In 1859 he served the office of High Sheriff for Kerry, and at the time of the revival in the South of Ireland he held a prominent position among the gentry of the county.

The chief incidents of that revival we have recently recorded in the notice of the late Mr. Mahony, of Dromore Castle, which appeared in The Christian of February 16, 1893. Derriquin and Dromore were neighbouring estates. Mr. Bland and Mr. Mahony had known each other from infancy, and their mutual affection was like the love of brothers. Early in the year 1861 some earnest words, spoken by Mr. Mahony at a gathering of parochial school children at Dromore Castle, made such a deep impression on some of the adults present, that meetings for prayer followed. One and another became deeply anxious about eternal things, and soon an increasing company of the peasantry were rejoicing in new found blessing. The Ulster Revival of 1859 and the Dublin awakening of 1860 had failed to make any sensible impression upon the people of the South. But God was about to work among them in his own way. A friend from a Midland county, hearing of the work, paid a visit to Dromore, bringing with him Mr. C. H. Mackintosh, whose ministry by word and pen has helped so very many. A meeting was arranged, and the closing passage to the 2nd chapter of the Epistle to Titus was his subject. Among the number who attended were Mr. and Mrs. Bland, and both of them were brought to Christ by the word.

In those bright days of the early revival there was a striking freshness and power about the testimony. As in Apostolic times, the convert not infrequently became a witness and a minister at once, seemingly as the natural outcome of the blessing received. Boon companions and bosom friends in the recreations of their boyhood, and in the pleasures and pursuits of their early manhood, Bland and Mahony now became united in preaching Christ to their friends and neighbours. The blessing spread among the gentry, and at the summer assizes at Tralee eight members of the grand jury took part in public meetings for the preaching of the Gospel. And the fruit of that work still lives. Many Christian homes there are in Munster where "the Kerry Revival" is reckoned as the epoch of their spiritual blessing. And not in Ireland only, but in every land, there are those whose Christian life began in that favoured time, or is the fruit of the ministry which God then raised up in the castles and cottages of Kerry.

(From Photograph by Mr. Chancellor, 55, Lower Sackville Street, Dublin.)

Towards the close of that year Mr. and Mrs. Bland visited London, intending to return for the coming of age festivities of the eldest son of one of the principal noblemen of the county. But God had lessons to teach them and work for them to do. Mrs. Bland fell seriously ill, and a prolonged sojourn in the South of England became a necessity. Settling in Plymouth, Mr. Bland at once set himself to seek opportunities for evangelistic work. He invited Mr. Shuldham Henry, whose death we so recently recorded, to join him in this effort, and during the winter a series of crowded meetings, held in the Mechanics' Institute, resulted in blessing to untold numbers of the hearers. At this time Mr. Bland was brought into contact with some of the most honoured and eminent of the leaders of the old Revival. From them he learned the secret of Bible study, and by their ministry he was grounded and established in the faith. When, therefore, Mrs. Bland's recovery enabled him to return to his home in Ireland, he was already a mature and steadfast Christian, deeply taught in the Scriptures, and fitted for the higher ministry of the Church of God.

Many who will read these words will be ready to speak of help received from him, and vastly greater is the number of those who, though perchance they never even heard his name, have profited indirectly by his ministry. For he was a teacher of teachers. During Mr. Moody's well-remembered meetings at the Opera House in London, scarcely a day passed that he did not spend an hour with Mr. Bland over the Bible. "Mighty in the Scriptures," might well be written in his epitaph. Not that he himself would have tolerated the suggestion. In a conversation with the writer many years ago, he indicated what he would wish to have recorded on his grave. "Just my name," he said, "and this one word, 'obtained mercy.' It is but one word in the original," he went on to say, referring to 1 Peter ii. 10. "What a pity it is we can't render it simply 'mercied.'"

The words were spoken in the course of a ramble over the hill above Derriquin Castle. It was near to his favourite view-point, and what a view it was! unsurpassed even in a country so far-famed for the varied loveliness of its scenery. Eastward the river narrows towards Kenmare, presenting all the exquisite beauty of an inland lake; westward it widens towards the ocean, with all the grandeur of the mighty sea, the sunlight flashing on the distant breakers of the Atlantic. "My wife and I used to stroll up here every Sunday afternoon," he said, "and sit together looking out upon the view. But always a strange feeling of sadness came over me; I felt there was something wanting, I never knew what. The first Sunday after we returned to Derriquin we came here again as we used to do. Everything was just the same, but the feeling of emptiness was gone; I had Christ, and my heart was satisfied, and at rest."

Mr. Bland's was a singularly interesting personality. Naturally haughty, intolerant of opposition, and quick to resent an injury or a slight, grace so changed him that not a few who think they knew him thoroughly would describe him as one of the gentlest and humblest of men. Profoundly versed in the truth, he was ready to listen even to a child who could tell him anything about the work or the Word of God. The Bible was the study of his life, a light to his feet, a lamp to his path, the food of his soul. His greatest delight was in searching into its unsearchable treasures. The spirit of the precept of Deuteronomy possessed him: "Ye shall lay up these My words in your heart and in your soul. Ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Though intensely practical, impatient of mere hair-splitting, and intolerant of all new-fangled doctrines, no examination of Scripture seemed to him too minute. He was an enthusiast in what is the true "higher criticism"—not the surface-peddling with words which has arrogated to itself that title, but the patient prayerful searching into the deep things of God, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, and interpreting Scripture by Scripture. The foundations of his faith were thus secure in "the living and eternally-abiding Word of God," far below the level disturbed by the shallow tapping of the critics. His mind was saturated with the truth of Scripture. Type and prophecy and narrative and doctrine blended in a spiritual atmosphere which he breathed and lived in. To him the Bible was a unit, every page of it having its bearing on the rest, and forming an essential part of the revelation.

And the manner of his communicating the truth to others was thoroughly characteristic of the man. There was neither effort nor artifice in any address he ever gave. If addressing a thousand people he spoke in the same natural unaffected manner as when talking with a friend at his own fireside. There was nothing whatever of oratory about his speaking; nor of eloquence either, save that sort of eloquence which is never wanting when in apt and simple words a man gives out what he believes and feels. Pathos there was certainly, and it added a special charm to his words. And above all there was an intense reverence about him. He had great thoughts as to what was due to God. Possessed with a keen sense of humour, and a mind as playful as a child's, anything of levity in Divine things was utterly repugnant to him. And yet there was no austerity about him to repel, nor a trace of asceticism. All his dealings with God were in the spirit of a man who loved and trusted Him implicitly, and who knew that he was himself beloved.

And he loved His people, too. Unswerving in his devotion to truth, and keenly alive to the importance of the minutest detail of Christian doctrine, his heart was with all who loved God, however widely they might be separated from him ecclesiastically. The testimony of his life might have found expression in the words of the 119th Psalm, "I am a companion of all them that fear Thee, and of them that keep thy precepts." Here is an extract from a characteristic letter—one of the last he ever wrote—written five weeks before his death, and addressed to one who for three-and-thirty years enjoyed his closest friendship, and very special fellowship in the work and truth of God. He wrote:—

I thank God that you are not rusting out, nor as yet wearing out; and that you are still ready to help in every conference of godly men, and of all denominations. And, more to be thanked for still, that you continue to preach the grand but simple Gospel of the grace of God. May you never get beyond it! My own strength of body and mind is failing, and I am always regretting that I did not use both more while I had them. But I can still take a meeting—indeed, preaching is the only thing that does not tire me.

Little he thought as he penned the words that his public ministry on earth was closed. The illness which proved fatal soon took possession of him, and his strength failed so rapidly that even the visit of a friend was generally more than he was able for. But the word of Christ "dwelt in him richly," and with the full consciousness that he was dying the calm confidence of faith never forsook him. His last days on earth were clouded by much physical depression and discomfort, but his peace with God remained unbroken through it all. His death has left a great blank in many hearts, for he was a man greatly beloved.

HOW BOYS ARE RESCUED.

The rescue-preventive work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission is steadily maintained with continued encouragement. The temptations of this great city sadly involve many lads, weaving full often around them a net from which, unaided, escape seems impossible. Happy those who find such a helper as Mr. Wheatley, whose keen judgment and wide experience usually enable him to discover some practical method of aiding the boy who has done wrong, to redeem his character and find an honest living.

As we write, there are before us a number of letters from employers, parents, and rescued lads, all testifying to the genuine results which have followed the efforts of the mission to snatch promising young culprits from criminal habits.

Here is one from the grateful mother of a boy caught stealing. She tells how her heart had been breaking over her son; how he had got into the power of those who were using him for their own vile ends; how promptly Mr. Wheatley took up the case when put before him; how the lad was committed to the charge of the Mission (under the First Offenders' Act); how the kindness shown seems to have touched his heart; and how well he is now going on. "It is," she comments, "quite a pleasure to have him in the house now."

In another letter an employer tells of the steady and satisfactory conduct of a lad rescued by the Mission, and now in his works. He has tested him in various ways, and found him, he says, reliable and trustworthy.

An instructive illustration is afforded by another letter of the way fresh victims are found and corrupted by tempters. A country lad was tramping up to London to seek work. On the road he met a man who interested himself in him, and promised to get him work. The story reads like a chapter from "Oliver Twist." Before the lad knew what was wanted of him he found himself at dead of night outside a country mansion, and compelled by violence to take part in breaking in. One act led to another: till at length the victim escaped and got into Mr. Wheatley's hands—being directed to him by a policeman. This boy is now doing well, and is beyond the reach of the tempter he had learned to dread. Without such Christian aid he must have sunk into habitual crime. His parents, in the quiet country cottage, write in touching terms of their joy over their boy's rescue.

The four Boys' Homes maintained by this Mission are full of just such lads, saved in time. The work goes on vigorously and well; but the enemy is also busy. Many boys are lured into wrong-doing, and to save them the work must be kept in an efficient working condition. At present it is greatly pressed for funds. Surely, were its actual results fully understood, this could not be. Information may be had from the director, Mr. William Wheatley, St. Giles' Christian Mission, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, London, W.C.

SIR A. BLACKWOOD MEMORIAL FUND.

Sir,—As you kindly inserted a letter from me a few months ago, calling attention to the fund that is being raised to endow a bed in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green, in memory of Sir Arthur Blackwood, and to be named after him, it may interest your readers to know that by God's blessing that appeal brought in considerable help. The sum has now reached a little more than £700, and it is hoped that by the time the Mildmay Conference is over at least £1000 will have been collected. This would authorise the naming of a bed in Sir Arthur's memory, though fully to defray the cost of such an endowment would require £1500.

Working men and others have availed themselves of the idea of collecting cards, and thus many small donors have felt it a privilege to contribute something.

If any of your readers purpose sending any further help it would be gladly acknowledged by Col. J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

"PRECIOUS SEED."

This is the highly appropriate title under which Mrs. Robertson, hon. sec. of the "Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures," sends forth her booklet telling of the operations of the society for the past year. As usual, the report chiefly takes the form of extracts from letters written to the secretary by the workers throughout the world who have shared in the bounty of the Association, and have acted as its willing agents and almoners. Of a truth, this simple and unpretending but most practical organisation "sows beside all waters," to use the Eastern simile, and the fruit appears unto eternal life. The letters cited, giving many instances of blessing through the reading of the Scriptures, come from China, India, Africa, Russia, Syria, and all parts of Continental Europe. Here is a very gratifying note from a lady missionary in India:—

"By your kind gift I have been able to give a copy of the New Testament to every one of my Zenana pupils who can read, and the light from God's holy Word will, I am sure, shine in many of the dark Zenana homes. During my missionary tour last winter I visited a number of villages where a white woman had never been before, and distributed several New Testaments and copies of the Gospel. In one of these villages I offered the Gospel of St. John to an intelligent-looking Mahommedan, and said if he could read it he might keep it. To my astonishment he stood up before a big crowd of Mahommedans and Hindoos and read a chapter aloud. There was perfect silence the whole time, and the audience seemed very much interested.

"I have given a copy of the New Testament to every Christian girl in the village schools who is able to read it fluently; but the very first that I gave away was to the Mahommedan railway official at one of our out-stations in the district. He said he had received his education at a mission school in Lahore, and through reading the Gospel of St. John he had accepted Christ as his Saviour, and wished to be baptized. I gave him a copy of the New Testament, and told him he was to ask the missionary from whom he first heard the Gospel message to baptize him. Thus the seed is being sown in our vast field, and we may expect an abundant harvest, as we know that God's Word shall not return unto Him void."

An interesting account is from the pen of our friend, Dr. Baedeker, with respect to distribution in Siberia. With that work our readers are tolerably familiar. Mrs. Wall, of Rome, reports as follows:—

"The work of the free distribution of the Word of God has been carried on very regularly. We have been sending out by post seven or eight hundred Gospels every week during the past winter, and many very interesting letters have been received from Jews, who, having read one for the first time, have been convinced, and desire to be instructed. There are several little companies of truly converted men who meet in places where no evangelist has been, to read God's Word and pray together.

"Just before we left Rome, a man came to us from a village about thirty miles off to be baptized. He said: 'Last November my uncle, who was a priest, died and left me all his books. In looking over them I found two copies of the New Testament.' When he saw those we sent out, he said they were exactly like them, so it is not improbable the priest had asked the loan of them from the doctor or chemist and kept them. This man had never before seen the New Testament; his curiosity was excited, and he read it until quite convinced it contained the truth. He lent the other copy to a smith in the same town; they both felt their need of further instruction if they were to be useful to others. For some time they read regularly together, but could hear of no one to whom they could write on the subject. At last, when speaking to some of their friends, they found the latter had just then received copies of the Gospel of St. Luke with Mr. Wall's address enclosed. This Christian man was delighted. He wrote at once asking that someone might be sent. One of our evangelists went, and was rejoiced to find this man and his wife and their friend truly converted, and willing to bear reproach for Christ."

These are samples of the kind of fruit that is constantly appearing in connection with this effort. Need we say more to commend the work to the best sympathies of our readers?

WOMEN AND THE DRINK TRAFFIC

In connection with the Metropolitan Women's Total Abstinence Union a great meeting was held on Friday evening in the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who presided, opened with a vigorous and characteristic address on the temperance movement, and the special objects of the present meeting in demonstrating the evil effects of the drink traffic in all parts of the world where the British flag flew.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., moved: "That the traffic in strong drink, as now carried on by merchants belonging to our Empire, and by the Governments of India and of the Crown Colonies, has become a source of demoralisation in almost all parts of the globe, and is proving a serious stumbling-block to the progress of the Gospel and of civilisation." Speaking of the consumption in the colonies of alcohol, opium, and Indian hemp, he said, with regard to the last-named, that the three worst Governments in the world—the Turkish, Egyptian, and Greek Governments—prohibited its use; yet in India the Government derived revenue from it. The Government of India was the potboy of India. If we were going to convert India, we should have to live Christian lives and govern the country upon Christian principles.

Canon Barker held that it was incredible that a Power like ours should own that it was mainly dependent for its finance upon the sale of a commodity which was notoriously the cause of the crime and poverty of the people.

Rev. H. Hackett, of Allahabad, remarked that it was incorrect to suppose that England had introduced intoxicants into India, as for ages past the natives had manufactured strong drinks and deleterious drugs. Nevertheless, England was now in India with the Bible in one hand and a bottle of whisky in the other.

Mr. Fred. Sessions, speaking of Ceylon, said that while the merchants were to blame in Africa and other places, the people of this country could not escape from the fact that wherever liquor was sold under the English flag the Government was a partner with the merchant in the traffic.

Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., moved: "That in the interests of Christianity and humanity the facts bearing on the traffic and its results should be made more generally known to the people of England and other countries, with a view to the formation of a sound public opinion, and eventually to the passing of legislative enactments for the repression of such traffic." It did not matter, he said, who sold the drink; it was always an evil. They must not blame the colonial merchants, for they were only selling what millions at home were consuming.

Mr. T. Morgan Harvey remarked that what was morally wrong could not be commercially right. He trusted that the time was coming when we should see a brighter state of things both at home and abroad, and when the name of "Englishman" would no longer be a reproach among the dark and benighted tribes of Africa.

Rev. Dr. Theodore Cuyler, in the course of a stirring address, declared that never would the cause triumph till the pulpits of Britain thundered against the drink curse just as they had once thundered against the slave traffic. They must educate, educate, and educate until the walls of the Parliament House heard the voice of the nation crying, "Down, down with the traffic that ruins homes!"

Dr. Harford-Battersby, speaking of West Africa, confessed that this country was pursuing a short-sighted policy in introducing drink instead of useful commodities into Africa. Rev. J. Grant Mills, representing the Native Races and Liquor Traffic United Committee, said that, as the result of the Brussels Conference, in every part of Africa within the Zone of Prohibition—which included about one-fifth of the habitable globe—the drink, wherever it had not yet penetrated, was absolutely prohibited, both as regarded consumption and manufacture.

CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE, ISLINGTON.—Mrs. Paton, the hon. sec., writes:—Our funds just now are very low, and our needs are many. You will, however, be glad to hear that the Lord is graciously blessing the work, especially amongst our younger members, many of whom are renouncing the vain pleasures of the world and yielding their hearts joyfully to Christ. Our junior branch is also full of encouragement, and there are signs of spiritual awakening amongst the dear children, who are taught and watched over by our own Christian members.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

Some very hopeful facts appeared in the letters from the churches which were read at the Southern Baptist Association meetings held at Poole last week. The number of churches in the Association is now fifty-seven. Of these only fifty-two had sent in reports; and the net increase of membership in these was over 248, an average of 4¼ members per church. Christian Endeavour Societies were mentioned as being in many cases a source of addition and strength to the churches. As many as six of these societies had been formed during the year. It is evident that the Y.P.S.C.E. is the long-desired missing link between the Sunday-school and the church. Its methods are especially adapted to interest young people, to deepen their devotion to Christ, to strengthen their attachment to the churches, and to train them for future usefulness. The preachers and teachers and missionaries of the future will to a large extent be found among "the Endeavourers."

So far as the foreign missionary work of the Association is concerned, the report showed an increase of £100 for the Baptist Missionary Society. But there was little encouragement in this fact. Of the total amount given by the associated churches, about £800 was from four of the larger churches: while the remaining fifty-three churches averaged only £12 per church. As some large and fairly wealthy churches are included in these fifty-three, the statement cannot be regarded as satisfactory. There was an additional melancholy in the tone of the Foreign Mission secretary (Rev. G. Short, B.A., of Salisbury), because he knows the very grave crisis the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have to face. The continuance of the work at its present strength is becoming an absolute impossibility without a very much larger income from the churches. That there is money in the churches is clear from the fact that during the year something like £7000 was raised by the Associated Churches for new buildings or enlargements of old ones. This is good; but if it can only be done by neglecting the work of evangelising the world for which the churches exist, it is doubtful whether it will count for success in the great day.

There is no doubt that the churches could do more by the adoption of the Prayer Union scheme which Pastor Geo. Wainwright, of Bournemouth, recommended to his brethren. The church which he represents is burdened with a debt which requires for interest and repayment of loan at least £150 a year. The building is situated in a rapidly-growing district, making demands of a home missionary character, which the members are not slow to meet. Their membership is only about 200; and yet we believe they are the largest contributors to the Baptist Missionary Society of any church in the Association. Why should not other churches, less heavily burdened with difficulty, attempt the work on similar lines? We understand that an elaborated Prayer Union scheme has been started by the Baptist Missionary Society. What fruit does it bear? If, in its more elaborate form, it is found to be unworkable, why should not the original and simple method be adopted?

In our judgment the scheme, so far from being open to objection, has everything to recommend it. The complaint of our missionary societies has long been that the churches have too much left this work to the societies, that interest in mission work has been too spasmodic, that contributors have been too few, and that individual members of the churches have not realised their own responsibility. All these difficulties are met and overcome by this scheme. Every member in the Prayer Union rejoices to know that missionary work belongs to him; prays each day for some mission field, and for the missionary in whose support he has a share; and when the quarterly letter from the missionary is read finds his interest grow deeper still. If older methods have failed, and are failing, why ignore one which has already existed for between two and three years, and has borne such excellent fruit? Wisdom would say, Adopt this scheme, or find a better.

AS A HEALTH RESORT for persons afflicted with rheumatism, Mr. Cheyne Brady commends Yverdon, on Lake Neuchatel. It possesses a sulphur spring, whose waters are identical with those of the Pyrenees, a bath establishment, and is the residence of a renowned specialist for ear and throat affections. The situation is picturesque, and it is only 25½ hours from London.

THE SOUTHERN FREEDMEN.

I have returned from another winter's tour through the Southern States on behalf of the Freedmen. All along the line God has honoured his Word to the salvation of large numbers. I held meetings in New York, Dudley, N.C., Raleigh, Oaks, Hillsboro', High Point, Hampton, Va., Washington, D.C., Athens, Ga., Macon, and Thomasville. At Howard University, Washington, Dr. Rankin, Principal, twenty of the students professed faith in Christ, including a doctor.

At Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, where there are 1000 students, teachers, and instructors, all busily engaged in various branches of trade, from the saw-mill down to stocking knitting, organised by the late General Armstrong, we had a time of reaping during the week of prayer, about sixty of them being blessed, including four young Indians and fourteen young Indian ladies; the remainder were coloured.

All Hillsboro', N.C., the Baptist Church was filled to overflowing at each service, men left their work and came in from the country nine miles or more, and so eager were they to hear the Word, they stood around the doors and the windows, which were thrown open for the purpose, and the power of God rested so manifestly upon the crowds that they fell down moaning and groaning for mercy as many as fifty at one service. Such a time of revival had not been seen since before the war. One special feature of this winter's work has been not only the large number of young people being converted, but likewise "long-time mourners." One lady was converted after being anxious thirty-three years, and another after forty years of uncertainty and fear of being cut off in her sins; also three old grandfathers who had "mourned" the most part of their life. Three young men who were converted at the meetings have already given themselves to the study of the Word, and are going to be missionaries to their own people, and a young lady from Mobile, Ala., is now on her way to Africa to help swell the ranks of the noble army of courageous workers among her dusky brethren. Converts of years ago are going on steadily living for God.

Thousands own land and homes of their own, and are thrifty, industrious, and intelligent people. The one-roomed log cabin is giving place to the four-roomed frame house, and the people of the South or North cannot but admit, after the closest observation, that no race on earth has made such rapid strides and progress during the last twenty years as the negro in the sunny South. Lynching is an awful crime, a blot on the American nation, of every-day occurrence; the people hear or read of it so commonly that it is received as any other portion of daily news. I hope the tide has turned, for some mayors and governors are determined to put a stop to it if possible, and are working to that end.

James Wharton.

THE WANDERING JEW.

Far, far from Zion, far from God,
And suffering still the chastening rod;
Hopeless and homeless, meets your view
A little, weary, wand'ring Jew!

No Saviour's name, no worship sweet,
No Father's love, no mercy-seat—
Blessings his nation brought to you—
Now glad the little weary Jew!

O Christian Gentiles! can you hear
That Gospel to your souls so dear,
And yet no sympathy from you
Await the little wand'ring Jew?

Or canst thou view the Eastern star,
Which brought the wise men from afar,
And whilst it shines so bright on you,
Forget the darkness of the Jew?

Or canst thou hear thy God's address,
"Who blesseth thee, I'll ever bless,"
And yet refuse the tribute due,
To teach and cheer the little Jew?

Anon.

MR. W. H. OMWRA, a Japanese merchant, who has recently been making a stay in this country, is now returning to Japan. He was met on Friday evening by some friends, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, and earnestly commended to God in prayer in view of his future Christian work in his native land.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

At the recent General Assemblies in Edinburgh Mr. A. J. Arnold, general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, had the opportunity, by special invitation, of giving addresses on the subject of religious liberty, particularly with reference to the persecutions of the Stundists in Russia. The object of these addresses was not only to evoke the sympathy of ministers and Christian people generally in Scotland, but also to urge the importance of earnest prayer to God on behalf of his suffering people in Russia. Mr. Arnold explained that in a recent interview with some of the Russian exiles he had been asked to urge upon British Christians the need for earnest prayer to God on behalf of these oppressed people. The brethren, with whom the secretary of the Alliance had a long conference, came to the conclusion that the Evangelical Alliance could not do better than follow the course it had hitherto adopted, seeking privately to bring influence to bear upon those in authority in Russia, with a view to staying the persecutions, and also continuing its beneficent efforts to alleviate the physical sufferings of the Stundists and their families. It was felt, however, that the most important work to be done was for the Evangelical Alliance to seek to evoke wide and sympathetic prayer in regard to the matter. Dr. Baedeker, who has recently returned from an extended visit through Russia and Siberia, fully confirmed the views of the brethren, who said to Mr. Arnold that the Stundists had come to the conclusion that "their only hope now was in God." It was very opportune that this subject should come before the Assemblies this year, under the presidency, in each case, of a member of the council of the Alliance. Both Dr. Marshall Lang and Dr. Douglas have long been associated with the Evangelical Alliance, as members of its council and as frequently taking part in its annual and international conferences.

At the general assembly of the Church of Scotland, Mr. Arnold was included as a speaker in the programme for the morning session of May 29, but owing to important discussions upon home work, foreign matters were deferred to the evening sederunt. At this meeting, Dr. Marshall Lang, ex-Moderator, presided, and the statement made regarding the prosecution of the Stundists elicited many expressions of sympathetic interest. Two or three instances were given as showing the kind of work the Evangelical Alliance had been able to accomplish with its special fund raised for the relief of the suffering Stundists last year, and which amounted to about nine hundred pounds. At the the conclusion of the address, Dr. Marshall Lang was requested to express to Mr. Arnold the thanks of the assembly for the information he had given, and also to assure him of the deep interest of those assembled in the great work of the Evangelical Alliance, and particularly in its efforts on behalf of persecuted Christians, not only in Russia, of which an account has just been given, but also in many other lands. Dr. Lang voiced the feeling of the assembly when he stated that they would pray earnestly for God's blessing to rest upon this important work.

At the Free Church Assembly the chair was occupied by the Moderator, Principal Douglas. The evening meeting of Tuesday, May 29, was a very full one owing to important addresses which were given, but Mr. Arnold's statement was listened to with deep interest, and before he had proceeded far, he was requested by the Moderator, before speaking of Russia, to give some particulars of the efforts of the Alliance in favour of religious liberty in Turkey and Armenia. Briefly touching upon this point, the speaker stated that he was glad to announce an important concession just obtained from the Turkish Government in favour of the Christians at Ordou, who had been deprived of liberty of worship for a long time past, but which was now restored to them by the direct interposition of the Grand Vizier at Constantinople. This was due to earnest representations made by the Evangelical Alliance, and to the cordial support given by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople. Speaking of Russia, Mr. Arnold gave details of the recent action taken by the Alliance, not only with regard to relieving the sufferings of the families of the Stundists, but also in seeking to bring influence to bear to mitigate the persecutions. Though it was not possible to report much improvement in regard to the state of things in Russia, yet there were some hopeful signs. The speaking concluded by conveying a message from the exiles begging that British Christians would pray earnestly to God on behalf of the persecuted in Russia, pleading that they might be kept faithful and true to the Lord Jesus Christ, and that, even through their afflictions, the Gospel might be extended throughout the Russian Empire.

The Moderator, at the request of the Assembly, expressed hearty thanks to Mr. Arnold for his interesting address, and assured him that the matter which he had brought before the Assembly would have their cordial sympathy and their earnest prayers. Dr. Douglas spoke of his own warm interest in the Alliance, and his high appreciation of the noble work which it had done and was still doing in favour of religious liberty in many lands.

REV. D. BARON ON TOUR.

Rev. David Baron is taking a brief evangelistic tour among the Jews of Continental Europe. He writes:—"There are 125,000 Jews in Vienna, about one-tenth of the entire population, and there is only one worker in the whole place to testify to them of Christ and his salvation. When one actually goes out into the field—especially in Central and Eastern Europe, where the masses of the Jewish people are found—one becomes painfully conscious how few the labourers are. In Austria there is no religious liberty, and public evangelistic services among Jews or Gentiles are impossible. A good deal, however, may be done privately, and in Jewish work it is the personal intercourse and the individual dealing which is of the utmost importance.

"During my six days' stay in Vienna, I spoke to many groups and individual Jews, and met with some interesting cases. Beneath the superficial rationalism of many I found a longing, a vacant place in the heart, which only God in Christ can fill. Some thankfully accepted German New Testaments; Hebrew is known by very few in these parts. Two days I spent in Baden, a fashionable bathing-place near Vienna, with many well-to-do Jews from all parts, who are there for the "Cur." A venerable Jew from Roumania seemed to have his heart prepared for the message of God's love. Unlike so many Jews at the present time, he seemed to feel

THE BURDEN OF SIN.

'I pray every day,' he said, 'but God does not hear me. I would give half of my possessions to a righteous man who would intercede for me.' A fellow-worker and myself told him of Christ, who is Himself the great sacrifice and great High Priest, who ever liveth to make intercession for us.

"From Baden I went to Pressburg, the ancient capital of Hungary, and a stronghold of modern Judaism. Here is a famous college, at which several hundred Jewish young men study the Talmud and the traditions of men—preparing to be blind leaders of the blind. It was my privilege to tell many of all classes that Jesus Christ is all our salvation and righteousness. From Pressburg I came by Danube steamer to Budapest. Among others on board was a very intelligent Jewish journalist from Vienna, who, with his young wife, was making a tour in the Orient. I gave him, by way of introduction, one of Rabbi Lichtenstein's last pamphlets. After reading the whole aloud to his wife, he came to me, quite enthusiastic about it, saying, 'Oh! if only a few more rabbis in these parts had the courage to speak out in the same manner as this old man!' A Jewish author on board, to whom I gave a New Testament, after reading awhile, came to ask me if he might quote from it in a work which he is writing. I told him that this Book is and nobody's private property. He was quite delighted. Although a great Talmudist, a man of nearly sixty, he had never in his life read the New Testament!

"I have now been in Budapest five days, and have had many opportuuities of testifying for Christ to some of the 120,000 Jews in this city, and have also enjoyed pleasant Christian intercourse with the few workers for Christ who are labouring here, not without tokens of blessing. This Christian fellowship has been mutually helpful and refreshing. You will be glad to hear that dear old Rabbi Lichtenstein is better in health, and active in the service of Christ. He had been ill, and suffering from the effects of a blow on the chest, which he received from a fanatical Jew in the great synagogue, because when the Chief Rabbi extolled Kossuth as the 'liberator of men,' he replied, 'Not Kossuth, but Jesus Christ is the liberator of men!' One young man, who has come under the Rabbi's influence, has withdrawn from Rabbinical studies, and is now engaged as a journalist, and ready on every occasion to defend Rabbi Lichtenstein."

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

The annual meeting of these Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children proved very interesting. A choir of nearly 600 boys and girls, from the various Homes and Ships connected with the Society, sang several pieces, and gave a display of musical drill.

The report shows that the total number of children admitted into the Refuges up to the end of 1893 was 13,224, viz., 10,993 boys and 2,231 girls, some of whom were born in Ireland, some in Wales, others in Scotland, Italy, France, East and West Indies, Belgium, United States, Canada, Ceylon, and the remainder in various parts of London and the English counties. The total number of children who have left the refuges and ships for service, etc., from their establishment in 1843 to December 31, 1893, is 12,324 boys and girls. The operations of the society comprise:—Shaftesbury House, for 100 boys, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.; Working Boys' Home, 164A, Shaftesbury - avenue, W.C.; Fortescue House, Twickenham, for 120 boys; Farm School, Bisley, near Woking, for 150 boys; Shaftesbury School, for 150 boys, Bisley, near Woking; Sudbury Hall School, for 106 girls, Sudbury, near Harrow; Ealing House School, Ealing, W., for 106 girls; Arethusa, off Greenhithe, Kent, for 200 boys: Chichester, sailing brig, for boys; Sailors' Home, 100, East India Dock-road, E.; Emigration. The boys in the Homes on shore are trained in tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering, gardening, farming, housework, and each Home has its instrumental band. The girls have to do all the household work in connection with their Homes, such as scrubbing and cleaning, washing clothes, making and mending their own garments, and knitting and darning their own socks. In addition to all these duties, both boys and girls are taught in the three R.s, under Government inspection. The total receipts for the year 1893 amounted to £23,511 7s. 10d., and the total payments £24,324 13s. 4d. To meet the requirements of the Education Department, considerable expense has been incurred in structural alterations at the Twickenham and Ealing Homes. There is a mortgage debt still remaining on the London Home. An earnest appeal is therefore made that this excellent Society, which has accomplished so much during the past fifty years, and which is still doing a grand work on behalf of poor and destitute children, may speedily be freed of debt.

The Earl of Jersey, G.C.M.G., presided at the annual meeting, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. J. Dawson, H. Foster Pegg, P. S. O'Brien, Major Mackenzie, and the secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, and Mr. H. G. Copeland.

SAILORS' REST, DUNKERQUE.

The report for the past year says:—The number of seamen frequenting the "Rest" steadily increases; many of the men on weekly boats look upon it as their home on this side of the water. The Bethel services are well attended both on Sunday and during the week. At these meetings more than one poor wanderer has been brought back to the fold. Our efforts to win the sailors from the power of strong drink have not been without success, over forty have signed the pledge and put on the "bit of blue." We trust in the coming year to greatly increase the number, but our efforts in this respect would be more effectual if we could open a coffee bar, which is greatly needed on the docks. Rooms are to let available for this purpose immediately beneath those now occupied. The landlord has offered to do the necessary alterations at his own expense, and we could take immediate possession if the funds were forthcoming.

During the year we have paid over seven hundred visits to ships, and distributed Gospel booklets and illustrated papers, which are always appreciated. Twenty-three bags, filled with wholesome reading (and always a copy of the Scriptures) have been placed on vessels outward bound. Gifts of books, magazines, etc., for this purpose are much needed.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

DURBAN, NATAL.

ON the arrival of these servants of the Lord in Capetown a very earnest invitation awaited them from a number of Christians in Durban, who had been long praying and hoping for such a visit. It was with great joy and thankfulness to God that we learnt that the evangelists had arranged to hold a six days' mission in Durban, beginning on Lord's Day, April 29th. For a fortnight before that date, special meetings for prayer were held in various churches that the mission might be greatly blessed.

The evangelists arrived from Maritzburg on Saturday afternoon, April 28, and in the Council Chambers received a very hearty welcome from the Mayor, and ministers and members of all denominations. Mr. McNeill preached to a crowded congregation in the Berea Presbyterian Church on Sabbath morning. In the afternoon the mission proper commenced by a service in the Town Hall, and again in the evening, which was crowded in every part. The meetings were continued in the same hall each night, from Monday to Friday, with increasing interest, and on the closing night nearly every bit of standing room was occupied. Afternoon meetings were also held in the West-street Wesleyan Church, in the centre of the town, daily from Tuesday to Friday, which were also largely attended, and with evident increasing interest.

The faithful preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in homely language by Mr. McNeill, and the sweet singing of Gospel truth by Mr. Burke, were eagerly followed by the thousands who heard them, and only eternity will declare the impetus that has been given to Christian life, and the number who have passed from death unto life in Jesus Christ. Mr. McNeill did not adopt the usual plan of having inquiry meetings, at which those who have been impressed, or have been led into the light, are dealt with, and their names taken. This many of the workers have felt to be a loss, as they would like to have been able to bring together both those who have been revived and those who have been quickened for further teaching and for aggressive work.

With this object the committee invited Rev. David Russell, of Maritzburg, to carry on the meetings for another week. To this he cordially agreed, and the result has been that many have given testimony to blessings received, mostly those who were Christians before the Mission began, and among these being several ministers of the town. An effort will be made to bring together in a fellowship meeting or mission band those who have got blessing, although a great difficulty exists in that there is not a single undenominational room or hall in the town where they can be gathered together. We trust this may be overcome in some way or other, and we ask for the prayers of God's people that we may be guided aright. A. C. S.

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN.

A short visit was paid to this place, when there were large attendances, and much interest created. A local scribe, after giving an excellent summary of some of the addresses, says: "Mr. McNeill's sermons, on paper, would lack much of the life and fire infused into them by the personality of the preacher. A picturesque speaker, with a wonderful gift of language, and brimful of telling thoughts, Mr. McNeill has a humorous faculty, which frequently comes into play, and smilingly disarms criticism—if critics there be."

The reporter adds: "Mr. J. H. Burke sang hymns with such sweetness and expression that one was tempted to forget the sacredness of one's surroundings, and applaud the singer."

Mr. McNeill, accompanied by Mr. Burke and Rev. W. J. B. Moir, left for Lovedale on May 11. Previous to his departure a Cape Mercury representative had a few minutes' chat with the popular preacher, in the course of which Mr. McNeill expressed himself as well satisfied with the results of his South African tour. "We have had a good time everywhere—especially in Capetown and Johannesburg. In Pretoria a two days' mission was extended a week owing to its success. In Maritzburg we had the biggest meetings in the afternoon—crowds of country people coming in. In Durban the enormous Town Hall was packed every night."

Mr. McNeill visits Grahamstown and Port Elizabeth and then returns to Capetown, leaving twenty-four hours later by the Gothic for Sydney. He hopes to have concluded his Australian tour early next year and be back in London by February.

THE R.S.U. JUBILEE.

THE Mansion House was crowded on Monday afternoon by the friends and workers of ragged schools, the meeting being the last of the series held in connection with the Jubilee of the Ragged School Union. From a statement made by the secretary, it was abundantly evident that a very far-reaching work is being vigorously carried on in 200 schools and missions, affiliated to the Union, as well as in various branches carried on by the Union directly. These include the Holiday Homes, the Fresh-air Fund, the Clothing and Feeding of Poor Children, the Drift Children's Mission, the Home Cripples' Band, and many other agencies designed to reach and aid the poorest children.

In the unavoidable absence of the Lord Mayor, Mr. F. A. BEVAN presided, and opened with a clear and comprehensive review of the objects and operations of the Union. Mr. W. BURDETT-COUTTS, M.P., dwelt on the marvellous results of the past fifty years as a prelude and promise of great things to come. The elasticity of the R.S.U. is such that whatever social and religious changes may arise, it will find the right means and methods to employ.

Earl COMPTON referred to various types of philanthropy and showed that real and abiding service was only done by those animated with the love of God. After dealing with several aspects of Ragged School work, and asking urgently for help, the noble chairman closed with a plea to the children to join the Hearts and Hands League and thus become true helpers of the R.S.U.

The Baroness BURDETT-COUTTS moved every heart by a graceful plea, which showed that she is as warmly the friend of the poor and poor children as ever she has been.

Canon FLEMING, Rev. A. J. PALMER, and Dr. PENTECOST followed with eloquent and glowing addresses setting forth the imperative necessity of Ragged Schools to church and nation. Mr. H. ALLCROFT, Mr. W. J. ORSMAN, and Dr. NEWMAN HALL spoke briefly, and the proceedings were concluded.

On Saturday afternoon, the Melbourne Retreat was opened at a charming spot near Loughton. About 500 workers met and spent a few pleasant hours together. It is intended to use this Retreat for sending poor children for a day's outing; as it accommodates nearly a thousand at a time, other school excursions can be catered for.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

ANOTHER five weeks' successful mission has been held by Mr. George Nokes in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall. The week-night meetings were well attended, and on Sundays, as usual, the great hall was filled, many standing throughout the service. Mr. Nokes is very popular in the East End, and is well known in connection with his Pavilion Theatre services during the winter months. He does not hide the fact that he is a working man himself, having risen from the ranks, and now occupies a partnership in a large East End business. He is a faithful exponent of the truth of the Bible, which with the homely illustration from personal experience greatly adds to his taking addresses, which are very much blessed to the souls of his hearers.

Some exceedingly interesting cases have been the result of his visit, and one or two instances will prove that the simple preaching of the Gospel lays hold of the hard hearts of the masses. An infidel who had publicly advocated atheistic principles, was first impressed by the open-air preaching of Mr. Jos. Clarke, and one night he followed the crowd into the hall. That night he was induced to sign the pledge and spoken to about his soul. He declared he was too bad to expect mercy; he was told that where sin abounded grace did much more abound. He left, saying, "I wish I had heard you years ago; I should have less to repent of," and promised to come again. This he did the last Sunday night Mr. Nokes was preaching. At the after meeting, after wrestling with his doubts for three-quarters of an hour, he gave himself entirely to the Lord, leaving saying he would be as valiant for the Lord as he had been for the devil. He is a fine-looking man, had been in the police force, also a valet to an earl, but through drink had lost his situation. He went a week afterwards to a well-known firm for a situation, and when asked for his character, he said, "Sir, my character will damn me, but last Sunday I gave my heart to Christ." "Ah," said the manager, "I like your appearance, but that character will not hold good here. I am sorry for you." The convert gives a grand testimony. Friends have since succeeded in getting him something, and he is going on well.

Another case is that of a man who had just finished six years' penal servitude. He had been much impressed while in prison by the preaching of the chaplain, and Mr. Nokes's plain preaching settled him. His face indicates the great change that has taken place. For all these blessings vouchsafed, God be praised.

AWAKENING AT HAVRE.

I KNOW your readers will be interested to hear of the remarkable religious awakening in the city of Le Hâvre.

Only those who know how very hard it is to rouse interest in the French mind on eternal things can appreciate such a movement. Crowds of infidels and worldlings fill night after night the largest hall of the town, but more remarkable still is the way in which that audience is held spell-bound under the power of God's Spirit and truth. Arrows of conviction are carried home to hearts and consciences that for a lifetime have slumbered. True, at first, there was a terrible battle; seldom have I seen the powers of darkness and light meet with more force. Roar after roar met every attempt to speak, and yet we did speak! In every moment of lull I tried to get some striking sentence out, and again and again our little band of officers returned to the charge when all seemed lost.

We noticed an old man, with a long grey beard, who gave the signal for the disturbance, with a dogged perseverance only worthy of the master he served. But what a change has taken place. The fact of 600 women, representing all classes of society, assembling at four o'clock on a week-day afternoon proves the extraordinary interest aroused in worldly society. Best of all are the letters, which begin to come, asking for personal interviews. Several Christians feel very strongly that it is an hour of great importance, and a call to all who long for Christ's Kingdom, to come in this land to unite in effort. There are two ways in which your readers can help us.

First, by setting a few minutes apart each day for believing prayer; and secondly, by sending us, without delay, financial help to the above address, for I do not want to bring money matters too much to the front. These people, for the most part, are so disgusted with all religion; and now we have their ear. Help us to direct them to the Lamb of God. Help us win these sceptics, who, when saved, will make real soldiers of Jesus Christ. Help us, for the time is short.

"NARROWS" MISSION, FOLKESTONE.

THE Y.W.C.A. workers have carried on for fourteen years an important work in the "Narrows," Folkestone, in connection with which a new hall is being opened this week. The increase in the numbers attending the various meetings necessitated the building of a substantial Mission Hall.

The following conversions which have taken place within the last six or eight months in the Mission House exemplify the power of the Word over the most abandoned and hardened sinners. One was that of a thief, who, upon finishing her term of imprisonment, came to our meetings, and being deeply convicted of sin by the Spirit of God, was saved, and is now living a God-fearing and honest life. The other, "a woman in the city which was a sinner," found her way into the Mission House, and one evening, in the quiet of an after-meeting, her voice was heard confessing her sins, and pleading with God for forgiveness. He who "receives sinners" did not cast her out, and now she is saved and respectable.

By the end of this month we shall have paid the whole of the £460 for the property, and have £124 towards the cost of building the Mission Hall, but shall need quite £400 more. Miss A. E. Moore, Y.W.C.A. Institute, Alexandra Gardens, Folkestone.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

The following Memorial has been presented to the Royal Commission on Opium by British missionaries in China of twenty-five or more years' standing:—

We, the undersigned British missionaries, representing different societies labouring in nearly every province of China, and having all of us had for many years abundant opportunities of observing the effects of opium-smoking upon the Chinese people, beg to lay before the Royal Commission on Opium the following statement of facts in reference to this question.

1. We belive it to be a fact, established beyond possibility of reasonable doubt, that the consumption of opium in China is exerting a distinctly deteriorating effect upon the Chinese people, physically, socially, and morally. Statements to this effect have been repeatedly made in Blue Books and other official documents, on the authority of British officials of high standing, and they are entirely corroborated by our own personal observation. The Protestant missionary body in China has twice, by its representatives assembled in Conference, and including men of various nationalities and of many different Churches, unanimously passed resolutions condemning emphatically the use of opium by the Chinese for other than medicinal purposes, and deploring the connection of Great Britain with the opium trade. (See "The Records of the Missionary Conference, held at Shanghai," 1877, and ditto, 1890.)

2. It is a fact, which cannot be reasonably disputed, that the conscience of the Chinese people as a whole is distinctly opposed to the opium habit. It is continually classed, in common conversation and in books, with fornication and gambling. Sir Rutherford Alcock, some time Her Majesty's Minister in China, when examined before a Committee of the House of Commons, spoke of the universality of the belief among the Chinese that, whenever a man takes to smoking opium, it will probably be the impoverishment and ruin of his family—a popular feeling which is universal both amongst those who are addicted to it, who always consider themselves as moral criminals, and amongst those who abstain from it. (See Report, East India Finance, 1871 [363], page 275.) We ourselves have never met Chinamen who defended the practice as morally harmless, but we have heard it unsparingly condemned by the Chinese times without number. The Missions with which we are respectively associated invariably refuse to admit opium-smokers to Church membership, but in so doing they are only acting in accordance with the general sentiment of the Chinese, Christian and non-Christian alike, which always stigmatises the habit of opium-smoking as vicious.

3. It is a fact that the opium trade, though now no longer contraband, is highly injurious not only to China, but also to the fair name of Great Britain. The past history and the present enormous extent of the opium trade with India, produces, as we can testify from personal experience, suspicion and dislike in the minds of the Chinese people towards foreigners in general. On the other hand, the attitude of hostility towards opium which foreign missionaries are known to maintain, is approved and duly appreciated by the Chinese of all classes, as we have often found in our intercourse with the people.

4. It is an indisputable fact that the opium imported from India is neither required for medicinal purposes in China nor generally used for these purposes, and hence we regard the importation as being wholly prejudical to the well-being of the Chinese people.

In view of these facts, the undersigned venture respectfully to express the earnest hope that the Royal Commissioners will embody in their report a united recommendation to Her Majesty that the Indian Government should immediately restrict the Indian production of opium to the supply of what is needed for medicinal purposes in India and elsewhere. With our long and sad experience of the injurious effects of opium consumption on the Chinese people, we cannot but feel the gravest apprehension as to what the effects of the opium habit in other lands are likely to be. We are quite aware that some medical and other testimony has been given in India, designed to show that the consumption of opium by the peoples of India is not accompanied with the same disastrous consequences that we have all witnessed for ourselves in China; but we are glad to know that strong testimony has also been given in India of a contrary kind, for we are of opinion that a longer and wider range of experience will certainly show that opium is as injurious to all other races as it has been proved to be to the Chinese. Opium is rightly classed in England amongst dangerous poisons, and it is so regarded in other countries; and we cannot believe that what is a dangerous poison to the greater part of the human race acts only as a harmless stimulant on other parts of the race. We are convinced that if ever the day should come when opium is as widely consumed in India as it is now in China, the result will be as lamentable there as we know it to be here.

In submitting this memorial, which we believe expresses the opinion of nearly every Protestant missionary in China, without distinction of nation or Church, and of the whole native Protestant Christian community, consisting now of several tens of thousands of persons, we beg to say that we are actuated by feelings of the deepest loyalty to her Majesty the Empress of India, and by the most profound desire for the truest welfare of her Indian dominions, not less than by the desire to see the curse of opium removed from China. We hold as beyond all shadow of doubt the conviction that thrones and dominions are established by righteousness, and that any source of revenue, however large, that is morally indefensible, tends only in the end to the weakening of the empire and the impoverishment of its resources.

To His Excellency, Sieh, His Chinese Imperial Majesty's Minister to Great Britain and France.

May it please your Excellency to consider the request of the undersigned. We have for years past been engaged in seeking to enlighten our countrymen on the evils associated, both in the past and at the present time, with the opium traffic, and in endeavouring to form a public opinion which should insist on the entire prohibition of the opium export from India to China. God has been pleased to favour our efforts, and the efforts of others in the same behalf, and, as your Excellency may be aware, there is now in this country a very strong feeling on the part of a large section of our people, that the time has come when the Indo-Chinese opium trade should cease.

We approach your Excellency in the confidence that we have your hearty sympathy in this cause, and that you would rejoice with us in seeing the opium trade brought to an end. Such is the state of feeling against the opium traffic in this country now, that any clear expression of your personal opinion in condemnation of the trade before your departure from this country would be exceedingly helpful to our efforts. We would further earnestly beg of you, that on your return to China, you would move His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China to take such steps as would make it clear that China desires to bring the trade to an end.

It is constantly asserted that the Indian opium trade brings in so much revenue to the Chinese Government, that it would shrink from any course which would diminish that revenue, and that it is, indeed, as much in love with the trade as the Indian Government itself. We ourselves do not believe this, and it would rejoice us exceedingly, and materially strengthen our position, if, in opposition to such assertions, we could secure a distinct pronouncement on the subject.

To the Philanthropic Gentlemen representing the Anti-Opium Societies of Great Britain.

Sirs,—I have the honour to communicate the following answer to your favour lately received. From your letter I find that in the matter of suppressing opium, the zeal of your philanthropic hearts during these many years has not waned, nor have your schemes of philanthropy ceased, hoping earnestly to stop the noxious evils that spring from the drug, and to ensure to all the blessings of abstinence from it. The reading of your letter gave me extreme gratification, which cannot but be lasting.

Evidences are that there has been a growing harmony in the intercourse between your country and mine, and an increasing prosperity in our international commerce. It is a satisfaction to me that during my residence in London, which was longer than in Paris, I so enjoyed the confidence of your Government that various matters which arose were settled without any difficulty. It is also a pleasure to see the philanthropy of your various associations, showing that your country is rich in men of noble character.

The efforts of the various Anti-Opium Societies have my hearty sympathy, and what I now desire to say is merely to emphasise the fact that my Government, the local authorities, the literati, and the people are sincere in their wish to suppress Opium. That you and we feel alike in this matter is another instance that "In the principle of doing good to others Foreigners and Chinese are in accord," and that "While there is opportunity one should think of prevention and cure."

The effects of Opium indulgence are most pernicious, and if its use were to extend not only would China be ruined, but the people of India would fall into the habit and would suffer endless evils.

I understand that your Government has at divers times strictly prohibited the culture of the poppy, and the trade in it, and now if the Anti-Opium Societies would lead and guide public opinion, and would, as occasion offers, support your Government, the good resulting therefrom would be incalculable. For it is evident that if henceforth each party would devise measures to restrict the culture and to lessen the traffic, the article would decrease, and the evil thereof cure of itself. Though the final extinction might take time, yet it would come some day.

I earnestly hope that your Societies will put forth greater efforts, and ventilate the question more and more, till this old evil is uprooted and new benefits rise in its stead. Not only is this accomplishment my personal profound wish, but from it both my country and yours will surely reap advantage.

My tenure of office soon expires, and my departure is at hand, but I shall consider it my duty to fulfil your earnest request in making known to my Government your benevolent desires.

I send this answer on the eve of my journey; I have much to say, but time fails.

I present my compliments. May I always have your good will. To express which sentiments I avail myself of this opportunity, and write no separate letter [to the various signatories].

(Signed) Sieh Fu-Chung,
His Chinese Imperial Majesty's Minister to Great Britain and France.

GEN. BOOTH'S SOCIAL SCHEME.

Judging from the great and enthusiastic throng that filled Queen's Hall on Monday evening, the Darkest England Social Scheme still holds a leading place in the public mind. The General seems to be quite on the top of the wave of popular approval, if we may draw any conclusion from the many letters written by our prominent public men "of all shades of political and religious opinion," partly read on Monday evening. The meeting was presided over by Mr. John Cory, who has had a long acquaintance with the work of the Army, and has been one of its most generous supporters. Mr. Cory in his little speech was as cordial as ever. Speaking of the rescue branch of the work, he mentioned the pathetic fact that there is in the Cardiff Home one bed entirely supported by girls who have passed through the Home and are now in situations.

Lord Brassey, who spoke first, was by no means half-hearted in his advocacy. He warmly sympathised, he said, with the spiritual side of the work, as well as with the material side. As an extensive traveller, he had found large tracts of the earth's surface waiting for the cultivator, and he was therefore greatly interested in General Booth's emigration schemes, in which he hoped by-and-by to take some practical part.

The General entered on a lengthy examination of the Social Scheme—the need for its inception three years ago, and for its continued operation. He rather hinted that the sympathy evoked by the publication of "Darkest England" had passed away. We want in the Legislature another party—the Starvation party, which is too little represented in the Councils of the nation. Much has been done in the past by many church and other agencies, but only the fringe of the vast work has yet been touched, judging by the visible results. In his somewhat discursive talk, the General referred bitterly to certain Press criticisms, especially to one critic who had suggested that a suitable jubilee present for him would be a ledger and a set of books: insinuating that he did not properly account for the moneys that passed through his hands. Figures were quoted to show what had been done by way of a beginning. In the middle of his statistics the General broke out into an impassioned appeal that we should go forth and seek out the thousands on thousands who are perishing in the midst of our high civilisation and our boundless luxury and wealth. In connection with the Scheme there are now some 220 different centres of work, with over a thousand officers. Ten and a-half million meals have been supplied; over 34,000 of the unemployed have been registered, and employment has been found for about half that number; three million men have slept in the night shelters; over five thousand women and girls have been received into Rescue Homes. These are some of the larger figures in the report on which the General dilated. All this relief work is being done at a remarkably low cost. The General complained that they had to pay £1000 in rates, when they were doing the very work for which the rates are levied. He denounced the pet classification of the "deserving" and "undeserving" poor; in God's name let us help all who yearn for something better, however undeserving they may be. Let no man or woman be forced—as they virtually are by our Poor Law system—to remain in the ranks of pauperism. Many do not care for work, but a great proportion do, and the others must be compelled to do it. The results in the reformation of those dealt with, especially in the case of women, have been most encouraging, and amply justify the effort. The percentage of those who lapse into crime or vice has been wonderfully small. As to the charge of unfair competition with regular industries, General Booth replied that they had not undersold others; they supplied a good article, and they charged the top market price. As to the finances of the Scheme, a total of £177,698 had been received during the past three years, but £219,668 had been spent, leaving a debt of £42,000. The capital amount received was represented in the plant possessed, and the annual outlay had only been about £15,000—not a large amount under the circumstances. As to the Over-sea Colony, the General said he had chosen the country and also the land, but he was waiting for the response to his present appeal; he dared not go further into debt.

Among those who afterwards spoke on behalf of the work was Mr. McInnes, M.P. (who made a touching reference to Mrs. Booth, the "mother" of the Army), and Rev. R. H. Haweis, who said the meeting was by far the most inspiring one he had attended for a long time. The reverend gentleman made a really eloquent and capital little speech for the Army and its General. Coming from a clergyman, his words were specially welcome.

THE GIRLS' GUILD OF GOOD LIFE.

The ninth anniversary and prize distribution in connection with the above Guild was celebrated last week in Hoxton Hall, Hoxton-street, N. Mr. J. Fyfe-Stewart presided. Mr. J. T. Rae gave a few particulars about the work since the formation of the Guild in 1885. During the nine seasons since that time, no less than 3,152 girls had passed through the books. Four hundred and fourteen members had entered during the season, of whom 167 had joined on probation, 108 had come into full membership, while fifty-nine had not attended after a few visits. The attendance of 164 at the weekly parlour meetings showed a better proportional average than in former years, and the fact that a number of the girls voluntarily contributed towards the funds was an indication of healthy interest. One hundred and fifty-two pledges had been taken at Guild meetings, and the registrar had paid 1216 visits to members. The various agencies of the Guild had been maintained at a reduced cost. Further contributions were urgently needed in order to effectually carry on the work.

The Chairman, in the course of a short address, said that the Guild training was of immense benefit to the members, as it enabled them to perform various work in their own homes in a more satisfactory manner; while, as better fitting them to carry on their daily avocations, Miss A. M. Richardson urged the girls to guard against the temptation of strong drink. Addresses were also given by Mr. William Noble, and Rev. Septimus Buss, vicar of Shoreditch. During the evening a gymnastic display was given. The annual prizes awarded for dressmaking, cooking, musical drill, etc., were distributed.

HOLIDAY HOUSE, BRASTED.

"The time of the singing birds has come." This means a good deal to some of us; but those who live in St. Giles's know nothing of the cuckoo's call, or the song of the nightingale. That some of our patients who have been long time prisoners in their one room might catch a glimpse of spring life in the woods, we opened Holiday House earlier this year; and welcomed twenty-four adults to spend a few days' retreat.

Beautiful for situation is this home—standing on Toy's Hill, some 850 feet above the sea, overlooking a lovely landscape, surrounded by woodland and heath. Contrast for one moment the translation from a back room in Drury-lane, where the only landscape is a dingy high wall, with the outlook from our Cottage Home, standing in a wood, and overlooking miles and miles of the Kentish pasture land, with the Sussex Downs as a background.

One of the workers, sent down to entertain and mother the poor folk, wrote giving the following account of the visit:—"It's just splendid, having these dear saints from St. Giles's. I hardly know them out of their court and alley surroundings, such kindly good humour, such pleasantry in conversation, such appreciation of well-cooked food, such consideration one for the other, the strong giving place to the weak. We tried to make the visit as homelike as possible. Prayer-time was a much-looked-for hour of the day, when each presented his or her special petitions, and gave praise for the petitions already granted. On the Sunday afternoon we walked to the woods, and seated ourselves on some faggots, with our feet on an exquisite carpeting of primroses, bluebells, and moss. We sang hymn after hymn, and then, forming a circle, they each told their experiences of answers to prayer. On the Sunday evening a Gospel service is held in the house."

The above is from a booklet just issued by the London Medical Mission, and full of delightful details and incidents. It may be had of Dr. John Latchford, 33 and 34, Short's-gardens, Endell-street, W.

MR. GEORGE HOLLAND'S WORK.

Great occasions at George Yard, Whitechapel, have an attraction for two distinct classes of people, and ever command a representative attendance on the part of both. Rich and poor meet together in the extensive mission premises; and benefactors and benefited are always found together at the annual meetings and other large gatherings. On Monday evening the fortieth anniversary of the work was celebrated, and among the friends who attended to show sympathy with Mr. George Holland were: The Right Hon. Evelyn Ashley, who presided; Lady Hope and Mr. T. A. Denny; and Colonel Morton, of Mildmay. A large number of the toiling residents of the locality, young and old, were also present, and they showed a hearty interest in the proceedings.

Mr. Holland presented a very encouraging report, beginning with the words of Moses: "These forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing." The work among the young came first, as its importance and extent fully entitled it. The day nursery for the buds, the schools (weekday and Sabbath) for those in the higher stage, and the Bible-classes for such as have reached riper years, are all in full operation, and meeting with warm appreciation. Food and clothing are provided for needy children, and at times shelter is found for the neglected or homeless. Mentioning the joy which has come home to the workers in this specially merciful department, Mr. Holland said: We feel that every day should be filled with works of love. We have our pattern in Him; and we must let every suffering and sinful one have a place in our hearts.

Having spoken of many promising and indeed fruitful efforts among young men and women, who are diligently instructed in Scripture truth, Mr. Holland described the largely-attended mothers' meetings, held on Tuesdays, when such as cannot leave their homes on Sundays manage to fill the spacious room. Here, as among the juveniles, the temperance cause is promoted on definite Gospel lines. The various homes for children and adults continue to be of great service, and to perpetuate one of the oldest and most valuable agencies of the Mission—the affording of rest and change to the weak and weary. The year's work involved a total expenditure of £2374, but this was, by the goodness of God, fully met by the receipts, and the year closed with "no bills owing," and a working balance in hand. When Mr. Holland praises God for this gratifying condition of things, those who know the very excellent character of the work will follow with a fervent "Amen."

"ONE STEP AT A TIME."

Our wisdom as sinners who have given themselves to the Lord to keep, is to take life a step at a time in his strength. "Just for to-day," says a sweet hymn in "Hymns of Consecration." I would even go further, and say "Just for an hour"—ay—"just for a step."—(Extract from the letter of an honoured and eminent living servant of God.)

One step at a time with Jesus!
And not the whole wearisome way;
We will not shrink back from the future
When He says, "Just trust for To-day."

One step at a time with Jesus!
And not the whole burdensome way;
The load He appoints thee to carry
Brings grace with it "just for To-day."

One step at a time with Jesus!
And not the whole intricate way;
Life may have its mazes and turnings,
But straight is the road for "To-day"!

One step at a time with Jesus!
And not the whole sin-befouled way;
Though "every whit" bathed at the fountain,
Thy feet must be cleansèd "To-day."

One step at a time with Jesus!
And not the whole work-crowded way;
Though the yoke be for life-long sweet service,
'Tis fixed on anew each "To-day."

Yet soon, but one more step with Jesus!
And a dimness obscuring thy way,
Goldens into the "glory excelling,"
The dawn of an endless "To-day."

THE MELA AT ALLAHABAD.

Allahabad ("City of God") was built by Hindoos, and is held sacred by them. The confluence of the rivers Ganges and Jumna (about three miles distant) can be seen from the palace and fort. The water of each river is quite distinct in its own shade of colour. Every year thousands of poor pilgrims visit the holy city to bathe in its waters. My heart sickens as I look back on a visit I recently paid to the Mela or Fair, where I saw so much of the loathsomeness and superstition of heathendom. We started for it on the top of an elephant. After an hour's ride we came within sight of a long street of booths or sheds, hastily put up for the sale of all sorts of wares, but principally for that of glass bottles of all sizes, for the reception of the sacred water of the Ganges, which is carried home by the returning pilgrims, and kept sacredly for many years. Wending our way through the great concourse of people, we came to the banks of the river, along the side of which for some distance stood tall bamboos, with flags and gay-coloured cloth flying from them. This marked the place for the bathers; here, too, the priests performed some ceremony every morning. On a higher part of the bank of the river is a place where a poor Hindoo lived without ever leaving the spot for forty years. He died a short time ago, and now another man has taken his place. As we stood there, a poor woman came and crouched on the ground to worship. Groups of filthy beggars sat around, and poor lepers were crying in piteous tones for money.

We noticed a clean, good-looking young man, and on accosting him, found he could speak fairly good English. I asked him about himself, and he told me he was a Prince, but I have forgotten the name of his territory; he wanted to show me "the power of his God." He followed us closely, as we moved towards the most revolting scene I ever witnessed. Crossing the river by a bridge of boats, we came to the spot devoted to the Fakirs.

Pen cannot fully describe this horror of heathen darkness and devildom. In rows, were hundreds of these wretched creatures, some lying without any clothing, covered with (wood) ashes, their faces painted in almost every other colour, their hair matted with filth, some dancing wildly in front of us, some drugged with narcotics; all looking more like demons than men. A friend truly said he thought this sight made one better able to imagine Hell. On some of the stands in front of which these poor creatures lay were several long planks of wood with a forest of sharp iron points two inches long, so sharp that they must have been driven into the flesh of the devotees who recline upon them.

Retracing our steps, we saw multitudes, old and young alike, eagerly rushing into the Ganges; some throwing flowers into it, others drinking the waters, although many dead bodies are often seen floating down the stream, and the water was dark with mud and dirt. Presently we came to where the monkey god was lying, covering a space of about 15ft. square. Money was placed upon its hideous limbs. Throngs of people touched it, and, being composed of red clay, the red substance was transferred to the fingers, and from thence to the forehead of the worshipper. The "Prince" still followed us, and we noticed as he came in contact with a priest he stooped down and kissed his feet. We spoke to him of the Lord Jesus, the only Saviour, but his sensibilities seemed deadened, and I fear the message of grace and love had little in it to charm him! We turned away, sickened, for we could do so little for these deluded ones. Yet thousands of Christians, living at home in Gospel lands, could reach multitudes here if they would only come.

Think of twelve hundred natives passing into eternity every hour. What a well-known missionary says of China might with equal truth be applied to India:—"See there men and women ignorantly bowing down before fierce monsters called idols, these black, foul fiends of painted wood, mud, and stone, torturing themselves with loathsome penances, with debaucheries unspeakable, well-nigh unthinkable, holding religious carnival, and giving the rein to every most revolting instinct of degraded and savage nature; look at it, and try and feel, if you can, how awful it must be in the sight of the holy loving God and Father." I have told the story of this visit. Who will read it, and ponder the question, What can I do to evangelise the millions of India? Herbert R. Francis.

MR. MEEK AND THE ZULUS.

Writing to a friend from Othello, Rorke's Drift, Natal, this earnest evangelist says: "Yesterday (Lord's Day, March 4) I sent our converts out to preach amongst the Zulus some seven miles below us, while at our own place we held three well-attended meetings, and the Spirit of God was delightfully upholding all that was done and said. I hope some will come to Jesus. Oh, if I could only get them to come, how I would rejoice! I do beg you to pray for me, and that the work may be greatly blessed. I am so weak, and I do so long to get some to join. I am all alone in this part. An Englishman in this country, that is, one that wants to do good, has it hard. But I am not alone, for He is with me, and is my stay and strength. I wish I had one or two fellows all on fire for Jesus. I am going to-morrow some twenty miles down the valley for a few days, amongst the wild Zulus. No European ever goes there. It's quite an out-of-the-way place. It's so hot and stony, and it lies miles off any road. There they live and die without the knowledge of our Saviour. I have been there before, but it rained so much I could do no good at that time."

Mr. Meek goes on to deal with the needs of the work. There is an increasing company of converts, the opportunities become larger, the congregations are too great for the accommodation at his own place, and the need for a hall to hold about 300, and another about ten miles off, has become very pressing. This means that about £300, besides what is in hand, is required; while to keep the work going and four Christian Zulus preaching from place to place, about £200 per annum is needed. Communications for Mr. Meek's work may be addressed, care of Miss M. Eason, 100, Normanton-street, Derby.

SPANISH PILGRIMAGE TO ROME.

During the month of May some 13,000 Spaniards went on pilgrimage to the Pope. A Spanish gentleman who is well informed asserts that the whole affair was got up, and that not more than 1300 perhaps had any devotion for the Papacy, the expenses of nearly the whole party being paid for. The culminating point of the journey was the celebration of the mass in St. Peter's, which was closed to all but Spaniards.

The Imparcial newspaper of Madrid says that the Pope wished to come into close contact with them, but as he is subject to fainting fits when he sees a great crowd, those who take care of him are as cautious with him as if he were a sick person. "The Pope's countenance is bloodless, so are his hands, which are very thin and covered by white mittens, which leads one to the conclusion that his physical force has gone from him long ago. He wished to stand up to bless us, but he had scarcely raised himself a foot when he sat down again, leaning back with a very fatigued expression and very resigned, so that I was profoundly impressed, and thought really that the end of the old man was near. When the papal throne was placed, Leo XIII. sat down. On rising he extended his arms, and raising his right hand slowly he traced in the air the sign of the cross. After the ceremony he returned to the Vatican in his chair."

There was great excitement throughout. Six men, two of whom were priests, lost their reason through the religious fervour which they experienced at seeing him. One of these returning to Spain, had to be confined in a strait waistcoat while on the steamer, and presented one of the saddest and most mournful of spectacles.

On the above occurrence, the Revista Cristiana remarked:—"May God have mercy on all those on whom rests the grave responsibility of having instigated on these poor victims of madness the folly of taking part in this lamentable aberration in our country."

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A new Institute at Poplar was opened on Monday by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke of York. The Institute is to be a centre of religious, social, and educational influence among seamen and sailor lads. There is a large hall, with reading-room, etc.

THE FRIENDS AND PEACE.—The following is an extract from the minute of the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, 1894: "The question of peace among the nations continues to be a subject very near our hearts. We are impressed with the horrors of war and of its unchristian character. We pray that the Spirit of our Lord may so influence men's hearts that they may be brought out of the spirit that begets wars and fightings." An address to the Government, and also a resolution on the reduction of armaments, were read, and the clerk was authorised to attach his signature.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN SHREWSBURY.

Our hearts are full of praise to God for the fruitful Mission held in our town by Mrs. Baeyertz, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and with the sympathy and co-operation of many ministers of the Gospel, the use of several chapels being granted. Much earnest prayer had gone up to God previously for spiritual power; and united petitions were made that the result of the Mission might be a great ingathering. God answered prayer so that from the very first meeting many seeking ones were dealt with personally, and at the close of the Mission it was found that 453 names had been taken of those who had remained for personal conversation, very many of whom, we have reason to believe, have definitely received the Lord Jesus Christ.

The evening Gospel meetings were largely attended, and the addresses were given with much power, the Divine authority of the Scriptures being appealed to as the supreme authority, and the power of the Holy Spirit was felt to be present, leading many to contrition for sins.

Three meetings for men only were held, two on the Sunday afternoons, when it is estimated there were 400 men present and over 530 the latter. The afternoon Bible readings were greatly appreciated, the subjects beginning with "the secret of failure," gradually led on to "the secret of victory." Many of God's children were much helped and blessed.

On Wednesday, the 6th, a meeting was held for praise and testimony for forty-one years' work of the local Y.M.C.A., and for blessing received in the Mission. Mrs. Baeyertz was present, and gave an earnest parting address, and seemed much encouraged by the testimonies which were given. After a short rest she will visit Carlisle and other towns in the North.

THE WOMEN OF CHINA.

Two good meetings in connection with the Women's Prayer Union for the Women of China were held on Tuesday week in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Shepherd's Bush, W. In the afternoon Rev. Thomas Bryson, Mr. Hutton, and Miss McFarlane gave details of the condition of things in China.

In the evening Mr. James Hardie, M.A., presided, and opened with a brief address, after which Mrs. Bryson described the life and sorrows and unutterable spiritual darkness of Chinese women. In telling of her own work among these, she gave several instances in which converted girls, married into heathen families, have carried into remote villages the light of the Gospel.

Rev. Yung-King Yen, who came next, showed that while his grand business in England is to expose the evils of opium, he can speak admirably and well on other matters. He maintained that the women of China are neither ill-treated nor imprisoned; but they do suffer many serious disabilities, of which he gave telling illustrations. Apart from all this, they suffer terribly from opium; not so much because they themselves smoke (though many do), but because the consequences of the husband or father's debasement fall on them.

Miss Whitechurch closed with a charming story of her nine years' work, and of women she had known—heathen on the one hand and Christian on other—in China. The secretary of this Prayer Union is Miss Boyd, 6, Birkbeck-road, Acton, W.

THE HAMPSHIRE VILLAGE MISSION has two Bible cars going through the villages. They have recently been done up, and will shortly be "on the road" again. Mr. J. Hasell Charlton, the director, writes:—"We need a good strong horse for one of our cars, and as we are sending out two additional young men this year, we require increased material support. After twenty-one years' service in this way I do not know any ministry to equal it in reaching the tens of thousands of people who live in isolated places—people who seldom if ever hear the Gospel from year to year." The report says:—"The ground we have traversed being very much the same as in former years, we have been well received, and always got a hearty welcome, and in many cases have found that our visits have been God-directed as to time and place. Ritualism on the one hand, and apathy on the other, keep many souls in darkness, and 'doing the best I can' is frequently the reply to the question, 'Is your soul saved?' The root error of baptismal regeneration has been sown with so much diligence, and with the teaching that no one can know he is saved till after death, that nothing short of Divine power can deliver the poor uninstructed ones from it." Mr. Charlton's address is Southampton-road, Fareham, Hants.

ORPHANS AT THE SEASIDE.

Miss Sharman writes from 20, West-square, S.E.: "Most gratefully I thank the many friends who sent us their gifts last year for seaside expenses, so liberally and promptly that the children had a delightful time at Southend, and came back looking the picture of health and happiness. When all the holiday expenses were paid, I had enough left to keep some of the frailest little ones boarded out in the country or at the seaside all through the winter. The orphan family is larger than ever this year. Many of them are feeling the effects of the cold spring and keen east winds, and some who have lately come into the Home are feeble and sickly. If I am to really give the children all the change and strengthening they need, it must be through having even a more than usually generous response.

"May I remind those who like to do 'the kindest thing in the kindest way' that we do not wait for the fashionable months for summer outing, but prefer to send the children away in June, while the days are long and the country most lovely, and when also such a large migration as ours can be effected at the cheapest rate? In return for the loving ministrations, so often repeated and so freely given, the orphan family can only offer their heartiest thanks and their earnest prayers that those who give them so much pleasure and benefit may themselves have a brighter and sweeter holiday season this year than ever before. The permanent Seaside Home is not yet an accomplished fact. We have a house in view at St. Leonards, and my hope is, that we may be able to buy and occupy it before winter."

GOSPEL WORK IN MEXICO.

Mr. Eglon Harris, writing from Orizaba, Mexico (Apartado 28), on May 8, says: "There are abundant opportunities for Gospel preaching. For the work we have in hand—preaching, teaching school, printing, colporteur work, travelling, etc., we shall need £250 per annum at the lowest estimate. All will be used in purely evangelistic work.

"The Lord has opened another door to us in the Vera Cruz, where we now have access to 800 soldiers in their barracks, and also to 200 long-term prisoners in the Island Fort of Ulua. The week before last these were all called together on purpose, and answered to the roll-call by stepping forward, each man to receive a Gospel book. The officers manifested their pleasure in that we were putting into the men's hands what they believed would be for their good. I am asking the Lord for 100 Testaments to give to these men. They are too poor to buy.

"They express great surprise that we should give them tracts without expecting any money return. 'So different to the priests, who never do anything for a poor soul without being paid for it,' said an officer. The press, when working, will preach to 16,000 soldiers to whom we have access now. It cost some amount of fighting with the officials ere we could gain the first entrance. We trust the Lord will keep the door open, and if at some future time funds allow us to visit other garrison towns we hope to make other such acquaintances."

The British correspondent of the work is Mr. J. Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Manchester.

GATHERED GOLD.

If we think of reconciling
Black with white,
Dark with light,
'Tis but self-beguiling.
While place we seek and place we shun,
The soul finds happiness in none;
But with a God to guide our way,
'Tis happiness to go or stay.

—Madame Guyon

THE TENDERNESS OF CHRIST.

The love of Christ is a marvellous and unique combination of opposite and usually inconsistent qualities. There is "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge"; there is also what the beloved apostle elsewhere calls "the wrath of the Lamb." Both these aspects of love were exhibited in the human life of Jesus. To separate one from the other, or to contemplate one to the exclusion of the other, is to divide and dismember Christ. He was so gentle, yet so terrible; so tender and yet so strong; so patient and yet so capable of blazing into a very passion of righteous indignation; so considerate and yet so true. His love was in its idea, object, meth od a holy love. It did not cure only to please, or to gratify, or to soothe. It had also to do the work of the surgeon's knife and the physician's medicine; to show men themselves, not to deceive them; to wound, that it might afterwards heal.—Bishop Thorold.

OXFORD NOTES.

[From our own Correspondent.]

Canon Taylor Smith, of Sierra Leone, has been paying us a visit, preaching sermons in aid of the work in West Africa, and also addressing the University Missionary Union and the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union. His deeply-interesting and spiritually-able testimony has been much appreciated, and cannot fail of becoming greatly blessed. The anniversary of the Irish Church Missions was held on Sunday and Monday last, when Rev. W. B. Doherty, of Bristol, gave an account of his personal experience of the work of the Society.

The Oxford Church Army Labour Home has just been transferred to large and commodious premises, after two years of hard but successful work in smaller quarters. The opening of the new Home by the Bishop of Reading last week was attended by a large and interested audience. The Rev. W. H. Hunt, secretary of the C.A. social department, addressed the meeting on the general work of the society.

It was a great pleasure to welcome about fifty of the foreign delegates to the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee to Oxford last Saturday, when they spent the day in visiting this ancient city. The Mayor of Oxford was the host of a substantial lunch, after which Professor Barde and two pastors acknowledged the hospitality and cordial testimony to the spirit actuating Y.M.C.A. workers. Oxford men would not willingly have missed this opportunity of fraternisation and fellowship in the Gospel.

Pastor W. Cuff, of Shoreditch, is always sure of a hearty welcome here, and his visit last Wednesday proved no exception to the rule. Mr. Cuff preached in the afternoon, and addressed a meeting in the evening in aid of the Home Missions carried on in connection with the New-road Chapel. His address was on "Enthusiasm for Christ," a thing which he thought was rare in the Church to-day. Amid all earnestness of work and multiplicity of organisation, we must ever take heed of losing enthusiasm for the one personal Saviour and Lord.

Dr. C. H. H. Wright, of Liverpool, preached an able sermon on Sunday at St. Aldate's, on "Christ our Priest and King," which proved quite a "word in season" on this very important subject, and nowhere needing greater and more constant emphasis than in Oxford.

The Arbitration and Peace Association has recently inaugurated a branch in Oxford, and last week an address on "International Disputes" was given by Miss Robinson, of Liverpool, which was an earnest and able appeal for arbitration.

STRATFORD TOWN HALL.

The Gospel services held in the Stratford Town Hall last winter were more than successful. Every Sunday evening the doors had to be closed before the advertised time of commencing the meetings on account of the hall being full, often more were turned away than were packed within the spacious hall. The blessing was large, there were many striking cases of conversion, and still we are hearing of changed lives as the outcome of the Mission.

The National Sunday League, whose aim is to bring a Continental Sunday to England, has again asked for the hall, but notwithstanding much opposition from the enemies of the Cross, Rev. Stather Hunt, of St. Paul's Vicarage, Stratford, has been successful in procuring the building for next winter.

The expenses connected with the movement (which will commence in October next) will be heavy. £200 is needed for the six months. We are looking to your readers to help us in our endeavour to rescue the perishing. C. O. Boardman.

Stratford, E.

MISS HADDON.

About eight years ago I asked prayer in your valuable paper for the village of Fleckney, situated near Leicester, containing about 1250 inhabitants. Through the prayers of your readers we were led to ask Miss Haddon (formerly associated with the late Mrs. Bass) to come and work there in a Mission Hall. She came with her friends the Misses Norman. Also at that time a more earnest clergyman was appointed, with whom they worked most harmoniously. Miss Haddon has inaugurated meetings at the Hall of all kinds. God has most wondrously blessed the work, whole families having been brought to God.

To our sorrow Miss Haddon is leaving in August to go and live with her widowed mother, but she will still be able to continue holding evangelistic missions, for which God has given her special gifts, and to which He has so often given his own seal. Will any who may desire her services either communicate direct to Miss Haddon, Fleckney, Leicester, or to Mrs. Theodore Walker, Glenn Hall, Leicester?

Yours faithfully, A. E. Walker.

IRISH NOTES.

After a useful ministry of fifty years, Rev. R. H. Carson, Baptist minister of Tubbermore, co. Derry, is about to retire from active work.

Mrs. Bill, of the Qua Iboe Mission, West Africa, accompanied by Mary Egbo Egbo, a native convert, has been addressing missionary meetings both in Waterford and Belfast.

Mrs. Philpot, of Knock, Belfast, has given £100 to Methodist missions to aid in supporting native evangelists in Hyderabad, India, in memory of her late husband, Mr. Wm. Philpot.

The General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church met in its annual session, under hopeful auspices in Belfast last week. The reports on memberships, missions, colportage, Sunday-schools, and temperance were very encouraging.

The Belfast branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children continues to do good work. During the past month the inspectors investigated sixty-one cases, involving the welfare of 166 children, of whose parents the average weekly wage was over £1 6s. 5d. In every case drink was found to be the cause of the neglect.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Lifeboat Saturday is to be observed, this year, in Glasgow on the 16th inst.

A very profitable conference of Baptist Church Sunday-school teachers was held in Helensburgh on Saturday, when special attention was given to an able paper on "The Capabilities of Child Piety."

A series of meetings was held last week in various Scottish towns to celebrate the jubilee of General Booth. They were remarkably well attended. The chief object was stated to be the raising of funds for carrying out the over-sea colony section of the Social Scheme.

Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, under the labours of the Rev. Wm. Ross, has now the largest membership in the Free Church—close on 1200. The congregation are taking steps to elect a colleague to their minister, who is utterly unable without such assistance to shepherd such a multitude, and, at the same time, continue the aggressive work which has hitherto been so much owned and blessed by God.

Some time ago the council of the Charity Organisation Society of Glasgow resolved to establish an industrial shelter, where those who say they cannot get work, and beg for a night's lodgings, may be provided with bed and food in exchange for work. An appeal was recently issued for the necessary funds, and the response thereto has been such that the council have taken premises, and are now making arrangements to have the shelter open before the winter.

On Saturday afternoon a meeting was held in the hall of the Young Women's Christian Institute, Bath-street, Glasgow, for the purpose of bidding God-speed to those students who have finished their course of instruction at the Medical Training Home, Dennistoun, and the Ladies' Missionaries' Home, Burnbank Gardens, and who expect shortly to leave this country on missionary work. Rev. James Paton, of St. Paul's, presided, and Dr. J. G. Paton, New Hebrides, gave the parting charge to the students. Mrs. Nisbet presented the certificates of efficiency to the nine ladies, three of whom were from the Burnbank Home, and six from the Medical Training Home.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

Let the home be full of light,
Children's faces shining bright.
Let but gentle words be spoken,
Keep the charm of love unbroken.
Ere sin could blight, or sorrow fade,
Death came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven conveyed,
And bade it blossom there.

In the little daily duties of the home a wise mother will form many links with her child.

Ah, mothers, how keenly do the children watch your looks and ways; how quickly they draw conclusions and form opinions! And how watchful should you be of your words and tempers. Ought a mother to be too busy to be amiable! In the busiest moment you cannot afford to be outside of grace—of graciousness.

"My little boy," said a lady once to a friend of the writer, "can drink his glass of wine like a man." He lived to be her curse, and he died in early manhood a confirmed drunkard. "An exceptional case," says some fond parent. "Perhaps so; but what guarantee have you your lad may not with like evil training prove another such?"

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The Anglo-American Association, 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, was besieged last Sunday by members and friends to hear addresses by Mr. John Wanamaker and other friends who are "doing the Continent," after the Jubilee Conference in London.

Open-air services are being well appreciated again this year at the Woodchurch Association large numbers coming together to hear the Gospel. Services are also being held by the members of the Association at the adjoining village of Bethersden. Tracts for distribution are needed.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Cambridge Institute (463, Holloway-road, N.) reports that since the commencement of the work, eleven years ago, 1066 members have been enrolled. The classes have been very well attended through the year, the Bible-classes on Sundays, Mondays, and Fridays being highly valued. The other evenings are occupied by music lessons, drawing and singing classes, home and foreign missionary working parties. One new feature in the year's work is the formation of the "Cambridge Institute Endeavour Society."

The year 1893 has been one of steady progress in the work of the Travellers' Aid Society. Through the Central Office alone 670 travellers have been met, most of them in London, but many in the provinces and abroad. The report just issued gives many illustrations of the work in London and elsewhere, and numerous cases showing the deplorably helpless condition of many girls, often through their own recklessness. The secretary, Miss Gordon, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W., will afford information or send report.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

After a full explanation of the constitution by Mr. J. L. Nye, the Young People's Society at Gifford Hall Mission, Islington, has been reconstituted on Christian Endeavour lines. Twenty-seven signed the active members' pledge.

The National Council has under consideration a plan for the organisation of a United Society of Christian Endeavour in this country, somewhat similar to the bodies which guide and promote the movement in America, China, Japan, and Australia.

A new Union for Sussex has been inaugurated at Queen-square Church, Brighton. Rev. J. B. Morgan read a paper on "Watchwords of the C.E. Movement"; Rev. W. H. Towers spoke on "The C.E. Movement: its History and Outlook." The Union has fourteen societies, with a membership of 567.

A great meeting to celebrate the first anniversary of the Christ Church Christian Endeavour Society will be held in the Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Thursday, June 21, at 7.45. Rev. F. B. Meyer will take the chair. Speakers: Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Rev. Knight Chaplin. Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson will sing sacred solos.

A united meeting of C.E. Societies was held last week at Union-grove Church, Aberdeen, Rev. S. G. Woodrow presiding. Rev. W. S. Chedburn, the delegate to the C.E. Convention in London, gave an account of the meetings he had attended, speaking in high terms of their Christian spirit and earnest enthusiasm. "The movement," writes a correspondent, "is making good progress in the Granite City."

SOUTH AMERICA.

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow us to inform those of your readers who are interested in South America that the Evangelisation Society for South America has been dissolved, and the funds in hand, amounting to £233, have been dispersed in grants to Mr. Torre's work in Buenos Ayres, the Native Evangelisation Society of Rio Janeiro, and "Help for Brazil," of which Mr. Kalley, Campo Verde, Edinburgh, is hon. secretary.—Yours faithfully,

H. Maxwell Wright.
George Maynard.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—The movement in this country for the political enfranchisement of women appears to be gaining ground. At a great meeting in the Queen's Hall on Saturday evening able addresses in favour of giving women a voice in the election of legislators were given by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss F. E. Willard, and others. It was contended that there are many subjects affecting the social status and condition of the weaker sex in the legislative settlement of which they ought to have a controlling voice.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Peter Thompson, who has been ill, is, we are glad to hear, making steady progress towards recovery.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was compelled last week to forego an engagement at Aldershot and allow himself a little rest.

Rev. Charles Wenyon, M.D., the well-known Wesleyan missionary in China, who is at present in this country, hopes to return to his field of labour very shortly.

Rev. Z. T. Dowen, M.D., has received on his return to his people at Wynne-road, Brixton, after an absence of three months through illness, a very hearty welcome.

Rev. John Wenn, the new president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, is well and widely known as an able and useful minister of the Gospel. For some five years he has filled successfully the post of Connexional secretary.

Miss Annie Macpherson is sailing by the Allan Line s.s. Mongolian from Liverpool to-day (Thursday), with the sixty-eighth party of children. Nearly 6000 emigrated since 1870. Prayer is asked for the Father's tender care over the little ones.

Mr. F. S. Ball, who has laboured during the past fifteen years in connection with the Evangelisation Society, has been suffering from broken health for some few months, and is now compelled to take a long sea voyage. He hopes to be able to continue the same work after a lengthened period of rest. He will sail for Australia about the end of June.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Killarney.—Evangelistic services have been held in the Presbyterian Church, Killarney, by Pastor F. G. Eland, Baptist minister, Athlone.

Harrogate.—The Gospel services held for some years past on Sundays during the season, in the Royal Spa Concert Rooms, Harrogate, have been resumed; Mr. Alexander Marshall being the evangelist for June.

West London Mission.—Rev. Hugh Price Hughes reports that good audiences continue to be attracted to St. James's Hall, Sunday after Sunday. The whole work of the Mission prospers, and "We never had more numerous conversions than we have now."

Dr. Munhall, accompanied by Prof. Birch as singer, has had a time of remarkable blessing in Gospel work at Mobile, Ala. Nine churches united, and the meetings lasted three weeks. Dr. Munhall and his family are purposing to spend a season of rest in this country, reaching Liverpool early in July.

Bishop's Stortford.—The Rowland Taylor Protestant Van of the Church Association has visited this place, and stirring addresses were given to crowds of attentive hearers. On Sunday nearly 1000 people were gathered in the market-place to hear evangelistic addresses from Messrs. G. J. Copping and C. Brooks. A large number of tracts were distributed.

Mr. D. L. Moody (says the correspondent of an American contemporary) has been at Salem, Mass., one of the most conservative spots in the country, and evidently very unresponsive to the great evangelist. The audiences were large, the evangelical elements were united and strong, the evangelist was at his best, but the cloud up to this writing has not burst. Salem has long been regarded as invulnerable to revival methods and measures.

Mr. Varley at Coventry.—St. Mary's Hall was crowded for a welcome meeting to the evangelist, and it was an occasion of much blessing. For weeks past meetings for prayer have been held and a real revival is already in progress. On Sunday Mr. Varley preached three times to crowded congregations. Monday night's audience more than filled the Exchange. There was manifest power with the Word preached. The after meeting showed more than fifty who gave evidence of personal faith in Christ.

Orpington, Kent.—Mr. W. R. Lane conducted a series of services in the Baptist Church here, commencing May 27. Prayer had preceded, and from the first meeting the power of God was realised. The interest and numbers increased daily, and before the week closed several gave clear proof that they had been savingly blessed. The members of the church also testify to great spiritual profit received under the earnest ministry of Mr. Lane. He has been heartily pressed to repeat his visit in the autumn, and if able to accede to the request will be welcomed with joyful hope that the Lord will again use him to the conversion of many. W. U.

Rev. Thomas Cook has had a warm welcome in Adelaide, where his mission has awakened great interest. One great feature was the mid-day meetings for prayer, which were attended by hundreds. The holiness meetings have been seasons of special enlightenment and grace to very many who have long lived in the twilight instead of the sunshine, and in consequence many have removed their spiritual residence from "Grumbling Avenue" to "Thanksgiving Street." The closing night of the mission will long be memorable. Never before was such a crowd packed within the church; a dense mass of faces presented itself wherever the eye turned. But the most interesting sight was that of the new converts, who filled the central area, and many of whom testified to personal blessing received.

OBITUARY.

REV. T. HOWARD GILL.

The death is announced of Rev. T. Howard Gill, vicar of Tonbridge, Kent. Entering the ministry in 1859, he laboured for a time at Malew, Isle of Man, and in 1865 accepted the rectory of St. Jude's, Manchester. He was vicar of Whalley Range for thirteen years, and for two years had a charge at Trowbridge. In 1883 he undertook the chaplaincy of the English Church, Rue d'Aguesseau, Paris, where his sympathy with evangelistic work met with warm appreciation. He became vicar of Tonbridge in 1890. At one time Mr. Gill acted as occasional lecturer for the Church Association. He will be much missed in Tonbridge, and in connection with the work of the Evangelical section of the Church of England.

DR. F. C. ROBERTS, L.M.S., CHINA.

Another comrade has fallen on the field. Only a few weeks have passed since we heard of young Walford Hart's death. And again another of those heart-breaking telegrams from China meets us with the message that Dr. Roberts has been called home. He thought of visiting England this autumn, but already Christ has welcomed his faithful servant to his Father's house. He died of fever on June 6. In the lone graveyard where the remains of Mackenzie and Gilmour were laid to rest now sleeps in Jesus Frederick Charles Roberts. These three brothers-in-arms were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in death they are not divided. They were the three mighty men of our North China Mission, mighty in faith, in prayer, and in labour. It would be hard to say which of the three was chief, but as a Chinaman in this country, when he heard the sad news, said with broken utterances and tears of Dr. Roberts: "Lu-tai-fu always reminded us so much of Jesus in his life, the Chinese always used to say that of him." What simpler or grander testimony could any missionary wish for from the lips of those for whose salvation he laboured?

It is too early, while our hearts are crushed by this great sorrow, to offer any estimate of the work done by Dr. Roberts. Trained at Aberystwith University College, under Principal Edwards, and receiving his professional education at the University of Edinburgh, where he took his M.B., C.M., he went out to China under the London Missionary Society in the autumn of 1887.

The winter of that year was spent with Dr. Mackenzie, and in the spring of 1888 he joined Mr. Gilmour, but was soon after recalled to take over the charge of the Tientsin Hospital on the death of its founder. It was no easy task to succeed so able and successful a worker as Dr. Mackenzie, and especially when the patronage of the Viceroy was withdrawn, and a rival Government institution was commenced on the opposite side of the road. But the equal ability of the new doctor, his Christ-like spirit, and unwearying attention to every patient, even the poorest and most loathsome, could not fail to be immediately acknowledged by the observant Chinese. The hand of the Lord was with him, and the work went on prospering from year to year.

Dr. Roberts was the youngest son of Alderman J. Foulkes Roberts, of Manchester, and nephew of Sir William Roberts. For the parents and friends of the deceased much prayerful sympathy will be felt at this time, and also for the bereaved sister who shared his life in China. T. B.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE. — Mr. Baghdasarian writes from Broussa, Asia Minor:—The sad condition of the country compels us to take more orphan and destitute children from all parts of the empire, though the home is more than full. We therefore ask the help of our friends.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For open-air Sunday evening services at the Strand, Torquay, to be commenced June 17, by Revs. Talbot-Greaves, George Beebee, and J. Nisbet-Wallace.—For the London City Mission Evangelistic choir visiting the Royal Arsenal-square, Woolwich, for open-air meetings on June 15, 22, and 29, and July 6.—For tent meetings now being conducted by Mr. John Elliott, on South-sea Common.—A Christian worker asks earnest prayers for guidance in the right direction to work for Christ.—For services held in Gilford Hall, Sandymount, and at Williamstown, near Dublin.

Notes and Comments.

THE death of the Sultan of Morocco has rendered the position of affairs in that country somewhat critical. The new Sultan is but fourteen years of age, and on account of his youth the situation is very delicate, and there is danger of civil war. Earnest prayer will be made for the missionaries at Fez, Tangier, Rabat, and Morocco City. Some anxiety is felt; but, as a letter from one of these missionaries says, "We feel sure all will be well; we are in God's gracious hands."

Uncomplimentary remarks concerning the churches are made from Secularist and other platforms, and it cannot be denied that there is some truth in them. Professing Christians have not as a rule very largely justified their claim to be followers of Him who "went about doing good, healing all who were oppressed of the devil, for God was with Him." Church-members often more than sufficiently exercise themselves to provide recreation, amusement, for young disciples. Did it never strike them that young people who are really Christians, and love Him who first loved them, would find their fullest enjoyment in following Him in doing good?

Rev. J. B. Meharry and the elders of Crouch Hill Presbyterian Church made a wise step in the right direction when last Friday they received Lady Henry Somerset and other ladies and gentlemen interested in the social well-being of the people. Mr. Meharry presided, and for three hours the large assembly were deeply and seriously interested, as they were informed of the life lived and suffered by their poorer fellow-subjects. Our point just now is this. Not only would the usefulness and happiness of the members, younger and older, of our churches be increased, but many difficulties which arise in the best organised churches would be avoided if their members were united in helping others.

The world knows well enough how Christians ought to comport themselves. And if, from platforms in the parks or elsewhere, unflattering but not altogether untruthful presentments of ourselves are set before us, let us be thankful and amend our ways.

If a foe have kenn'd,
Or, worse than foe, an alienated friend,
Some rib of dry rot in thy ship's stout side,
Think it God's message, and with humble pride,
With heart of oak replace it.

The people took seriously what was said to them, and a more devout and reverent spirit characterised the meeting referred to, than is sometimes seen in more professedly religious services.

"FOR HIS NAME'S SAKE: A Plea for Reverence," is the title of a brief appeal by the author of "The Gospel and its Ministry." (Nisbet. 1s.) We highly appreciate and heartily endorse the object of this treatise. We are living in superficial and therefore irreverent days, and there is every need to be reminded that "Jesus Christ is Lord." We reprobate, with Dr. Anderson, the "mawkish" sentimentalism and the "revolting materialism" of such a versicle as this:

Come, take thy stand beneath the Cross,
So may the blood from out his side
Fall gently on thee, drop by drop;
Jesus, our Love, is crucified.

But we confess that we feel no objection to sing with Dr. Watts:

He is my Friend and Brother too,
Divinely kind, divinely true.

Or with John Newton:

O my Saviour, Shield, and Sun,
Shepherd, Brother, Husband, Friend.

JESUS is not only the personal name of the Virgin's Son; it is the name of God manifested in flesh; the name of Him who saves his people from their sins; the Name, God-given, above every name. He who bore it descended to a depth which none but God could fathom; "wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him the Name which is above every name, that in the Name of JESUS every knee should bow."

JESUS! the Name high over all,
In hell, or earth, or sky;
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly.

Royalty, Divinity, Eternity, are in that Name. Nothing can add to its Majesty. JESUS of Nazareth dwells in the glory of God. May we never utter his Name without remembering his Divine humiliation and his Divine exaltation. What manner of persons ought believers in Him to be, in all holy conversation and godliness, when we remember that we are members of "the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

Rev. W. H. Harwood, of Union Chapel, Islington, when speaking to his congregation of Professor Drummond's new book, wisely reminded them that in books of this type wonderfully little was made of that interruption in the "Ascent of Man" that we call evil—sin. The scientist looks at his facts, "the philosopher sees how ideas and hopes and thoughts have grown." But men are apt to forget that there have been other forces than those which they have discovered. There was something which the old theologians called sin, and for which we had not yet found a better word, that actually did interrupt the course of this progress, this "ascent." Mr. Harwood might have gone farther back; perhaps he did—we are guided by a report in The Independent—and have said that the Bible gives us the idea and the name of "sin"; and he might fairly have demanded that in any scheme of nature and man there should be a place both for sin and redemption, which are facts as much as any that the naturalist has discovered.

Mr. Harwood was right in saying that he did not know that it was much good speaking of the "Ascent of Man" to any in whose heart there was the "beginning of evil that threatened to drag them down to the life of the brutes; not much good speaking great words about progress, if in the life were hidden secret sins that were eating away its strength and manliness." Speculations or reasonings which do not take in all the facts are misleading, and any ideas of man which turn the soul away from its own condition and danger are surely hurtful. While these enquiries into remote and doubtful regions are going forward, the Christian's true work is to show the sinfulness of sin, and the sufficiency of Christ as a Saviour.

We wish that the Premier's recent remark with regard to the danger of "irresponsible language" could catch the attention of rash and uncharitable persons who are always sowing bitter feeling between nations. He said, "I am not sure that the danger of irresponsible language is not the greatest that threatens the peace of Europe. I, at any rate, shall take no part in such language." Every Englishman should discourage remarks which disparage and depreciate other nations, which inflate English pride and irritate their pride. Boys especially should be taught that God has made all the different races in love and wisdom, that Christ has died for them all, and that there is a work for each and all to do. We should frown upon the mistaken so-called "patriotism" which can see no good in anything which is not English. The foolish, irresponsible language of such talkers prepares for days of trouble.

The Arbitration Alliance has concluded that the moment is opportune for securing an expression of opinion from the nation as to the duty of placing a check upon the continuous growth of armaments. A national memorial, to be signed by representatives of every church, labour union, and municipality, as well as by all the most influential men and women in the country, says:—

The pressure of military and naval expenditure threatens States with bankruptcy; cripples the industries, and impoverishes the homes of the people; and diverts to wasteful preparation for slaughter funds that would otherwise be available for purposes of social amelioration and reform. This ruinous rivalry in armaments is the inevitable, although deplorable, result of the absence of any international understanding. It can only be arrested by an international agreement.

We would, therefore, respectfully but earnestly suggest that communications should be opened with the European Powers, in order to ascertain whether it may not be possible, as a first step towards arresting the further growth of national armaments, and reducing burdens already almost intolerable, to secure a common and general agreement that, until the close of the century, no State will sanction any increase of its military and naval expenditure beyond the maximum of the estimates of the present year.

The memorial has already been influentially signed. In the course of next month it will, it is hoped, receive the signatures of most of the leading men and women in the country. Printed forms of the memorial will be forwarded to any person willing to help; but there is no necessity to observe any particular form, as there is in the case of petitions to the House of Commons. In the case of single signatures, all that is necessary to do is to forward a letter authorising the secretary, Dr. Darby, Arbitration Alliance Office, 47, New Broad-street, E.C., to append a given name to the memorial.

The subject of peace, now prominently before Europe, has called forth an article from the Civilta Cattolica, in which the writer advocates the supreme claim of the Pope to be international arbitrator. He bases it on five grounds: (1) The Pope's power is spiritual, and therefore more removed from mere political considerations than that of any other monarch; (2) he is habitually an old man and celibate, devoid of family ties and uninfluenced by passion; (3) he is compelled to take as his model in the eyes of the world that Divine Prince of Peace whose representative on earth he is." The other two reasons, which are as bad as these, we need not give. We yield to none in our desire for peace, but we do not believe in the Pope as the medium of it. Put things into his hand, and soon every army of Europe would be in motion, and the nations deluged in blood to restore to him his temporal power. Does the writer of the article suppose that English Protestants, who have been the leaders in the modern movement for peace, read only such books as are not named in the Index Expurgatorius?

There is something terrible in the contrast between the happy freedom into which the Gospel of the grace of God introduces the soul and the harsh bondage of the Order of the Jesuits. Count Paul von Hoensbroech's book, "My Withdrawal from the Order of the Jesuits," noticed in the current Review of Reviews, gives a graphic account of the means which are adopted to paralyse the soul. "Jesuitism," he says, "suppresses, ay, disowns to a certain extent the individuality of the individual, his character, his ego." His liberty of feeling is slowly but surely conquered, and he becomes presently merely a flesh and blood automaton. The youth of the recruits, who are mostly between sixteen and twenty years of age, renders their character amenable to the treatment it is to receive—submission heightens its susceptibility. The mental strait-waistcoat is put on the novice for two years, and never for a moment relaxed. All his work is given him to do; he is called away at the absolute discretion of another; he is never allowed to remain long at any one thing. If he is thirsty, he must ask leave to drink; if he wants the simplest thing he must again ask leave to get it. His room is frequently changed; the things in it are changed; he must have neither likes nor dislikes. The whole system is an outrage on the nature God has given him, and as for the impulses of grace, the motions of the Spirit, there is no room for them.

The Daily News has given prominence to the following paragraph. The same "regrettable mistakes"—and worse—always happen under this system :—

Not long ago a well-known actress of the Théâtre Français was arrested in Paris, and falsely charged by a stupid policeman with frequenting the Palais Royal for an improper purpose. She had been guilty of nothing worse than looking in the jewellers' shops which abound in that pleasant spot out of the bustle and turmoil of the Paris streets. A similarly regrettable mistake, that has led to tragic consequences, has been made by a member of the "Police des Mœurs" at Marseilles. He arrested a respectable young dressmaker, aged nineteen years, on suspicion, and it was not until she had been in the prison cell for a whole night among criminals that she succeeded in establishing the fact that she was of unblemished reputation. The occurrence preyed upon the young girl's mind. "I could not bear my parents to hear of my misfortune," she said more than once to a friend. In the end she committed suicide by suffocating herself with charcoal fumes. In a pathetic letter written before the deed was committed, she said—"The police are the cause of my death."

This question will never be rightly handled until the share men have in it, is taken into account, and dealt with.

"The Invalid Children's Aid Association" must be doing a good work when it takes compassion on such poor children as Mrs. Hodgson Burnett describes in Scribner. Here is one of the objects of its care. A lady found a little fellow of seven, deformed and suffering from spinal complaint :—

His head was bound up in an apparatus of iron and leather, and he sat on the top of the stairs, leaning wearily against the wall. His mother went out every morning at eight, and got home at ten at night. While she was away he had no one to talk to, no toys to play with, nothing to do but listen to the children playing in the court below, and was too much of a cripple to be able to get out even to watch them. His food for the day consisted of a bit of bread, and this was a sample of his daily life at seven years old.

The Association tries to give such desolate little ones some cheerful companionship; it sends them toys, books, pictures, food, and the sympathy of loving friends. May-be it does not cover all the area of need; at our own doors may be some little sufferer whom Christ would have us care for, for his name's sake. Almost anyone might do this good work, the boys and girls, the young men and maidens, old men and women. The spirit of love will do it all.

At the London Wesleyan Methodist Council the Rev. Dr. Rigg is reported to have said :—

If they succeeded in bringing their young people under proper spiritual influence they would secure all at which they aimed. They must beware of envying too much the Church of England. It was said that their young people did not understand Methodism. Such with equal force might be said of their people of older growth. If their ministers would instruct their people in the peculiarities of their system they would do great good. They must take the initiative. He had little faith in mere text-books. Mere machinery would not help to improve matters. What was wanted was sanctified earnestness, entire consecration. They must get their young people converted, and everything else would follow.

We respectfully ask whether Dr. Rigg and other good men, whom we esteem highly in love for their work's sake, think John Wesley intended to substitute the word "Methodism" for "Christianity," as is so habitually done by Methodist Christians? And do not "the peculiarities of their system" come under the head of "mere machinery"? It can scarcely be meant that these peculiarities vitally differentiate Methodism from other Evangelical Christianity; but if this be not intended, how would it do much good if their ministers would instruct their people in the peculiarities of their system? Would it do any other than intensify their sectarianism?

Apart from this, however, Dr. Rigg's utterance contains matter of great moment as to the value of living personal influence, the importance of true conversion in early life. There cannot be a doubt that many churches are hampered and hindered by the presence in them of persons—perhaps still young, or who were admitted when young—who never were truly converted. If Dr. Rigg's ideal were realised a mighty change all round would, indeed, ensue. The very existence of churches demands the conversion, the sanctified earnestness, the entire consecration to God of those who compose them.

Much as we regret the straitened means of the London hospitals, the pinch may lead to more economical management. None of us, perhaps, know how well we can do without certain things we have had until we can no longer obtain them. And so some hospitals, as Dr. Coryn, of Brixton, writes in The Echo, have learnt to do with much less alcohol; other economies have also been accomplished. Some places, however, will not reform. It will be for the public to speak out; at any rate, the hospitals might all be equally economical in discontinuing the use of alcohol. It would do the patients no physical harm, and would prove a practical lesson in temperance which might do them unspeakable spiritual good. There is more at stake than economy, though that is always important—a form of honesty, in fact.

Those pioneers in the organisation of labour, the Northumberland colliers, and, let us add, their masters, are pressing forward with the good idea of a Board of Conciliation. A joint committee of masters and men having drawn up rules for the working of the board, the miners have by a large majority declared their approval of the rules, so that the happy scheme is within the reach of realisation. These efforts are all doing something to mitigate the bitterness of class hatred, and to show men how truly the interests of one are the interests of all. The spread of them will open a smoother path for the Gospel of love. The mere time spent on labour contests is a terrible deduction from time which might go to higher interests than those of wages.

"A Minister of Thirty Years' Standing" has again raised, in the columns of The British Weekly, the question of self-sustaining mission churches. It will have to be reconsidered. Are we not too fearful of the ability of converts to guide their affairs, and develop their own church life? Are not Europeans too anxious to see the European type with its order and method and regularity reproduced in every land? Are we not too like those methodical persons who imagine nothing can be done by men and women of irregular ways? But is there not a method for the Englishman, another for the negro, another for the Hindoo, and another for the Chinaman? We await light on this subject. We may be hindering the Gospel by helping it too much.

In March last we called attention to the statement of a Russian traveller, M. Nicolas Notovitch, that, while being nursed in the monastery of Hemis, near Leh, on the borders of Tibet, he had discovered an ancient Pali MS. containing a "Life of Jesus." Pressed for proofs of his unsupported story, M. Notovitch has maintained a stolid silence. Tuesday's Daily News contained what cannot but be considered a demonstration of the worthlessness of his assertions. The exposure comes from Rev. F. B. Shawe, Moravian missionary at Leh; and it shows, among other things, that there are no old books in the monastery, that Pali is not understood there, and that "the prophet Issa" is not venerated by the Buddhists, as M. Notovitch affirmed. Moreover, Mr. Shawe shows that not only is the name of M. Notovitch absent from the medical register of the monastery, but careful inquiry among the inhabitants of Ladak has failed to elicit any information regarding a traveller having met with an accident on the road and been nursed by the monks. It is questionable if we shall hear any more of "The Tibetan Life of Christ."

CHRISTIAN UNION AND THE BIBLE.

Chillingworth's immortal aphorism, "The Bible, and the Bible alone, is the religion of Protestants," has been far more admired and applauded than it has been acted upon. When once this grave and weighty declaration shall be thoroughly understood, deeply felt, and universally acted upon, the effect in drawing Christians closer to each other will be surprising. It is human authority that has to a very considerable extent separated brethren, and that still keeps them apart. It is the names and systems of men that stand in the way of union; just as the Church at Corinth, instead of gathering in one body round their common Lord, was seen in separate divisions, each clustering round the name of Paul, Apollos, or Cephas. The multitude have never searched the Scriptures for themselves, and are therefore following in the track of their leaders; but when they shall turn from these to the lively oracles, and shall be found listening to their inspired and infallible responses, instead of prostrating their understandings before the creeds, catechisms, and articles of fallible men, they will not be astonished to find how rapidly and how closely they can be made to approximate to each other.

Non-Christian Races.

THEIR NATIONAL AND SOCIAL CONDITION.

In a former paper it was stated that, according to the authority of the most competent geographers, the population of the earth amounted to about 1500 millions, less than one-third being nominally Christian, and more than two-thirds non-Christian. Let us now inquire into the national and social state of these great masses of mankind, leaving for a subsequent paper an examination of their moral and spiritual state, with a view to ascertain the influence of religion on men's condition in this life, and as a preparation for the life to come.

Everywhere a great, solemn law is seen to be operative, conditioning the well-being of all masses of mankind, alike in tribes, states, and empires. It is this—that to the degree God is known or unknown, and the truths of the Bible operative, or corrupted, or unknown, are communities civilised or barbarous, in a hopeful or hopeless condition.

The Bible declarations relative to the effect of our relations to Him and his law, are descriptively as true to-day as they were more than 2000 years ago, because based not on the incidents of the times, but on eternal, inexorable law:—"Their sorrows shall be multiplied that exchange the Lord for another god." "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of violence." "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." "For that nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish: yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

This great law, which though slowly yet surely regulates the rise and fall of all nations, is essentially moral and spiritual. It is taught and enforced in the Bible as in no other professedly sacred book. It receives its highest, clearest expression in the New Testament, and, though far short of what should be, its principles are more or less operative wherever Christianity prevails.

Among the qualities which make Bible truths and principles effective for good are these:—They are invariably moral. They make for truth, righteousness, justice, purity, love, mindfulness of others. They do this under the highest sanctions and the most effective and constraining of motives—love to God and love to men—and that all men in all the relations of life should be governed, not by gain, pleasure, expediency, opportunism, but by the eternal, unalterable laws of truth, justice, love. These principles are at least acknowledged by great numbers of men, wherever Christianity is the common profession of belief. It hardly need be added that neither they nor anything of a similar nature are acknowledged or operative, to an equal degree, in any non-Christian land.

Let us look, then, at the state of the communities where these are operative or inoperative. Civilisation is a test that may fairly be applied to all races, for it expresses the struggles of humanity after an ideal state, embodying in the best and wisest of the people what is most desirable for the well-being of persons, of families, and of states. Applying this test in its broad, general acceptation, we see that every Christian State is more or less civilised. We see, further, that in proportion as the Christianity is pure is the civilisation high and progressive. The most advanced States, the strongest and most stable, are also the most Protestant. Below these stand the Roman Catholic ones. Yet lower are those professing Oriental Christianity. And then follow, down and down, Mahommedan, Buddhist, Hindu, and unsystematised polytheistic communities, such as prevail all over Africa.

If the condition of society under these various forms of religion be analysed, the reasons for this gradation will be seen. Laws and usages based on reason, justice, humanity, and the rights of all men, and in harmony with the truths and principles of Christianity, are acknowledged in all Protestant countries. They are less generally received in Roman Catholic countries and Russia, with the result of lower forms of civilisation; and they can hardly be said to exist in those not Christian. There is not in all Asia and Africa a free, representative native government to be found, excepting in Japan (and that has recently been copied from England and the United States), and nowhere is there a truly civilised non-Christian State.

Then, with the one exception of intemperance, every form of vice and evil is far more prevalent in non-Christian than in Christian, and especially Protestant, lands. This is so of oppression, fraud, falsehood, violence, cruelty, and impurity. Those best acquainted with almost any non-Christian race affirm that the dreadful portraiture of heathen life given by the Apostle Paul in the first chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, is true to-day!

Think, too, of the great features of life and opinion in these "dark places of the earth." In every Mahommedan country the government is intolerably despotic and corrupt; whilst despotism, polygamy and slavery are unchallenged institutions. In all Buddhist countries infanticide, unnatural crime, fraud, and mendacity are common. Among the Hindu nationalities, caste, child marriage, perpetual widowhood are fixed institutions. And these three great systems of superstition cover more than half the human race.

Every other polytheistic race is barbarous, and whilst falsehood and violence are as common as they well can be, treachery, murder, the rule of might instead of right, infanticide, the destruction of the weak and the aged, and cannibalism, are more or less prevalent.

Poverty, want, pain, disease, sorrow, ignorance, characterise every heathen land. The lowest Protestant country is in every respect superior to the highest non-Christian one. This is a statement of fact, which can be sustained by any amount of competent and impartial authority.

Nor is there hope of deliverance from any internal source. But there is hope from pure Christianity. Few things in history are so remarkable as the progress in all that enriches and elevates society made by avowedly Protestant countries—in freedom, wealth, power, art, science, and philanthropy. A most suggestive paper might be written on the manner in which, during the past 300 years, there has been, at the end of every fifty years, a marked advance of Protestant states over Roman Catholic ones, on all these lines. Yet more marked has been the progress of these over non-Christian races. Indeed, it may be affirmed that whilst the former have advanced with a well-ordered rapidity, such as the world has never before seen, the non-Christian races have hardly moved at all; excepting when the impetus has come from outside—from a Christian people. No Asiatic race has made for centuries any marked advance in religion, morals, government, science, and no African race for over 2000 years has made any progress in these or any other direction. They have not even learnt to build durable, decent habitations.

What is the prime cause of this vast difference in the conditions of human society? Some races are no doubt intellectually superior to others, even as individuals differ one from the other. And the physical and geographical advantages of some countries over others are obvious. But these do not suffice to explain the disparities we have indicated. They cannot lie in intellectual power, because some great non-Christian races, notably the Arabs, Chinese, and Hindus, are as rich in intellectual gifts as any Christian people; yet, after inheriting a simple form of civilisation or advancing some way on the path of progress, they halted, and have made no advance for centuries! Nor is it owing to geographical and climatic advantages, because some of the fairest, richest regions have been held by gifted races, who have developed no civilisation, whilst some Christian races, inhabiting ungenial and barren regions, have turned wildernesses into gardens and poor countries into rich ones.

Even gifted races inheriting the richest, fairest portions of the earth, and great advantages from ancient civilisations, but with a spurious religion, have made no progress during a thousand years; but when an inferior race in sterner regions has become touched by the light and life of the Gospel, a change at once begins which influences human hearts and lives, morally and spiritually, in a manner analogous to that mighty physical power in nature which causes the spring to develop out of the winter.

We claim, then, for Christianity a power to bless mankind even in this life, such as no other religion, or any social, scientific, philanthropic, or philosophical system has ever possessed! We claim for it not only a power for good, far superior to that of any other religion or system, but a plenitude of power sufficient to meet the needs of any man or body of men.

It has done much, as the plain facts of national life everywhere prove. It can do far more than it has done. The evils in any so-called Christian land are in no sense produced by Christianity—they exist in spite of it. The defect and drawback are not in it, but in our humanity.

It is glorious to think of what "pure religion" could accomplish for any community, for any family, if they would yield themselves to its graciousness and power. It is saddening to observe how few do this to any adequate degree, and how many resist its operation alike in themselves and others. (Psalm lxxii.; Isaiah xi.; xlviii. 17-22; lx.; Ephes. iii. 20, 21; Phil. iv. 2-9).

PER CRUCEM AD LUCEM.

Not for us through gateways golden;
We must tread the pathway olden;
Struggle on through wrong to right,
'Tis but through the Cross to light.

Not for us the gilded pleasure,
When we seek a heavenly treasure;
We must conquer in the fight,
Though 'tis through the Cross to light.

Not for us to make our moaning;
We must heal earth's sadder groaning—
Keep our armour clean and bright—
Battle through the Cross to light.

Not for us to shun a sorrow,
Grieve o'er what may come to-morrow;
We must keep this thought in sight:
'Tis but through the Cross to light.

To the Church of Christ Jesus.

By ROBERT ARTHINGTON, Leeds.

Let us assume that we all have one object distinctly in view, viz., to forward the reign of our Lord Jesus on the earth, fully and universally, whether by his Spirit in us simply, or also by Himself in person; and the present saving of souls—of them who shall be heirs of salvation. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel." Does this rest on Christians as members of Christ, as individuals, or as societies? If it be as a body, should we not follow the practice of the Apostles and of evangelists of the early ages of Christianity? Take the case of the Apostle Thomas in India, and of the Nestorians in Western China and probably in Central Asia, and that of evangelical men in North Africa, as samples of effective work during the generations before the invention of printing and the ready circulation of the Holy Scriptures.

God is surely never disappointed, and will ever carry on to the end a good work which He has begun; so that we need not fear to leave to God's care those hopeful converts we have gained in places central in large areas, where we have, by his grace, imparted eternal truth to believers—believers who have become living, imperishable souls. We have given them in printed Gospels the holy Word of God, which they can read, also the Acts of the Apostles; and may pass on in the glorious progress of sowing incorruptible seed, until, as by the angels in Matt. xxiv. 31, throughout the world the heirs of salvation are gathered into the fold of Christ!

There are many considerations to be kept in view in making known the Saviour of the world to the heathen. There is the right use of time and money, in view of the great work to be done, and in connection with a knowledge of God's purpose in having the Gospel of his Son preached in all the world for a witness to all nations. It is quite evident that it is our duty to conduct the evangelisation of the world on his plan, if we can discern it from Holy Scripture. Now, I ought to assume that you are conversant with the course of action God has taken all through sacred history, viz.: He has ever been "taking out" of the human race "a people for his name," "a holy nation," "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." The Jews and Gentiles were to be fellow-heirs—one body. Witness Abel, Seth, Enoch, Melchizedek, Abimelech, and Job; Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; Joseph, Moses, Joshua, Caleb, Eldad and Medad; Samuel and David; Daniel and the holy prophets, and some of the kings and people of Judah; Nehemiah, Ezra, and Zerubbabel, and a goodly number of devout persons in our Lord's time, and since, down to the present day. (See Rev. v. 9, vii. 9.)

All these from many nations and tribes—whilst our Saviour's command has been in gradual course of fulfilment during the eighteen hundred and sixty years since his ascension to Heaven. The secular history of nations also shows that God's care in salvation is specially for those whom He calls: "not many mighty, not many noble, are called." And He has ordained that they should bring forth fruits of righteousness. Jesus says (John xvii. 9), "I pray not for the world, but for those whom Thou hast given me out of the world." I greatly desire that, whether we be Independents, Episcopalians, or Presbyterians, Baptists, Calvinistic Methodists, or Moravians, we may make the best use of our resources.

Let us then make it a first care that each nation of the world, and each tribe of mankind, can either read, or hear read in their own tongue, or in the great language commonly used in the country around them, the precious Word of God; those living words of which our Lord says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." It appears to me that establishing a nominal Christian community in each place where a genuine Church of Christ is formed, does not comprise a right conception of the mighty power of God in connection with the church so formed, and its gifted power of standing, and also of extending its light—together with the determinateness of God's counsel as regards all whom He is pleased to "call." By his servants in this dispensation, He calls on all men everywhere to repent, whilst by his own counsel, and in the order of his providence, He has determined whom He will call to his Kingdom and glory.

The missionary in each case, being a man of living faith, which he strengthens constantly by meditation on God's Word, and by prayer and holy walk, could always with absolute confidence ask God—in each case of teaching a tribe speaking an unknown tongue—to give him the means, in his wondrous providence, by an interpreter or otherwise, of setting forth the truth as it is in Jesus. Thus all tribes of the world might be compassed, the Lord permitting; and all should be reached by the Church of God without delay. In undertaking, in the Lord's name, work like that in which we are engaged, my object and purpose are simply to give the Truth of God to those peoples and tribes who have never distinctly heard with the outward ear, or read with the outward eye, the amazing and most blessed thoughts and words of the Word of God concerning eternal life.

To do this wisely and fully, I think that the Christian Church, and so all individual Christians and Christian Societies, in accordance with our Lord's last command to his disciples—having first ascertained carefully which parts of the world, or which peoples or tribes of mankind, have never had the truth of God fairly brought before them, or had the opportunity as a class (as in the case of the Mohammedans and Jews) of reading it or hearing it read—ought to lose no time in seeking by most earnest prayer and personal effort to bring the Gospel to them. This would be by preaching, and by teaching a certain number of every people and tribe, speaking a language differing from all others, how to read—either in their own tongue in a translation made for them (if they number 100,000, or thereabouts), or in the language of a neighbouring or surrounding people. There may be cases where two or more dialects can be utilised as one, giving but one translation of a book, with vocabulary to suit, or where words may be placed interlinearly where some of the words of tribes differ materially. Anyhow, we ought to lose no time to bring (or to have brought) the Gospel to all peoples and tribes on the face of the earth; so that all peoples and tribes everywhere can read, or hear read by their fellows, the truth as it is in Jesus.

In accordance with this carefully-considered scheme for compassing the world with Gospel light, I desire to choose certain points on the globe, widely spread in the first instance, as are the stars in the heavens,—suggestively apparent. Funds, by faith and prayer for the Saviour's work, may be made to go far, I believe, as the five loaves and the few fishes availed much; so the rays of light from these planted posts would stream wide and far. Throughout large lands—several on the face of the earth (excepting, for the present, large areas in Africa)—I think there is a great dominant language generally spoken.

Unless the population of any particular tribe extended numerically to, or towards, one hundred thousand, perhaps it would not be worth while to translate into that language, but rather to teach ten or twelve persons from such tribe to read the dominant language. Thus, in the first instance, I should stop long enough with each tribe to teach ten or twelve or more to read, say, John's and Luke's Gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles, in a language they could understand; and, meanwhile, I should preach the Gospel throughout the tribe, carefully noting the several eligible central positions and terminal borders of each. After a first work thus with each tribe, I should direct a continuously repeated visitation of each tribe in succession, and assist to form in each tribe a church of Christ, advising to build a place of worship: afterwards giving counsel and necessary assistance at the times of successive visits, always proportioning the initial work and the after-visitations to the number of efficient workers.

But the Church of Christ should have a plan at once to embrace his last command! If the various societies would commit their present fields and circuits of preaching to the Lord in charge, and, in his Spirit, to the most advanced members of each native church, dividing the rest of the heathen world amongst them in wise arrangement without overlapping—always welcoming other workers in harmony, to parts of their several spheres not yet occupied—they might undertake all parts of the globe where the art of reading is not known, and, with the aid of Bible evangelists, the whole might be evangelised, whilst the real Christians of the churches, entrusted to God and to self-government, would, whilst "prayer was made without ceasing of the Church" (Acts xii.), be fired in the Spirit of the Lord, and would help mightily.

MORE OF GOD.

At the present time there is a growing desire for refreshing and revival, and a profound recognition of the fact that the special and supreme need of the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church, can be declared in one word—God; we want more of God. Meetings, conventions, books, sermons, choirs, all more or less good and helpful, we have in abundance. But these things are not God; and let it be said reverently, with uncovered head—there is not enough of God in them.

When God comes in, man is displaced. This has been the great characteristic of every work of grace since the dawn of evangelism. And this is as it should be. We would see no man save Jehovah-Jesus only. John must point away from himself to the Lamb of God; the poor frail instrument must be lost sight of, and only the mighty worker seen.

Oh, fellow-servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, busily engaged in holy service from week-end to week-end, shall we not fall upon our faces in self-abasement and humiliation before our God, while He talks with us as He did to Abraham? Has not the call to prepare for blessing reached our ears? If we are separate from all uncleanness, if we banish all unbelief from our hearts, and draw nigh to God, He will draw nigh to us, bringing days of heaven upon the earth. And if it is true that half our failures arise from our impatience of solitude, shall we not for awhile take our eyes off men and methods and machinery, and glance at—nay, gaze into—the face of the Triune God, so that the Divine Spirit may equip us for service, and transform us, by a sublime and supernatural process, "into the same image from glory to glory," and fill us with all the fulness of God? Then the giants of infidelity, impurity, indifference, and inconsistency, which defeat us now, will look like grasshoppers, and God, the mighty, almighty God, will be God to us.

"Oh that Thou wouldest rend the heavens, that Thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence."

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

V.—AT THE TEMPLE GATES.

(Jeremiah vii.—x.)

Bewildered in its search, bewildered with the cry,
"Lo here! lo there, the Church!" poor sad humanity
Through all the dust and heat turns back, with bleeding feet,
By the weary road it came
Unto the simple thought, by the Great Master taught,
And that remaineth still:
Not he that repeateth the Name,
But he that doeth the will.

Longfellow.

We must read the records given in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, to understand the remarkable movement which was on foot during the time covered by the first twelve chapters of the Book of Jeremiah. In his collected words he scarcely refers to the great reforms being introduced by his friend, the King Josiah; and he is scarcely mentioned in the historical records. But there is no doubt that he was in constant and close communication with the king and the little group of earnest reformers that clustered round his person, and which included Shaphan, Hilkiah, the prophet Zephaniah, the prophetess Huldah, and his own friend, Baruch.

Josiah promoted measures of reform from the earliest years of his reign; but at first he was opposed by the dead weight of national apathy to the cause he espoused. The worship of idols—for which there are twenty different terms in the Hebrew language—had so many fascinations from the use of the peoples around, and from its appeals to sensual passion, that the mass of the people had no desire to revert to the austerer, purer worship of their forefathers. Besides, had not Solomon the magnificent, four hundred years before, erected on the southern slopes of Olivet shrines to Ashtoreth, the goddess of Sidon, to Chemosh and Milcom, the national gods of Moab and Ammon? The rites of heathen superstition were also maintained by a vast herd of false prophets and priests, who, like parasites, throve in the corruption of their time. There was a fatal compact and collusion between the two bodies which boded no good for the efforts of the zealous band of reformers who gathered round the king, because they appeared to give a Divine sanction to the abominations that were being perpetrated. A wonderful and horrible thing had come to pass in the land; the prophets prophesied falsely, and the priests bare rule by their means, and the people loved to have it so.

The co-operation of Zephaniah and Jeremiah was therefore exceedingly valuable. Whilst Josiah wrought from without, pursuing a career of uncompromising iconoclasm, they wrought from within, appealing to the conscience and heart—here pleading the claims of Jehovah on the thoughtless crowds; there taunting the idol-worshippers with the futility of their reliance on the creations of their fancy; and again announcing the swift descent of national judgments on the national sins which were desolating the country.

But notwithstanding their united efforts, the cause of reform moved slowly, or might even have come to a standstill—as an express train when buried in an avalanche of soft snow—had not the discovery, made in the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign, given a new and unexpected impetus to the ancient religion of Israel. And though it is not exactly an incident in the life of Jeremiah, he was so closely associated with the men who were principally concerned, and his third discourse is so evidently suggested by the reforms to which it led, that we must briefly touch on it.

I.—THE FINDING OF THE LAW.

At the time to which this incident must be referred, the Temple was under repair. It sadly needed it; for the lewd emblems of idolatry had been erected within its sacred precincts, and beside them the dwellings of the wretched men and women associated with the impious rites permitted on the site where David worshipped, and Solomon spread his hands in solemn dedicatory prayer. Probably also the fabric was showing signs of dilapidation and age, for two and a-half centuries had elapsed since it had been completely restored by Joash.

The work was entrusted to the superintendence of Hilkiah, the high-priest, who was assisted by a little group of Levites; and the cost was contributed by the people who passed through the Temple gates. On one occasion, the King sent Shaphan, his secretary and chancellor, who was the father of Gemariah and a good man—who afterwards defended Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvi. 10–19, 25)—that he might take an account with Hilkiah of the money which had been gathered by the door-keepers. When they had attended to this important business, and delivered the money into the hands of the workmen that had the oversight of the work, Hilkiah, the high priest, said unto Shaphan, the scribe, "I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord."

It was a very startling discovery. The Rabbinical tradition states that it was discovered inside a heap of stones, where it was hidden when Ahaz destroyed all the other copies of the holy books. Or it may have been hidden away in the Ark, which Ahaz may have removed to one of the rooms of the Temple, where dust and lumber concealed it. There has been much discussion as to what that roll of ancient MSS. contained, some holding that it was the entire Pentateuch, others that it was the Book of Deuteronomy. It has even been asserted by some that a pious fraud was perpetrated on Josiah and his times by some well-meaning individual, who had just written the Book of Deuteronomy with his own hand, and now foisted it on Hilkiah and the rest, as a venerable production, dating from the days of Moses! To what miserable straits they are reduced who would have us accept such wanton speculations! Let the critics betake themselves to the examination of the ancient MSS., if they will. We thank them for the facts they bring to light; in their own province we give them credit for painstaking and erudition, but we refuse to accept their theories. Let them give us the facts, and we can formulate the theories for ourselves. Even if it could be shown—which we hold it cannot—that Moses was not the author of the Book of Deuteronomy, it is surely utterly inconceivable that the mind through which that sublime treatise was given to the world could have been a party to a fraud so unblushing and scandalous as to palm off its own offspring under the august sanction of the name of Moses!

After careful thought, we are disposed to think that the Book of Deuteronomy is specially referred to here, though not to the exclusion of the other books of Moses. It seems unquestionable that this portion alone of the Pentateuch was ordained to be written out by each king on his accession, and was read before the assembled congregation once in each seven years. The terms of the covenant made afterwards by Josiah and his people are precisely those with which the book of Deuteronomy abounds; and the phrases which characterise it are perpetually recurring in the addresses and appeals of Jeremiah. This book dyed his speech, as it had done that of Amos, Hosea, Isaiah, and Micah.

Its discovery by Hilkiah made as great a sensation as that of the Latin Bible by Luther in the library of the old Augustinian monastery at Erfurt. Shaphan read parts of it before the king, and probably chapter xxviii. "And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes." In hot haste he sent a deputation of his most trusty friends to one of the suburbs of the city, where the prophetess Huldah dwelt. Jeremiah may have been at this time at Anathoth; or he may have been too young in his work to be recognised as an authority in so grave a crisis. The question to be asked was, whether the nation must expect to suffer all the awful curses which those words predicted; and the answer was an uncompromising "Yes," though their infliction might be for a brief space postponed.

Forthwith the king summoned a mighty convocation of all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests and the prophets, and all the people, both small and great; and from a platform erected in the entrance of the inner court, he read aloud all the words of the book of the covenant, which had been found in the house of the Lord. And further, he solemnly renewed the covenant between Jehovah and the people, that they would walk after the Lord, and keep his commandments, his testimonies, and his statutes. Perhaps, as one commentator suggests, an ox was slain, and the king and people passed between the severed halves in witness of their solemn resolve.

Henceforth the work of reform broke out afresh. The tide of popular feeling rose high, and the reformers took it at its flow. The black-robed priests were suppressed; the emblems of idolatry were cast out of the Temple, and burnt without the city; the dwellings of the miserable votaries of lust were destroyed, Tophet was defiled, and the high places levelled to the ground. Thus, outwardly at least, Israel became again true to its allegiance to the God of their fathers, and free from the taint of idolatry.

II.—THE DIVORCE BETWEEN RELIGION AND MORALITY.

The influence of the Court: the finding and reading of the law; the splendid success of the great Passover which Josiah instituted; the glow of the crusade against the old idolatries—sufficed for a time to effect widespread reform, and the fickle populace gave an outward adhesion at least to the service of Jehovah. The Temple courts were thronged; the rites and forms of the Levitical code were rigorously maintained; every point of ceremonial allegiance to the institutions of Moses was punctiliously observed. But there was no real change in disposition. The reformation was merely superficial. Beneath the fair exterior the grossest forms of evil were seething in hideous corruption; now and again breaking forth into the light of day, and awaiting the death of Josiah, when they once more asserted themselves.

Jeremiah was profoundly disappointed at the result of a movement which had promised so well. He detected its true character, and sought an opportunity of showing its insufficiency to avert the wrath of God, which was gathering like a thunder-cloud upon the horizon. Taking up his position in the gate of the Temple, on the occasion of some great festival when the people of Judah were gathered with the citizens of Jerusalem to worship Jehovah, he poured forth a torrent of remonstrance and appeal.

He was not unaware of the attention paid by the nation to outward ritual, which they mistook for religion. The incense of Sheba, and the costly fine-scented cane fetched from Arabia or India, and burnt for the sake of its rich perfume, stole through the Temple precincts (vi. 20). They took care to call the Temple the House of God, and to stand before Him as his people (vii. 10). The burnt offering and other sacrifices were rigorously distinguished from one another, the priests and people feeding on those parts alone permitted by the Mosaic ritual (vii. 21). It was the boast of the people that the law of the Lord had been committed to their charge, and that they had therefore special claim upon his forbearance (viii. 8). And against every accusation which the prophet laid at the nation's door, they pointed to the order and beauty of the restored ritual; of their splendid Temple; of their privileged condition as the chosen people of God; and cried, "The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, are these!"

But beside this outward decorum, the grossest sins were permitted with unblushing shame. One of the charges which Jeremiah brings against his people is, that they had lost the power of blushing (viii. 12). The shamefulness of their sin was apparent in their shamelessness. They oppressed the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. Theft, murder, and adultery, showed themselves in open day. So frequent and atrocious were their crimes of violence, that they seemed transformed into a horde of robbers—the Temple their den; lies flew from their tongues like arrows from a bow; and whilst men spake peaceably to their neighbours in their ears, they were lying in wait to betray them. And though idolatry had been overthrown in the high places of the land, it lingered in the houses of the great, who squandered their silver and their gold, their blue and purple, on the wood which they had shaped into the fashion of a god.

There was an evident divorce between religion and morals; and whenever that comes into a nation's or an individual's life, it is fatal! Satan himself has no objection to a religion which consists in postures, and ceremonies, and rites. Indeed, he fosters it; for the soul of man demands God, and craves religion; and it is the art of the great enemy of souls to substitute the counterfeit for the reality, to quiet man's soul with the shows and effigies of the eternal and Divine—much as a man might satisfy his hunger with food that lacked the elements of nutrition, whilst his strength and vigour were slowly ebbing away. It can never be too strongly emphasised that the soul of man cannot rest or be content without God; but it is too apt to be cajoled with that which is not bread, and which satisfieth not.

III.—THE EXCUSES BENEATH WHICH THE SOUL OF MAN SHELTERS ITSELF.

1. Ritualism.—It was the old belief that God was bound to help a nation or person that stedfastly complied with the outward forms of religion, as if He had no other alternative than to help his devoted worshipper. In one form or another this conception has appeared in every nation and age. "What more can God want," the heathen cries, "than that I should give burnt-offerings and calves of a year old, thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil; my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" "What more can God want?" cries the formalist of our time. "I was received into the visible church as soon as I was born; I have complied with all her regulations; I do my best to maintain her institutions and services; in all weathers I am present when the doors are open; and there is no demand made by the representative of the church to which I do not comply to the best of my ability. What lack I yet?"

The incessant remonstrance of the Bible is against such protestations—whether expressed or understood—as these. "What doth the Lord require of thee," says Micah, "but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah vi. 8). "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me?" saith the Lord, is one of Isaiah's earliest sentences, and he added, still speaking in the name of God, "Incense is an abomination to Me." And here Jeremiah takes up the same strain. He says, in effect, "Put all your offerings together; abolish the sacerdotal distinctions which Moses bade you observe; relinquish all ritual; end festival and fast alike. These things are comparatively indifferent to Me, when weighed against obedience and a holy walk" (vii. 22).

Where the heart is right with God, it may find fit and proper expression in the well-ordered worship of the sanctuary. It will find the outward ordinance a means of quickening the soul by the laws of association and expression; but the outward can never be a substitute for the inward. The soul must find God, and worship Him as a Spirit. There must be faith, repentance, inward grace. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Throughout the ages He has been seeking such to worship Him.

(2) Destiny.—Men often say, as the Jews did, "We are delivered to do all these abominations, we were made so; we were swept forward by an irresistible current, which we could not control" (vii. 10). How many a man lays the blame of his sin upon his Creator, alleging that it was only the outworking of the natural tendencies with which he was endowed! How many a woman has laid the blame of her unutterable fall upon the force of circumstances, which held her in their grip! And there are some religious fatalists who have gone so far as to trace their sins to the elective decrees of the Almighty! Whatever truth there may be in the doctrine of Predestination, it will not absolve you from sin in the sight of God and his angels. There is more than enough grace in God to counteract the drift of the current, and the strength of passion.

(3) Special Privilege.—Many a soul has presumed on being a favourite of heaven. "I am wise, the law of the Lord is with me. He needs me, for the preservation of his truth, the elaboration of his scheme. His cause is too deeply involved with me for Him to allow me to be a castaway. I may do as I will, He will deliver." Ah, soul, beware! thou art not indispensable to God. Before thou wert, He was well served; and if thou fail Him, He will call others to minister to Him. See what He did to Shiloh (vii. 14) and to Jerusalem! How bare the site; how woeful the overthrow! "If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest He also spare not thee!" Beware! lest the kingdom of God be taken from you, and be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

THE DINNER HOUR.—An effort is being made to reach the large numbers of men and women who lounge about the streets during the dinner-hour. The first meeting was held in the Lecture-hall, 55, Old Bailey, on Monday, at a quarter past one. The attendance was encouraging. Mr. William Forbes gave the address.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The itinerating work in Irish fairs and markets, which the trained agents of the Irish Church Missions have carried on during the last few years, has been greatly prospered and blessed of late. Two hundred fairs and markets were visited during the past year, and the freedom from injury enjoyed by the workers is largely due, under God, to the thorough training which enables them to go amongst Roman Catholics with tact.

LIFE AMONG FACTORY GIRLS.

BY ISABEL MARY M. KENWARD.

"Yes," she said, "you must tell lies to get on in this world!" And she laid down her maxim with the air of an irrefutable argument. She was the young flower-girl walking by my side that afternoon—one of my girl friends whom I had almost given up as a case hopeless for reformation. What could be done with such a pitiful specimen of womanhood? Only about fourteen, she was yet more shrewd and worldly-wise than many a grown person. She had deceived me time after time, and with the various names she assumed and her clever dodges, as yet she had been too much for anyone who had tried to lift her to better things.

Walking along that crowded street in the bright sunshine, which lit up the wretched apology for a dress and the pale refined face above, a great pity stole over me, and any rebuke to the child for her wild words died on my lips as there rose up vision after vision of other girl-women like her to whom the loveliness and goodness of life are words which bear no meaning. They are among those who "sit in great darkness," and in some form or other the curses of drink, impurity, gambling, dire poverty, the labour of long hours, and low wages, have thrown a spell round their lives.

With the thought came another, How few really know of these things! We pass on our way in happy ignorance of the terrible under-currents beneath the surface. We eat, drink, go to our amusements, give our charity, and think that, in the main, things are right—at least, growing better. Perhaps one day we see, or read, what troubles us for a while; someone lifts "the painted veil called life" at one corner; but then it is dropped again, and we hug to ourselves the comfortable thought that, after all, we cannot reform the world, and where's the use of worrying? All said and done, the poor will be with us to the end, and there the matter rests. If we did know more of the depths they would stagger us at first, but they would also help us, ay, infinitely more than we imagine, in our Christian course. They would make such words as sympathy, pity, love, purity, no mere phrases, but intensely and absolutely real to us.

How often do mothers shrink from the idea that their daughters, sheltered so carefully in the home, should know of the difficulties and temptations besetting far younger girls whose lives are lived under poor and rough conditions. "I don't understand them," is the answer one constantly gets when urging some Christian girl to help her sisters in the factory or mill. Such an answer, I do not hesitate to say, is nothing less than a disgrace to anyone professing to follow the Saviour. On the outside it may seem beautiful to hedge in an innocent girl's life from the knowledge of the evil seething around, but all such knowledge gained in the spirit and with the motives of a Christian worker can never sully or poison the purest of characters. It may cause pain and horror in the first instance, but in the end it will only lead to a deeper innocence, and to that fuller, grander grasp of the truth which can only be born through suffering. It is mindful of this principle, and in the hope that some may be roused to a deeper sense of responsibility, that I would sketch out quite roughly one or two sad phases of girl life from my own experience. What are features of one great industrial centre I take to be average conditions of other similar centres, and therefore of value.

BETTING AMONG GIRLS.

Take first an evil which we are told is growing more rampant every day, and which, according to a late chief in the Criminal Investigation Department of Scotland Yard, is, next to drink, the most prolific source of crime. I mean betting. "I never knew before that girls were in the habit of betting," said the vicar of a large town parish to me not long ago. I might have answered him in the pitiable message sent me from a factory girl just then: "Tell her, that in our factory any girl who will not bet is despised." A nice state of things, is it not, for a young girl to find when she starts work in the factory. Perhaps she has come there from some national school, where religious principles have been taught and practised as the true guides of life; now she is plunged into a roomful of girls and women who have tasted this moral poison, and are down on her, and not only they, but clerks and foremen, if she dare to stand out against the voice of the others.

To impress it more vividly, let us spend a few hours together in the places where these things are to be found. We will take up our watch outside a factory during the dinner hour and see what goes on. It is one o'clock, and the narrow street, lined with tall factories on either side, hitherto apparently deserted, begins to show signs of life. In front of us, sauntering along, we notice a well-dressed man. He is a keen-looking fellow, with apparently nothing to do, but the factory girl who is with us as guide knows better than this, and bids us watch. A minute more and he is stopped by two youths, and the jingle of coins passing between them shows he is the street-better we are in search of. "Look! there's one," whispers suddenly my companion as a girl comes out of the factory, rushes past us, and slips a scrap of paper into the man's hand (which paper, by the way, contains the name of the horse and the amount laid on it).

Our man now takes up his stand at the corner of the street. Here he can ply his trade with safety, as he has two streets well in view, and can guard against a vigilant policeman, though, as a matter of fact, the police are not often to be seen here, we are informed by our girl friend. This time it is a middle-aged woman who goes up to him—and let me say in passing that it is the married women on whom in this, and also in other glaring evils, the blame must lie most heavily. They are only too often the ruin of the younger girls. While we stand watching I am struck by a knot of girls who are in hot dispute or discussion over some point. "Oh, it's only 'Liz,'" says my guide, "'holding a club.' Her mother's in a bit of trouble about the rent, and so she's getting the money this way." It's a bad way nevertheless, and I think my readers will agree with me that this perpetual "club-holding" fosters the spirit of gambling. The girls all do it, and photograph clubs, clothing clubs, money clubs, abound on every side. This special one held by "Liz" happens to be a guinea club. Let me very shortly explain its working. "Liz" and twenty other girls have joined together for twenty-one weeks, each girl subscribing one shilling per week. Their names are written on papers, and then drawn in rotation. The girl who draws out No. 1 is entitled to her guinea at once, and in this case, as "Liz," for holding the club, is entitled to be No. 1, she has her money wherewith to pay off the rent. No. 2 gets her guinea in two weeks, No. 3 in three weeks, and so on till No. 21 gets hers after the twenty-one weeks. All pay their shilling per week, whether they receive their guinea first or later, so that the only advantage of the club is that a girl may draw an early number, and have a sum of money at once. Though in no way dishonest, these clubs are bad, as they are steps to the regular betting, from the spirit of chance luck that they encourage.

(To be concluded.)

INVITATIONS.

"Look unto Me," the Saviour cries;
And up to Him I lift mine eyes,
So glad to look.

"Come unto Me," I hear Him say;
And pleased, I turn from all away
To go to Him.

"Give Me thine heart," He saith to me;
With joy I say, "I yield to Thee
Thy lawful right."

He, winningly, whose name is "Love,"
Saith, "Seek ye first the things above."
And those I seek.

"Take up thy cross, He further saith;
And I, though panting hard for breath,
Bear it with joy.

Kindly He says, "Ask and receive."
I gladly ask, and I believe
That I shall have.

He sayeth, "I will give thee rest;"
I go and lean upon his breast,
And find it there.

He lovingly saith, "Follow Me,"
And "Where I am thou too shalt be,
For evermore."

I love the Saviour's words of grace,
I long to see Him face to face;
To dwell with Him.

[From Waking Thoughts and other poems By Frederick Marshall. (Jarrold & Sons.) A volume of verse wherein we find many sweet and stimulative stanzas.]

Christianity in India.

A GREAT MOVEMENT AMONG THE HINDUS.

In the New York Independent Bishop Thoburn, of India, recounts in brief the history of a remarkable movement towards Christianity among some of the people in Northern and Central India. The movement, he says, is reaching a stage which gives it a claim upon the sympathy of the Christian world. His narrative is limited to the work carried on by the agents of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, but it is not by any means confined to a single mission field. It began among the Telugus of South India, in connection with the American Baptist Mission, and similar movements have appeared throughout the Indian Empire. Bishop Thoburn says:—

"As I write from personal observation, I am obliged for the most part to limit the story to the work carried on by the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which I am myself connected. It must not, however, be understood that this movement is limited to a single mission field.

"When our first missionaries began their work in India, in the latter part of 1858, their attention was providentially drawn to a few inquirers who belonged to a subdivision of the depressed classes, and some of whom were among our first converts. The little community to which these people belonged did not exceed four or five thousand persons, of all ages. They did not embrace Christianity, by any means, in a body, but a few were gathered in, every year, for perhaps twenty years, after which the conversions became much more frequent, and finally the whole community became Christian. Some excellent preachers were raised up from among the converts, while others, boys and girls, acquired a respectable degree of scholarship and were able to command good salaries as teachers or writers in public offices. The missionaries who had observed the steady and rapid progress of these converts very naturally began to put a higher value on work among the low-caste people. I ought to say that some of these converts were low, among the lowest. Many of them had been professional thieves. Every trace of this vice has disappeared from them as a people. They are now called Christians and reckoned as Christians in the community, and in a few years more their former neighbours will have forgotten that they were ever anything else.

"About six years ago it began to be noticed that steadily increasing numbers of people belonging to the lower castes were coming to our missionaries in North India and asking to be made Christians. The statistics at the close of 1888 surprised and even startled some of the missionaries who were engaged in work, as it then became evident that a steady movement had set in, and that not only more converts had been baptized during the previous year than ever before, but that the number of inquirers had

MORE THAN DOUBLED.

"Some of us also were a little troubled by the thought that the Christian community would soon be composed almost wholly of converts from the lowest caste, and thus lose so much in social standing that its moral power would be lessened in the general community, and perhaps the more respectable classes hindered from becoming Christians at all. This fear, however, was dispelled by a careful examination of the statistics, from which it appeared that the largest number of high-caste converts was reported from the very districts in which the largest number of low-caste people had been baptized.

"During 1889 the work continued to extend. It so happened that I was obliged to return to the United States in 1890, and while in America God raised up help in a way that had not been anticipated. When I reached New York I found a written invitation from Mr. Moody for me to attend the Students' Conference at Northfield, and immediately proceeded to the Conference, which was then in session. The day after my arrival I was asked to address the Conference, and in the course of my remarks I gave a brief statement of the new work which was opening up before us, and of the plan which we had adopted for instructing the converts, by employing a class of men chosen from among those who were able to live on the extremely moderate salary of thirty dollars a year. At the close of my remarks Mr. Moody sprang to his feet and said they must help forward that work by undertaking to support a large number of these pastor-teachers. In a few minutes, to my extreme surprise, 3000dols. had been pledged for the support of one hundred men. The effect of this spontaneous gift from a far country upon our Christians in India was wonderful. They seemed inspired with new courage and new energy, and began to appreciate the fact that God had committed into their hands a great work. The converts multiplied, and inquirers came forward in still increasing numbers. The work went on steadily, until at the close of 1891 the converts were coming forward

AT THE RATE OF FIFTY EVERY DAY.

"That rate of increase has been kept up ever since. When I left India in March, the whole number of converts in our several mission stations in North and Central India amounted to 72,000.

"One of the most significant features of this work is the spirit of zeal and courage which has entered into our native preachers and their workers. In former years we found it necessary, with very few exceptions, to urge them forward, and only now and then found a man who seemed to be as devoted to his work as the average American missionary. All that is past now, I trust for ever. We have many Indian preachers who are much more zealous than the average foreign missionary. Scores of them, indeed, have to be restrained, lest their zeal outrun their discretion, as in some instances it certainly does. If every American missionary in the field were to leave India to-morrow, they would leave hundreds of men behind them who would take up the work and push it forward.

"Many readers, no doubt, are impatiently waiting to hear what I will say about the

who are brought in such large numbers within the Church. Wherever I go I am met with questions bearing upon this point. Let me say, then, frankly that the average Christian observer who goes from America to India would not at first feel satisfied with what he would see among the people. To start with, they are all very ignorant. They have never been accustomed to assembling together in the Christian manner, but, on the other hand, they all know and believe that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, that He rose from the dead, that He is alive now, and that He is their Master and King. They all know that God hears prayer, and they all know that the Holy Spirit is given in the name of Christ to sincere believers. Very few of them have given us any trouble in the matter of drink or the opium habit. Thus far we have had very little trouble with polygamists. Immorality appears from time to time in their lives, but our Christian community has never been scandalised before the whole world by so disgraceful a case as that afforded by the recent Breckinridge trial. Converts in India are always judged by their critics by a more rigid rule than Christians in America. When thousands are baptized in a single year, it is not strange that many among them fail to develop any religious earnestness. On the other hand, I am thankful to believe that the mass of these converts are sincere believers in Jesus Christ, and that the average moral standard among them is not only as high as anyone could reasonably expect, but that it is steadily rising.

"While discussing the spiritual status of these converts, let me mention one fact reported to me a few months ago by a presiding elder who baptized 933 converts in two months. If this work is superficial in any part of the field, it is probably in his district. In no place are the inquirers more urgent or the converts more numerous. This good brother, in reporting his work to me, stated, among other encouraging facts, that there are now 133 villages within the bounds of his district in which daily prayer-meetings were held. His district embraces a little bit of territory not larger than a county in the State of New York. Are there 133 villages in the State of New York in which daily prayer-meetings are held? Is there one State in the Union of which it can be said that it contains 133 villages in which Christians hold daily prayer-meetings?

"One of the most encouraging features of this great work is the fact that it is carried forward at a very moderate expense. The example of Mr. Moody six years ago has been somewhat closely followed, and as a result we have a large number of very humble men, who have little education beyond a knowledge of reading and writing, but who are very useful in limited fields. Several hundreds of our workers receive only 30dols. a year, others of a higher grade receive 50dols., while others who are able to take a weekly newspaper, and who live in large towns where the cost of living is higher, receive as much as 100 dols. a year.

"Many features of this work are extremely interesting and full of promise. As to the ultimate outcome of the movement, as to its influence upon the general missionary world, as to its probable influence upon the religious future of India, and as to the future of the forty or fifty millions of the depressed classes in India, especially if they should become Christians—all these questions call for a more extended treatment than the narrow columns of the newspaper afford. Suffice it to say that after thirty-five years' work in India, after seeing every form of missionary labour carried on in the Empire, after talking with hundreds of the best workers, and after enjoying opportunities better perhaps than those which any single person has ever been favoured with, I have come to the deliberate conclusion that God has set agencies in motion in India which mean more for the future of Christianity in that empire, and for the success of Christian missions in the world at large, than any other missionary movement which has been witnessed during the century now closing."

In a leading article on what it calls "The Greatest Revival of the Year," The Independent says:

"The outlook for Christian missions in India is certainly very bright. The converts to Methodism alone average fifty a day. People are throwing away their idols to be baptized as Christians, and to be trained for honourable and useful lives. We do not say that the break-up of Hinduism has actually begun, but that the indications are that it is near. And as native preachers increase in numbers and zeal and knowledge, as Christian communities take the place of heathen, and as the Christian influence becomes more general and permeating, such in-gatherings as that reported by Bishop Thoburn will be larger and more frequent, and then Christianity will take India."

JERUSALEM NOTES.

The "boys and girls" of Jerusalem have been favoured with the presence and the services of Rev. Martin Hall, who on his return from India stayed in the Holy City, holding services for children each morning in Christ Church, and a Bible-reading every evening at the house of Rev. A. H. Kelk, the English incumbent. Both young and old have greatly profited; there was no doubt as to the truth of what was said, for "the Spirit witnessed with the Word." Itinerancy, decried by some Christians, is more than ever showing its value as one of God's agencies.

But workers leave Jerusalem as well as come to it. One of the most useful and valued workers of the London Jews' Society, Miss Barlee, has been obliged to give up her work and residence here, and return to England; in which land she, many years ago, was most useful, as also in Constantinople and elsewhere. She has been, and will be, greatly missed in many a Jewish home, where widows and children were alike blessed by her visits; for with her the message of mercy was the primary motive, and not the donation of money.

The columns of more than one English and American newspaper have shown that the great influx of tourists is drawing increased attention to this land, and to the need for a real crusade to reclaim it for Christ its King. Shall the twentieth century see the land still in the possession of "Antichrist," an Antichrist which says, "You Christians may buy or kill one another's faith, but my sons and daughters shall not be proselytised"; and yet it is those Christians who prop up this tottering Antichrist while they sing their Te Deums.

Through the agency of the B. and F. Bible Society, a number of Gospels have been given to the Russian, Armenian, and other Christian pilgrims who have visited the city during the past few months. This is a blessed, simple, and literally evangelical work.

The large new German Hospital is now nearly finished, and we are hoping that soon the London Jews' Society "English Hospital" will be in course of building, and that at last those who come first to "heal the sick" may be able to do so, free from the terrible disadvantages under which, for so many years, Dr. Macgowan, Dr. Chaplin, Dr. P. Wheeler, and their nurses have had to labour.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JUNE 24.—JEREMIAH LI.

The prophecy against Babylon is continued through the present chapter.

The Extermination of the Chaldean Warriors (1-10).—(1) Leb-Kamai is given by the R.V., which, read in cypher, means Chaldean. The great city is compared to a threshing-floor, where the evening wind carries away the chaff. (3) This verse is addressed to the Median invaders. The brigandine is a coat of mail. (5) How little Nebuchadnezzar thought when carrying Israel captive how his ruthless cruelty would be revenged. (6) The Jewish exiles must flee before they suffer Babylon's fate, as Rev. xviii. 4. (9) This reply of Babylon's allies indicates the irreversibleness of her judgments. (10) And now the Jews in their own country celebrate God's faithfulness to his own covenant.

Summons to Battle, and its Issue (11-19).—(11) The best of preparations will be made in vain when God's word has gone forth. The vengeance of God's Temple means that He will punish those that destroyed it, and we are reminded of 1 Cor. vi. 12-20. How terrible will be the punishment of those who have violated the sanctity of the human body made to be God's shrine. (14) The invaders of the great city should be numberless as the blight on the harvest. (16, etc.) A magnificent description of God, the Creator, the Prop and Stay of the machinery of nature, the Portion of his people. As the idolater becomes like the object of his worship, so the children of God become like Him. These words repeated from chap. x. 12-16, reaffirm the double relation in which we stand to God; we inherit Him, and He us. What an infinity of bliss is possible to the soul that appropriates its inheritance, and how safe!

The Fall of Babylon (20-40).—The mountain of destruction refers to the greatness of the city. The bristling spears of the northern warriors resemble the rough caterpillar. (31-33) According to Herodotus, this was literally fulfilled. (34) A complaint of the Hebrew people. Instead of vast populations there would be silence, and of revelry, the sleep of death.

Israel's Deliverance (41-58).—(42) Invasion is compared to an inundation. (44) Riches of conquered peoples will be disgorged. (46) How eagerly these words must have been perused, and passed from mouth to mouth by the captive Jews. (48) This song anticipates Rev. xviii. 20. (50) Addressed to those who had escaped from the fall of Jerusalem, and who were bidden to remember God in the land of their captivity. As they go forth they are reminded of the certain judgment of their adversaries. (56) Jehovah is the God of recompenses. Let vicious and ungodly men remember this. (58) All the labour expended on the walls of Babylon shall be rendered vain. They shall come to nought.

MONDAY, JUNE 25.—JEREMIAH LII.

This chapter is the same as 2 Kings xxiv. 18-20. It was probably added by Ezra.

The Capture of Jerusalem, 1—14. (3) God is often said to do what He permits. Jedekiah broke his oath to the king of Babylon. For this God punished him. (6) The extremity of the city is described in the following book. (11) The LXX. indicates that he was put to grind corn as Samson. (12) In 2 Kings xxv. 8, it is said the seventh day, the latter is the time when he started from Riblah, the former of his arrival in Jerusalem. It is impossible to consider the awful fate of God's holy city, and not remember the similar destruction which befel the churches of Asia Minor, which once were the candlesticks of the Gospel, but are now extinct. Our responsibility is in proportion to our privilege, so also our sufferings if we act unworthily.

The Deportation of Temple Treasure (15-23).—"The poor of the people" refers to those who belong to the city; the poor of the land to the inhabitants of country districts. There is peculiar pathos in this enumeration of the various articles carried into captivity, indicating the anguish which the children of God felt to see their holy and beautiful things borne from them. (21) 2 Chron. iii. 15 seems at variance with this statement, probably because of the difference between the common and sacred cubit of measurement.

Deportation of People (24-30).—2 Kings xxiv. 14 apparently differs. The discrepancy will be probably accounted for by the one number representing the tribe of Judah, and the larger number the other tribes. These apparent discrepancies would vanish if we were acquainted with all the facts. They at least show that there was no collusion amongst the sacred writers, and it is not wonderful that in the course of transmission scribes may have inadvertently altered the figures that they copied.

The Relief of Jehoiachin (31-34).—The son of Nebuchadnezzar is said to have learnt the worth of Jeconiah during a temporary depression in his own fortunes, and he remembered this when he came to the throne. In any case, we can trace the hand of God in rewarding him for having surrendered to the King of Babylon. Compare chap. xxxviii. 17 with 2 Kings xxiv. 12. Weary years, but God had not forgotten his promise. If a heathen monarch was inclined to keep a captive prince provided with bread and water all the days of his life, how much more will our Heavenly Father give us our daily bread.

TUESDAY, JUNE 26.—LAMENTATIONS I.

The Anguish of the Prophet for the Fate of Jerusalem (1-11).—(1) Bereft of allies, and tributary to her foes; (2) her cheeks stained with tears, which neither lover nor friend endeavours to remove; (3) her children in exile; (4) her ways overgrown with grass; (5) her enemies at the head, and herself trampled under foot; such is the picture of the city which David founded, and where Solomon worshipped God. And is not this the picture of the soul which has backslidden from God, and in which tears take the place of smiles, and bitterness of blessedness. (7) At such a time we remember the pleasant things of former days, and we know that our sins have procured our suffering. (9) Then it is that we should turn to God, and ask Him to behold our position, and the pride with which our great foe magnifies himself against us. (10) Whenever we sin against God the enemy enters the sanctuary of our soul. Consecration is the condition of victory. (11) Happy the moment when, in the far country, the prodigal returns to himself, and cries, "Behold, I am vile!"

The Lament of Jerusalem (12-22).—There is no sorrow in the universe like that which the soul suffers whom God has put away. (13) Then the heart faints and fever is in the bones. (14) Then we become powerless against the foe. (15) Then our strength and beauty are trodden down. (16) Then comfort is far away. (18) Then the soul is compelled to acknowledge the righteous judgment of God. (19) Then, being out with God, we are at variance with men. (20) Then we know what distress is, and the shadow of death. (21) Then we are comfortless, and sigh in bitter pain. (22) Then our sighs are many, and our heart is faint. O desolate, God-forsaking, God-forsaken soul, turn thee unto Him, plead the merits of thy Lord, seek forgiveness, restoration, and manifested love.

WEDNESDAY JUNE 27.—LAMENTATIONS II.

The Deeds of Jehovah against the Daughter of Zion (1-10).—We may still follow the line of thought suggested in our notes on the previous chapter. The desolation of Jerusalem is comparable to that of the backslider. (1) Covered with a cloud; (2) the strong and vaunted pride cast down; (3) the cutting off of strength; (4) the soul as a target to the arrow of the foe, instead of being hidden within the Divine shield; (5) mourning and lamentation; (6) the destruction of the hedge of protecting care, so that the garden of the inner life is laid open to the invader; (7) the withdrawal of God from the inner shrine meant to be her temple; (8) the swallowing up of rampart and wall; (9) the absence of vision; (10) the silence and garments of woe. Striking images are these, when read in the language of the inner life. It is not difficult to find a counterpart for each symptom of woe, as it struck the heart of the patriot prophet.

The Prophet's Elegy (11-22).—If we loved God and pitied men as Jeremiah did, we should be able to apply his words to the corruption and desolation of our times. (11) Tears; (12) pity for the young children; (13) the rushing in of tides of sin; (14) the misleading teaching of religious leaders; (15) the hissing continually heaped upon the name of Christ by men of the world; (16) their anticipation of speedy triumph? O lovers of God, each of these will suggest salutary thought! (19) From God let us turn to man, summoning sinners to repentance. (20) From man let us turn to God in intercession as we enumerate the successive items of bitter complaint. That sorrow does more harm than good which does not lead us to endeavours and intercessions for the salvation of lost souls.

THURSDAY, JUNE 28.—LAMENTATIONS III.

The Expressions of Bitter Pain (1-21).—So completely did Jeremiah identify himself with his people, that though comparatively innocent he seemed to bear their sin. Here in a measure was vicarious suffering and confession. There is much in these words that might have been fitly spoken by our Lord Himself. It is given to but few, however, to enter into so close an identification with the sins and sorrows of others. The lament falls into a series of triplets. (1-3) Darkness all day; (4-6) gall and travail; (7-9) fenced around; (10-12) a mark for the arrow; (13-15) a song of derision; (16-18) afar off from peace; (19-21) hope in God's memory.

The Prophet's Unextinguished Faith (22-42).—From his people's sin, he turns to the Lord's mercies, always new and unfailing, waiting for those that wait for Him. Then follows a perfect chorale, full of the sweetest trust in Him who cannot cast off, who does not willingly inflict, who speaks only good, and who only seems to turn from the soul which persists in rebellion. Sit alone, O tried soul, accept sorrow hush complaint, submit to the wrong thou hast deserved, search and try thy ways, turn again to the Lord.

Prevision of Vengeance upon the Adversary (43-66).—The prophet turns from his people laid low in their destruction to the fate that overhangs their foes. (46) God will not forget that open mouth; (52) or that sore chasing; (53) or that imprisonment in the low dungeon; (60) or that vengeance; (61) or that reproach; (63) or that sarcastic taunt. He has drawn near to the lowest dungeon, bringing the prisoner forth again to light, and calming his fears, but He will do more, He will judge his cause, He will recompense his foes. He will pursue them in anger, and destroy them from under the heavens. There are times when the righteous soul which has suffered wrongfully forgets its own share in the wrong borne, and considers only the blackness of the sin and its injury to God and man. Then it believes in hell, and has a deep consciousness that high-handed wrong must at length receive its just recompense of reward.

FRIDAY, JUNE 29.—LAMENTATIONS IV.

The Humiliation and Sufferings of the People (1-10).—In describing the condition to which his people were reduced, Jeremiah says some sadly true things of the human heart, when it has lost the blessed presence of God, through its rebellion and sin. The pure gold is dimmed. (2) The high tone and temper of the soul is forfeited; (3) selfishness; (4) dissatisfaction and soul-thirst; (5) earthliness and sordid aims; (6) it is overthrown before the first blast of trial; (7-8) withered; (9) it pines away; (10) without natural affection. Such things characterise the truant soul.

Their Unexpected Punishment (11-16).—There is no anger so terrible as that of love. (12) The unlooked for befals us as soon as we get away from our allegiance to God, which is the condition of his protection; (14) pollution (15) and uncleanness. (16) perpetual exile and dishonour among men. These are ingredients in the cup of wrath and indignation, of which the ungodly drink sooner or later.

The Hatred of the Foe (17-22).—How merciless was Babylon. They had looked for help from Egypt, but in vain. It was a nation that could not save. We shall never be disappointed if we wait for God. (18) The hot pursuit of our foes; (19) their swift attack in our least guarded hours; (20) the snare in which we are entrapped. We know something of each of these. (20) This probably refers to the capture of King Zedekiah, when attempting to escape; (21) the vindictive joy of Edom would be shortlived (Ps. cxxxvii. 7). He who had smitten Israel would yet restore and save. The foes of God's people may have a momentary triumph, but ultimately they shall descend into the pit, while the righteous shall shine forth as the sun.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30.—LAMENTATIONS V.

The Lament and Prayer of the People (1—22).—"It is throughout an appeal to the Divine pity. There is a vein of confession and self-reproach mingled with a wail of misery showing that the consciences of the people had at last begun to work faithfully under their affliction." And this change must have been very grateful to the prophet. (1) Remember, consider, behold. When we do not know what to ask, let us bare our wounds before God, and leave Him to do his best for us. (2) If at the year of jubilee the estate which had been alienated returned to its owner, surely Canaan would be restored to its people and they to it; (3—6) Loneliness, dearth, weary slavery, hunger, are bitter metaphors of the anguish of the far country; (7) there is an entail in guilt. (8) And humiliation, when we serve servants. (9) As Judah could not get bread because of the unsettled state of the country, so the soul pines. (10) Neither rank, nor beauty, nor age, nor youth can secure our freedom from the results of disobedience. The soul that sinneth, it must die. There is no shelter, save in the blood of Jesus. (19) From the desolations of life and joy we turn to the unchangeable Lord; (21) and plead that He would cause us to return unto Himself, and to renew our days. Oh, for a gracious turning and renewal for each who shall read these words.

THE ROSEMARY MISSION AND RAGGED SCHOOLS, at Islington, N., are the centre of much useful work. The forty-second annual report says "There were upwards of 1000 scholars entered on the Sunday-school registers during the year; an attendance averaging close upon 200 at the adult services and all the other branches of the work are being carried on with usefulness and success." The night schools are much appreciated; as also is the work of the District Visiting Society. "Among the over crowded and ever-changing population of London slums, there are very many who, without such a society as this, would live and die without God and without hope." The hon. superintendent of the Mission is Mr. F. Warman, 1, Alwyne-road, N.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JULY 1.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.—Luke ii. 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ver. 11.

THE time when Jesus was born was four years before what is called Anno Domini. This resulted from a mistake made by Dionysius Exiguus, the monk who published his calculations in A.D. 526. This is referred to in the margin of Matt. ii. 1.

To realise the importance of the birth of Christ we need to remember what the Scripture tells us of his pre-existence (John i. 1-3; Heb. i. 2, 3); that his coming was for centuries the theme of Old Testament prophecy, beginning with the promise of the woman's seed (Gen. iii. 15); and that immediately before the event special announcements were made to Zacharias, to Mary, and to Joseph (Luke i. and Matt. i.). There is nothing surprising in the angelic appearance to the shepherds in connection with such an event.

According to the prophecy it was necessary that Messiah should come from the tribe of Judah, and from the family of David (Gen. xlix. 10; 2 Sam. vii. 7, 12-16); and that He should be born in Bethlehem (Mic. v. 2). These things were well understood by the people (John vii. 41, 42). Both were fulfilled in Jesus. And the Roman Emperor was the unconscious instrument of making it clear that Mary, the virgin mother, and Joseph, the reputed father, were of the lineage of David (i. 4); and of bringing them to Bethlehem at the time when the birth was about to take place.

Much controversy has taken place about this census, chiefly because Cyrenius (or Quirinius, R.V.) was appointed Governor A.D. 4, and the enrolment under him was not made until A.D. 6, which would be ten years too late. The difficulty is variously explained. Either Cyrenius was Governor more than once; or, "whilst Varus was political and military governor of Syria at this time, Cyrenius administered its financial affairs, and presided as quæstor over this census." The word "first" (2, R.V.) seems to refer to another census taken later by the same man. However the difficulty may be explained, the fact remains, and bears witness to the wonderful manner in which God uses emperors and governors alike to accomplish his own purpose. Until this decree was issued, nothing seemed more unlikely than that the birth of Jesus should take place in Bethlehem. What Cæsar meant by the decree is not clear; but God's intention by it cannot be mistaken.

Bethlehem—i.e., "house of bread"—was so named because of the fertility of its adjacent cornfields. This event gives the name a more beautiful meaning. It possessed very interesting historical associations. The names of Ruth, and Boaz, and David were connected with it. There are about 5000 inhabitants there to-day. At the time of our Lord's birth it was a poor place, and when Mary and Joseph arrived it was overcrowded. "The inn was probably a khan or caravanserai, which is an enclosed space surrounded by open recesses, of which the paved floor is raised a little above the ground. If the khan be crowded the traveller must be content with a corner of the courtyard, or in the stable, which is often a limestone cave or grotto."—Cambridge Bible. In such a stable it was probable our Lord was born. In the light of such a fact, what meaning there is in 2 Cor. viii. 9!

It is not the only time that Jesus has been "crowded out." Is there any part of our life in which we do not want Jesus? The work in the place of business, the lessons in school, the social fellowships of the home, and even the recreations—all need Him.

The first Christmas carol was sung on the hills outside Bethlehem. The audience was composed of lowly shepherds guarding their flock from the dangers of night (8). We may think of them as devout men, who were waiting for the coming of the Messiah. They found what they had longed for while occupied in their humble calling. The singers were angels. At first one appeared (9), and, surrounded with radiant splendour, announced the fact which formed the theme of the song. It told of God's faithfulness in fulfilling his promise, and of a Divine Saviour for all (10-12). Then the one was joined by a multitude (13, 14). It was an occasion of such joy to the world that angels made it the theme of their gladness. The carol itself contains three statements concerning the birth of Christ. (1) It brings highest glory to God; (2) proclaims peace to men; and (3) is the proof of God's good will. How significant that man's greatest blessing should be inseparable from God's highest glory!

The shepherds are worthy examples to us. (1) They received the message with faith (15). Before they saw the babe they spake of "this thing which is come to pass." (2) They began at once to act as though it were true. They went to see the child (16) without delay; and (3) they became messengers to others (18).

LIONS IN THE PATH.

LAST Sunday the Sunday-school anniversary services were held in connection with the West Dulwich Congregational Church. In the afternoon, at a special service for the children, the young pastor, Rev. R. C. SANDISON, gave a bright homely talk to the young people, founded on the Old Testament story of Benaiah who "slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow" (2 Sam. xxiii. 20), and did some other wonderful things. Our young readers will be glad to read some of the points and illustrations used by the preacher.

The first thing to note is that the lion is not exactly what we should call "a domestic animal." Some English judges, very wise men, who sit on a bench and wear big wigs, have lately decided that even when it is in a cage a lion is not a domestic animal. This lion which Benaiah slew was not in a cage; it was a wild lion. Many of you have been to the Zoological Gardens, or if you have not been you expect to go. When you stand in front of the Lion House, if you are rather timid, when you see the lion open his great mouth you are tempted to look and see that the doors of the cage are all locked. These lions in the "Zoo" are really very tame lions compared with the lion in Palestine of which we have read. Then it was not only wild; it was "in a pit." That is to say, it was very hungry and very angry. Perhaps it had fallen in two or three days before, and all that time had been without food. Besides that, the thing happened "in the time of snow," when the ground was smooth and slippery, and the weather very cold, so that Benaiah's fingers were probably very stiff. So that this was no ordinary deed of bravery.

If you ask why he did it, I would answer that he was a soldier, and so he must be brave. It would never do for a soldier to be afraid of a lion. If he had not done his duty, David and his other friends would have had nothing to say to him. We are not all soldiers, but we all have some duty in life to do; and every now and then we find that there is some lion in the path. We have got to kill that lion or it will kill us. And it is better, perhaps, you will think, to kill than to be killed. Let me tell you of a few lions that we come across in life.

First of all I will speak of one called Sulky. What colour do you think he is? Why, black, of course. It does not matter how pretty a boy or girl may be. As soon as you get overcome by this lion Sulky, your face becomes very ugly and plain indeed. When he gets hold of you, you do not feel inclined to oblige anybody, or even to say anything, but just to be silent and look very unpleasant. I have heard of a foreigner who could only say two words in English—"Good morning." Whatever was the remark made to him, he always replied, "Good morning." The sulky boy is very much like that. About all he can say is, "Don't know," "Don't care," "Don't want to," or something like that. Now, you must not allow yourselves to be bitten by that lion if you meet him. Don't give way; be sure you overcome him.

The next lion I would mention is Temper. What colour do you think he is? Red, to be sure. If you see a child with a very red face and his feet moving quickly without walking the least bit, be certain that the lion Temper has got hold of him. The Romans used to say that temper was "short madness." When we give way to temper we seem to lose our reason for the time, and we do not know what we are doing—or what we may do. You have all heard of Alexander the Great, who conquered the world so far as he knew it, and then sat down and cried because he could not get another world to conquer. In a famous battle his life was saved by his friend Titus. How do you think he rewarded him? One day he was bitten by this lion of temper and killed the first man he met. That man happened to be his friend Titus. As soon as he saw what he had done he was very sorry, and lay on the ground and bemoaned himself.

Another great soldier—Julius Cæsar—had a different way of meeting the lion Temper. If he was tempted to be angry at something said to him he would repeat all the letters of the Roman alphabet before he gave an answer. By the time he got to X Y Z he had become quite calm again.

Paul says, you remember, in one place: "Be angry and sin not." It is not always wrong to be angry. We live in a world where there is much that is wrong. But when our anger gets the mastery over us then we give way to sin. Paul has another very good saying: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." If we have had differences with people, let us be sure to make them up before we go to sleep.

The last lion I will refer to is Idleness. I once knew a little girl who had not the grace of perseverance. Suppose she got a missionary collecting card; she would begin well the first day; the next day she was not so earnest, and before the week was gone she wished the card back again. A missionary came from Africa, and was asking everybody to do what they could. She thought for a good while, and then she resolved to knit a pair of woollen wristcuffs. I do not know why she chose that, because Africa is rather a warm country. She got wool and needles, and began knitting, and all went on well for a while. She was so busy she could hardly find time to take her dinner. By and by she grew less enthusiastic, and when the time came for the parcel to be sent off she had only knitted one cuff. They told her it was no use sending one, and she said: "Oh dear, couldn't they find somebody who has only one arm?" She was bitten by that lion called Lazy.

Now, boys and girls, you must not let idleness get the better of you. Make up your mind to overcome it. God likes to help those who put their own shoulder to the wheel. There is an old Spanish proverb that we ought to remember:—

Pray away devoutly,
Hammer away stoutly.

If we are going to be good brave soldiers like Benaiah, and overcome all the difficulties that meet us in life, we must pray to Jesus Christ to help us to keep our temper, not to be unpleasant and sulky, and to do our work as well as we can. Then every year we live it will grow easier and easier. We will get to know Christ better, and become more like Him in character.

CHEERING NEWS FROM FRANCE.

IN a speech recently delivered in London on Christian work in other lands we observed the remark that "more attention should be paid to the Continent of Europe"; in this we heartily concur. Whilst saying this, however, we note with deep thankfulness that there are indications of a revival in many places. As connected with the Free Church I shall be forgiven if I specially refer to it, and more particularly to a series of services held in my own church at Nismes on the 29th, 30th, and 31st ult. These had been preceded by a week of prayer, when twice daily a few earnest Christians gathered to implore the Lord's blessing.

Now that these three blessed but intensely solemn days are past, during which sixteen meetings were held, we can only say our prayers were fully answered; the Lord was amongst us of a truth. Among those who took helpful part in the meetings, were Mr. Faithfull, of Marseilles, Pastor Dubois, of Bordeaux, and Pastor Martin, from Cannes. Each day the interest and numbers increased, until our church, capable of holding fully 500, was crammed; Christians of all denominations attended.

Whilst refraining from enumerating visible fruits, it was with deep gratitude that we were permitted to witness the work of the Holy Spirit, quickening believers, and convicting and converting sinners. Join with us in praise, and pray that these gracious drops may be quickly followed by copious showers.

DAILY PRAYER MEETINGS.—I have been lately called upon to gather information regarding daily prayer meetings throughout Christendom, in order to present the subject next October in Toronto before the convention of the International Christian Workers' Association. May I ask through your pages for any literature tracts, historic statements or other material regarding daily prayer meetings with which your readers may be kind enough to favour me?

India and Opium.

THE INEVITABLE NEMESIS.

Our crimes are reflected in our calamities. God, who hates sin, and who warns us against it, would not only make us smart for our folly, but also would mirror forth the nature of our crime in its punishment.

The policy of the Indian Government has been for years to foster traffic in articles which destroy its own subjects as well as the people of China, and the tap-root of the whole concern is greed for revenue. All manner of facilities and inducements are put forth to extend the evil traffic for the simple object of augmenting the income of the Government. Money from any source they must have. But after all, the income dwindles down more and more, so that in spite of all the efforts to collect money soiled with human blood, the Government is plunged into a terrible financial crisis, and that by circumstances over which it has no control, the depreciation of the current coin of the country—the silver rupee.

It is said on good authority that the fall of every farthing in the value of the rupee means a loss of nearly half a million sterling to the Indian Government. Within the last few years the value of the rupee has gone down from one shilling and tenpence to one shilling and a farthing, by which fall the Government of India has lost annually on an average about twelve millions sterling in revenue. Is it not a singular fact that this loss is just about the amount which has been collected from the traffic in opium, liquor, and narcotic drugs.

The average opium revenue of late years has been about eight millions, and the liquor and hemp drugs have brought in between four and five million pounds, at par. Just now the loss is much more, as the value of the rupee has gone down to a fraction over one shilling, and the amount and the value of opium have also gone down greatly, so that just now the financial prospects of the Indian Government are gloomy in the extreme. If matters go on as they do now, for a while longer, the rulers of this land will find the exchequer involved in such a fiscal bog that there will be no hope of escape from a terrible financial crash.

It is true that of late years there has been an unwarrantable increase in expenditure, especially on military lines, but the bulk of the loss is from the extraordinary fall in the market value of the rupee, and this is a disaster which is beyond the reach of any financier to remedy. In short, the Indian Government is just now in the grip of an avenging Nemesis, from which it cannot escape, and in the very nature of the catastrophe can be seen evidently the character of the crime committed.

Looking on the sad situation from a Christian standpoint, there seems to be but one hope of escape, and that is to resolve to trust God and to give up trafficking in articles which are a curse to millions of people. This bad money is a curse, and the more of it that is collected all the more will the righteous God blight the Imperial revenue; and He can do it in such a way as to leave our rulers no remedy.

Is it not sad to think that while the late Mohammedan Government in India would not allow a single rupee of its excise income to be cast into the imperial coffers of the State, as it was considered "bad money," our Christian (?) Government is only too anxious to scrape into its coffers all the excise revenue it can possibly collect? Even the Turkish Government prohibits traffic in poisonous hemp-drugs, but our Indian Government has its own plantations of the poisonous drug, which it keeps closely as a preserve, and holds a complete monopoly of the deadly drug for revenue purposes. Yet, with all this iniquitous traffic in poisons, the revenue, which is the root of it all, goes down and down, so that nothing less than bankruptcy is facing the Government of India.

All this teaches us that our rulers have no faith in God, nor can they realise the truth of his Word, that tells us that "Righteousness exalteth a nation," and that God is able to give us much more than we may get by unholy ways and godless means. I cannot help feeling that just now our rulers in India are filling up the cup of iniquity to the brim, and that therefore judgment must be at hand. He suffers long, but will not suffer for ever. In the expressive language of Wales we have this:—

Hir yn eris Duw cyn taro,
Llwyr ddiala pan y delo.

Which may thus be rendered into English:—

To avenge wrong doings God is slow,
At last He comes with a crushing blow.

God grant that our blind rulers may see their faults and folly, and learn to rule in the fear of God and for the good of the people.

LETTERS FROM CHINA.

Our work at Kinchow Fu, in connection with the C. I. Mission, is extending, and new work and open doors are open up for us all round.

We had the joy the other Sunday of receiving two women as candidates for baptism, and the Sunday before, two men and one of our school girls. We hope to have a number baptized this summer.

Chikeang. D. B. Thompson.

It is a little over five years since my wife and I arrived in China with our three boys, led by the good hand of our God. Our first station was Paoning Fu, where we were engaged in studying the language, and generally fitting ourselves for future work. Two years ago we were asked to take charge of a station in this city of from 20,000 to 30,000 inhabitants; and these two years have been very happy ones.

Our hearts have been much drawn out to the people of this little city and the country round, and it has been a great joy to us to see the Lord's work going forward. Within the last five months seventeen (six men and eleven women) have confessed the Lord in baptism, and we have a total Church membership of twenty-six (nine men and seventeen women), as the fruit of six or seven years' seed-sowing. I would earnestly ask all who read these few lines to pray that the little band of Christians here, natives and foreigners, may be so filled with the Holy Ghost, and may each testify so brightly and boldly for Christ, that multitudes shall be saved.

As Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Polhill Turner have returned from England, to resume their work here, and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Cassells have just started for England on much-needed furlough, we have been asked to take charge of the work at Paoning Fu, where the work has grown much the last two years; there is now a church roll of eighty members. Will friends remember us in believing prayer in taking up this important work—work which we dare not undertake did we not feel sure our God was leading us thither? Edward O. Williams.

REVIVALS.—Commenting on some recent statements in America as to the decline of revivals, the New York Independent says: "We do not believe that the day of the revival is past by any means. It would be a bad thing for the Church if it were. Certainly there is not less interest on the part of pastors in revival efforts, although the form of these efforts may have undergone some change in the past twenty-five years. As a means of arousing the indifferent, revival meetings are in great favour, and that, too, in Churches where they used to be frowned on. They are not likely to be given up unless some better method of reaching men and women and getting them converted should be devised."

DR. CUYLER IN EUROPE.

This veteran pastor has not been idle during his short stay among us. On his first Sabbath in London he preached for Rev. F. B. Meyer, at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. On Sunday week he preached twice for Dr. Pentecost at the Marylebone Presbyterian Church. His morning sermon is reported fully in last week's Christian World Pulpit. It was a rousing call to active service for Christ, and to higher and increasingly higher attainment in personal holiness of life.

The evening discourse was a powerful temperance pronouncement on behalf of the National Temperance League. The text was Eccl. x. 8 (R.V.), "Whoso breaketh through a fence, a serpent shall bite him." In the early part of the sermon Dr. Cuyler made some weighty remarks of a general nature, a portion of which we reproduce:—

"God never takes down his fences, and never lowers his walls by a hand-breadth. Churches may revise their confessions of faith as often as they like; God never allows his laws to be revised or repealed. Some theologians in our day imagine that Mount Sinai is an extinct volcano. Certain pulpits seem to be planted at such a distance from that sublime peak that its flame is no longer visible, and its righteous thunders against sin are no longer audible. These theologians preach a one-sided God—all mercy, no justice. With one-half of his attributes there is an awful collapse. Even sinners are not to be warned and entreated to flee from the wrath to come. They are to be coaxed into better ways by a magical process, which makes nothing of repentance, and simply requires a kind of faith that costs no more effort than the lifting of your little finger. That shallow system may produce long rolls of so-called converts; it never produces solid, honest, reliable, subsoil Christians. Sinai is not an extinct mountain in vital theology. We could not have Calvary, beloved, if we had not had Sinai.

"Not one jot of that holy law has ever been lowered, and in one sense only has any Christian ever been free from the law. We sing, 'Free from the law—oh happy condition.' True, in one sense, but not in another. It would not be a happy condition for London to disband its police, and to loose all its criminals. So far from being a kindness, it would be an act of cruelty for any community to put the criminals beyond the reach of God's righteous law. These are unfortunate times in your country and in mine to preach any theology that has not in it the backbone of the world ought. It is a bad time to conceal that there is a serpent of retribution lurking behind God's walls. Society will never be regenerated by Cologne water. We need more of the sacred authority of law in our homes, more enforcement of law in the State, more reverence for God's law in our hearts, more law-teaching in our pulpits, and more law-work in the awakening and conversion of sinners that shall honour Jesus Christ in the way that He loved, that is, by keeping his commandments."

On the special topic of total abstinence the worthy doctor gave this interesting bit of personal testimony: "I have personally and naturally a frail system, but I have stood nearly fifty years' unbroken work, with plenty of sound sleep and never a drop of alcohol, and never yet spent a Lord's Day on my bed."

Dr. Cuyler paid a visit to the Isle of Wight after the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee. He has now gone for a sojourn on the Continent, visiting, among other places, Amsterdam and the Engadine. Our venerable brother, though far advanced in years, is as full of fire and enthusiasm as ever; taking a deep and shrewd interest in all the great movements of the day on both sides of the Atlantic. May he be long spared to wield his powerful pen and voice in the service of righteousness and our holy religion!

PARMITER-STREET MISSION.—Sir C. Robert Lighton, Bart., has accepted the presidency of the Parmiter-street Sunday-school and mission, Cambridge Heath, London, E., in succession to Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., now vicar of St. Thomas', Lambeth.

THE "QUARTER-DECK" READING-ROOM for ship-masters, officers, engineers, and pilots of the mercantile marine has now reported on its fifth "voyage," or year of operations, at 106, Fenchurch-street, E.C. In many ways this work proves of service to Christians of the "quarter-deck," to whom Captain Robert Peek, the hon. sec., extends a cordial invitation.

THE LATE REV. J. D. HEPBURN,

SOUTH AFRICAN MISSIONARY.

ON the last day of 1893 there died at Gateshead an honoured and truly consecrated missionary, Rev. J. D. Hepburn, at the comparatively early age of fifty-four. For the past few years Mr. Hepburn had been out of health, his system saturated with malaria, and, though bravely holding on and struggling to surmount his many difficulties, he was consciously enfeebled and unequal to the tasks of former days. His retirement from Khama's Town, and voyage home in 1892, were really due to this. Having left Mrs. Hepburn and his family in Cape Colony, he stayed in England but a very short time. Rest in Cape Town, travel in Bechuanaland, and other remedies, having failed to restore him to his wonted vigour, he was urged to return to England for a more prolonged stay, in the hope that a thorough change would prove more efficacious. He arrived in England on June 13 last year, and, during a few weeks of the autumn, visited different parts of the country as a deputation. His addresses were listened to with much interest, especially in the light of events transpiring in South Africa. His extensive knowledge of African life and affairs made his speeches specially valuable.

His health did not improve, and towards the end of the year he showed signs of weariness and overstrain. Arrangements were being made for him to winter with a relative in Jersey, but he did not feel equal to the journey. An attack of malarial fever seizing him, he gradually succumbed, and, separated from wife and children, though lovingly cared for by relatives and friends, passed to his eternal home with the last hours of the closing year. During his illness, his one great desire was that, God willing, he might regain strength and be spared to do another ten years' work for Africa. But this was not to be. He suffered a good deal on Saturday, December 30th, but on the Sunday was easier, and in the evening passed away without a struggle. He was buried in the same grave in which, five years before, his mother was laid to rest.

Mr. Hepburn (says a writer in the L.M.S. Chronicle) was born in Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1840. From school he went to his uncle's office at the Phœnix Mills, The Close, Newcastle, where he remained for some few years. He was also, for a short time, at Warkworth Mills, on the Coquet, Northumberland, but returned to his old post when the Warkworth Mills were burnt down. In the meantime he had given his heart to Christ, and had conceived an intense longing for a missionary career. He was a member of Trinity Presbyterian Church (then under the pastoral care of the late Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., subsequently secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society), a church that has been honoured to send several of its members to the mission-field. After studying, first at Rotherham College, afterwards at Highgate, he was ordained in 1870, and, with his bride—who was a niece of Dr. Brown, his minister—sailed for Port Elizabeth en route for Shoshong, to which station he was appointed, for a short time as the colleague, and then as the successor, of Rev. John Mackenzie.

It is with Shoshong that the name of Mr. and Mrs. Hepburn will be inseparably connected. From the day of their arrival there, to that of its desertion by Khama and the tribe of Bamangwatos, in their migration northwards in 1890, and establishment of the new town of Phalapye, they showed themselves to be devotedly attached to the chief and his followers. With untiring fidelity and impulsive large-heartedness, Mr. Hepburn threw himself into any and every good work that promised to bring blessing to the people, and, as the loved and trusted friend of Khama and his head-men, his influence was very great. His efforts in every direction were nobly seconded by those of his wife, and it was their joy to see the Bamangwatos rising higher and higher, and making distinct advance in moral and spiritual enlightenment and strength. The break-up of their old home, and the altered and transitional condition of things that prevailed in Phalapye, temporarily prevented the prosecution of much of the settled work that had been carried on in Shoshong, but, disregarding personal comfort and unmurmuringly submitting to privations and difficulties, Mr. Hepburn took up the new tasks with characteristic ardour and enthusiasm. The work of erecting the handsome new church called forth all his best energies, but before its completion there came the breakdown and withdrawal from the station.

The Lake Ngami Mission among the Western Bamangwatos, the newest of the society's South African advances, which, under the superintendence of Rev. A. J. Wookey, now bids fair to become a permanent settlement, owes its origin to the missionary spirit and enterprise of Mr. Hepburn. His visit to the Lake at the invitation of Moremi, the chief of the Batauanas, in 1877, when he stationed native teachers there, and his subsequent visits in 1881 and 1886, created the interest which, followed up by the visit of Rev. Edwin Lloyd, eventually issued in the appointment of Messrs. Wookey and Reid.

Africa and the Africans have never had a warmer friend than the missionary whose loss we mourn, but, like many who have loved and toiled for that vast continent, the toil has cost the life. His desire was still to live and work for Africa, but God has bidden him rest from his labours. To us who remain, however, there is the joyful assurance that he is "blessed," and that "his works do follow him."

COASTING IN NORTH AFRICA.

THIS thickly-populated land, through part of which we are at present passing on a missionary journey (north of Cairo), though very little known in England, terribly needs the Gospel message.

We have been out in a small boat for nearly three weeks, and in the course of about 150 miles have pitched in five towns of very considerable size, have passed several more, visited large villages, and have unwillingly sailed past an uncountable number of smaller villages and hamlets; it would take a year even to visit all we have seen, for they are often not much more than a mile distant from each other. And then what lies beyond on the banks of the other waterways, and in the country between! The thought at times threatens to overwhelm us, for they are all (with the exception of the few towns where the American Mission works principally among the Copts) untouched and unreached.

Almost all the inhabitants are Moslems, filled with superstition, and sunk in sin and wickedness of the most fearful description, and our hearts grow sick with horror at the sights and sounds around us; and yet so completely are they self-satisfied that one lad told me there were no "sinners" in his town because there were no men who "eat fire," this being their expression for highwaymen and murderers.

Were I to write the half of what we know, you would be incredulous as to the exact truthfulness of the account, and what is still unknown to us we hardly dare to think; but have I not said enough to make someone realise that six workers are not enough for the Moslems of the Delta, and so lead someone to hear the call to come over here and help?

The work is very very difficult, trying, and slow, and we need constantly to remind ourselves that we are "not alone;" so not for one moment would we try to persuade others to come, but we do pray that they may listen to the Master's allurements, and be, like Jeremiah, "persuaded" of Him who is stronger than they, and will prevail. It is worth while.

ROYAL NAVAL SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY.—The annual meeting was held at Plymouth on June 6, the chair being taken by Vice-Admiral Sir R. More Molyneux, K.C.B. The report stated that as the Royal Navy will again be considerably increased this year, the committee hope that this mission to those who man our warships will receive a proportionate share of support. The number of readers at present is fourteen. Additional readers are urgently wanted at Devonport, Portsmouth, Chatham, and abroad.

Christians in Conference.

CONFERENCE HALL, CLAPHAM ROAD.

The eleventh annual Conference for the Study of Prophetic Scripture was held here on June 12, 13, and 14. The chairmen were General Sir R. Phayre, Canon A. R. Fausset, and Mr. R. C. Morgan.

General Sir R. Phayre, while encouraging God's people to look for that "Blessed Hope," warned them against false teachers. Rev. E. Brewer, in treating of his subject "Philadelphia and Laodicea," explained how the Epistles were given to those churches, as a type of the Churches down through the ages unto the present time. He believed that we are passing through the Philadelphian (brotherly love) stage, and are fast approaching the Laodicean (lukewarm) stage. Rev. Alpheus Wilkes spoke on "The Times of the Gentiles," illustrating from the Image of Daniel ii. and the four beasts of Daniel vii. The times of the Gentiles began with the dispersion of Judah and Israel, and he believed they would close somewhere about the present time.

Canon Fausset, in a Bible-reading, showed the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ by the message of Gabriel, by God's voice at his baptism, by the transfiguration, and various other portions of Holy Writ. Rev. H. C. Sturdy's subject was "The Judgment, Repentance, and Glory of Jerusalem." With copious references to the Prophetical Scriptures, and treating them literally, he sought to prove that Jerusalem is yet to undergo judgment, to repent on the return of their pierced Lord, and receive such glory as has never been known. Rev. Jno. Urquhart closed the first day with an earnest exhortation to lukewarm Christians to be ready for the Master's coming.

"Our Lord's Coming, in relation to our faith, our hope, and our love," was the subject with which Rev. G. D. Hooper opened the second day's proceedings. From 1 Thess. i. 2, 3, he pointed out that the coming of Christ should make the believer a calm, happy, and useful servant of his Lord and Master. Rev. H. Brass followed, and from the parable of the fig tree pointed out that the signs seen around us every day say, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." "Consecration as viewed in the light of God's Will" was ably dealt with by Rev. Darlow Sarjeant, who showed that there could not be perfect rest except in a conscious learning and following of God's will individually. Mr. W. B. Harrington spoke of the wonderful way in which God had blessed his work among soldiers in India, and attributed it to his constant reference to the coming of Christ.

Rev. W. R. Mowll urged the need of holding fast the old truths of the Gospel, and of contending earnestly with those who are doing their utmost to undermine the faith of the weak. Rev. N. S. Taylor explained from many portions of Scripture that Judah and Israel are yet to be restored to their own land. They are then to be used as means of great blessing to the whole earth.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided on the third day, opened with some helpful remarks concerning the value of Biblical study. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston spoke on "The value of the study of the prophetical parts of God's Word." Many people would have us believe that the whole of prophecy is fulfilled. No wonder so many do not understand their Bibles. Many things that have had a partial fulfilment are in the future to be fulfilled fully and literally. Rev. W. Frith read an able paper on "The Queen in Gold of Ophir" as a running commentary on Psalm xlv. He brought forward the prophetical teaching of the Psalm as referring to the coming of Christ. Canon Fausset's subject was "The Conflict between the Seed of the woman and the serpent's seed, down to the final bruising for ever of the serpent's head." The primeval Gospel promise in Eden was partially fulfilled in the triumph of Christ at Calvary, but shall have its complete fulfilment at the second coming of our Lord, when Satan's head shall be bruised for ever. Rev. F. L. Denman closed the conference proper with remarks on "The Jews in Prophecy." He spoke of their dispersion, their retained national character, their persecution, their present partial restoration, and their future full restoration, as wonderful proofs of the truth of God's Holy Word. The closing communion service was conducted by Rev. N. S. Taylor.

EDINBURGH.

"Modern Athens" was last week the scene of a wonderful awakening to the truths on the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the second coming of our Lord. Three meetings were held each day from Tuesday to Friday, and there were many signs that the blessing of God was upon the meetings. Mr. J. E. Mathieson was chairman at all the meetings.

On Monday evening there was a preliminary gathering of ministers and Christian workers in the Free Assembly Hall. It was encouraging to see so many gathered together to talk over the meetings and to pray for an outpouring of blessing. The chairman spoke of the pleasure it gave to God to see his children gather together to talk over things pertaining to his Divine Kingdom, and Mr. H. D. Brandreth, the convener, in an earnest and convincing address, spoke in answer to the three questions, "Why have we come to Scotland?" "How have we come?" and "What we hope to accomplish." He feelingly referred to the meetings of a similar character held in Liverpool and other large centres, and described how God had laid it upon his heart to carry the glorious news of the coming kingdom throughout that lovely northern country. They were not bringing any fads, notions, or ideas of their own, but were simply going to bring out of the inspired Book the things which God had taught them.

Short addresses of explanation and welcome were delivered by representatives of the Christian Church in Edinburgh. Professor Simpson, referring to the chairmanship of Mr. Mathieson, said he thanked God for bringing him again into their midst. He remembered a time, now several years ago, when Mr. Mathieson visited Scotland and commenced a work amongst the young men in the universities which was still continuing to bear much blessed fruit. The church must throw its loving arms around these young men, for they would be the teachers of the future.

Rev. L. Holland, Edinburgh, hoped that this work would take a permanent form, and that God would put into their minds a definite plan for the accomplishment of this purpose. They had permanent societies to preach the Gospel to the heathen, etc., and why should they not have a permanent society to proclaim the blessed hope of Christ's coming again in every part of the world?

On Tuesday morning Mr. Louis Liesching spoke on the vision of Daniel, and dwelt in detail on the wonderful fulfilment of nearly all that the prophet foretold. Revs. L. Holland (Edinburgh), James Smith (Dufftown), Mr. Carr, of America, Mr. Brandreth, and others, spoke on the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures. The addresses of Mr. Smith and Mr. Carr were particularly memorable. The former said that in these days of higher criticism and attacks upon the Bible, he felt that all that was needed was that the Book should be heard for itself. It was a perfect revelation, and God had allowed it to be its own defence and its own interpreter.

Mr. Carr quickly secured a wonderful grip of his hearers. Step by step he led them through the various sections of the Scripture, showed their connection one with another, and explained their perfect harmony. If the higher critics, or anyone else, could produce a book which possessed such power over the world as the Bible had possessed all through the ages, he would accept it, and have faith in its authors. He was not afraid of attacks upon the Bible, for he had faith in God and in his inspired Word. Dr. Neatby delivered an inspiring address on the love and mercy of God in admitting Jews and Gentiles alike into the bountiful blessings of his everlasting Kingdom.
